

Governance approval highlights Convention

With a record number of voting delegates making one landmark decision after another, the 75th annual NCAA Convention lived up to its advance billing as one of the most significant events in the history of intercollegiate athletics.

In addition to the widely publicized adoption of the governance plan, which provides the means for including women's athletics programs within the NCAA structure, and the creation of 19 additional women's championships, Convention delegates also approved important legislation in the areas of academic standards and recruiting.

Another major area of concern was a proposal for financial aid based on need in Divisions I and II, which was defeated.

Registration figures indicated a record number of more than 1,300 delegates and visitors attended the Convention (conducted at the Fontainebleau Hilton Hotel in Miami Beach), breaking the previous record of 1,109 set in Atlanta in 1978. A record also was set for registered voting delegates (609) and the number of votes counted on a single proposal (551 on the second vote on Proposal No. 51).

The most publicized aspect of the Convention was the adoption of the governance plan and 19 additional women's championships in all three divisions. Debate on the subject was prolonged and characterized by accusations from those opposing the plan that the NCAA's action constituted a takeover of women's athletics.

The parliamentary angling on the issue began early when opponents of the plan sought to have the Convention's order of business changed so that delegates would first consider Proposal No. 71, a resolution designed to postpone the initiation of women's championships until an NCAA governance plan was adopted. The proposal to reorder business was defeated, and the first paragraph of the resolution later was ruled out of order by the chair.

After defeating Proposal No. 50, which sought to extend the provisions of O.I. 12 to all-female teams, delegates then considered Proposal No. 51, the first part of the NCAA Council-sponsored governance legislation. The proposal was designed to expand the NCAA Council from 18 to 22 members (with a minimum of four positions allocated to women) and to increase the size of the NCAA Executive Committee from 10 to 12 members (with a minimum of two positions allocated for women).

The constitutional amendment gained the two-thirds approval necessary for passage on the first vote, 369-169 (68.6 percent). A recount was requested, and this time the vote was 383-168 (69.6 percent), the largest counted vote in NCAA history.

The other governance proposals required only majority approval and passed easily. No. 53 set up minimum allocations for women on various NCAA committees, while No. 54 provided a limited exception procedure enabling an institution's women's program to be classified in a division other than the institution's membership division under certain circumstances. It also specified that men's and women's programs in a sport would be treated separately for purposes of unclassified membership and provided multidivision classification opportunities for women's programs comparable to (and in addition to) those available to men's programs.

The vote on the governance package set the stage for the consideration of Division I women's championships. Without question, that vote was the most dramatic point of the Convention.

After a lengthy period of debate, Division I delegates voted and were found to have finished in a 124-124 deadlock. The ensuing recount was 127-128 against Division I women's championships.

Delegates went on to implement three National Collegiate Women's Championships in fencing, golf and lacrosse (252-237) and then voted against rescinding existing championships in Divisions II and III.

Governance procedures begin

Implementation of the NCAA governance plan has begun, as a result of adoption by the 1981 Convention of all segments of that plan and of all proposals to establish additional NCAA-sponsored women's championships.

Following is a summary of the implementation activities and plans:

Institutional representation

In a January 26 mailing from the NCAA national office, the director of athletics at each active member institution was asked to notify the office of the identity of the primary woman administrator of athletic programs at the institution (e.g., associate or assistant director of athletics, director of women's athletics, coordinator of women's athletics or a comparable position). The primary women administrators thus identified will join chief executive officers, faculty athletic representatives and directors of athletics on the mailing list to receive NCAA communications.

Application of legislation

The Ad Hoc Committee to Review Legislation will schedule a meeting in the near future to continue its review of rules governing men's and women's athletics and will begin to formulate recommendations for amendments to NCAA legislation in that regard. The ad hoc committee includes six men and six women and is chaired by John L. Toner, newly elected NCAA secretary-treasurer.

Membership classification

For purposes of administering women's championships and other NCAA programs, each member institution will be classified in the institution's current NCAA membership division. An institution may request an exception from the Council, in accordance with Convention Proposal No. 54-A, if it believes unusual circumstances justify such a request.

In addition, an institution in Division I may petition to be classified in Division II or III in any one women's sport; a member of Division II may petition for classification in Division I in any one women's sport and in Division III in any one women's sport, and a Division III member may petition to be classified in Division I in any one women's sport. Such petitions must be received in the national office not later than June 1, per Bylaw 8-3-(c).

Administrative structure

As reported elsewhere in this issue, four women already have been elected by the recent Convention to serve on the NCAA Council. The Council, in its post-Convention meeting, elected two women to the Executive Committee and 10 (in addition to the Council members) to the three division steering committees. Thus, women now hold 16 of the 50 positions in the Association's administrative structure.

Committees

The Women's Committee on Committees and the Nominating Committee, the latter including at least four women, will be appointed by the NCAA Council in its April meeting in accordance with Proposal No. 53-B.

The Council has authorized the NCAA officers to affirm all appointments to the Association's general and Council appointed committees (Proposal

Frank elected president; Toner secretary-treasurer

New NCAA President James Frank not only is the first Black to serve in the Association's top leadership position, but he also is the first university president to hold the office.

Frank, Lincoln University (Missouri) president and NCAA secretary-treasurer for the last two years, was named the top officer in the Association at the conclusion of the 75th annual NCAA Convention January 14 in Miami Beach, Florida.

Replacing Frank as secretary-treasurer will be University of Connecticut Director of Athletics John L. Toner. The new officers will serve for the next two years.

Frank: In the early 1950s, Frank was recognized as an outstanding basketball player at Lincoln and once captured the university's Most Versatile Athlete Award. Later, he was appointed Lincoln basketball coach and compiled a 62-36 record over four seasons. Three of his teams participated in NCAA postseason competition.

He is the 18th Lincoln president and the only alumnus ever to serve as chief executive officer. The Aliquippa, Penn-

A constructive Convention

The NCAA's diamond anniversary Convention was a gem!

The year of the NCAA's founding, 1906, was a historic occasion for intercollegiate athletics. Passing time has verified that. The year 1981, however, already is assured historical prominence as a result of the decisions of the NCAA's 75th Convention.

The Convention shattered all of the Association's records for attendance, numbers of voters and organizations represented. There were more women delegates and more chief executive officers in attendance than ever before. And the delegates used the diamond anniversary occasion to elect James Frank as the 25th NCAA president, the first college president and the first Black ever elected to the Association's highest office.

Beyond these vital statistics, however, it was a historic Convention because of its constructive decisions in highly significant and controversial matters.

Certainly the most publicized topic was that dealing with the governance of women's intercollegiate athletics. There were more than 160 women among the Convention delegates. Women spoke on both sides of the issue. When the Convention voted to have the NCAA offer programs, services and administrative involvement for women, it represented a memorable commitment to the advancement of women's sports—and of female student-athletes, coaches and administrators.

The vast majority of those attending the Convention disregarded the emotional hyperbole of some, ignored the chauvinistic tendencies of others and lined up to support a full acceptance of the justification and viability of women's intercollegiate athletics. We read it as a full commitment to equal objectives and comparable high-level programs for both men and women in an integrated structure.

Another decision of lasting significance affected academic requirements, where the leading institutions of higher education yielded some of their traditional prerogatives for the first time in history by adopting national requirements to define satisfactory progress toward a degree for student-athletes. The Convention also restricted, for the first time, the use of certain types of nonresident credit.

Those milestone actions represented a sustained response by the membership to the widely publicized academic abuses at a handful of universities in the past year.

There were other significant actions, of course, including the establishment of recruiting time periods that should provide the framework for further progress in attempting to solve the most persistent problems in college athletics, and the fact that the delegates rejected virtually every proposal that would increase costs, also a constructive development.

In terms of its impact on the course on intercollegiate athletics in the years ahead, the 1981 NCAA Convention, we believe, will stand out as one of the most important and progressive of the first 75 years . . . or of all time.

Opinions Out Loud

Andy Rooney, syndicated columnist
New York Daily News/Chicago Tribune

"Too often, athletes are separated from any part of their school except the team they play for. If they spend all their time practicing and none of their time studying, they are going to beat the team from the school that maintains some academic standards for its players. Vince Lombardi was a great coach, but he did a bad thing when he popularized the notion that winning is the only thing. Winning is not the only thing. Playing is the only thing and winning is an added attraction. The chances are that if, year after year, a high school or college wins more than half its games, there's something wrong. They're probably cheating their players out of an education."

Reid Parker, administrative athletic director
University of Georgia
The Washington Post

"I'm very much in favor of the rule (prohibiting the drafting of college football players) as it stands now. I wish the NBA could reinstate the old rule. I would not want to see Herschel Walker or any other student-athlete turn professional until his four years are up or he graduates. The bottom line is that many of those NBA hardship cases wind up later on with no pro career to speak of, and no degree."

Editorial
Track and Field News

"Given the dire straits in which many collegiate athletic programs find themselves these days, the NCAA is wrong in its proscription against student-athletes earning any Grand Prix money for their schools.

"It strikes us as inconsistent with the moneymaking activities permitted the bigtime sports. An appearance in one of the major football bowl games can earn several hundred thousand dollars for the schools involved. The figures aren't as large for the NCAA basketball tournament, but the earnings there are awesome when compared with track budgets.

"We don't see why these teams, in essence, should be allowed to earn money for their schools while the road-running individual cannot. . . .

"The bottom line is easy to reach. Collegiate track programs are finding themselves in increasingly worrisome financial situations, and the NCAA is not really in a position to bail them out. At the same time, we have the potential of available capital. Money with no strings attached that will cause injury to neither athlete nor institution. Why not take advantage of it?"

Joe Paterno, football coach and director of athletics
Pennsylvania State University
The Philadelphia Bulletin

"Kids are different. You don't coach them the same way. You just don't tell them to do something, you've got to sell them on why you're doing something, convince them of certain things.

"The hardest thing in the world to do when you're 54 is remember what you were when you were 19. That's number one. Plus, things have changed so that the things that were important when I was 19 aren't very important to these kids. I've had to adjust. I really have. That doesn't mean I cave in on some things that I think are important. I continually preach to them about things I think are valuable in life, just as I do with my own kids."

Frank's election notable

By John Mooney
Salt Lake Tribune

It was significant and appropriate the NCAA should elect James Frank as its president. Frank, president of Lincoln University of Jefferson City, Missouri, is the first Black to head the 880-member organization which legislates the policies of intercollegiate athletics.

Dr. Frank had served the Association as secretary-treasurer before his election.

It was appropriate he be elevated to his prestigious post because he has worked many years for the advancement of the NCAA and college athletics.

And his election was significant because it showed college athletics, at its highest level, practices what it has preached so long: that race, religion or color has no bearing in athletics.

And with an enrollment of 2,500, Lincoln University is one of the smaller member institutions to produce a president of such a large organization of colleges and universities.

But mainly, I feel the election of Frank was appropriate because intercollegiate athletics was the leader in breaking the "color line" long before Congress voted integration.

Long before professional football and basketball were popular spectator sports and while baseball still rejected players because of their ancestry or skin pigment, the intercollegiate game was being played by athletes without regard to race, color or creed.

Some Americans were riding in the back of buses, seated in segregated areas in theaters and athletic facilities—if admitted at all—and unable to live in some hotels and eat in most restaurants when athletes were being cheered by college-game crowds and accepted for what they were, and not their skin pigment or ancestry.

It wasn't only Black student-athletes who gained a rightful place in the educational picture through athletics.

There was an unwritten, but just as infamous, "quota system" which penalized Jewish students in some sections of the country.

Through athletics, many of these men were admitted to universities in other sections of the country, where they were able to work within the framework to contribute to changes which bettered all Americans.

A youngster watching the Super Bowl, World Series, the NBA championship, bowl games, major league baseball or any college game from any section of the country would find it hard to believe there was a time when a Black athlete was a rarity.

It may seem strange now (when even a university from the Deep South may start five Black basketball players and most of the star running backs and wide receivers in football are Black) that Ralph Metcalfe, Eddie Tolan and Jesse Owens might never have been heard of if track coaches hadn't helped them through their universities on some form of work or scholarship, or even accepted them as members of the student body.

Jerome "Brud" Holland probably never would have become U.S. ambassador to Sweden, "Duke" Slater had small chance of being a Chicago judge and Paul Robeson may never have had the opportunity to enthrall the world with his singing and acting had not college football opened the doors.

Today, much of the discrimination has been alleviated, if not removed.

But in the days of Owens, Tolan, Metcalfe, Holland, Slater and Robeson, the only place those men were considered equal was on the field of sports strife, and maybe in their classrooms 40 years ago.

As Jesse Owens noted many times, he was snubbed by Hitler. But the President of the United States didn't call him congratulations or invite him to the White House, either, after Owens' record feats at Berlin.

Yet, because athletics did so much to popularize the minority athlete, he or she was accepted, admired, lionized and respected many years before the Congress got around to making laws to outlaw discrimination because of race, color or creed.

It is just following in this tradition of athletics that finds Frank as president of the largest sports organization in the United States.

Like the athletes he will represent in the next two years as NCAA president, Frank earned his high position through hard work and dedication, in the best tradition of the athletic fraternity.

1981 NCAA Convention: One to remember

Master of ceremonies Howard K. Smith

Neal Broten on behalf of U.S. hockey team

Kansas' Phyllis Howlett and Michigan State's Gwen Norrell

When oldtimers gather years from now and recall meaningful NCAA Conventions from the past, they undoubtedly will remember the 1981 Convention in Miami Beach.

Not only was this the Convention that enthusiastically welcomed women into the NCAA structure with the adoption of the governance package and 19 new women's championships, it also was the Convention that took meaningful steps in the academic area with the approval of a satisfactory-progress rule and the restriction of certain types of nonresident credit. Recruiting rules were altered to restrict the amount of time that may be spent in evaluating and recruiting prospective athletes. A controversial financial-aid-based-on-need package was defeated after a spirited discussion.

There was all of that, plus much more on the legislative front, plus the annual honors luncheon, some scenes from which are shown on this page. It was an event to remember.

No. 53-C) and to finalize appointments to all women's sports committees (Proposal No. 53-D). These appointments will be completed in early February.

Women's championships

All 29 NCAA-sponsored championships for women approved by the 1980 and 1981 Conventions will be conducted for the first time in the 1981-82 academic year, including three National Collegiate Championships for which all divisions are eligible, nine Division I championships, nine Division II championships and eight Division III championships.

Dates and sites for the fall championships (cross country, field hockey and volleyball) will be determined by April; dates and sites of the remaining championships will be finalized by early summer.

Consideration is being given to conducting a survey of the membership in the weeks ahead to determine their current interest in participating in the various women's championships in 1981-82. Their final intentions in that regard will be obtained through the customary NCAA availability questionnaires in team sports and entry forms for individual sports.

Other activities

In accordance with the second and third paragraphs of Convention Proposal No. 71, the NCAA officers, acting for the Council, are in process of contacting the AIAW officers to schedule a meeting for purposes of beginning the discussions specified in that resolution.

Other women's programs

The Postgraduate Scholarship Committee, in its March meeting, will consider recommendations regarding the number and amount of NCAA postgraduate scholarships for men and women student-athletes.

In its April and/or August meetings, the Executive Committee will consider recommendations from women's sports committees in regard to appropriate publications for women's sports (e.g., championships administration handbooks, books of playing rules) and national statistics and schedule programs for women's sports.

Other governance issues

The Special Committee on NCAA Governance, Organization and Services will schedule a meeting in the near future to complete its assignment by discussing the need for further refinement of the Association's district and division structure.

The NCAA Council has approved September 28-29, 1981, as the dates and Kansas City as the site of the next NCAA-sponsored meetings of chief executive officers. All three divisions will hold such meetings on those dates, with the division steering committees recommending selection formulas or specific individuals to be invited. Notices regarding the meeting will be mailed as soon as the location has been determined.

A "state of intercollegiate athletics" message will be developed in conjunction with the September meeting of chief executives and will be mailed to all CEOs during the fall, well in advance of the 1982 NCAA Convention.

Interpretations

EDITOR'S NOTE: Publication of an interpretation in this column constitutes official notice to the membership. Questions concerning these or other O.I.s should be directed to William B. Hunt, assistant executive director, at the Association's national office (P.O. Box 1906, Shawnee Mission, Kansas 66222; 913/384-3220).

Case No. 6 (Professional ruling—extra benefits) is reprinted below as a correction of a printing error which occurred in the publication of the answer to the case in the interpretations column of the 1981 Convention issue of the News.

Professional ruling—extra benefits (Case No. 6)

Situation: A student-athlete receives preferential treatment, benefits or services (e.g., loans with deferred pay-back basis) because of his athletic reputation or skill or his pay-back potential as a future professional athlete. (343)

Question: Does entering into such an arrangement or receiving such benefits or services render the student-athlete ineligible under the Association's professional rulings?

Answer: Yes. [C 3-1-(a)-(1), C 3-1-(a)-(3) and C 3-1-(g)-(5)]

National team definition (Case No. 172)

Situation: The provisions of Constitution 3-9-(c) and (d) may be waived to permit a student-athlete to participate during his institution's intercollegiate season in international competition involving the national teams of the nations represented in the competition. (499)

Question: What is the definition of a "national team" and national team competition for purposes of these regulations?

Answer: A national team is one selected, organized and sponsored by the appropriate Group A member of the United States Olympic Committee (or, for student-athletes representing another nation, the equivalent organization of that nation, or, for student-athletes competing in a non-Olympic sport, the equivalent organization of that sport); further, the selection for such a team must be made on a national qualification basis either through a defined selective process or actual tryouts, publicly announced in advance; finally, the international competition in question must require that the entries officially represent their respective nations, although it is not necessary to require team scoring by nation. [C 3-9-(c)-(4) and C 3-9-(d)-(2)]

Postseason football practice

Situation: The limitations on postseason football practice do not include practice for NCAA championship events, provided such practice is limited to students eligible for that event. (583)

Question: If a member institution is under consideration by an NCAA football committee for selection to participate in the football championship for that division, may the institution conduct postseason football practice sessions?

Answer: Yes. The practice sessions may be continued on this basis until it is determined by the appropriate committee whether the institution will be selected to participate in championship competition. [B 3-4-O.I. 311]

Convention

At that point, delegates voted, 141-105, to reconsider the decision on Division I women's championships. After defeating a motion to recess and approving a motion to suspend debate, delegates voted 137-117 in favor of Division I women's championships.

The session was adjourned for the rest of the day; and when the delegates reassembled the next morning, they quickly adopted another four championships in Division II and another three in Division III, bringing the complement of NCAA women's championships to 29.

Although the drama of the women's championship issue was the focal point of the Convention, legislation considered in the areas of academic standards, recruiting and financial aid also was vitally important.

Regarding academic standards, delegates approved an amended version of the NCAA Council's satisfactory-progress rule.

As proposed, the legislation established quantitative standards to maintain athletic eligibility. Proposal No. 31-1 specified that satisfactory progress should be measured prior to each term in which a season of competition begins and that the hours required in option (2) of subparagraph (ii) be completed since the beginning of the student-athlete's last season of competition. No. 31-2 stated that the satisfactory-progress calculation be based upon hours earned or accepted for degree credit.

Regarding other legislation relating to academic standards, delegates adopted Proposal Nos. 34 (restricting use of nonresident courses to establish eligibility), 35 (clarifying the use of summer-school courses taken from institutions other than the certifying institution to establish eligibility) and 36 (requiring member institutions to publish their satisfactory-progress requirements as a condition of NCAA membership).

Some of the most spirited debate of the Convention was sparked by Proposal No. 38, which sought to implement financial aid based on need for Divisions I and II. Opponents of the proposal, led by Rev. Edmund P. Joyce, University of Notre Dame, cited that the current system has served intercollegiate athletics well and that the need proposal would be difficult to enforce equitably and could result in a rush to create phony jobs and under-the-table inducements.

Proponents of the measure touted the cost-saving aspect of the proposal and claimed that "big-time" football institutions would not be affected adversely since their traditions would attract quality athletes.

Despite the occasionally emotional debate, the vote was not close and the measure failed in Division I, 148-101, and in Division II, 72-42.

Delegates did vote to adopt the NCAA Council's recruiting package, which established seasons for recruiting in Divisions I and II football (between December 1, or the athlete's final contest, and March 1) and basketball (between August 1 and October 1 and between March 1, or the date of the athlete's final contest, and May 15). The delegates also voted to establish evaluation periods in football (between August 1 and December 1, or the date of the prospect's final contest) and basketball (between June 15 and August 1 and between December 1 and March 1, or the date of the prospect's final contest).

Other legislation approved included the following:

- The total number of awards in effect in Division I at one time for sports other than football and basketball may not exceed 70. Sport-by-sport limits remain unchanged.

- The five-year rule was removed from the constitution and placed in the bylaws.

- A junior college transfer who was a 2,000 nonqualifier will be required to be in residence one year at the certifying institution before becoming eligible unless the student has graduated from the junior college.

- The number of permissible preseason practice days in the sport of soccer was increased from 15 to 19; as many as three preseason scrimmages in that sport will be permitted.

- Contacts between bowl-game managements and member institutions will be permitted between November 1 and the third Saturday in November. However, no invitations may be issued before the third Saturday in November.

- A postseason football game will not be certified unless it returns an amount specified by the Extra Events Committee to each participating team or 37.5 percent of its gross receipts, whichever is greater.

- Resolution No. 118 recommends that NCAA member institutions undertake self-studies of their athletic programs. A recommended guide for the study will be available from the NCAA national office in the near future.

on the NCAA Council and the Division III Steering Committee. He also is president of the State University of New York Athletic Conference and a member of the executive council of the Eastern College Athletic Conference and of the NCAA Long Range Planning Committee.

A native of Buffalo, New York, Riedel is a former professional baseball player with Williamsport in the Eastern League.

Zimmerman

Zimmerman is head women's basketball coach and associate athletic director for men and women at South Dakota. She is in her fifth year as basketball coach and was appointed associate athletic director this academic year.

Zimmerman has compiled a 64-45 record as basketball coach since 1976. Her 1980-81 team, in its second year of Division I competition, was 9-1 at press time.

Prior to her appointment at South Dakota, Zimmerman coached basketball four years at Lewis Central High School in Council Bluffs, Iowa. Her teams compiled a 62-26 record.

She was graduated from John F. Kennedy College in Wahoo, Nebraska, in 1972. She was a starter on the 1972 basketball team that won the national AAU championship.

Zimmerman acquired her coaching abilities at an early age. She served as player-coach of her high school team in Poplar, Montana, helping the team to two state tournament appearances.

This is Zimmerman's second NCAA committee assignment. Last fall, she was appointed chair of the Division II Women's Basketball Committee.

Arizona State, Oregon State cited

Arizona State University and Oregon State University have been placed on probation by the NCAA's Committee on Infractions as a result of violations occurring primarily in the conduct of their intercollegiate football programs.

The Arizona State penalty includes sanctions that will prohibit the university's football team from participating in a postseason football bowl game during the 1981-82 academic year and will preclude the institution from appearing on any NCAA-controlled television program or series during the 1981 or 1982 regular football seasons. The university will be eligible to participate in a postseason football bowl game at the conclusion of its 1982 season.

Also as a result of the findings in the case and in accordance with the "show-cause" provision of the NCAA penalty structure, the university will restrict one representative of its athletic interests from assisting in the recruitment of prospective student-athletes during the university's probationary period.

The NCAA's inquiries into the Arizona State football program became the subject of publicity in the fall of 1979 when it was determined that eight football players were certified as eligible to participate in football competition on the basis of unearned extension course credits obtained from another collegiate institution.

Subsequently, the Pacific-10 Conference took punitive action against the university to prohibit the institution's participation in postseason football competition during the 1980-81 academic year and to require forfeitures of certain football contests played during the university's 1979 season. The NCAA reviewed the conference action and additional information which had been developed concerning irregularities involving former members of the football coaching staff and certain individuals outside the institution.

In considering the case, the Committee on Infractions found violations of NCAA legislation related to the principles governing extra benefits to student-athletes, complimentary tickets, financial aid, institutional control, academic standards, ethical conduct, various recruiting regulations and the provisions governing the certification of compliance with NCAA legislation.

The NCAA's action against Oregon State also was taken in addition to penalties imposed in the case in August 1980 by the Pacific-10 Conference, which included a public reprimand, ineligibility for any football bowl game and the Pacific-10 Conference football championship during the 1980-81 academic year and forfeiture of all games won during the 1977 and 1979 football seasons in which any ineligible student-athlete participated.

The additional one-year probationary period imposed by the NCAA does not involve sanctions, and the university will be eligible to participate in a football bowl game and on NCAA-controlled football telecasts during the 1981-82 academic year.

Inquiries by the Pacific-10 Conference and the NCAA into the Oregon State University football program began in the fall of 1979, after information was developed questioning the registration of one student-athlete in an extension course offered by another collegiate institution. Subsequently, it was determined that two former assistant football coaches and two student-athletes were involved in the violations found in the case.

The Committee on Infractions found violations related to the principles of sound academic standards, ethical conduct and the awarding of extra benefits to student-athletes.

Two staff positions open in championships department

Applications still are being accepted by the NCAA for two assistant director of championships positions.

The Council had allotted two additional staff positions in the championships department in the event the 1981 Convention approved all of the 19 women's championships considered. The Convention approved all of the events January 13-14.

A notice for one of the two positions was posted in the December 15, 1980, issue of the NCAA News.

The assistant director of championships will work with sports committees in developing recommended sites and dates for championships and will process proposed budgets from prospective host institutions.

Applications should be sent as soon as possible to Ruth M. Berkey, director of women's championships, at the national office.
