

Writers and coaches talk college football

A total of 53 writers from across the country and nine of the nation's premier football coaches gathered February 23-24 in Kansas City and discussed various items of interest to those involved with college football.

The coaches who participated in the panel for the annual event were Bobby Bowden, Florida State University; Vince Dooley, University of Georgia; LaVell Edwards, Brigham Young University; R. R. Harper, California Polytechnic State University, San Luis Obispo; Don James, University of Washington; Warren Powers, University of Missouri, Columbia; Bo Schembechler, University of Michigan; Jackie Sherrill, University of Pittsburgh, and Grant Teaff, Baylor University.

The writers and coaches also participated in an extended question-and-answer session with Charles Alan Wright, University of Texas, Austin, chair of the NCAA Committee on Infractions.

A number of subjects were covered during the two days of discussion, but particular emphasis was placed on new NCAA recruiting legislation and moves taken to reduce the costs of college football.

The session with Wright dealt heavily with recent publicized recruiting scandals and with a review of the Association's enforcement program.

Women's committee schedule set

Meetings have been scheduled for all new NCAA women's sports committees that were created by passage of the governance plan at the 1981 Convention.

The first of 13 scheduled meetings was held February 23-25 with the Division I Field Hockey Committee. The committees will be planning the 29 women's championships that the NCAA will initiate during the 1981-82 academic year.

The women's committees will be determining the size of championship brackets, dates and sites of respective events, selection procedures and the rules to be utilized in each sport.

"We are pleased that so many outstanding coaches and administrators have agreed to lend their time in establishing NCAA women's championships," said Ruth Berkey, NCAA director of women's championships. "We believe these committee members will ensure the quality of the first NCAA women's championships."

Women's sports committee members and pictures of committee chairs not published in the October 15, 1980, issue of the NCAA News will appear in the March 15, 1981, issue.

Following is a list of the upcoming meetings of the NCAA women's sports committees:

Division I Women's Basketball: March 9-11, Kansas City, Missouri.

Women's Track and Field: March 30-April 1, Kansas City, Missouri.

Women's Gymnastics: April 12-14, Chicago, Illinois.

Women's Volleyball (all divisions): April 13-15, Kansas City, Missouri.

Women's Swimming: April 20-23, Kansas City, Missouri.

Women's Lacrosse: May 28-30, Princeton, New Jersey.

Women's Softball: June 15-17, site to be determined.

Division II Women's Basketball: June 21-24, Springfield, Massachusetts.

Division III Women's Basketball: June 22-25, Hershey, Pennsylvania.

Women's Fencing: June 26-28, Dallas, Texas.

Women's Tennis: July 15-17, site to be determined.

Women's Golf: July 19-21, Snowmass, Colorado.

Radio network to carry championship

A national radio network for the Division I Men's Basketball Championship March 28-30 will be coproduced by the NCAA and Jim Host and Associates and the NBC Radio Network.

This will be the third year for the network, which exceeded 400 stations in 1980. Host officials anticipate this year's count will exceed 500. As of February 17, 279 stations had signed contracts, including eight in the nation's top 10 markets and 64 in the top 100.

It is the sixth year of involvement for Host and Associates in the tournament. The Lexington, Kentucky, firm administered an independent NCAA network for four years before teaming with NBC and the NCAA.

Veteran sportscaster Cawood Ledford will handle the broadcasting chores for the sixth consecutive year.

CEOs meet in September

The second annual NCAA-sponsored meeting of chief executive officers of member institutions has been scheduled for September 28-29 at the Hyatt Regency Hotel in Kansas City, Missouri.

This year's gathering will include separate sessions for chief executives from Divisions I, II and III. The 1980 meeting involved only Division I chief executives when the planned Divisions II and III meetings were cancelled because an insufficient number from those divisions would be able to attend.

In Divisions I and II, each voting allied conference will be invited to select one chief executive from its membership to attend the meeting, and a proportionate number will be invited to represent independent institutions. The Division III Steering Committee is selecting the chief executives to be invited to that division's meeting.

Detailed planning for the meeting will begin in March, and it is anticipated that initial invitations will be extended within the next few weeks.

The annual meeting of chief executive officers is intended to serve as a discussion forum and educational program in which chief executives can review major policy areas in intercollegiate athletics.

A new NCAA look

The NCAA has adopted a new seal, picturing both a man and woman, in conjunction with the inclusion of women throughout the NCAA structure.

The seal was created to acknowledge the passage of the NCAA governance plan, which provided the means for including women's athletic programs within the NCAA.

Ken Burdett of the House of Usher, a Kansas City firm, created the seal, which replaces the original one adopted in 1950.

Along with the new seal, the NCAA has adopted a new logo in an effort to make the NCAA letters more readable. The small, interlocking letters will be replaced with capital letters that are not interlocked.

The original logo was created in 1968 as a result of requests from member institutions for uniform patches. The seal had been used on uniforms prior to 1968, but the NCAA created the logo because it was more easily identified from a distance.

Because of an ever-increasing number of uses for the logo, it was determined that a more readable logo was needed. It is hoped the noninterlocking, capital letters will be more readily identifiable at a distance and will meet the diverse needs of the NCAA logo.

John Muller, a Kansas City graphic artist, created the new logo.

Attention focuses on television

Since the time the National Broadcasting Company carried the first NCAA-controlled football game in 1952, the Association has maintained a keen interest in television as it relates to intercollegiate athletics.

That constant interest has become more pronounced lately with attention being focused on rights negotiations to the Division I Men's Basketball Championship. A special NCAA negotiating committee met in February and narrowed the choice of networks to NBC and CBS. A decision is expected on the subject March 3.

Negotiations for the next football package have not yet begun in earnest. At this point, the NCAA Football Television Committee is in the process of determining what the membership wants and needs from a new plan and how that information can be practically applied.

The most striking similarity between the two areas, of course, is that both involve considerable amounts of money. When the current NCAA Football Television Plan was adopted, ABC agreed to pay $118 million for the rights to regular-season NCAA football games over a four-year period. Last year, NBC contracted to pay $8.5 million for the 1980 basketball championship and $10 million for the 1981 event.

Beyond that fact, there is contrast in the nature of the products.

Ratings indicate that interest in the Division I Men's Basketball Championship has grown remarkably over the last decade. The nine top-rated basketball telecasts of all time have been college games, and eight of those contests have occurred in the NCAA championship tournaments. All of the top five basketball telecasts have involved NCAA championship games, four of which have occurred since 1975. The number of TV homes for the basketball championship has climbed from 5.5 million in 1969 to a high of nine million in 1979.

What lies behind the increase in popularity? Most likely it has to do with the increased quality of play, the competitiveness of the games, the broad national interest and the fact that the process builds to a final, frenzied conclusion.

Whatever the cause, the sport has experienced a remarkable growth period similar to the one football underwent in the late '60s and early '70s. Football ratings have since stabilized, and thoughts now have turned to making a good television product even better.

An NCAA membership survey indicates the membership has a desire to explore the possibility of a two-network football arrangement, hoping it would lead to more time on television, more income and more competitiveness between the networks. However, a number of difficulties implicit in the two-network arrangement must be reconciled before it can be considered a strong alternative.

Otherwise, the membership seems pleased with the current plan and past plans in that they have provided maximum television exposure for a maximum number of institutions while at the same time protecting in-stadium attendance. Although ABC (and likely any other network) would prefer an increase in the team-appearance limit (five in two years), the membership has expressed satisfaction with the current restrictions, through both NCAA and College Football Association surveys, since the primary concern has always been for equitable exposure.

Although the Football Television Plan has served its purpose well, conferences historically have preferred to remain autonomous in the area of regular-season basketball television. Unfortunately, with the proliferation of cable systems and conference packages, the potential overexposure of basketball must be considered.

On one Saturday during February, customers of one Kansas City-area cable system could have watched seven college basketball games if they had had the perseverance to stay in front of a television set for 12 hours. Certainly one must question the effect of such saturation. Perhaps the time has come to investigate applying controls similar to those in regular-season football to assure that basketball doesn't suffer from exposure and that the Association's most exciting and lucrative championship does not become harmfully diluted.

Why can't Johnny read?

By Ed Fowler
Houston Chronicle

Why can't Johnny read? Perhaps it's because he's spending too much time running, jumping and throwing. Johnny can, in fact, remain eligible to participate in sports even if his academic progression is appreciably below minimum standards.

In most area school districts, a high school student can fail two courses each semester, and sometimes three, and remain eligible for extracurricular activities. He won't graduate in the normal eight semesters at that pace, but he can continue heaving touchdown passes even as he is on course for extra semesters in school, or failure to graduate.

The situation is not new. Minimum standards are formulated by the University Interscholastic League, which oversees interscholastic programs in 1,151 Texas high schools. UIL officials say the standards now in use were established in the 1940s or early '50s. School districts may apply more stringent standards of their own, but many—probably most—do not.

The UIL rule pertaining to academic achievement states that a student must pass three "solid" courses in the current semester, and that he must have passed at least three in the preceding semester to be eligible for after-school activities. The rule covers nonsports participation, but in practice its impact is felt with special emphasis in athletics because an interest in many of the areas covered—debate, drama, poetry interpretation—implies a predisposition toward academics.

Solid courses do not include physical education but do encompass vocational subjects and most electives. Under the UIL criteria, a student taking six classes, including physical education, may fail two, including English and math, and continue to shoot free throws. He could conceivably never pass an English or math course and remain eligible for four years. Passing three courses a year, he would finish his fourth year of high school with 12 credits, six short of the total required for graduation under state standards, and remain eligible all the while. Since the Houston Independent School District requires 21 credits for graduation, the same student attending an HISD school would fall nine credits short.

Why can't Johnny read? Why should he, if he can make three D-minuses and two F's each semester and still play football?

In the Houston area, the Spring Branch, Alief, Klein and Houston districts all have found the UIL standards adequate. There is at least one exception: the La Marque ISD requires the student to pass four courses to retain eligibility. Physical education may count as one of the four, but not all students—and not all athletes—take P.E.

Administrators in general defend the unexacting standards with the argument that raising them would deny admission to athletic programs to many students with academic deficiencies. "A lot of boys won't go to school at all if they don't get to play," says Bill Farney, UIL athletic director. "A lot of youngsters can't maintain a good self-image through anything but athletics," says Joe Tusa, athletic director for the Houston district. "They sacrifice the whole day so they can participate in sports."

The school district which adopts rules more stringent than the UIL's, of course, runs the risk of putting its teams at a competitive disadvantage against those from other districts. La Marque High might lose its star forward to ineligibility while Westchester beats La Marque through the efforts of a player whose grades are no better.

Two private schools contacted maintain much more stringent standards than the public schools. At Strake Jesuit, an athlete must show a 1.8 grade-point average, a high C on a three-point scale. At Kinkaid, the issue is almost nonexistent because a student who makes an F is told to find another school, says athletic director Dan Hart. Those on probation are forced to drop athletics. "There's none of that messin'-around business," says Hart.

The public schools take all comers, though, not just the more motivated students who enter many private institutions. The question involves where to draw the line.

Bailey Marshall, who heads the UIL, says a state school principals' association proposed that the requirement be raised to mandate passing four courses rather than the current three but no action has been taken on it. "Maybe it's part of the back-to-basics movement," says Marshall, "but we are hearing more people starting to say the rules should be more stringent. I've always felt they need to be a little more stringent."

I'd say the idea merits some attention. As long as Johnny can scrape by on three D-minuses and two F's, he won't even be able to read his press clippings. Unless they're written like this: "See Johnny run."

William Simon, president
United States Olympic Committee
Washington Post

"I supported the boycott very strongly and spoke to that effect last year. I honestly believe that the repercussions (on the Olympic movement) have been minimal, and the impact on the next four years and the 1984 Olympic Games will be nonexistent. . . . The morale and optimism of American athletes and the U.S. Olympic Committee are higher now than I have ever seen them."

Harrison Dillard, Cleveland Board of Education
Former Olympic performer
The Detroit News

"I think amateurism must be redefined in our modern society. We must broaden the parameters to take into account economics and reality. Personally, I strongly believe in open Olympics. I would like to see prize money as well as medals awarded to winners and top finishers."

Marv Harshman, president
National Association of Basketball Coaches
The Washington Post

"I may be a little old-fashioned; but it seems to me that if a coach accepts money from a shoe company, the money should go to the athletic association. To our way of thinking, why shouldn't a player feel, 'Hey, if a coach can make money off a game, why can't I?' We demand complete puritanism from our players, but we think there is nothing wrong with the coach having his hand out."

Steve Jacobson, columnist
Newsday

"I remember an obscene book Joe Lapchick used to keep on his desk and require his St. John's players to read. The first page had a Willard Mullin cartoon of a boy sitting with his head on his knees in front of his backyard basket. The caption said: 'Aw, who wants to play basketball, anyhow?' It was January 1951. That's when some of us learned what shaving points meant: You don't have to lose; just don't win by as much as everybody expects, and keep it between just you and me."

What does home court mean in NCAA play?

By Jim Van Valkenburg
NCAA Statistics Service

What does history say about the chances of an NCAA regional basketball championship being won by a team playing on its regular home court or in its home city?

Nine teams have won a regional title at home, out of the 464 teams that have competed in regional competition over the 29-year history of the format. That makes the odds against such an occurrence nearly 52 to 1.

The regional host won championships five times in the first seven years (or out of the first 112 teams): La Salle won the East in its home city of Philadelphia in 1954 and 1955, Temple won it in Philadelphia in 1956, Iowa won what is now called the Mideast at home in 1956 and Kentucky took the Mideast at home in 1958.

But in the last 22 years, the odds have lengthened to 88 to 1 with only four home teams having won regional crowns (UCLA in 1969, 1973 and 1976 and North Carolina State in 1974).

Taking it a step further, the odds are 19 to 1 against a team even playing in a regional on its home court or in its home city. Only 24 teams have done it. Of those, 15 won the first (or semifinal) game and nine went on to win the second (or championship) game. (In the years third-place games were held, home teams won six of eight.)

Actually, having an NCAA regional on a home court has been a jinx in the view of many fans. For instance, the Midwest regional has never been won by the home team in 29 years, and only five home teams have even made the regional. Even though

Kansas State and Kansas won most of the conference championships in that span, having the regional at home proved to be a hex. For instance, Kansas was host eight times but made it to the regional just once, while rival Kansas State made it four times. Conversely, K-State was the regional host six times but the Wildcats never made it, while Kansas did twice. In addition, Wichita State was host three times but never competed. Wichita State's only regional title was won at Kansas State.

Excluding third-place games, the home-court or home-city teams have a won-lost record of 24-15 for a .615 winning percentage in the 29 regional tournaments.

If the definition of a home-court advantage was expanded to include a team from a nearby city or a team playing at a regional in its home state, 22 teams would be added, six of them regional champions: Kansas won at Kansas City in 1952, at Kansas State in 1953 and at Wichita in 1971; Illinois won at Chicago in 1953, Wichita State at K-State in 1965 and Texas-El Paso at Texas Tech in 1966.

Eight more such teams lost in the regional finals: Duke at Charlotte in 1960, Wake Forest at Charlotte in 1961, Kentucky at Louisville in 1961, California at San Francisco in 1958, Ohio State at Ohio in 1971, Kansas at K-State in 1960 and Kansas State twice at Kansas, in 1959 and 1961. (California won the West at San Francisco in 1959; but it was playing another Bay Area team, St. Mary's, so that was a neutral game.) The other eight such teams lost the first game.

These 22 nearby-city or home-state teams had a 20-16 record in regionals (again excluding third-place games). With those 22 added to the 24 home-court or home-city teams, the won-lost record is 44-31 for a winning percentage of .587.

How about the chances for victory for a team playing in first- or second-round games (subregional games) on its regular home court or in its home city?

A total of 598 teams have played in subregional games over the 29 years of regional history. There were 27 home-court winners, making the odds better than 22 to 1.

Once again, the trick is to play in a subregional game at home. Only 41 teams have, with 27 winners and 14 losers for a .659 winning percentage. Eleven of the 41 were New York or Philadelphia area teams, four playing in New York and seven in Philadelphia. In some cases, there is room for dispute. For instance, St. Joseph's beat Princeton at Philadelphia in 1963, and Princeton is near Philadelphia.

Home-court or home-city situations were much more frequent in the early years; then they became close to nonexistent for a long period with just nine such teams in the 13 years ending with 1978 (five winners, four losers by home teams) out of 274 teams.

With the expansion to 40 teams in 1979, Southern Cal played two games at home in the Los Angeles Sports Arena, winning the first and losing the second (UCLA-Pepperdine at the Arena that season is considered neutral).

With the expansion to 48 teams last season came an all-time high of six such games. Purdue won two at home to reach the regional; Arizona State 1-1, lost to Ohio State, which went on to the regional, and Weber State and Western Kentucky each lost their first games at home. Overall, the home teams were 3-3.

Economic pressures predicted

The NCAA Long Range Planning Committee will report to the NCAA Council in April that it believes pressure to adopt NCAA legislation to effect economies in athletics at the institutional level will re-surface within the next year.

Termining this possibility "a rapidly emerging issue," the committee predicted that the combined effect of inflation and the impact of increasing expenses for women's athletic programs will cause institutions to urge national legislation in this regard, similar to the pressures that resulted in the Association's special economy Convention in 1975.

Members of the committee suggested in its February 2-3 meeting that travel restrictions and scheduling adjustments will be the major area of institutional cost control. Others urged careful use of the NCAA's new institutional self-study of athletics document as a means of assisting institutions to realize what they can and cannot afford in athletics and to "live within their means."

In a somewhat related topic, the committee will ask the Council to obtain projections from institutional financial aid officers regarding the availability of financial aid funds for students, especially if the Federal government reduces its student aid programs.

The committee, chaired by Alan J. Chapman of Rice University, also continued its ongoing discussion of pressures resulting in the "win-at-all-costs" syndrome in college athletics. Each member of the committee was asked to prepare an individual analysis of that problem and, where appropriate, a review of the turnover rate of coaches in football and basketball within his or her conference in recent years, for consideration in the committee's June meeting.

Other matters considered in the February meeting included these:

- The committee will ask that the appropriate sports committees consider the feasibility of establishing single sites for men's and women's championships in as many sports as possible (primarily such individual sports as track, swimming, tennis and golf), as well as the possibility of recognizing a men's champion, women's champion and overall (combined) champion in such championships. Committee members suggested that such developments would increase the cost efficiency of those championships and would afford greater visibility for women's championships.

- Noting the increasing incidence of males coaching women's teams, the committee cited the need to develop and increase opportunities for more women coaches. It was suggested that coaches associations actively solicit women coaches as members, creating integrated coaches organizations.

- The committee will report to the Council that it envisions long-range difficulties in attracting and retaining competent officials, especially in such sports as basketball, field hockey, ice hockey and soccer. It was suggested that the widespread elimination of freshman and junior varsity programs has slowed the development of new officials in certain sports, and inadequate remuneration and increasing abuse from coaches and fans do not make officiating an attractive opportunity. The committee urged that the Collegiate Commissioners Association, College Divisions Commission-ers Association and appropriate NCAA sports committees review this potential problem.

- In its June meeting, the committee will discuss increasing problems in dealing with inaccurate and sometimes defamatory reporting in the news media.

In each of its meetings, the committee reviews trends, projections and other data in an attempt to identify developments that may affect inter-collegiate athletics in the future. Among such items discussed in February were these:

- In view of the rapidly increasing number of older students returning to college, it is likely that Divisions II and III will move quickly to assure greater flexibility in the five-year rule, now that the rule has been removed from the constitution and placed in the bylaws.

- College and university enrollments will decline anywhere from five to 15 percent in the 1980s, and some experts predict that as many as 200 colleges will be forced to close. The committee did not believe it likely that any appreciable number of those would be NCAA member institutions but noted again the effect of decreasing enrollments on student admission standards and retention policies.

- In the fall of 1979, there were more women than men enrolled in colleges and universities for the first time in history. The committee agreed to continue its annual review of sports sponsorship and participation data to determine if the enrollment trends will be reflected in increased sponsorship of and participation in women's athletics.

Winter championships

UTEP seeks another indoor track crown

The 1981 NCAA winter championships continue during the first two weeks in March with men's championships in indoor track, rifle, skiing, Division I wrestling and Division II ice hockey.

With virtually every performer returning, Texas-El Paso is the overwhelming favorite at the National Collegiate Men's Indoor Track Championships, to be held March 13-14 at Joe Louis Arena in Detroit, Michigan.

Texas-El Paso has won five of the last seven indoor championships and has claimed 13 team track titles (indoor, outdoor, cross country) since 1974. The Miners have been runners-up six other times during that period.

Distance ace Suleiman Nyambui probably will double again in the mile and two-mile. Nyambui has won both events the last two years, a feat never before accomplished.

The Miners should score well in the distance events with Matthews Motshwarau, Michael Musyoki and Gabriel Kamau in the three-mile run, plus Nyambui in the mile and two-mile.

Other Texas-El Paso individual threats are Jerome Deal (60), Bert Cameron (440), George Mehale (600), Peter Lemashon (880), Steve Hanna (triple jump) and Thommie Sjöholm (35-pound weight throw).

Villanova should challenge again, despite the loss of Don Paige, three-time 1,000 champion. The Wildcats' chances rest on defending champ Rodney Wilson (60 hurdles), Sydney Maree (mile), Amos Korir (two-mile) and sprinters John Hunter, Tim Robinson and Mike England.

Tennessee returns most of its performers from last year's third-place team. The Volunteers have sprinters Mike Miller and Jeff Phillips, 440 champion Anthony Blair, Anthony Hancock (60 hurdles), Jason Grimes (long jump) and half-miler Sam James.

Southern Methodist, Auburn, Fairleigh Dickinson-Teaneck and Kansas are among other team contenders. Southern Methodist is led by shot put champion Michael Carter and Texas-El Paso transfers Richard Olsen (35-pound weight throw) and Keith Conner (triple jump).

Wrestling

Iowa State, Iowa, Oklahoma and Oklahoma State again will be the favorites at the Division I Men's Wrestling Championships March 12-14 at Princeton University.

Those four schools have won 46 titles in the 50-year history of Division I wrestling. Oklahoma State leads with 27 titles, followed by Iowa State and Oklahoma with seven each and Iowa with five. Iowa has won five of the last six titles.

Iowa State, 17-0, is the top-ranked team this season but still has dual meets remaining with second ranked Iowa, 18-1, and No. 3 Oklahoma, 11-2. Iowa's only loss this season was to intrastate rival Iowa State, 25-14.

Other teams with high hopes for an NCAA championship are Syracuse (16-1), Oregon (19-2) and Arizona State (9-3).

Iowa State has tremendous strength in almost every weight category. The Cyclones, who finished third in the team race last year, have ranked wrestlers in every weight category except 126, 158 and heavyweight.

Nate Carr of Iowa State (on top) is a favorite at 150 pounds in Division I Wrestling.

Nate Carr, 27-3 at 150 pounds, and John Forshee, 22-3 at 190 pounds, are the Cyclones' top individual hopefuls. Other Iowa State wrestlers with title hopes are 118-pounder Mike Picozzi (17-3), 134-pounder Jim Gibbons (20-4-1), 142-pounder Dave Brown (16-0), 167-pounder Perry Hummel (15-1) and Dave Allen 15-1 at 177 pounds.

Iowa suffered a severe loss in its earlier match with Iowa State when two-time NCAA champ Randy Lewis dislocated his left elbow. Lewis, 1979 champ at 126 and last year's 134-pound winner, may be able to return for the NCAA championships.

Ed Banach returns to defend his 177-pound title for the Hawkeyes. Banach, 21-1, will face stiff competition from Lehigh's Colin Kilrain (10-0).

Other Iowa wrestlers with title hopes are 150-pounder Scott Trizzino (19-4), 142-pounder Lenny Zalesky (21-1), 167-pounder Mike DeAnna (21-1) and heavyweight Lou Banach.

Oklahoma is led by the brother combination of Dave and Mark Schultz. Dave, 17-0, is the top-ranked wrestler at 158 pounds, while Mark, 18-0, is No. 1 at 167. Another outstanding Sooner wrestler is 142-pounder Andre Metzger, the 1980 runner-up.

Ricky Stewart, 18-2, returns for Oklahoma State to defend his 158-pound title. The Cowboys have other individual contenders in 118-pounder Randy Willingham (17-2), 134-pounder Thomas Landrum (17-0) and 142-pounder Kenny Monday.

Gene Mills, the 1979 champion at 118 pounds, is the top Syracuse hopeful with a 17-0 dual record through early February.

Ice Hockey

Defending champion Mankato State is one of the favorites for the National Collegiate Division II Men's Ice Hockey Championship, which will be conducted March 12-14 at Merrimack College in North Andover, Massachusetts.

Lowell, the 1979 champion, is another top contender for one of the four championship berths. Lowell was 18-5 at press time, while Mankato State had compiled a 21-8 record.

Oswego State, 19-2, and St. Cloud State, 16-7, are other prime contenders for a spot, along with Gustavus Adolphus, 13-4, and Plattsburgh State, 20-3-1.

Rifle

West Virginia, Tennessee Tech and East Tennessee State rank as the team favorites for the National Collegiate Men's Rifle Championships, to be held March 13-14 at the U.S. Military Academy in West Point, New York.

Interpretations

EDITOR'S NOTE: Publication of an interpretation in this column constitutes official notice to the membership. Questions concerning these or other O.I.s should be directed to William B. Hunt, assistant executive director, at the Association's national office (P.O. Box 1906, Shawnee Mission, Kansas 66222; 913/384-3220). Case Nos. 395 and 396 reprinted below, appear in the 1980-81 NCAA Manual and are included in this issue of the NCAA News for emphasis.

Junior college credits (Revises Case No. 313)

Situation: A student-athlete attends a junior college and, prior to regular enrollment at an NCAA member institution, attains additional credits as a part-time student during the summer session of a four-year collegiate institution. (530)

Question: May these hours be utilized by the member institution in determining the student-athlete's eligibility under the junior college transfer provisions of Bylaws 4-1-(j)-(8), (9) and (10)?

Answer: Yes, provided these hours are accepted by the junior college from which the student-athlete transfers and are placed on the transcript or other official document by the junior college prior to the date of initial enrollment as a regular student at the NCAA member institution. If the junior college utilizes an official document other than the student-athlete's transcript for this purpose, such a document must include the official seal of the junior college, be signed by the principal or registrar of the junior college and be forwarded directly from the junior college to the appropriate admissions official of the certifying member institution. [B 4-1-(j)-(8), B 4-1-(j)-(9), B 4-1-(j)-(10) and B 4-6-(b)]

Division III—Review of aid package

Situation: The Division III membership adopted criteria during the 1979 Convention that prohibit members of an institution's athletic staff from arranging or modifying the financial assistance package assembled for a student-athlete by the institution's regular financial aid authority. (585)

Question: May an athletic department staff member be involved in any manner in the review of the institutional financial assistance to be awarded a student-athlete?

Answer: Yes. An athletic department staff member may present evaluations of potential student-athletes and make initial recommendations to the institution's regular financial aid authority; further, the staff member may serve as a member of the institution's financial aid committee, it being understood that such an assignment relates to the institutional role as a faculty member or administrator, and the staff member does not act unilaterally as a committee member to arrange financial assistance for prospective student-athletes. [B 9-3-(a)-(6)]

Division III—Athletic need fund (Case No. 395)

Situation: The Division III membership adopted criteria during the 1979 Convention that prohibit an institution from setting aside any portion of its financial aid budget for particular sports for athletics in general. (537)

Question: May a Division III member establish an "athletic need fund" for student-athletes and advertise its availability to prospective student-athletes who may qualify for need-based aid?

Answer: No. Such a fund would be contrary to the requirements of Bylaw 9-3-(a)-(5). [B 9-3-(a)-(5)]

Division III—Composition of aid package (Case No. 396)

Situation: A student-athlete attending a Division III member institution has a financial need of $1,000 (as determined by a need analysis system that conforms to the Uniform Methodology calculations and is approved by the U.S. Department of Education). (538)

Question: Under the Division III membership criteria adopted during the 1979 Convention, may the institution award the student-athlete a full $1,000 grant if the institution's normal policy in awarding financial aid to students generally is to require each student to provide an initial self-help portion of the total financial aid package?

Answer: No. The composition of the financial aid package offered by the institution to the student-athlete must be consistent with the established policy of the institution's financial aid office for all students. [B 9-3-(a)-(6)]

Japan, NCAA teams split series

Volleyball teams from five NCAA institutions fared well against a visiting college all-star team from Japan in a series of matches conducted in February.

Defending NCAA champions Southern California and UCLA downed the Japanese squad; but the visitors defeated Pepperdine, California-Santa Barbara and Hawaii. Southern California beat the Japanese at Irvine, California, 15-4, 15-12, 9-15 and 15-8, while UCLA, playing on its home court, won 14-16, 15-7, 15-7 and 15-13.

The Japanese victories were by 15-8, 15-10, 15-8, 15-10, 15-6 over Pepperdine; 15-1, 6-15, 15-11, 15-9 over California-Santa Barbara, and 15-7, 15-5, 16-14 over Hawaii.

Although the Japanese group won three of the five matches, the team was handicapped by the loss of 6-3 power spiker Ryo Ogata, who suffered a shoulder injury before the competition and was able to compete in only the final match.

With the two victories, NCAA teams have now taken eight matches from the Japanese in the five years of the competition, while the Japanese have captured 14. The U.S. national team also defeated the Japanese team in 1979.

U.S. Olympic coach Doug Beal praised the series and said, "There is no question that this has played a significant role in the rise of men's volleyball fortunes in this country to the point where we may be ahead of the Japanese at the collegiate level."

Cal Poly-Pomona on probation

California State Polytechnic University, Pomona, has been placed on probation for two years by the NCAA Committee on Infractions as a result of violations occurring in the conduct of its men's basketball, cross country and football programs.

The NCAA's review of the Cal Poly-Pomona athletic program began in January 1980 and was related to widely publicized allegations of fraudulent academic credits received by certain student-athletes enrolled in various institutions in the Western and Southwestern United States.

The two-year probation includes sanctions that will preclude the men's basketball team from participating in any postseason competition during the 1980-81 and 1981-82 academic years and from appearing on any NCAA-controlled television programs during the probationary period.

In addition, the penalty precludes the university's football team and men's cross country team from participating in any NCAA Division II postseason competition for a one-year period ending January 17, 1982, and prohibits the football team from appearing on any NCAA-controlled television program or series during the 1981 season.

All coaching staff members involved in the violations have resigned or have been disassociated from future involvement in the athletic program by the university. Also, four former basketball players were declared ineligible to represent any NCAA member institution in intercollegiate athletic competition in the future as a result of their involvement in the case.

"There can be no more serious violation of NCAA legislation," said Charles Alan Wright, NCAA Committee on Infractions chair, "than actions by athletic department staff members that compromise the academic integrity of an institution. Because this case showed a pattern of such violations involving student-athletes in three different sports, the committee believed that a severe penalty was required."

Bork and Wall hired by championships department

Patricia E. Bork and Patricia W. Wall have joined the NCAA championships department to assist with the 29 women's championships created by the 1980 and 1981 Conventions.

Wall joins the NCAA as assistant director of championships after a 27-year association with MacMurray College in Jacksonville, Illinois.

Since 1978, Wall has served as chair of the physical education department at MacMurray. She coached the women's volleyball team in 1972 and 1973 and was men's swimming coach before taking her position with the NCAA.

Wall received her bachelor of science degree from MacMurray in 1958 and earned her master's in 1959 from MacMurray. She has done additional graduate work at the University of Utah, Purdue University, the University of North Florida and Sangamon State University.

Bork, who will be an administrative assistant, has been with the NCAA since July 1978 as a publications editor in the publishing department. She is a 1976 graduate of the University of Kansas, where she earned a bachelor's degree in journalism.

Bork worked on the University Daily Kansan and in the publications division of the office of university relations at Kansas. Prior to joining the NCAA, she was a writer and production assistant for The Golf Superintendent, the official publication of the Golf Course Superintendents Association of America.

Bork and Wall will work with Ruth M. Berkey, director of women's championships, in implementing the women's championships, all beginning in the 1981-82 academic year.

Report lauds NYSP

The National Youth Sports Program received high marks in a recent Heritage Foundation report on Federal anti-poverty agencies, including the Community Services Administration.

Although the report in general was highly critical of the Federal government's antipoverty programs and agencies, including CSA, it had praise for the NYSP:

"The $6 million National Youth Sports Program run by the NCAA was cut from the budget, but restored by the House. This program is run honestly and, while not essential, is a better use of the taxpayer's money than many of CSA's programs; it should be retained for the present."

It is expected that many of the Heritage Foundation's views will be reflected in the policies of President Reagan's administration.

This past year, the NCAA, in partnership with the CSA and 135 selected institutions of higher education, carried out the program's 12th year. The NYSP annually provides more than 50,000 disadvantaged youth ages 10 to 18 with a year-round opportunity to benefit from resources made available through local colleges and universities.

Former president dies

Frank N. Gardner, who served two years as president of the NCAA, died of cancer February 2 in Minneapolis, Minnesota. He was 73.

Gardner was involved in Drake athletics for 20 years, serving as president of the Drake Athletic Council and as the official timer for the Drake Relays.

Besides his duties with Drake, Gardner served as president of the Missouri Valley Conference and was a member of the U.S. Olympic Committee. He was a member of the Board of Higher Education of the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) and was past president of the Iowa Christian Ministers Association.
