Judge denies attempt to stop NCAA women's events

An Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women motion seeking a preliminary injunction that would prohibit the NCAA from offering women's championships has been denied by a Federal district judge in Washington, D.C.

The AIAW filed suit against the NCAA October 9, 1981, alleging numerous NCAA violations of antitrust laws. In the suit, the AIAW sought preliminary and permanent orders that would prohibit the NCAA from sponsoring women's championship events or from governing any aspect of women's intercollegiate athletics. The AIAW also sought treble money damages.

On October 22, Judge Charles R. Richey declined to grant preliminary relief to the AIAW and indicated that the AIAW request for a preliminary injunction most likely would be consolidated with the ultimate trial on the merits of the AIAW's claims.

The AIAW subsequently renewed its motion for a preliminary injunction, claiming additional injury based on NBC-TV's decision to withhold payments from the AIAW for the right to televise certain AIAW championship events. AIAW limited the allegations in support of its motion to assertions that the NCAA was monopolizing the "men's intercollegiate athletics market" and was using its monopoly power to enter the "women's intercollegiate athletics market" and to destroy the AIAW.

AIAW motion denied

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit denied the AIAW's emergency motion, Friday, February 26.

The AIAW argued that it had been irreparably harmed by the NCAA's actions and would be forced to dissolve itself if a preliminary injunction were not entered by mid-February 1982.

In denying the AIAW's motion, the court ruled that the AIAW had not proved any of the four factors that a party seeking a preliminary injunction must establish: likelihood of success on the merits, irreparable injury to the party seeking relief, lack of substantial harm to other interested parties and the public interest.

Richey said he was unable to find that the AIAW had established either a probability or a possibility of success on the merits at the current stage of the proceedings. He said the AIAW may not have standing to bring the suit and suggested that the proposed injunction might be contrary to the purpose of the antitrust laws.

He also ruled that the AIAW had not demonstrated it would suffer irreparable injury if a preliminary injunction were not granted. Finally, Richey said it would be in the public interest to allow the NCAA women's program to continue and that to grant preliminary injunctive relief would be contrary to equality of opportunity for male and female student-athletes.

ty for male and female student-athletes.

The court later denied an AIAW request for a preliminary injunction pending AIAW's appeal of the district court's decision to the court of appeals.

The next day (February 19), the AIAW appealed the district court's order and filed an emergency motion with the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. The motion requested a preliminary injunction pending appeal or, in the alternative, summary reversal of the district court order denying a preliminary injunction. The NCAA filed a response February 24 in opposition to the AIAW motion.

Deterrent programs yielding good results

For only the second time in the history of the NCAA's enforcement program, a total of 16 institutions are on probation and the figure probably will rise soon to an all-time high.

According to David Berst, NCAA director of enforcement, much of the responsibility for the increase results from two programs initiated in 1979 and 1980: Operation Intercept and Operation Big Brother. Both programs were designed to involve the NCAA enforcement staff both during and after the recruiting process.

Through Operation Intercept, the staff interviews top football and basketball prospects and coaches about their recruiting experiences. In Operation Big Brother, each enforcement investigator is assigned two football and two basketball prospects during the summer before the prospects' senior years. The investigator then maintains contact with those athletes throughout the recruiting process.

"The real conceptual change is that we are seeking information aggressively about violations rather than only reacting to information," Berst said. "As a result, we are able to process cases much more quickly than in the past. More than half of the current list on probation is the result of Intercept."

As more institutions are placed on probation, Berst said support grows for the contention that college athletics is in increasing trouble.

"It does appear that the number of cheaters is increasing," Berst said. "But Operation Intercept has reaffirmed our belief that cheating is minimal. It doesn't take very long to develop patterns of information about who is and isn't violating rules. And these patterns indicate that most institutions do not cheat."

Those same patterns indicate that certain institutions consistently violate NCAA rules. Berst, however, believes only about five percent of the membership is involved in illegal recruiting practices and fewer than that cheat regularly.

"It could be a dozen schools, but not more than that, that are chronic cheaters," he said. "They have what I call a persecution complex. They believe that everyone else is cheating, that they must cheat to stay even and that we are picking on only them."

"A program like that usually is dominated by boosters or other outside influences. It also usually has little or no institutional control."

Operation Intercept will be expanded this year with the use of part-time professional investigators to supplement the work of the NCAA staff. About six part-time investigators currently are interviewing football prospects and coaches. More will be used when the project shifts to basketball in April.

"Eventually we will have more than 40 part-time investigators in addition to our staff," Berst said. "To the extent that it is known we are out in the field, Operation Intercept has been a deterrent to violations."

The primary purpose of Operation Big Brother is to serve as a deterrent. The NCAA investigators establish Coach-of-the-year Danny Ford (left), Clemson University, and new Southern Methodist University coach Bobby Collins (right) were among the 10 coaches who gathered February 22-23 in Kansas City for College Football '82 Preview. Forty-eight of the top sports writers in the country attended the meeting, which was conducted by the NCAA Promotion Committee.

New travel plan seen as effective

An early examination of the NCAA's arrangement with Fugazy International Travel shows that the Association has spent $357,587 less on championship transportation than it would have if airline tickets had been purchased at the regular coach rate.

Louis J. Spry, controller, said the figures translate to a savings of about $94 per traveler. He added, however, that the savings are not absolute in that it could not be assumed that the NCAA would have had to pay the full coach rate in all cases.

The NCAA entered into its agreement with Fugazy for the 1981-82 academic year. Teams and individuals competing in NCAA championships are required to make air-travel ar-

Insurance options probed

The NCAA Insurance Committee, which met February 17 in Denver, strongly supported further investigation of an insurance mechanism to deal with catastrophic-injury problems.

The committee voted unanimously that the NCAA investigate in detail the possibility of enacting a catastrophic-injury insurance program. The staff was directed to monitor closely current efforts of the National Federation of State High School Associations to implement a program among its members; in addition, the committee asked for information from NCAA legal counsel concerning some of the specific aspects of a "no-fault" insurance program that also is under study.

In addition, representatives of other sports organizations are studying the feasibility of a Sports Rehabilitation Foundation as a means of providing care and rehabilitation for catastrophically injured athletes.

"Catastrophic injuries are among the greatest tragedies in athletics," said committee Chair Kenneth W. Herrick, Texas Christian University. "We realize there is no ideal solution to the problem. Both insurance and the formation of a foundation appear to be possible alternatives."

"The NCAA Insurance Committee believes the insurance concept poses a possible approach, particularly because it could be put into operation in a relatively short period of time. We strongly recommend that the Association continue to study the idea in depth."

The Insurance Committee is preparing a written report for the NCAA Council to consider at its April meeting.

Doland explains move to I-AA

EDITOR'S NOTE: McNeese State University President Jack V. Doland sent the following letter to NCAA Classification Committee Chair J. O. Coppedge. He also sent a copy to the NCAA News to print as an open letter to the membership.

Dear Capt. Coppedge: February 10, 1982
McNeese State University's football program has been certified by the NCAA as a Division I-A member, having met the criteria necessary for that classification. At this time, on this date, we hereby declare that McNeese State University will be a Division I-AA member, and we would like for the NCAA Classification Committee to put our institution in the group that is classified I-AA in the sport of football.

The reasons for this decision are:

(1) Our meaningful relationship with the Southland Conference and similar institutions, such as Lamar, Louisiana Tech, Texas-Arlington and Arkansas State, would continue.

(2) We have a better chance to be in the I-AA play-offs than we do of being selected for a major Division I-A bowl.

(3) The possibility of McNeese State receiving television exposure is, in our opinion, greater in I-AA.

(4) The teams in Division I-A that would play us on a regular basis would demand extra compensation because we need them and many of them do not need us.

(5) Team and individual honors for our players and our institution will be more likely in the Southland Conference.

We would like for this matter to be expedited as soon as possible so that we will be considered a member of Division I-AA for all television and play-off considerations.

Sincerely,
Jack V. Doland, President

Wright battles with wrong

By Kirk Bohls
Austin American-Statesman

On the first day of the spring semester, Charles Alan Wright strode into Room 122 of Townes Hall precisely at 2 p.m., turned to face his first-year law students and asked for the facts of the Marbury vs. Madison case. Dead silence.

After a few minutes, Professor Wright repeated the question about the fundamental case concerning constitutional law. Again, no one dared offer an answer.

Convinced the silence would not be broken, Wright calmly announced, "To learn the law, you have to learn the facts. Tomorrow we'll discuss the next case, Martin vs. Hunter's Lessee." Then, he walked out of the room. Class dismissed.

Kingsfield revisited. This tall, erect law professor right out of "Paper Chase" hasn't spent 32 of his 54 years teaching constitutional law so he could lecture students on what he knows. Charles Alan Wright knows Marbury vs. Madison, the case in which the Supreme Court ruled that it possessed the power to hold acts of Congress unconstitutional.

Charles Alan Wright knows Marbury vs. Madison only too well. He is, in fact, considered the foremost authority in the nation on constitutional law. The fourth edition of his most significant book, "Wright on Federal Courts," is due to be completed by June. Rather, he wants to know what they know. He has begun every constitutional law class with that identical question since he began teaching at the University of Texas Law School in 1955, so you would think they would know by now. If not, they will learn.

Wasting time—his, especially—does not rank among his priorities because he has so little to waste. In between writing books, teaching, traveling across the country, hearing cases as head of the NCAA Committee on Infractions, making policy as a member of the Texas Athletics Council, arguing cases before the U.S. Supreme Court, there is no in between.

But it is sports, and college sports in particular, that has thrust Wright's name into the public arena, although it is a spotlight that has been on him for quite some time.

From the time Charles Alan Wright—even the name with all its air of formality fits the man like his three-piece suits and button-down shirts—arises to the time he lays his head down at night at his house overlooking Austin's hills, the man is a whirlwind of activity.

Should the day ever come that is not occupied enough, he has his pride and joy, his Legal Eagles touch-football team, to further shoehorn into those scant 24 hours. The Eagles and their 25 law school and/or law graduate school intramural championships are no less a measure of the man than the 11 appearances before the Supreme Court, 8½ of which ended in victories.

"He'd have been a good football coach," said second-year law student Dwight Jefferson, a former defensive end for the Longhorns who is now a Legal Eagle. "I'm sure he would have made it a point to have been a scholar of the game. He takes his football very seriously. The main thing he tells us is this is not a debating society. Only the captain talks to the officials. In emotion, he's more like a Bud Grant or a Tom Landry."

That half-win, half-loss before the land's highest court occurred in October 1972 when he argued successfully that the 18-year-old voting law did apply on the Federal level but in vain that it applied on the state level. Typically, that visit before the nine justices came just two days after he had argued and won a $180 million suit for his client, Howard Hughes, against TWA, a case that Hughes had lost for 11 years preceding.

Asked to explain his success in a schedule that might stagger an ordinary soul, he shrugged and said, "Well, I had a day off in between."

Whether addressing the Supreme Court or first-year law students, Wright, who is a spellbinding speaker, never resorts to notes. He will occasionally carry an index card, if only to repeat an exact quotation or passage. "I've seen him give full-blown presentations and never have notes before him," said J. Neils Thompson, UT civil engineering professor and former athletics council member and past NCAA president. "He has a tremendous memory."

During class, he frequently quotes Latin, and, as one student said, "paragraph and page number from case after case." This, despite a workload that approaches 180 law cases in a class that meets only 14 weeks, four days a week.

"I think you're much more persuasive speaking directly to people than out of a manuscript," said Wright, a gifted debater in high school.

Jones Ramsey, Texas' sports information director, has been on hand to watch Wright charm what easily could be hostile press or

Opinions Out Loud

George Raveling, basketball coach

Chicago Sun-Times

"The present setup (evaluation and recruiting periods) has revolutionized recruiting. It has taken the product out of the store. The athlete no longer is in high school where he belongs, where he can get proper guidance. Now he is where no one can protect him.

"The new rule has put the greatest emphasis on a high school player's accomplishments in his junior year. Before, you had until your senior year to prove you were a big-timer. Now you must prove yourself before your senior year.

"It puts a kid in a vulnerable position. If summer basketball has now been elevated to a very important level of evaluation—and it has—it means a 15- or 16-year-old kid is left to deal with well-trained, articulate adults. Who is there to protect him from negative elements, pimp recruiters or illegal college recruiters? Who is around to monitor the subversive coaches?"

Alan Hinton, soccer coach
Seattle Sounders

Soccer America

"Coaches in college often find it hard to put a superior freshman in the place of a less talented senior just because the latter is an upperclassman. You end up with a good freshman on the bench, supposedly learning from the other players by looking and listening, but who really is just wasting his time."

Joe Morrone Sr., soccer coach
University of Connecticut

Soccer America

"Let's get one thing straight—in college, education comes first. College is not exclusively an NASL prep school. A good soccer program allows a player to develop, hopefully continuing on to the pro game, but school comes first."

Bob Hiltch, director of athletics
Southern Methodist University

Houston Chronicle

"I don't think it's possible to have a spotless athletic program.

"There are people in college sports who say they're clean because they go strictly by the book. They're not telling the truth. They haven't read the whole book. It's too big.

"I don't care which school it is—SMU, TCU, Houston, Texas, UCLA. There are too many people outside the university who want to help. You could run a spotless program in the old days. Now all of us want to take people's money. We need their help. We'll accept $1.5 million of boosters' money this year at SMU. Those who are generous enough to give also want to offer advice on how the athletic department should be run."

Jim Boeheim, basketball coach
Syracuse University

The Washington Post

"Everybody is so conservative now that they're scared to make a mistake. That's the new coaching philosophy. I can't give you a bottom line on why that is. But I turn on the television and watch teams being patient, throwing the ball around the perimeter and passing up a shot they'll probably take in another 30 seconds."

Ray Alborn, football coach
Rice University

Houston Chronicle

"What happens in many cases, a group of alumni will be told, 'We've got five kids in your area that will be your responsibility to get here.' That leaves the door wide open. The coach won't ask any questions, and he can honestly say when the kid arrives that he isn't aware of anything illegal being offered.

"The alumnus feels a great loyalty, and a great responsibility, to deliver the kid. It's really tough if the alumnus lives in the same community and runs the grocery store or filling station and sees the youngster on a daily basis. How can you enforce the visitation-limit rule in that situation?

"The guy in the community has an ego, too, and when the head coach at the big university tells him personally, 'Look, we've just got to get Joe to come to our school,' that guy wants to impress the coach. He's going to tell his friends. 'Old so-and-so told me that Joe's my responsibility. I've got to get him.'

"That's where a lot of abuses begin. Coaches do play on that, too. You better believe it."

NCAA recruiting booklet available to membership

The NCAA Guide for the College-Bound Student-Athlete, a summary of NCAA recruiting regulations, has been revised for the 1982-83 academic year and copies have been mailed to the membership.

The 16-page brochure outlines NCAA rules regarding transferring, eligibility and financial aid.

Each member institution was provided with 20 to 50 copies of the publication. Also, a supply has been sent to the executive officer of each of the 50 state high school associations, along with encouragement to those associations to obtain a sufficient supply to place several copies in every high school under their jurisdiction.

Additional copies are available in lots of 50 for $8.50, which includes postage and handling. To order additional copies, those interested should contact the NCAA national office.

Travel savings

rangements with Fugazy in order to be reimbursed.

The transportation allowance has been paid in full to institutions that competed in the Division II Men's Soccer Championship; in that event, the cost of transportation was down by 7.1 percent per traveler.

A particularly large difference in cost was evident in the three football championships. Sixteen charter flights were used in regional and championship competition, and the NCAA's expense still was at least $127,491 less than it would have been if all tickets had been purchased at the regular coach rate.

The Executive Committee discussed the program at its January meeting in Houston. As far as could be determined, all championships participants arrived in time at their destinations and all tickets were mailed in advance or picked up at the appropriate airports. Some difficulty was encountered regarding the charter flights to the football championships, but Fugazy officials assured the Executive Committee they will work more closely with charter companies in 1982 to make reservations more quickly.

school representatives. "It's like watching Billy Graham," Ramsey said. "He mesmerizes you."

Wright was first appointed to the UT Athletics Council and served from 1966 to 1971 but returned in July 1980. In 1973 he was named to the NCAA Committee on Infractions and became chair five years later, a role he will continue until September 1983.

"I had no idea it (the athletics council stint) would lead anywhere," Wright said. "I have enjoyed it (NCAA), but it's been terribly time-consuming. On the whole, I feel pretty good about college athletics, and I only see the slimy side of it. I see the people who flagrantly cheat as well as those like one coach who recently went to the pros who said his school got caught going 56 in a 55-mph zone. I was not very happy with that statement."

"If you try to push the rules as far as you can, you have to be very careful about not going over 54½ because our radar may not be absolutely perfect. If we have been on the side of anything (in NCAA enforcement), though, I would say we're too mild."

His own fascination with football began when he played end for both his Haverford (Pennsylvania) High School team as well as for Wesleyan University in Middletown, Connecticut. He stands 6 feet, 3½ inches and weighs 182 pounds, not far off the 177-pound playing weight listed in a Wesleyan program, although he remains convinced that was inflated "to scare the opposition."

Yale Law School, beckoned before the NFL, however, and Wright pursued his law degree with the same intensity he showed when he raced through college and graduated before his 19th birthday under the fear the draft might interrupt his education. Stories abound that link Wright with the child prodigy Quiz Kids of radio in the early 1940s, but he denies the rumor and, in fact, describes himself as a "hideous student" in high school, graduating in the bottom half of his class.

Not until he arrived at Yale in 1947 did he discover his calling in life.

"The first few months, I fell madly in love with the law," he said, "and I still am today."

Wright, at 23, became the youngest faculty member at the University of Minnesota Law School, a point driven home to him the first day when he walked into the classroom and began teaching a former high school classmate who had been two years ahead of him.

Five years later, he accepted a position with the UT Law School where he has remained the past 27 years. His interest in sports was whetted when a freshman student announced in class in 1955 that an intramural football team was being organized. A delegation eventually asked Wright to serve as player-coach, which he eagerly accepted, and the Legal Eagles were born. He dropped the first half of that title after five seasons because, he said,

"I began injuring too many things."

The talents of those teams (162-28-4 since 1955) are legend—the team still practices four nights a week—although Wright takes little credit outside of recruiting former all-Southwest Conference Longhorns like Mike Cotten, Knox Nunnally and Scott Henderson. Legally? Of course not.

"Fortunately, NCAA rules don't apply to intramural football," Wright said with his raucous laugh. "I recruit with all sorts of improper inducements and extra benefits."

Some have said Wright also has overlooked, if not outright condoned, similar indiscretions in his own backyard at UT, a charge he adamantly denies.

Bill Little, UT's assistant sports information director, said Wright even turned in the 'Horns to the NCAA when Texas inadvertently twice violated rules by promoting business enterprises. One concerned the appearance of quarterback Randy McEachern in a commercial for Nautilus weightlifting equipment during a television special on the 1977 Texas team, the other a casual incident in which punter Russell Erxleben jokingly did an interview for local Channel 36 and ended it by saying, "This is Russell Erxleben for Channel 36."

While Wright insists he did not tattle on Texas, he did phone Athletics Council chairman J. Neils Thompson to notify him of the indiscretions. Thompson subsequently turned in Texas himself, although the school was not penalized in either case.

"Charles Alan Wright," Little said, "is a letter-of-the-law guy."

As it is, Wright never sits in on hearings involving Texas, leaving the decision to the other five members of the Committee on Infractions. "I am confident that Texas is getting no special treatment," he said.

The same, he said, applies to other perennial Top 20 schools, schools such as Southern California, Alabama, Notre Dame and Nebraska, which are considered by many to be untouchables when it comes to NCAA penalties. Thompson labels such thinking as a "complete fallacy," and Wright regards it as "absolute nonsense."

"I know our staff," Wright said, "and these are Old Testament prophets. They hate sin. If they get any whiff of irregularity, it doesn't matter if it's a big-name perennial national champion or a school they've never even heard of. They put exactly the same effort in both."

"There's always the temptation to cut corners, but there is no reason for an institution with an outstanding program to break the rules. They used to say John McKay at Southern California doesn't recruit, he selects."

That school of thought required some rethinking when on December 8 the NCAA put UCLA's basketball team on two years' probation. Recent stories have linked past Bruin players with a host of NCAA violations, but Wright anticipates no future hearings involving UCLA. The NCAA generally recognizes a statute of limitations covering the four previous years, although a consistent pattern of impropriety could be an exception.

"I think the percentage of those schools that are cheating, out of the 800 or so institutions, is small," Wright said. "If you look on the NCAA's scorecard listing every violation—and some are counted several times—I doubt it'd count up to 100. I don't suppose you ever catch every violation. I have no idea how many police cars are out on the streets of Austin. They may not be able to catch everybody, but they catch enough for it to be a deterrent effect."

Four volumes of material on one case alone sit on a shelf in Wright's law-school office, required reading before the committee's next meeting. The members will hear three cases.

"Every member of the committee reads every word of every report," Wright said proudly. "Some institutions are pretty skeptical when they come in, but we'll put questions to them on small details, and we couldn't do so without reading all the material."

That alone impresses most schools with the committee's thoroughness, although Wright puts equal emphasis on handing down fair judgments. Of the approximately 60 cases on which his committee has ruled, the NCAA has lost none on appeal. "I'm batting 1.000 as chairman," he said.

Southern teams appear strong in women's basketball

Louisiana Tech's undefeated, national championship season last year put the Lady Techsters clearly atop the women's intercollegiate basketball world. This year, however, they may not even be the best in the South.

No fewer than 11 of the nation's top 20 teams (as of mid-February) were from south of the Mason-Dixon line, and all 11 should figure prominently when the first NCAA Division I Women's Basketball Championship begins with first-round games March 12-14. Regional contests will be held March 18-21, followed by the semifinals and finals March 26 and 28 in Norfolk, Virginia.

Louisiana Tech probably will not have to face its rugged Southern competition in the opening rounds. The Lady Techsters most likely will be placed in the Midwest regional, which they will host.

However, regardless of where Louisiana Tech is placed in the 32-team bracket, it should be the favorite. Head coach Sonja Hogg's squad had posted a 24-1 record late in the season thanks, in part, to an 88.4 point scoring average and a rebound margin of better than 15 a game. Senior center Pam Kelly once again has keyed Tech with a 19.4-point scoring average and 64.5 percent accuracy from the field.

Old Dominion handed Louisiana Tech its lone loss of the season in late January, which avenged a December loss to Tech and snapped a 54-game Tech winning streak.

Old Dominion's chances of reaching the final four on its home court in The Scope depend largely upon 6-8 junior center Anne Donovan. She has been among the national leaders all season in scoring (21.7), rebounding (14.6) and field goal percentage (64.4). She also is the primary reason coach Marianne Stanley's club is holding opponents to less than 35 percent shooting from the field.

While Louisiana Tech and Old Dominion may be the cream of the Southern crop, North Carolina State (21-3), Kentucky (17-6), Maryland (18-5), Tennessee (15-8), South Carolina (16-6), Memphis State (21-4), Mississippi (24-2), Georgia (19-6) and Auburn (20-3) are all top-20 caliber.

If anyone is likely to challenge a Southern squad for national supremacy, it probably will be a West Coast or Pennsylvania team.

Sophomore twins Paula and Pam McGee had Southern California off to an 18-0 start and a No. 2 ranking in mid-February, while Cheyney State was right behind with a 19-2 mark in third.

Division II Men's Ice Hockey

Defending champion Lowell is a heavy favorite to win the National Collegiate Division II Men's Ice Hockey Championship, which will be conducted March 18-20 at the site of one of the final four teams.

The championship has been expanded to eight teams this year. Four first-round series will be played the weekend of March 12-14 to determine the four finalists.

Lowell is going for a championship hat trick this year as it already has won titles in 1979 and 1981. At press time, the Chiefs were 22-3.

Merrimack (17-10-1) and Mankato State (21-5-1)—the only other teams to have won Division II Men's Ice Hockey Championships—appear to be Lowell's strongest challengers.

Other prime contenders include Plattsburgh State, 17-11-1; Concordia (Minnesota), 12-6; Gustavus Adolphus, 12-8; Norwich, 16-9; Oswego State 16-7, and Babson, 14-4-1.

Men's Fencing

Defending champion Pennsylvania is a slight favorite to capture the Men's Fencing Championships, which will be held March 16-18 at the University of Notre Dame in Notre Dame, Indiana.

The Quakers, led by Michael Storm (epee) and Joe Wolfson (foil), will be going after their fourth team championship.

Wayne State, another three-time winner of the title, appears to be the strongest challenger to dethrone Pennsylvania. The Tartars have two outstanding performers in Neil Hick (sabre) and Ettore Bianchi (epee).

Clemson's Mark Wasserman (sabre) and Jay Thomas (epee) make the Tigers a contender should the top two falter. Penn State and Notre Dame are other teams to watch.

Division I Men's Swimming

Texas will be shooting for its second swimming crown when the NCAA swimming and diving powers gather at the Walter Schroeder Aquatic Center in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, for the 59th National Collegiate Division I Men's Swimming and Diving Championships March 25-27. The University of Wisconsin, Madison, will host the event.

The Longhorns, who captured their first swimming championship in 1981, return a team that's just as strong, despite having lost Scott Spann and Kris Kirchner. Recruit Rick Carey, the American record holder in the 200 backstroke, is expected to contribute heavily to the Longhorns' effort.

Also strong is Clay Britt, who has won the 100 backstroke the last two years and holds the American record in that event. William Paulus, who holds the world record in the 100-yard butterfly, hopes to add points in the 100 and 200 butterflies. Eric Finical (50 and 100 freestyles) and Andy Schmidt (middle distances) could be strong finishers in their events.

As strong as Texas is, most observers rate UCLA as the premeet favorite. The Bruins, last year's runner-up, are looking for their first swimming title. Coach Ron Ballatore's team returns nine swimmers with NCAA championship experience and depends heavily on several talented freshmen.

Rafael Escalas, defending champion in the 1,650 freestyle; Bill Barrett, defending 200 individual medley titlist, and Robin Leamy, American record holder in the 50 freestyle, will anchor the Bruins' efforts. Freshmen who could provide additional points are Bruce Hayes, fastest American last year in the 1,500 free, and Bruce Dorman, 200 butterfly specialist.

UCLA freestyler Robin Leamy

Stanford would like to take home its first title since 1967. The Cardinals' best swimmer is Wade Flemons, a senior who won the 200 backstroke in 1981 with a 1:46.30 (a school record) clocking and took second in the 100 backstroke.

Division I Women's Swimming

Stanford and Florida are expected to battle for the title at the first Division I Women's Swimming and Diving Championships March 18-20 at the University of Florida in Gainesville.

Stanford was runner-up in last year's AIAW championship, losing by 42 points to Texas, which has elected not to participate in the 1982 NCAA competition. The Cardinals, the 1980 AIAW champion, will be led by distance swimmer Marybeth Linzmeier, a freshman who holds the best time in the nation in the 1,650-yard freestyle (16:34.06) and the 1,000 freestyle (9:45.42).

Kim Carlisle is expected to be strong for the Cardinals in the backstroke; and coach George Haines also can rely on top sprinters Krissie Bush, who owns the third-fastest 50-yard freestyle time (23.00 seconds) in the history of women's collegiate swimming, and Barbara Major, who has posted a 23.96-second clocking in the 50 freestyle this season.

Sherri Hanna ranks second to Linzmeier in the 1,650 free; and Anne Tweedy is strong in the 100-, 200- and 400-yard individual medleys. Jenny Rapp is a freshman to watch in the 400 individual medley.

The Cardinals finished in the top six in all five relay events in the 1981 championships, with second-place finishes in the 200 and 400 medley relays (behind Florida) and in the 800 freestyle relay (behind Texas).

Florida, 9-0 this season and national fifth-place finisher in 1981, returns a number of top swimmers and also can count on several blue-chip recruits. Most notable among the newcomers is freshman Tracy Caulkins, the American record holder in both the 200 and 400 individual medleys. Caulkins also is expected to swim the 200-yard freestyle and the 100 and 200 butterflys.

In addition to Caulkins, Florida has Kathy Treible, a sophomore who won collegiate titles in the 50, 100 and 200 breaststrokes in 1981. She could score heavily in those events again, as well as in the 100 and 200 individual medleys. Freshman diver Megan Neyer, who won both the three-meter springboard and the 10-meter platform events at the 1980 Olympic trials and took a silver medal in the three-meter at the 1981 World University Games, adds to Florida's depth. Junior Amy Caulkins, an outstanding freestyler, also will contribute to the Gators' effort.

Division II Men's Swimming

Northridge State is favored to win its sixth title at the National Collegiate Division II Men's Swimming and Diving Championships March 18-20 at Clarion State College in Clarion, Pennsylvania.

The Matadors have won five times since 1975 and were second the other two years, so they apparently have found the right formula.

The key ingredient in Northridge State's effort is experience. All but two from coach Pete Accardy's 1981 team return and some outstanding new people have been added to make the Matadors even stronger in 1982.

Leading the team will be Tim Hedrick in the individual medley and butterfly, Chris Fessenden in the individual medley and Chris Bakeman in the freestyle. Roland King and Robert Sola could score high in the diving events.

Oakland is not far behind the Matadors, however, and could give Northridge State stiff competition for the title. Freestylers Jon Christianson and Mike Obenshain and diver B. J. Kearney will lead the charge for Oakland, which won the championship in 1980 and was runner-up in both 1979 and 1981.

Division II Women's Swimming

Women swimmers will gather in Kirksville, Missouri, March 11-13 for the first National Collegiate Division II Women's Swimming and Diving Championships. Northeast Missouri State University will host the event.

While the field is expected to be relatively small, the championships promise to be exciting.

Judging from results through mid-February, the teams that could turn in strong performances are New Hampshire, Northridge State, Springfield, Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo and Puget Sound.

New Hampshire finished seventh and Northridge State eighth in last year's AIAW championships. Springfield and Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo are perennial threats.

Two newcomers to watch in Division II are Chico State and California-Davis, which formerly competed in Division III. California-Davis was runner-up for the 1981 AIAW title.

Division III Men's Swimming

The Kenyon Lords hope to claim their third title in as many years at the eighth edition of the National Collegiate

Interpretations

EDITOR'S NOTE: Publication of an interpretation in this column constitutes official notice to the membership. Questions concerning these or other O.I.s should be directed to William B. Hunt, assistant executive director, at the Association's national office (P.O. Box 1906, Mission, Kansas 66201; 913/384-3220). The following cases appear in the 1981-82 Manual and are reprinted here for emphasis.

Transportation to campus from junior college

Case No. 220

Situation: Arrangements are made by an institution for a prospective student-athlete to visit its campus directly from the junior college in which the prospect is enrolled.

Question: Is it permissible for the institution to provide the prospective student-athlete with transportation to return to the prospect's legal residence rather than to the junior college upon completion of the visit?

Answer: Yes; however, only actual transportation expenses may be paid, and the cost of the transportation between the institution's campus and the prospect's legal residence may not be more than the cost of transportation between the junior college and the institution's campus. [B 1-8-(a), O.I. 103]

Campus visitation

Case No. 221

Situation: A prospective student-athlete visits an institution on an official expense paid campus visit.

Question: Is it permissible for the prospect to remain after the permissible 48-hour period in the locale in which the institution is located for personal reasons or other reasons unrelated to the official visit?

Answer: Yes, provided that at the completion of the 48-hour visit, the individual departs the institution's campus and the institution does not pay any expenses thereafter, including the cost of return transportation to the prospect's home; further, if the prospect does not return home prior to attending the institution, the one-way transportation to the campus would be considered a violation of Bylaw 1-8-(g), which prohibits transportation to enroll. [B 1-8-(a) and B 1-8-(g)]

Multiple sport prospect

Case No. 222

Situation: A Division I member institution is limited to a specified total number of paid visits which it may provide prospective student-athletes in the sports of football and basketball during an academic year.

Question: In which sport is a multiple-sport prospect counted for purposes of this regulation?

Answer: A prospect in football and one or more other sports (including basketball) shall be counted against the visit limitation in football, and a prospect in basketball and one or more other sports (other than football) shall be counted against the visit limitation in basketball. [B 1-8-(b)]

Paid campus visit

Case No. 223

Situation: An athletic department staff member extends a specific request to a high school coach to transport a prospective student-athlete to visit the campus.

Question: Does such transportation result in a paid visit for the prospect?

Answer: Yes. [B 1-8-(c), B 1-8-(a) and O.I. 102] relationships with the top few athletes assigned to them and monitor the recruiting process as it unfolds.

In addition to visiting with the athlete's family, coach or anyone with influence on the athlete's decision, the investigator is available at all times to answer questions and offer assistance.

"The project is designed to prevent violations that would jeopardize a prospect's eligibility and to gather information about improper recruiting practices," Berst noted. "The amazing thing is that we actually have been on hand when violations occurred."

Berst also said that there always are some high school prospects looking for special treatment.

"Both projects have confirmed this," he said. "We normally get good cooperation from the athletes. But when we don't, we suspect that this is a student looking for a deal."

The staff attempts to identify those that may be more susceptible to improper inducements. Those individuals and the institutions that recruit them are scrutinized more closely.

"This is a bad case. The kid is going to take something if he can and not tell you. So we have to develop a way of stopping him," Berst said. "Big Brother definitely has been responsible for stopping situations where violations would have occurred."

Beginning in April, Operation Intercept also will expand to include female basketball players.

"We are getting some reports of recruiting violations involving women," Berst noted. "It is natural that we will start the Big Brother identification program this summer for women."

"Maybe we'll change the name to Operation Big Sibling."

Long Range Planning Committee

Financial alternatives discussed

The NCAA Long Range Planning Committee will recommend to the Council in April that the Association conduct or commission a feasibility study of the possibility of generating private-sector revenues to support certain NCAA programs.

Meeting in Albuquerque February 8-9, the committee suggested that outside funds—perhaps administered by an NCAA foundation—could be used to finance certain aspects of NCAA championships, the postgraduate scholarship program, National Youth Sports Program, Volunteers for Youth program and others.

Included in the committee's proposal will be the suggestion that the Association aggressively pursue funds from professional sports organizations under the provisions of Case No. 2, which permits the NCAA to receive and administer such moneys for developmental purposes in a particular sport.

A third facet of the revenues recommendation urges consideration of establishing an endowment fund or other types of reserve funds to assure the Association's financial stability in the future.

Another formal recommendation by the committee will be to have the NCAA staff consider the advisability of a study of the NCAA committee structure, including the functions of each committee, how effectively each operates, committee size and composition and means of streamlining the committee structure.

The committee also discussed the possibility of permitting club sports (teams and individuals) to be eligible for NCAA championships. Members of the committee suggested that such a practice would pose problems regarding individual eligibility and probably would increase institutional costs and pressures. Noting that the Long Range Planning Committee also had discussed this topic in 1971, 1972 and 1976, the current committee expressed no interest in recommending club-sport eligibility.

Much of the February meeting was devoted to ongoing committee topics, including the following:

- Future financial aid sources for student-athletes and the effect of cutbacks in government financial aid programs.

- More effective means of communicating with the NCAA membership, the news media and the general public. The committee favored reinstatement of the NCAA Media Seminars held in the past, continuation of the annual chief executive officer meetings and plans for the weekly NCAA News to be introduced this summer.

- Division classification problems, including multidivision classification within men's and women's programs, same-division classification for men's and women's programs and the possibility of additional divisions within the NCAA. The committee affirmed its earlier position encouraging a consistent institutional philosophy for the entire athletic program.

- Television. The committee expressed concern regarding televised sports reaching the "saturation level" and opined that it is not wise to make long-range forecasts regarding the rapidly changing television industry.

- Means of reducing and controlling pressures in intercollegiate athletics. The committee reviewed a draft document prepared by former NCAA President J. Neils Thompson, who will revise the paper for further study in the committee's June meeting. In that summer meeting, the committee will begin a related discussion of pressures on student-athletes.

Division III Men's Swimming and Diving Championships, which will be held March 18-20 at Washington and Lee University in Lexington, Virginia.

While graduation took its toll, coach Jim Steen returns such strong swimmers as Greg Parini, defending champion in the 50 and 100 freestyles; Dave Dininny, last year's 200 freestyle champion; Chris Shedd, all-America in six events in 1981; Mike Solomon, and John Robrock.

Last year's runner-up, Johns Hopkins, graduated several top swimmers. However, coach Tim Welsh looks to Mike Leonhardt, 500 and 1,650 freestyle champion; Harvey Allen, who finished second in the 100 and 200 breaststrokes last year, and senior captain Bill Bender to provide leadership for his young team.

Williams College, third-place finisher in 1981, should be strong again this year with three-time all-America Michael Regan in the 50 freestyle.

St. Lawrence returns Nick Nichols, who won three events as a sophomore in 1980 and one last year.

Doug Jones will lead the Claremont-Mudd team. A strong, versatile swimmer, Jones swims the 200 and 500 freestyles and the 100 and 200 backstrokes.

California-San Diego; Wisconsin-Stevens Point, and host Washington and Lee also should be strong.

Division III Women's Swimming

An excellent group of swimmers is expected at the National Collegiate Division III Women's Swimming and Diving Championships, which will be held March 11-13 at the University of Massachusetts, Boston.

Pomona-Pitzer, which finished third at last year's AIAW championships, will bring a strong contingent to the 1982 event, as will St. Lawrence, Kenyon, Williams and Johns Hopkins.

Tim Welsh, Johns Hopkins coach and a member of the NCAA Women's Swimming Committee, said, "We have no idea what to expect in this year's meet, except that it will be interesting. We're going in about 90 percent blind." He noted that most of the competing teams have not swum against each other during the season, making any comparison difficult.

Men's Indoor Track

There is good news and bad news for all the teams going to the NCAA Men's Indoor Track Championships March 12-13 in Pontiac, Michigan.

The good news is that Ted Banks, the man who has led the Texas-El Paso Miners to six wins in the last eight years, has left coaching for a position in the business world. The bad news is that the Miners are loaded with enough talent to win their third straight team title.

Leading the pack is Suleiman Nyambui, who will be going after a fourth consecutive victory in the mile. No one has ever done that before in any indoor track event, and it has happened only three times in any division of outdoor track.

Nyambui's best indoor mark in the mile has been 4:04.20. He also has qualified in the two-mile (8:29.69) and the three-mile (13:29.02 in the 5,000).

"A lot will depend on Nyambui," admitted new coach John Wedel. "We will have to see how the time schedule works out for him and how he feels about doubling up."

In the three-mile, the Miners have Mathews Motshwarateu (13:24.64) and Gabriel Kaman (13:42.67), who finished first and third at the NCAA Division I Men's Cross Country Championships in November. Defending three-mile champ Mike Musyoki, who was No. 2 in cross country, has used up his eligibility.

The other returning national champion for the Miners is Bert Cameron in the 440-yard dash. Cameron has turned in a 47.20 in the 400-meter event this year.

Milt Ottey finished second for Texas-El Paso in the high jump last year behind Navy's Leo Williams and both will be back. Ottey has a 7-4½ mark this winter, while Williams' best mark to date is 7-4¼.

Tennessee was third last year and may be ready to move up. Willie Gault was second in the 60-yard high hurdles and has turned in a 7.06 this winter, the fifth fastest ever run indoors.

Villanova is the lone team to have defeated Texas-El Paso in the last four NCAA indoor meets, and the Wildcats are loaded again this year.

John Marshall set a collegiate record in the 800 at 1:47.84 and teamed with Carlton Young, John Hunter and Ross Donoghue for a collegiate indoor distance medley relay record of 9:35.37.

NCAA championship radio network to blanket country

The 1982 NCAA Division I Men's Basketball Championships will be broadcast into most of the nation's top 100 markets and will be heard on more than 300 stations abroad over the Armed Forces Network.

Jim Host and Associates, the CBS Radio Network and the NCAA will coproduce the extensive radio coverage of the tournament. A total of 15 tournament games will be aired, including the semifinals and finals from New Orleans March 27 and 29. Through mid-February, stations in 63 of the nation's top 100 markets had affiliated with the network.

The following is a list of network affiliates to date:

Worldwide rights granted for men's basketball event

The NCAA and Trans World International, Incorporated, have agreed to a foreign licensing arrangement for rights to the NCAA Division I Men's Basketball Championship.

The agreement marks the first of its kind negotiated by the NCAA in basketball. In the past, foreign rights have been granted to the carrying network of the championship.

"The NCAA Men's Basketball Committee views this as excellent exposure for the championship," said David R. Gavitt, committee chair. "This agreement is further indication of the growing popularity of the NCAA championship on an international level. We are interested in promoting basketball worldwide, and we believe the National Collegiate Championship is the sport's showcase event."

TWI already has made sales in several countries, including the United Kingdom, Japan, the Philippines, Italy and Saudi Arabia. The New York-based firm will have an exclusive license to telecast, cablecast or otherwise exhibit championship games on a live or delayed basis outside the United States.

Under the terms of the three-year agreement, the NCAA will receive a royalty payment of 70 percent of all net receipts. The NCAA will be guaranteed a minimum payment of $100,000 this year, $125,000 in 1983 and $150,000 in 1984.

"We are looking forward to a successful relationship with the NCAA and are anxious to help in the promotion of one of the world's premier sporting events," said Barry Frank, senior corporate vice-president of International Management Group, TWI's parent company.

I-AA bracket expansion examined

Athletic directors and head football coaches at NCAA Division I-AA football institutions have been sent questionnaires to determine the interest in expanding the NCAA Division I-AA Football Championship and the Division I-AA Football Committee.

The questionnaires were sent to the 36 NCAA member institutions soon to be reclassified from Division I-A to Division I-AA, in addition to the 50 institutions already in Division I-AA.

Because of the expansion of Division I-AA, the Division I-AA Football Committee wanted advice from the I-AA membership for its meeting April 6-9 in Wichita Falls, Texas.

The Division I-AA football championship was expanded last year from four to eight teams; however, with an additional 36 teams, the size of the bracket probably will be expanded again. The Division I-AA membership was asked if it preferred a 12-, 14- or 16-team bracket.

Division I-AA football members also were asked if they favored an expansion of the committee. Currently, the Division I-AA Football Committee is composed of four members, the same as the Division II and Division III Football Committees. The committee's feeling is that the new Division I-AA members should have representation on the committee.

The committee will study the results of the survey at its April meeting.
