Musburger to emcee luncheon

CBS Sports anchor Brent Musburger, known to millions of viewers as the host of "The NCAA Today," will serve as master of ceremonies for the NCAA honors luncheon January 10 in San Diego.

Musburger has been a full-time employee of CBS Sports since 1975 and currently serves as host and managing editor of "CBS Sports Saturday" and "CBS Sports Sunday," along with his duties as host of "The NCAA Today" and "The NFL Today."

The honors luncheon will take place as part of the NCAA's 77th annual Convention at the Town and Country Hotel in San Diego. A highlight of the event will be the presentation of the Theodore Roosevelt Award to all-time PGA great Arnold Palmer.

The luncheon begins at 12:30 p.m. January 10 after completion of the division round-table meetings.

Musburger has handled the play-by-play of National Basketball Association game broadcasts, National Football League game broadcasts and has hosted "CBS Sports Spectacular." In addition, Musburger hosts "SportsTime," a Monday-to-Friday program on the CBS Radio Network.

Brent Musburger

Prior to joining the network, Musburger was sports director of WBBM-TV, the CBS-owned station in Chicago. He moved on to co-anchor the nightly news broadcast for KNXT-TV, CBS' owned-and-operated station in Los Angeles.

He began his broadcasting career in 1968 at WBBM Radio as sports director.

Musburger recently completed his first football season as host of the "The NCAA Today" and currently is in the middle of his eighth year as host of "The NFL Today."

Council approves television proposal

The NCAA Council has voted to sponsor a resolution regarding football television for consideration by the membership at the 77th annual NCAA Convention January 10-12 in San Diego.

In a December 9 telephone conference, the Council approved submission of the resolution to the Convention and directed that it be printed in a pre-Convention issue of The NCAA News.

The television resolution is designed to deal with contingencies that may result from the eventual ruling by the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals on the NCAA's appeal of a Federal district court decision that the Association's football television plan and television contracts violate Federal antitrust law. Best estimates are that the circuit court will not rule on the appeal until after the 1983 Convention and probably not until February. The Council resolution is intended to establish a membership-approved position regarding football television to guide the Association's efforts at least until the 1984 NCAA Convention.

"It is difficult to chart a course of action without knowing what the circuit court's conclusions might be," explained NCAA President James Frank. "We do not know if the ruling will be substantially adverse to the membership's interests, and we do not know if we would be successful, in that event, in securing a stay from the circuit court or from the Supreme Court pending an appeal to the Supreme Court."

The television committee would be required to hold hearings prior to formulating a 1983 football television plan. Once authorized by the NCAA Council, such plan would be submitted to the football-playing membership of each division for vote. A two-thirds approval by a division in a mail referendum.

Cincinnati dismisses NCAA suit

The University of Cincinnati has dismissed its litigation against the NCAA, dissolving the preliminary injunction that prevented the Association from reclassifying Cincinnati's football program in Division I-AA.

Cincinnati President Henry R. Winkler notified the NCAA national office December 10 that it had dismissed the lawsuit in the Hamilton County (Ohio) Court of Common Pleas on that date.

The preliminary injunction, issued October 14 by Judge Fred J. Carlano, was to remain in effect until the university appealed two NCAA Council interpretations at the 1983 NCAA Convention next month in San Diego. Such an appeal now will not be necessary.

With the litigation dismissed, the institution's football classification automatically reverts to Division I-AA status retroactive to September 1, 1982, which would have been the case except for the court order obtained by the university. It is expected that Cincinnati will submit a formal request to the Council for a waiver of the requirement that it remain classified in Division I-AA for a minimum of three years.

The Council is authorized under the provisions of Bylaw 10-5 to grant such waivers if it believes that unusual circumstances warrant such action. The institution believes it can document compliance with the Division I-AA criteria in the football season just ended, and the Council will consider that documentation in addition to the fact that the institution competed under court order as a Division I-AA football member during the 1982 season when it had not met the criteria for that classification.

The institution sought the preliminary injunction after the Council denied its appeal regarding the Division I-AA criteria in August.

Membership, classification topics listed

Editor's Note: This is the fifth article in a seven-part series on legislation to be considered at the 77th annual Convention. The topical grouping to be considered in this issue is membership and classification. The remaining topics to be covered in the December 22 and December 29 issues of The NCAA News are playing and practice seasons, recruiting, general eligibility, and personnel limitations.

Undoubtedly the most significant proposal in the membership and classification grouping is Proposal No. 71, the NCAA Council-sponsored proposal that would establish new criteria and refine existing criteria for membership in Division I.

The proposal includes a minimum financial aid requirement for all members, a requirement that football or basketball must be among the minimum of eight sports sponsored for men in that division, a minimum-attendance requirement in Division I-AA football and a minimum-attendance requirement in basketball for those institutions that do not sponsor football or do not meet the Division I football requirements.

For a more detailed report of Proposal No. 71, see the November 8 issue of The NCAA News, which contained the plan in its entirety.

Another membership and classification proposal facing Convention delegates is Proposal No. 72, which would reduce from eight to six the sports sponsorship criterion for membership in Division I.

Sponsored by the Midwestern City Conference, No. 72 would affect only nonfootball-playing institutions because Divisions I-A and I-AA institutions have an eight-sport limit independent of Division I as a whole.

Under the plan proposed by the Midwestern City Conference, the requirements would be the same as existed prior to the 1981 special Convention.

Proposal No. 77, sponsored by seven Division II institutions, would reduce the sports sponsorship criterion from six to four sports for membership in Division II and specify that at least two sports be team sports. This proposal was defeated by seven votes at the 1982 Convention.

Sponsored by the Council, Proposal No. 74 affirms the Council's interpretations in applying the Division I-A football criteria. Under this proposal, the stadium used for an institution's home games must contain 30,000 permanent seats during the football season that concludes the four-year period being evaluated.

No. 74 also requires an institution's minimum average paid attendance of 17,000 for one season to take place in the stadium containing the 30,000 permanent seats. The Council could approve exceptions to the 30,000-permanent-seat requirement when circumstances warrant.

Proposal No. 75, sponsored by six Metropolitan Collegiate Athletic Conference members that compete as Division I-A independents in football, would require an institution to play at least three-fourths of its home football games in the stadium used to meet the requirements of 30,000 permanent

Cable television series receives go-ahead from state supreme court

The Georgia Supreme Court last week overturned a lower-court decision that would have jeopardized the second year of the NCAA Football Television Supplementary Series.

Fulton County Superior Court Judge Frank M. Eldridge granted a preliminary injunction in August that would have barred Turner Broadcasting System, Inc., from presenting the supplementary series as planned next fall. However, the state supreme court reversed that decision in a unanimous (7-0) decision.

In its opinion, the court declared that there had been no prior agreement between the parties involved concerning the manner in which the supplementary series was presented.

"After considering the writings and discussions of the parties surrounding the making of the contract, it is clear that there was no meeting of the minds upon the rights and obligations relating to restrictions on the presentation of the supplementary series," the decision said.

ABC and Cox Broadcasting, which owns the network's Atlanta affiliate (WSB-TV), originally challenged the NCAA and Turner regarding Turner's right to broadcast over free airways in Atlanta. Turner originated the supplementary series over WTBS-TV, its flagship station, and then cablecast the games across the country as part of a two-year, $17.6 million agreement with the NCAA. WTBS broadcasts over the air in the Atlanta area and then retransmits its signal via satellite to cable systems.

ABC and Cox had asked in August for the superior court to enjoin the series presentation this fall. They contended that WSB's presentation of network telecasts of college football would be adversely affected by the WTBS games.

Eldridge refused to grant the injunction. However, he held that WSB would be damaged by the supplementary series, and he issued a preliminary injunction on the supplementary series for 1983. He also granted WSB the rights to televise two University of Georgia and two Georgia Institute of Technology games this fall, without regard to the provisions in the NCAA Football Television Plan. WSB did not exercise that option.

A total of 35 teams appeared on supplementary series telecasts this fall. Fourteen of those did not appear on the network series. Turner paid more than $7.8 million in rights fees for the 19 games.

Well, here we are in another wave of sanctimonious, silly assaults on big-time college athletics.

In one circle, we have the intellectual purists who say the purpose of a university is to "educate," not to "entertain." They argue that the TV networks that dangle great gobs of money before schools whose football and basketball games they wish to broadcast are going to corrupt the University of Oklahoma, Notre Dame and, yes, even Stanford, and drag them away from their basic mission.

In another circle are people ready to bestow sainthood on the Jesuits at the University of San Francisco because they decided to give up top-level basketball on the implied ground that the school couldn't compete without cheating. The implication, one might discern, is that the Jesuits in San Francisco are somewhat more moral than those at Georgetown, which played in the NCAA finals last year and is likely to field one of the nation's top basketball teams this winter.

Over there in a little intellectual knot are some alumni of my alma mater, Oberlin, who believe that athletic loss after loss, year after year, proves that Oberlin is still at the pinnacle academically. And here I am saying that it only proves that Oberlin is a loser at football, basketball, or whatever, and that academic superiority must be displayed in other, more positive arenas.

Those crying that the purpose of a university is education have a warped elitist notion that education consists only of learning about ohms, sonnets and the conjugation of French verbs. Education also means learning about conflict, loyalty, winning and losing.

Education is the socialization process that precedes, includes and follows a "big game."

Even snobs do not live by academics alone.

I am amazed that those who launch these recurring attacks on high-powered college athletics never learn that they are trying to make water run uphill, or run the Pacific over by spitting into it.

Father Theodore Hesburgh, the president of Notre Dame, is one of the great people in our time. Some 90 institutions have given him honorary degrees by way of expressing appreciation for his contributions to education, good government, civil rights, racial justice and other causes decent and noble.

But ask someone now or 30 years from now for a name they identify with Notre Dame and the odds are overwhelming that they will say "Knut Rockne," not Ted Hesburgh.

A sports hero is easy to identify and associate with. There is no great cerebral exercise in deciding that Georgia's Herschel Walker runs beautifully with a football, or that Virginia's Ralph Sampson is super at playing basketball. But a lot more is involved in deciding that someone is a great physics teacher, or politician, or reporter.

I have done my share of complaining about colleges that exploit athletes, parading them before weekend mobs as gladiators and then casting them adrift at season's end as uneducated, sometimes illiterate, has-beens.

But I know that the exploitation, the cruelty, did not begin on the college gridiron or the high school basketball court. The path to a life of functional illiteracy generally begins near birth for kids ill-cared for by parents, abused by relatives and neighbors, barely tolerated by teachers. Only a fortunate gift of physical skills gains these youngsters the attention of a coach who prevents them from becoming a school "pushout" or "dropout" statistic.

For every poor youngster meanly exploited by high school and college coaches, there must be a dozen who would be in prison now if some coach had not taken an interest in them.

Cheating? Yes, I have known college alumni who wooed athletes by slipping them money, arranging for their daddies to get better jobs or seeing that the athlete got a fast convertible with matching girl.

I've also known some who said, "I promise only that if you play at my school, keep your nose clean, study hard and get decent grades, I'll see that a good job awaits you when your playing days are over." They won over the athlete—and kept their promise.

So a college coach faces a kid who is a great athlete, but who has been cheated in educational terms since kindergarten. Does the truly moral coach say, "I won't touch you, kid" or does he say, "I'll take you, but only if you accept a tutor, a strict study schedule, a program to make you something more than a jock?"

Big-time athletics need not be exploitative and dishonest, and small-time athletics are not always clean or decently thoughtful of the youngsters who play the games. Winning is not intrinsically immoral, and there is nothing degrading about a college wanting a television network to share with it some of the revenues pulled in by broadcasting its events.

Money helps make great universities—and not just for athletes.

Athletics receive more exposure

John Thompson, basketball coach
Georgetown University

Associated Press

"There is no difference today than when I was in high school, just more exposure. Some people are very honest and will report violations and violators. It's typical of NCAA rules that it's not news that people jaywalk. It is news when somebody gets a ticket for it."

Arthur J. Bergstrom, former controller
National Collegiate Athletic Association

"NCAA: The Voice of College Sports"

"The success of the Association's championships can be traced to the foresight and diligent labors of many dedicated individuals who were willing to spend considerable money to launch and build these events."

"Hard work and the willingness to adjust to abnormal conditions were responsible for keeping the championship series alive during World War II. Schedules were modified to shorten time of competition, and meets and tournaments were located in areas where availability of transportation was less than a major problem."

Charles (Lefty) Driesell, basketball coach
University of Maryland, College Park

Baltimore Sun

"If I wanted to be a millionaire, I wouldn't be coaching. People on the outside don't really know what it's like—the strain, the mental tax. You think it's all fun and games. But the day of a game, I'll tell you, it's tough. Your reputation is on the line."

"When I started coaching, I said there was no way I'd be doing it at 40. When I was 40, I said there was no way I'd be doing it at 50. Well, I'm 50 and still doing it. I just may do it forever."

Ray Albarn, football coach
Rice University

Houston Chronicle

"We won't get rid of it (illegal recruiting) until we punish the player along with the school. The player knows what the rules are. If he gets it (penalized) and the school gets it and the coach gets it, you're going to stop a lot of this stuff."

"If the coach gets a school on probation and gets a job at another school, then the probation should follow him. That type of action would shade a few views, too."

"Somehow, eliminate alumni from recruiting, except when the youngster visits the campus on his official visit. That way, you don't have a coach telling an alumnus, 'We've got to have this kid.' Then the coach leaves the room, and the alumnus makes the deal. The coach comes back in the room, the kid tells him he's coming and the coach says, 'Gee, son, that's really great.' Leave it down to the kid coming to the campus."

L. Donald Shields, president
Southern Methodist University

Dallas Times Herald

"Athletics provide an opportunity for alumni to retain or develop a personal tie to the university. People relate to quality. They like to be associated with quality."

"Different people relate to different interests. But I've found that once people get involved in a program at the university—whether it be athletics or the arts—there's a multiplier effect. They become interested in activities beyond what initially stimulated them."

"I believe you can play within the rules and have a quality program. I do not believe, as some people have said, that you have to cheat to have a quality program. I in no way believe or accept that."

David L. Maggard, director of athletics
University of California, Berkeley

Touchdown Illustrated

"The financial crunch has created a lot of pressure. People are beginning to realize that intercollegiate athletics has to be run like a business. You cannot survive on deficit spending. There just aren't any bail-out dollars available. You need revenue to run a program. More and more of those moneys are going to have to come from gate receipts and private giving. This creates some pressures in meeting the bottom line. The real challenge is continuing to remain within the structure of what a university is all about and then marketing your product within those parameters."

"TV is a very important part of our future. There are large dollars available. But it is not necessarily a panacea. One thing you can be certain of in the TV market is that you must be a good attraction. You have to be successful. It's entertainment, and television audiences want to see the best."

Bailey M. Marshall, director
Texas University Interscholastic League

Houston Chronicle

"It (residency rule) involves more than just recruiting. That rule applies on the other end, too. It prevents parents from placing their children where the better (football) programs are. Without the rule, there would be a tendency for weaker teams and programs to lose their better players and for stronger teams to attract more good players. Without the rule, a youngster could get a little mad at his coach and want to change schools."

"If people don't like the rule, think how much worse it would be if we had no rules at all. If the outstanding athlete is recruited to a new team, think of all the people who would suffer. The player the outstanding athlete replaces loses. When his team beats somebody, everybody on the other side and their fans suffer, too."

Looking Back

Five years ago

The NCAA News reported details of a plan to restructure Division I by establishing specific criteria for membership in Division I-A Football, Division I-AA Football and Division I Basketball, with the plan to be voted upon at the January 1978 NCAA Convention. (December 15, 1977, NCAA News)

Ten years ago

Most NCAA allied conferences reported that they favored reorganization of the Association into two divisions for both competitive and legislative purposes, but the Eastern College Athletic Conference and the West Coast Athletic Conference expressed opposition. (December 15, 1972, NCAA News)

Thirty years ago

The NCAA Council forwarded to the membership under the date of December 9, 1952, a 10-point plan to strengthen the enforcement machinery of the NCAA and its allied conferences. ("NCAA: The Voice of College Sports")

Sixty years ago

Effective December 22, 1922, the NCAA Council replaced the Executive Committee as the policy body of the Association. The Council, first appointed a year earlier, was expanded to include 15 members. ("NCAA: The Voice of College Sports")

Basketball notes

Conference numbers rise dramatically

1980s: New Leaders

To get an idea of the new face of college basketball in the 1980s, turn back the clock 10 seasons and look at the final 1973 conference standings in Division I. The Big East, Atlantic-10, Metro and Sun Belt Conferences are nowhere to be found. Now, all four are among the nation's winningest major conferences.

How and why did it happen? Let's look at some numbers. Even though the number of Division I teams has increased by 58 in a decade—from 216 in 1973 to 274 now, the number of major independents has fallen dramatically—from 68 a decade ago to just 19 now. To put it another way, the number of major teams in conferences has jumped almost 70 percent.

In 1973, there were 25 teams in the National Collegiate Division I Basketball Championship tournament, and 16 were automatic qualifiers from the conferences. The 1983 NCAA tournament field will have 52 teams, 28 of them automatic qualifiers from conferences and 24 at-large teams (vs. nine at-large teams in 1973; most of the 24 will come from conferences).

You did not have to be a Phi Beta Kappa to see that the way to reach the NCAA tournament was to form a conference and obtain automatic qualification. The Big East, Atlantic-10, Metro and Sun Belt are not the only new conferences formed since 1973 but the most successful ones. With few exceptions, the current members of the Big East, Atlantic-10 and Metro were major independents in 1973.

The Sun Belt is something else, though, because 1973 was North Carolina-Charlotte's first year in Division I and South Alabama's second. South Florida and Virginia Commonwealth did not reach major status until 1974 and Old Dominion until 1977. As for Alabama-Birmingham, its first varsity team was not until 1979; and the Birmingham Coliseum, site of this season's Sun Belt Tournament, was not opened until September 1976.

These four conferences rank 2-7-11-12 among the 13 conferences that have a winning record against outside Division I opponents over the first three seasons of the 1980s. Here are the top 15 conferences:

	Won	Lost	Pct.
Atlantic Coast.....	236	56	.808
Big East.....	240	98	.710
Big Ten.....	217	101	.682
Southeastern.....	162	80	.669
Big Eight.....	154	95	.618
Pacific-10.....	138	92	.600
Metro.....	166	112	.597
Southland.....	157	108	.592
Missouri Valley.....	141	103	.578
Southwest.....	134	101	.570
Sun Belt.....	141	123	.534
Atlantic-10.....	164	148	.526
Western Athletic.....	140	131	.517
Pacific Coast.....	115	131	.467
West Coast.....	109	131	.454

It should be noted that the actual conference lineup competing for the championship is used each season. Villanova, for instance, was in the Eastern Eight (now Atlantic-10) in the 1980 season but in the Big East the last two seasons, so its record is divided accordingly. Remember, games vs. non-Division I opponents are deleted. If these were included, only a few major conferences would have losing nonconference records.

Last season, for instance, Division I teams won 523, lost 65 for an .889 winning percentage against nonmajors. The top conferences play the fewest such games. The first eight conferences in the table (67 teams) were 99-3 vs. nonmajors in 1982.

Two conferences went from losing records the first two years of the 1980s to winning marks last season—the Big Sky (38-36) and Trans America (37-34). And the new seven-team lineup in the ECAC South jumped to 56-46. Otherwise, patterns were consistent.

Tournament Leaders

You might expect the Atlantic Coast, with that remarkable .808 record against outside majors in the

Drake's Lorri Bauman ranks third in Division I women's scoring with 28.0 average 1980s (which does include all tournament play, by the way), to also have the most victories in NCAA tournament play over the same three seasons. And that is exactly what happened. The ACC's 13 entrants won 22 NCAA tournament games, lost 12, reached the Final Four three times, the championship game twice and won one championship. The Big Ten 11 entrants won 20 games, sent three teams to the Final Four and took one crown. The Metro's .688 percentage was best, and it had two Final Four teams and one title. Here are the top 15 conferences ranked by tourney victories in the 1980s:

Conf. (entrants)	W	L	Pct.	FF
Atlantic Coast (13).....	22	12	.647	3
Big Ten (11).....	20	11	.645	3
Big East (10).....	16	10	.615	1
Metro (6).....	11	5	.688	2
Big Eight (7).....	11	7	.611	-
Southeastern (10).....	10	11	.476	1
Southwest (6).....	8	6	.571	1
Pacific-10 (9).....	8	9	.471	1
Western Athletic (5).....	6	5	.545	-
Sun Belt (5).....	5	5	.500	-
Southland (3).....	4	3	.571	-
East Coast (3).....	3	3	.500	-
Missouri Valley (4).....	3	4	.429	-
Atlantic-10 (4).....	3	4	.429	-
ECAC North (3).....	2	3	.400	-

No other conference won more than one NCAA tournament game in the 1980s. In fact, all the other 15 conferences combined were 9-38 for the three years. From another angle, the top eight conferences above (70 teams) produced 50 percent of all tournament entrants (72 of 144—48-team field each year), 74.1 percent of the victories and all 12 Final Four teams.

Surprisingly, major independents were only 2-7 in tournament play in the three years, with no teams in the Final Four, although DePaul was the country's winningest team in that span and DePaul, Marquette, Notre Dame and Dayton have 68 tournament victories in history and six Final Four teams.

Quotes of the Week

Rebecca Lee, mother of Memphis State's Keith Lee (the top freshman rebounder in the country a year ago), talking about her son: "I don't like for him to dunk the ball. I'm afraid he'll break his hand." (Joe Mitch, Metro Conference SID)

Prior to his team's game with Kentucky, Butler coach Joe Saxon commented: "Kentucky's players put their pants on the same way we do. It's just that it takes a little longer to pull their pants up." (Jim McGrath, Butler SID)

North Carolina State coach Jim Valvano, after his team hit 13 of 23 three-pointers from the Atlantic Coast Conference's new three-point line: "I'm not saying the circle is too close, but at half time my mother came out of the stands and knocked in three out of four." (Ed Seaman, North Carolina State SID)

Following Southern California's exhibition victory over Athletes in Action, Trojan coach Stan Morrison had this to say: "I call this a nudist colony game. By that I mean you really get exposed. We had guys jumping around too much. For a while I thought I was coaching a bunch of kangaroos." (Duane Lindberg, Southern California assistant SID)

Texas-Arlington coach Bob LeGrand: "We've got a bunch of no-names—a bunch of blue-collar workers. And if some guys don't come through, there are going to be some layoffs." (Jim Patterson, Texas-Arlington SID)

American's first-year head coach Ed Tapscott after his first college victory: "It's kind of like that first kiss—you're glad to get it over with but you want to do it again and again." (Terry Cornwell, American SID)

Oklahoma's Carla Pearson, a senior forward, is an art major who hopes to work in advertising after graduation. In the meantime, the St. Louis, Missouri, native has worked hard to develop both her artistic and athletic talents, the results of which can be seen on the basketball court and in the 1983 Oklahoma media guide. Her career statistics are in the guide and so are her charcoal sketches of teammates.

"Basketball is like drawing," Pearson asserts. "If you can draw a straight line, then you have talent. If the line is crooked, you just erase it and start over. If you have a problem in basketball, you can straighten it out, too." (Sherri Dickerson, Oklahoma sports information student assistant)

Francisco Diez, coach of the Venezuelan national team, wanted nothing more than to defeat Springfield and his former mentor, coach Ed Bilik, on the final game of his team's 11-game tour of the United States. He had come to Springfield twice—in 1970 to work on his master's and in 1980 to work on his doctorate—and served as Bilik's assistant both times. After Springfield pulled out a last-minute 60-58 victory, Diez said: "You bet I came to beat him. I wanted him to see how good a teacher he is, and mostly I wanted him to see how well I learned what he taught me. Our relationship is more than just coach and student. He is my friend. But, I really wanted to beat him." (Bob Marx, Springfield SID)

Defending national champion Louisiana Tech is playing home games in brand-new Thomas Assembly Center (capacity 8,098 for basketball) this season. However, the Lady Techsters probably already miss the friendly confines of old Memorial Gym, where they had a winning streak dating from February 14, 1978. Tech took on Southern California in the dedication game of the Thomas Assembly Center and lost, 64-58, for the first time in 60 home games. The game, which Mike Littwin of the Los Angeles Times billed "the Virginia-Georgetown of women's basketball," attracted 8,700 vocal fans. "We felt that this trip to Louisiana Tech would determine whether we deserve to be (ranked) number one or not," junior forward Paula McGee said afterward. "The crowd made it tough for us to get started because we usually play in front of 45 or 50 people."

Next Time, Tea for Two?

North Carolina Central coach Yvonne Edwards was not sure if she was coaching a basketball game or teaching a geography lesson. Edwards was forced to come up with a couple of unique defensive alignments when five of her eight available players fouled out during an 85-83 double-overtime victory over Bennett College. Three fouled out in regulation, a fourth in the first overtime and the fifth during the second extra period.

"We played a box and one without the one in the first overtime," Edwards explained. "Then we played a triangle with two up top and one down low. This is the first time I've ever heard of this. I'm very proud of my girls. If we can win with three, we know we can win with eight or nine."

Bizarre Debut

The first game day for Walt Hazard, Chapman's first-year head coach, turned out to be somewhat bizarre. For starters, the team nearly missed its flight out of Los Angeles International Airport because of heavy traffic. After the team arrived at its lodging place at Humboldt State, Hazard, minutes later at a nearby shopping plaza, played an active role in the pursuit and capture of two mugging suspects. Thanks to his eyewitness account and the help of two Arcata, California, residents who tracked down the car and reported its license-plate number, local and state police apprehended the two suspects and returned the stolen property 45 minutes after the crime occurred. Oh, yes, Chapman's basketball team capped the day's events by winning, 77-41. (Greg Wright, Chapman SID)

Bizarre Game

"It was the most bizarre game I've ever been involved in," said C. W. Post coach Tom Galcazzi, second-year head coach with 16 years of collegiate experience. Each team drew a technical foul for six players on the court, but that was nothing compared to the finish. C. W. Post was ahead by three with 20 seconds left and Nate Mamer seemed to be celebrating a victory when he fired the ball toward an official after being called for a charging foul. But the ball hit Old Westbury's Kevin High in the head, a technical was called, Old Westbury converted, then scored on the ensuing possession to send the game into overtime and went on to win. (Bill Huffman, C. W. Post SID)

Cradle(s) of Coaches

Information still is being gathered on alma maters and coaching records of active NCAA women's basketball coaches, but data that has been collected thus far indicates that two schools in particular seem to be proficient at turning out basketball coaches. One is West Chester State, with nine graduates currently among the ranks, and the other is Springfield, generally acknowledged as the birthplace of the sport, with seven. The West Chester graduates are Lois Ashley (1965, Pennsylvania); Jean Balthaser (1968, Connecticut); Karen Harden (1976, Bucknell); Linda Lerch (1976, Cornell); Linda MacDonald (1970, Temple); Kathleen Delaney-Smith (1965, Harvard); Jim Stringer (1974, Widener); Marian Washington (1970, Kansas), and Linda Ziemke (1972, American). Springfield alumni are Kathleen Connell (1975, Colgate); Jeanne Foley (1975, Princeton); Kay Higgins (1978, Gettysburg); Carson Hopkinson (1974, Middlebury); Pat Randall (1962, American International); Roger Wickman (1956, Hartford), and Chris Wielgus (1974, Dartmouth). If we've missed anyone, we'd love to hear from or about them!

Old Dominion's Mark West is second in Division I men's rebounding with 15.0 mark

The 300 Club

Philadelphia Textile coach Herb Magee, whose 1970 team won the Division II national championship, has reached the 300-victory club in the 16th season of his career. (Joe Panikowski, Philadelphia Textile assistant SID)

Hofstra coach Dick Berg scored his 300th victory in just his 15th season and it came against Dowling, where he won 275 games in 12 years. (Christopher Humm, Hofstra SID)

No Hamburgers Tonight

Indiana State fans were screaming for two more points when reserve Mike Saylor entered the game because a local chain was offering a free hamburger every time the team scored 90 or more points. In the last minute, Saylor missed a layup, the front end of a one-and-one, and after a steal, fumbled the ball out of bounds. Final score: 88-71. Team trainer Bob Behnke told Saylor: "Mike, you owe hamburgers to 4,000 people." (Bill Goldring, Indiana State SID)

"A Good Lesson"

Don't assume, as some have, that Georgetown's Pat Ewing will turn pro after this season or next. "I'm here to better myself, to graduate and to get my degree," Ewing told Michael Wilborn of the Washington Post. "I remember when I was nothing in basketball. I was just tall and skinny and people used to laugh at me. Really, I know how it is to be terrible. My first game in high school, I fouled out in three minutes and got only one point. People laughed. I got depressed and wanted to quit. But my mother said it was a good lesson. If basketball doesn't work, I've got to be able to do something else. And this is where I have to prepare for that. My mother keeps telling me to graduate." (Jim Marchiony, Georgetown SID)

Division II Football

Jim Wacker ended his coaching reign at Southwest Texas State on a triumphant note with a 34-9 victory over California-Davis at the 1982 NCAA Division II Football Championship December 11 at the Palm Bowl in McAllen, Texas.

Wacker, who recently accepted the head coaching job at Texas Christian, compiled a 42-8 record at Southwest Texas State, won three Lone Star Conference titles and took back-to-back NCAA Division II championships.

"This is a super way to go out," said Wacker, who built winning programs at Texas Lutheran and North Dakota State before coming to Southwest Texas State four years ago. "This one was probably better because it was my last game.

"We out-hit them, knocked them around and forced the turnovers. I really felt we just wore them down."

The Bobcats, behind the leadership of quarterback Ron Jacoby, took advantage of six California-Davis turnovers to snap the Aggies' 17-game winning streak and become the only team in the nine-year history of Division II to win the championship twice.

The Bobcats, trailing 3-0 after a 44-yard field goal by California-Davis' Ray Sullivan, struck for two second-quarter touchdowns that were set up by fumble recoveries by Rod Clark and Ken Huewitt to lead 13-3 at half time.

Clark recovered a California-Davis fumble at the Aggie 25, and Jacoby, in seven plays, guided the Bobcats to their first touchdown. Eric Cobble scored the touchdown from two yards out to stake Southwest Texas State to a lead it never surrendered.

The Bobcats' second touchdown, which was set up by Huewitt's fumble recovery at the Southwest Texas State 47, came on a fourth-and-goal pass from Jacoby to Dale Posey.

Southwest Texas State dominated the second half with three touchdowns. Ricky Sanders and Cobble led a relentless ground attack that enabled Southwest Texas State to control the football for 38 minutes.

Cobble scored on a three-yard run and Sanders, who gained 104 yards rushing, added two fourth-period touchdowns with runs of one and 13

California-Davis, which has won 12 straight Northern California Athletic Conference championships, could not demonstrate its championship form to the 7,000 fans who endured an unusually blustery day in the Rio Grande Valley.

The Aggies played without their No. 1 quarterback, Ken O'Brien, who suffered leg and ankle injuries two weeks ago. California-Davis coach Jim Sochor was forced to go to his reserve quarterback Scott Barry, who had played sparingly this season.

"To win a national championship, you have to stay healthy," Sochor said.

"We peaked two weeks ago. We were just not able to play our best.

"The last couple of weeks caught up with us."

Division I Men's Soccer

Indiana, in its fourth trip to the final in the past six years, finally captured the NCAA Division I Men's Soccer Championship with a 2-1 marathon victory over Duke December 11 in Fort Lauderdale, Florida.

The Hoosiers and Blue Devils struggled through a record eight overtime periods and 159 minutes of play before Gregg Thompson's looping free kick settled matters. Thompson had been fouled by Duke's Joe Ulrich just outside the Blue Devils' penalty area and then curled the ball past a diving Duke goalkeeper, Pat Johnston.

"I don't know where the energy for that shot even came from," said Thompson. "I didn't know if I even had the energy to kick the ball, but I figured it was my last college game, so I would make the most of it."

Thompson, who earlier in the week had finished second to Ulrich in voting for the prestigious Hermann Award, opened the scoring at the 14:52 mark with a 20-yard chip shot over Johnston.

Duke forced the game into overtime when Sean McCoy took a long pass from David McDaniel and beat Indiana goalie Chris Peterson with a 25-yard blast just under the crossbar 8 1/2 minutes from the end of regulation.

Indiana had advanced to the championship game in 1976, 1978 and 1980, losing to San Francisco on all three occasions. Duke was playing in its first final.

"We couldn't do it the normal way, but it sure was worth the wait," said Indiana coach Jerry Yeagley, who has led the Hoosiers to seven straight NCAA tournament bids.

Indiana finished the season with a 19-3-1 record after getting off to a slow 1-3 start. Duke ended the year with a 22-1-2 record.

Division II Women's Volleyball

California-Riverside used a strong service game to upend Northridge State 15-11, 15-12, 15-5, in the 1982 NCAA Division II Women's Volleyball Championship December 11 in Northridge, California.

The two finalists were not strangers. California-Riverside and Northridge State played six times this season before their championship match, and each team won three matches.

California-Riverside advanced to the finals by defeating Portland State 15-13, 15-7, 15-9. Northridge State had a more difficult time gaining its championship berth. The Matadors faced defending champion Sacramento State in the semifinals and needed five games to win the match, 13-15, 15-10, 15-11, 10-15, 15-6.

In the first game of the championship match, California-Riverside raced to a 9-0 advantage but was tied at 11 by Northridge State. The Highlanders stifled the Matadors rally by scoring four consecutive points to win the first game.

The second game of the match was decided by the strong serving of California-Riverside's Debbie Bush. With Northridge State ahead 8-7, Bush served three consecutive points to give California-Riverside a 10-8 advantage. The Highlanders subsequently held on and won the game, 15-12.

On the strength of three consecutive service points by Bush in the third game, the Highlanders jumped to a 6-2 lead. California-Riverside then scored four points for a 10-2 lead. With the score at 13-5, California-Riverside's Kathy Moore put the game out of reach with a service ace, and the Highlanders went on to win the game, 15-5, and the Division II title.

Despite the loss, Northridge State coach Walt Ker was proud of his team as well as his team's opponent.

"First of all, I'm proud that two schools from the CCAA (California Collegiate Athletic Association) were involved in the championship," Ker said. "I have a great deal of respect for Sue Gozansky (California-Riverside coach), and there is a lot of camaraderie between us.

"I'm disappointed at the moment, but in a week or so I'll look back and realize second isn't so bad."

In the third-place match, Portland State defeated Sacramento State 15-7, 16-14, 15-10.

California-Riverside placed three players on the all-tournament team. Joining Bush, were Kim Holder and Star Clark. Portland State's Linda Johnson and Karen Kootenkoff and Northridge State's Linda Wilson made up the rest of the team.

Division III

Women's Volleyball

La Verne's debut in the NCAA Division III Women's Volleyball Championship was a resounding success. Last year's Division III AIAW champion upset No. 1 ranked California-San Diego on its home court 12-15, 16-14, 15-8, 15-9, to win the NCAA title December 11 in La Jolla, California.

La Verne finished the season with a 28-10 record and proved its AIAW title of a year ago was no fluke. California-San Diego, the defending NCAA Division III champion, returned its entire squad for the 1982 season and finished the regular season ranked No. 1. And with the Tritons playing the semifinals and finals on their home court, they seemed a sure bet to repeat.

La Verne advanced to the finals by defeating Sonoma State 15-6, 10-15, 15-12, 15-10. California-San Diego had a rematch of last year's championship match with Juniata in the semifinals. The Tritons defeated Juniata 15-3, 15-3, 15-6.

After taking five match points to put away the first game, the Tritons were unable to duplicate their effort in the second game as La Verne rallied and scored the final four points for a 16-14 victory.

"That took the wind out of our sails," Triton coach Doug Dannevik said. "We couldn't get the 15th point to save us."

The third game was tied 7-7 before the Leopards of coach Jim Paschal scored eight of the final nine points, including the last six in a row, to win 15-8.

The Tritons came back from a 9-2 deficit to close within three points at 12-9 in the deciding game before La Verne ran off the three points it needed for the title.

Sonoma State took third place with a 15-8, 15-6, 10-15, 13-15, 15-7 victory over Juniata.

La Verne placed three players on the all-tournament team—Laura Argonza, Sue Habecker and Eileen Kamidori. The rest of the team was composed of California-San Diego's Louise Schwartz and Tammy Smit and Sonoma State's Sandy Kacharos.

The cased trumpet rests in a corner next to a worn field hockey stick and a weathered crosse. From time to time, Candice Finn picks up each of these instruments, recalling past triumphs and practicing for future performances.

In the world of intercollegiate sports, Finn will be remembered as the student-athlete at Pennsylvania State University who won the Broderick Award three times, twice in lacrosse and once in field hockey.

Broderick awards are presented annually to women student-athletes who, by vote of women athletic directors, are judged most deserving of recognition for excellence and achievement in their sports.

As for her music, Finn has no trophies symbolic of recognition or achievement. But she does have talent, enough that she almost chose a performing career instead of a playing career at Penn State.

"My mother really wanted me to get into music after high school," recalled Finn, a native of Media, Pennsylvania. "I had played in the high school jazz band and was considering majoring in music in college."

"But I enjoyed sports, too, and decided I wanted to continue playing field hockey and lacrosse at Penn State," she said. "I've still kept playing my horn, I just haven't concentrated on it."

Finn concentrated on lacrosse in 1978 when she was offered a scholarship to attend Penn State and play for the Lady Lions. But she also made up her mind to continue playing field hockey.

"I played both sports, plus basketball, in high school," she said, "and I didn't want to stick with just one sport in college.

Penn State's Candy Finn (right) in lacrosse action

"I was able to do that for the most part, but when I got involved in international competition, I had to make a decision on which sport I wanted to continue in."

She chose lacrosse. "When you get involved with touring and being a part of the U.S. team, field hockey becomes almost a year-long sport," Finn explained. "I didn't want to be committed like that because I enjoyed other things, too."

She continued to play both sports at Penn State, reaching the pinnacle of her collegiate career in 1981. In the space of a few months, she received the Broderick award for lacrosse and later for field hockey.

"I still can't believe it happened," she said. "I was so excited to win the first one, but when the second Broderick was announced . . . I just couldn't believe it."

"Both awards represented the teams a lot more than just Candy Finn," she added. "There were a lot of excellent players around me on both teams, and they have just as much claim to those awards as I do."

The 1981 Broderick awards came for performances during her junior season; Finn said she had a simple goal in mind for her senior season at Penn State.

"All I wanted to do as a senior was to perform so that I'd be remembered as a team athlete who played well," she said. "You see, there were times during my career when people would say I was lazy."

"I guess it's because I relax on the field," Finn offered. "It must seem to some people that I'm not taking the games as seriously as I should, and they go away thinking I'm cocky and lazy."

"I hate that," she continued. "I worked on my skills, and I have natural ability and good game sense. Having a good team around helps, too, but if I didn't have other interests to keep me from concentrating on just one sport, I wouldn't have been able to handle the pressure."

She seemingly handled the pressure just right, finishing as Penn State's career scoring leader in both lacrosse (265 goals) and field hockey (90 goals).

The Lady Lions compiled a lacrosse record of 51-6-2 with Finn in the lineup, winning U.S. Women's Lacrosse Association collegiate championships in 1979 and 1980.

Finn helped Penn State's field hockey teams to AIAW national championships in 1980 and 1981, as the Lady Lions recorded an impressive 72-6-6 record with Finn in the lineup.

Having completed her collegiate career last season, Finn is an assistant coach on Penn State's field hockey and women's lacrosse teams while she finishes work on a degree in advertising.

And she still plays the trumpet, too. "I still have as much going on as I always did," she said. "I coached at some sports camps in this area last summer, and I really enjoyed it."

"I don't think I would ever consider coaching as a career, but I certainly hope I can help out at some level wherever I go from here."

Her playing career is not completed either, at least not in lacrosse. "There is a World Cup in lacrosse set for 1986, and I think I'll keep playing until then," she said.

"I eventually hope to get married and have kids," she continued. And will they be lacrosse players? "I don't know about that," she said, "but I certainly would encourage them to get involved in some activity."

"As an individual, I have grown so much through sports. Playing has helped me in handling pressure, and I have learned to work with others. I majored in advertising because I wanted to show I could do something other than sports, but a lot of what I learned in sports will help me in the business world."

"So, to answer your question," Finn concluded, "I would encourage my children in whatever they wanted to do. My mother raised five of us alone, and I would not have enjoyed the opportunities I've had without their support."

"I hope I can be just like that with my children, whether they want to play lacrosse, field hockey or even the trumpet."

Sports information directors name women's volleyball academic team

Brigham Young University's Valerie de Pourtales and Mary Holland of San Diego State University, fall nominees for the NCAA's Today's Top Five awards, head the first women's volleyball academic all-America team selected by the College Sports Information Directors of America.

Other first-team selections in the university division were Kathleen Guthrie, University of Arizona; Jennifer Seveland Box, Southwest Missouri State University; Jane Neff, Purdue University, and Margaret Grant of Southern California, the 1981 NCAA Division I women's volleyball champion.

Southern California and New Mexico State were the only teams to have more than one player selected to the three teams in the university division.

DeHoop and Lisa Diane Johnson of Texas A&M have perfect 4.000 grade-point averages in their respective fields of speech and business.

Besides Grant, Southern California's Dana Smith was named to the third team. New Mexico State placed senior Sandy DeHoop on the second team and Karen Yelich on the third team.

Moorhead State led the college division first team with two selections—senior setter Kristen Pederson and senior hitter Tessa Fraki. Both players are finance majors, and both registered 4.000 grade-point averages.

Other first-team selections in the college division were Sue Stremming, Millikin University; Cheryl Dolyniuk, U.S. Naval Academy; Karla Ballman, Macalester College, and Jamie Pybas of Oklahoma Baptist University.

Macalester led college-division voting with three all-America selections. In addition to Ballman, Katherine Smokey Mueller was named to the second team, and Kathy Trost was chosen for the third team.

Following are the 1982 CoSIDA Women's Volleyball Academic All-America teams:

UNIVERSITY DIVISION

First team: Valerie de Pourtales, Brigham Young University, senior, 3.500 GPA in economics; Kathleen Guthrie, University of Arizona, senior, 3.630 GPA in psychology; Jennifer Seveland Box, Southwest Missouri State University, senior, 3.710 GPA in sociology; Jane Neff, Purdue University, senior, 3.760 GPA (6.000 scale) in geological engineering; Margaret Grant, University of Southern California, senior, 3.410

GPA in speech pathology; Mary Holland, San Diego State University, senior, 3.770 GPA in sports medicine.

Second team: Margaret Curry, Cornell University, senior, 3.300 GPA in civil engineering; Sue Fimhaber, Drake University, senior, 3.850 GPA in speech; Sandy DeHoop, New Mexico State University, senior, 4.000 GPA in speech; Lisa Diane Johnson, Texas A&M University, junior, 4.000 GPA in business; Susan Harbour, University of Oregon, sophomore, 3.900 GPA in mathematics and physical education; Martie Larsen, University of Minnesota, senior, 3.350 GPA in ministry.

Third team: Virginia Lessman, Virginia Polytechnic Institute, junior, 3.910 GPA in electrical engineering; Jane Meyers, University of Dayton, senior, 3.400 GPA in computer science; Sylvie Monnet, University of California, Berkeley, junior, 3.600 GPA in French; Dana Smith, University of Southern California, junior, 3.210 GPA (undeclared major); Jenny Koehn, Kansas State University, senior, 3.800 GPA in physical education; Karen Yelich, New Mexico State University, junior, 3.880 GPA in premedicine.

COLLEGE DIVISION

First team: Kristen Pederson, Moorhead State University, senior, 4.000 GPA in finance; Sue Stremming, Millikin University, junior, 3.990 GPA in nursing; Cheryl Dolyniuk, U.S. Naval Academy, senior, 3.500 GPA in systems engineering; Tessa Fraki, Moorhead State University, senior, 4.000 GPA in finance; Karla Ballman, Macalester College, senior, 3.750 GPA in mathematics and economics; Jamie Pybas, Oklahoma Baptist University, junior, 4.000 GPA in American studies.

Second team: Denise Callahan, Ohio Northern University, senior, 3.530 GPA in pharmacy; Glevon Covault, Peru State College, junior, 3.920 GPA in elementary education; Katherine Smokey Mueller, Macalester College, senior, 3.840 GPA in mathematics; Debbie Cone, Northwest Missouri State University, senior, 4.000 GPA in education; Karen Seitter, Central Missouri State University, senior, 4.000 GPA in recreation; Debra Scribner, North Park College, senior, 3.890 GPA in mathematics and business.

Third team: Debbie Majka, Baldwin-Wallace College, senior, 3.810 GPA in physical education; Kathy Trost, Macalester College, senior, 3.580 GPA in psychology and German; Beaann Bedford, Slippery Rock State College, senior, 3.500 GPA in physical education; Desiree Kempcke, Luther College, senior, 3.820 GPA in premedicine; Gina Harp, Hampton Institute, sophomore, 3.900 GPA in accounting; Patti Wahlberg, North Park College, senior, 3.890 GPA in mathematics and business.

Bibliography lists 175 current titles

The NCAA Research Committee would like to remind interested individuals at member institutions of the availability of its "Bibliography of Theses and Dissertations Relating to Intercollegiate Athletics."

The bibliography, which contains titles of more than 175 papers pertinent to various aspects of intercollegiate athletics, has proven helpful to both graduate students and faculty, according to Eric D. Zemper, NCAA research coordinator and liaison to the Research Committee. It first was compiled in 1978 and is updated every three years; the current edition was issued in December 1981.

Among the areas included in the theses and dissertations listed are studies relating to the history, sociology and administration of intercollegiate athletics. The current edition also includes a special section of papers that pertain to women's athletics.

Copies of the bibliography can be obtained by contacting Zemper at the NCAA national office.

CBS Sports director Bob Fishman talks with Stanford students

CBS Sports visits the classroom

When CBS Sports goes "back to school," it is usually for broadcasts of a college football or basketball game, and its broadcasters spend most of their time at the field, in the gym or in the production mobile unit. But in the first of a series of visits around the country, Kevin O'Malley, executive producer of NCAA broadcasts for CBS, led a small group of sports programming and production executives into the classrooms of Stanford University recently for a seminar on sports television.

O'Malley was joined for the seminar by Ric LaCivita, lead producer for college football; Bob Fishman, lead director for college football; sports broadcasters Lindsey Nelson and Pat Haden; Len DeLuca, director of administration for college sports, and Mark Carlson, associate director of college sports information.

More than 40 Stanford undergraduate and graduate students and professors questioned the CBS Sports team during a 60-minute classroom discussion.

But while the students were interested in the broadcast itself, they also questioned the group on specifics pertaining to CBS Sports as a money-making business.

"I was impressed with the interest expressed by the students about the business side of the television industry," said LaCivita, a 1974 Harvard graduate. "I've spoken at a lot of seminars where the students were more interested in the 'glamour' side of our business. These people were aware of the bigger picture—the dollars-and-cents decisions that are at the heart of what we do."

The idea of conducting communications seminars on college campuses originated with Billy Packer, the expert analyst for CBS Sports' broadcasts of college basketball. The Stanford seminar was arranged by Henry Breitrose, chairman of the Communications Department at Stanford. Professor John Doolittle acted as moderator.

AP selects all-America

Georgia's Herschel Walker, the Heisman Trophy winner, and Dave Rimington, winner of the Outland Trophy, are among six repeaters on the 1982 all-America football team selected by the Associated Press.

Walker and Michigan wide receiver Anthony Carter were named to the team for the third year in a row. Besides Walker, Carter and Rimington, other repeaters are Arkansas defensive end Billy Ray Smith, Clemson defensive back Terry Kinard and Arizona State defensive back Mike Richardson.

The AP team is selected by the college football editor and regional sports editors from all-conference, all-sectional and all-regional teams. The 1982 squad will be featured December 20 on NBC-TV.

Following are the 1982 AP all-America football teams:

FIRST TEAM

Offense

Defense

SECOND TEAM

Offense

Tight end—Allama Matthews, Vanderbilt; Wide receivers—Chris Castor, Duke; Henry Ellard, Fresno State; Tackles—Jimbo Covert, Pittsburgh; Harvey Salem, California; Guards—David Drechsler, North Carolina; Joe Lukens, Ohio State; Center—Bart Oates, Brigham Young; Quarterback—Tom Ramsey, UCLA; Running backs—Ernest Anderson, Oklahoma State; Mike Rozier, Nebraska; Kicker—Fuad Reveis, Tennessee.

Defense

Ends—Charles Benson, Baylor; Mike Pitts,

Alabama; Tackles—Rick Bryan, Oklahoma; William Fuller, North Carolina; Middle guard—Karl Morgan, UCLA; Linebackers—Marcus Marek, Ohio State; Vernon Maxwell, Arizona State; Albert Richardson, Louisiana State; Backs—Keith Bostic, Michigan; Russell Carter, Southern Methodist; Jeremiah Castille, Alabama; Punter—Bucky Scribner, Kansas.

THIRD TEAM

Offense

Tight end—Darren Long, Long Beach State; Wide receivers—Willie Gault, Tennessee; Mike Martin, Illinois; Tackles—Robert Oxendine, Duke; Randy Theiss, Nebraska; Guards—Wayne Harris, Mississippi State; Dave Schreck, Air

Defense

Field hockey coaches name all-America teams

NCAA field hockey championship finalist teams placed 19 student-athletes on the all-America teams announced by the College Field Hockey Coaches Association.

In Division I, champion Old Dominion and runner-up Connecticut each placed three players on the all-star squad.

Division II winner Lock Haven State placed five athletes on the team, while its opponent in the finals, Bloomsburg State, had two all-Americans.

McCloskey joins enforcement staff

Jamie McCloskey, a graduate of the Ohio University sports administration program, has joined the NCAA enforcement and legislative services staff as a legislative assistant.

McCloskey, who received a master's degree from Ohio University in 1981, completed his undergraduate work at Bowling Green State University in 1979.

At Bowling Green, he participated in four years of varsity intercollegiate wrestling competition and also was a member of the university's football team during his freshman and sophomore years.

Before joining the NCAA staff, McCloskey was a regional manager for SuperTurf, Inc., in Cincinnati, Ohio.

In Division III, upset winner Ithaca placed only one representative on the team, while runner-up Trenton State had five athletes on the squad.

The 1982 all-America teams of the College Field Hockey Coaches Association:

Division I

Division II

Forwards—Jill Ridley, Lock Haven State; Jeanne Fetch, Bloomsburg State; Sherry Derr, Lock Haven State; Dora Dyson, Slippery Rock State; Midfielders—Sandy Miller, Lock Haven State; Kelly Canavan, Lock Haven State; Deb Long, Bloomsburg State; Sheila Geisenhaner, Slippery Rock State; Backs—Ann Grim, Lock Haven State; Julie Breighner, Indiana (Pennsylvania); Sally Riggs, Indiana (Pennsylvania); Goalkeeper—Kate Murphy, Lock Haven State.

Division III

Forwards—Donna Aromando, Trenton State; Cathy Foto, Ithaca; Mary Klecha, Trenton State; Donna Zaccaria, Franklin and Marshall; Midfielders—Sandy Swope, Franklin and Marshall; Debbie Schimpf, Trenton State; Leanne McFall, Franklin and Marshall; Backs—Diane Smith, Trenton State; Edith Thompson, Elizabethtown; Patty Reich, Franklin and Marshall; Goalkeepers—Dina Ayers, Trenton State; Janet Burshaw, Bates.

The use of steroids by athletes: Is it worth the risk?

By Eric D. Zemper
NCAA Research Coordinator

In the early 1960s, shot-put competitors and discus throwers learned about anabolic steroids from weight lifters and body builders in the weight rooms where both groups trained. The use of steroids among the latter group had become popular a few years earlier in the belief that it added weight and muscle mass and therefore strength. Since then, athletes in other sports have begun to use steroids in an attempt to gain a strength advantage, which can be crucial in many sports.

The reaction of athletic officials responsible for rules enforcement has been blanket condemnation, based on the philosophical position that any such "doping" might put other competitors at an unfair disadvantage.

In addition, they cite a lack of consistent scientific evidence that steroids actually produce any gains in strength and the growing volume of evidence concerning the adverse side effects of steroid use. This results in the divisive situation of sports officials claiming that steroids are ineffective and even dangerous and the athletes and many coaches discounting such claims, decreasing the credibility and trust between the two groups.

There is much contradictory information in the scientific literature concerning steroids, with some studies used to support "prosteroid" arguments and others used to support "antisteroid" arguments. Unfortunately, there are two major problems in doing research on steroids. First, to be of any real value, studies of this nature usually should be "double-blind," i.e., at the time of the experiment, neither the researcher nor the athlete knows whether steroids are being administered.

The problem is that most athletes can tell when they are getting steroids because of a slight euphoric effect the steroids apparently cause. If a subject knows he is getting steroids, it ruins the value of the study. The second problem is that review boards normally will not allow experimenters to administer 10 to 20 times the recognized therapeutic dosages of steroids to human subjects. Therefore, it is difficult for researchers to utilize the huge doses normally used by athletes.

Dr. David Lamb of Purdue University has done an extensive review of the scientific literature on anabolic steroids. It will appear in a book to be published next spring (Williams, In Press).

Many of the studies reviewed were not well-designed or well-controlled, but those that did meet minimal scientific criteria tended to indicate a lack of effect of steroids. Lamb concluded that "the vast majority of the positive results (of steroid use) have been obtained in castrated animals and in sex-linked muscles. Little support can be cited in the literature for positive effects of anabolic steroids on growth of typical skeletal muscles in sexually intact male animals." In other words, the studies cited by people supporting steroid use usually involve castrated animals, where the steroid obviously will have an effect, or they involve increase in strength of a sex-related muscle in rats, not skeletal muscles.

On the other hand, there is a growing volume of scientific evidence of harmful side effects of steroid use. These include enlargement of the prostate, loss of libido, testicular atrophy resulting in sterility, and weight gain caused by fluid retention, which often leads to elevated blood pressure and all of its associated problems.

Another adverse effect of steroid use is premature closure of the epiphyseal plates in long bones. This means that persons who take steroids while still growing quite likely will not grow to the full height they would have attained if they had not started taking steroids. There also are increasing numbers of reports of various liver problems, including liver cancer, related to use of steroids. It should be realized that many of these reported side effects of steroid use are the result of normal therapeutic doses. At the moment, it is unknown exactly what all the side effects are for the doses of 10 to 20 times this level taken by athletes. It may be several years before all the effects of such dosage levels are known.

There apparently is a large "placebo" effect associated with the use of steroids by athletes. It has been demonstrated that there can be definite strength gains in subjects who were given inert capsules but were told they were receiving steroids (Ariel and Saville, 1972). Those who decide to use steroids expect to increase muscle mass and strength and tend to train a little harder in anticipation of this result.

Many researchers feel that most, if not all, resulting increases in muscle mass and strength are due to increased training rather than steroids. Yet, it is hard to convince athletes, coaches, and even some physicians of this because they are so certain that steroids are causing the changes. Their arguments are bolstered by many "personal testimonials" passed along in the weight room. Most of the arguments in favor of steroid use boil down to anecdotal evidence or poorly designed studies. Any competent researcher will state that this is a poor basis for making such decisions regarding the use of steroids.

Discouraging the use of steroids is particularly difficult because of the popular perception that an athlete has to take steroids to "compete with those who do."

A coach, or any other person, who pushes an athlete to use anabolic steroids for this reason is only perpetuating a very coercive situation for the athlete. In the highly competitive world of athletics, an athlete who is told that others are gaining an advantage by using steroids must either use them himself or compete under the perception that he is at a disadvantage. So, whether he likes the idea or not, he feels he has to do it.

It is, however, very possible to compete successfully without using steroids. A good example is Randy Matson, one of the top weight men in the history of track and field. He tried steroids in 1964 and 1965. "I didn't see any improvement when I took the steroids," he said. "I didn't gain any weight, and I didn't throw any farther with them, so I stopped using them." Two years later, after a lot of hard work, he set a world shot-put record of 71-5/8, a distance very few have surpassed even today.

The information presented here may not change too many minds, because people who have an opinion on this topic usually seem to be polarized to one extreme viewpoint or the other. But it is a subject that needs to be thought about and discussed by everyone involved in athletics.

It appears that most of the well-designed and controlled studies do not support the contention that steroid use increases muscle mass and strength. On the other hand, there is a growing body of literature documenting the adverse side effects of steroid use. Given these facts, is it worth the risk to the athlete to continue coercing him into using steroids?

Basically, what it comes down to is the fact that the only proven way to increase muscle mass and strength is through work overload. That means the best method is the basic approach of good nutrition and a good weight-lifting program combined with a lot of hard work on the part of the athlete.

Future columns will deal with less controversial subjects and will attempt to present practical information for coaches to use, drawn from recent sports-medicine research. If readers have questions or would like to see a particular topic presented in this column, please contact me at the national office.

NFFHF selects 11 scholar-athletes

The National Football Foundation and Hall of Fame has awarded $1,500 fellowships to 11 college seniors.

The NFFHF has awarded fellowships to senior scholar-athletes since 1959. The fellowships originally were financed by the proceeds Colonel Earl "Red" Blaik received from various publications he wrote and sold. Blaik, who coached the great Army teams of the 1940s and 1950s, donated $4,000 for eight $500 scholarships in 1959.

Blaik subsequently underwrote the fellowships from the proceeds he received from his syndicated column. The fellowships still are made possible by the syndicated column, which now is produced by Jimmy McDowell of the foundation. Additional funds are provided by the National Football League charities fund.

The selection process begins in June before each football season. The foundation sends nomination forms to directors of athletics, who nominate seniors they believe are worthy of fellowships. The foundation then selects 11 scholar-athletes, who qualify for the $1,500 fellowship if they attend graduate school.

Winners of the scholarships this year are Gordon Beckman, South Carolina quarterback, 3.700 grade-point average in government/history; Dave Folsom, Brown defensive back, 3.800 in biomedical/ethics; Doug Freeman, Oklahoma State center, 3.600 in mechanical power technology; Dan Gregus, Illinois defensive tackle, 3.800 in business administration; Rob Mangas, Kentucky tight end, 3.600 in political science; Greg Porter, Washington State guard, 3.700 in business administration; Mike Redding, Holy Cross wide receiver, 3.500 in economics; Dave Rimington, Nebraska center, 3.200 in economics; Dave Schreck, Air Force guard, 3.400 in electrical engineering; Joe Smith, Ohio State tackle, 3.300 in agriculture/preveterinary, and Brent Woods, Princeton quarterback, 3.600 in public and international affairs.

In addition to the scholar-athlete awards, 11 former collegiate athletes were formally inducted into the College Football Hall of Fame at the Foundation's silver anniversary dinner.

Inducted into the hall of fame were Terry Baker, Oregon State quarterback (1960-1962); Bruce Bosley, West Virginia tackle (1952-1955); William Carpenter, Army end (1958-1960); Hugh Gallarneau, Stanford halfback (1938-1941); Gene Goodreault, Boston College end (1938-1940); Don Meredith, Southern Methodist quarterback (1957-1959); Bert Metzger, Notre Dame guard (1928-1930); Jim Owens, Oklahoma end (1946-1949); Vito "Babe" Parilli, Kentucky quarterback (1949-1951); Merv Pregulaman, Michigan offensive lineman (1941-1943); Les Richter, California guard-linebacker (1949-1951), and Ben Schwartzwalder, who coached at Muhlenberg and Syracuse, compiling a record of 151-82-3 and leading Syracuse to the 1959 national championship.

Five others were inducted into the hall of fame posthumously. They were Auburn coach Ralph "Shug" Jordan; John Orsi, Colgate end (1929-1931); Eddie Price, Tulane fullback (1946-1949); Bernie Shively, Illinois guard (1923-1926), and Lloyd Yoder, Carnegie Tech tackle (1923-1926).

Jordan had a 175-83-7 record in 25 years at Auburn and coached the Tigers to the national championship in 1957.

Authors define 'choking' in athletics

"Don't Choke," by Michael D. Scott and Louis Pelliccioni Jr. (Prentice-Hall, 141 pages, $5.95)

Books dealing with the physical aspects of athletic competition seem to debut in great numbers these days. "Don't Choke," on the other hand, provides a study of the psychological aspects of competitive participation, with an emphasis on the reasons for, and solutions to, the phenomenon commonly referred to as "choking."

The authors state four major objectives in the work's preface. They first determine an individual's potential to "choke," utilizing a self-administered test to arrive at the reader's "choke score."

Scott and Pelliccioni then provide an examination of the meaning of the word "choke" as it applies to sports and athletes. Simply stated, the classic

Book Report

"choke performance" occurs when an individual allows the anxiety associated with sports participation to hamper performance.

The first of many "performance keys" listed in the book calls anxiety "the most important opponent you face in your effort to overcome the tendency to choke."

The third objective of "Don't Choke" involves uncovering the many different reasons that superstars and weekend athletes alike develop the tendency to "choke."

A highlight of the book is the chart contained in chapter six that compares the psychology of "winners" and that of "losers." The authors emphasize that "choking begins and ends on a mental note."

After helping readers find their potential for choking, describing the term itself and the reasons behind it, the book then provides the basis for an effort to combat the factors that cause sports anxiety and the resultant lack of good performance.

Readers are given physical exercises to use in combating the muscle tension that can lead to anxiety as well as several different psychological workouts designed to enhance positive thinking.

Quite possibly the most important of these mental exercises, according to the authors, is visual imagery. "See yourself as a winner," they write, "and see yourself doing the things that make you a winner."

The book's appendix offers a five-page guide to the technique of deep muscular relaxation, claimed by Scott and Pelliccioni to be critical if one expects to control the tensions that cause anxiety and, ultimately, "choking."

The text is concise and written in a conversational style, providing what sometimes can be complex material in an easy-to-understand format.

And while the book is geared toward the competitive athlete, one of its most striking aspects is the fact that much, if not all, of the material presented can be applied to other situations in the daily routine where tensions can build up anxieties that lead to subpar performances.

Weightlifting meet planned March 5

The National Weightlifting Championships for colleges and universities will be held March 5, 1983, at the University of Tennessee in Knoxville.

Anyone interested in competing in the championships or obtaining additional information should contact Gary A. Glass at Box 16436, University of Tennessee, Knoxville, Tennessee 37996. The telephone number is 615/584-9732.

Competition begins in postseason games

Kansas State and Wisconsin opened the 1982-83 bowl season last weekend in the Independence Bowl, one of 16 postseason bowl games certified by the NCAA.

Three bowl games are scheduled this weekend—Holiday Bowl (Ohio State vs. Brigham Young) December 17, California Bowl (Bowling Green State vs. Fresno State) December 18 and Tangerine Bowl (Boston College vs. Auburn) December 18.

Following is the complete 1982-83 bowl schedule with local starting times:

Independence Bowl: Wisconsin 14,

Kansas State 3.

Holiday Bowl: Ohio State (8-3) vs. Brigham Young (8-3), December 17, 6 p.m., San Diego, California.

California Bowl: Bowling Green State (7-4) vs. Fresno State (10-1), December 18, 1 p.m., Fresno, California.

Tangerine Bowl: Boston College (8-2-1) vs. Auburn (8-3), December 18, 8 p.m., Orlando, Florida.

Sun Bowl: North Carolina (7-4) vs. Texas (9-2), December 25, 2 p.m., El Paso, Texas.

Aloha Bowl: Maryland (8-3) vs. Washington (9-2), December 25, 2 p.m., Honolulu, Hawaii.

Newsworthy

The winningest Division I men's basketball coach in terms of career victories entering this season was DePaul's Ray Meyer with 676. Who ranks second? a. Ralph Miller, Oregon State; b. Guy Lewis, Houston; c. Marv Harshman, Washington; d. Fred Hobdy, Grambling State.

San Francisco to formulate plan

The University of San Francisco has named a group of administrators, faculty, students and alumni to recommend a five-year master plan for sports.

The plan will address issues such as fund-raising, sports teams, league participation, coaching-staff requirements and student-athlete academic standards. Trustees of the institution are expected to implement a plan by next summer.

The Rev. Peter Neeley, director of campus ministry, heads the study group, which will report its recommendations to university president Rev. John LoSchiavo.

The university discontinued its NCAA Division I basketball program this year after administrators decided they could not police violations of NCAA rules.

Cal Poly-Pomona ends football

California State Polytechnic University, Pomona, will discontinue its intercollegiate football program, according to Hugh O. LaBounty, president of the institution, who cited belt-tightening measures imposed on the California State University team.

He said the decision was the most difficult he has made in 31 years at the institution.

Cal Poly-Pomona, an NCAA Division II member, has fielded football teams since 1947.

LaBounty said the university would continue to field teams in other sports, noting that Cal Poly-Pomona has won two NCAA championships in baseball, two in women's tennis and one in women's basketball.

SWC teams to meet in Japan

Southwest Athletic Conference members Southern Methodist and Houston will be the participants in the 1983 Mirage Bowl in Tokyo, Japan.

The Mustangs and Cougars will be competing in the seventh Mirage Bowl, which annually attracts 80,000 people. Clemson defeated Wake Forest, 21-17, in this year's game.

"We could make more money by playing in the United States," said Tom Ford, associate athletic director at Houston. "But it's not often that a student-athlete has a chance to come this far."

Sonoma State joins conference

Sonoma State University men's athletic teams have been voted full membership in the Northern California Athletic Conference, effective August 1, 1983. Sonoma State's women's teams already have affiliated with the conference, formerly known as the Far Western Conference.

Other conference members are Humboldt State University; California State University, Sacramento; California State University, Chico; University of California, Davis; California State University, Hayward; California State College, Stanislaus, and San Francisco State University.

Ice hockey advisory staff named

The chair and the secretary-rules editor of the NCAA Men's Ice Hockey Committee have been selected to serve on a 16-member advisory staff that will choose participants for ice hockey competition in next summer's National Sports Festival.

Jerry York, head coach at Bowling Green State University and chair of the committee, and William J. Cleary Jr., secretary-rules editor and coach at Harvard University, are among the six college coaches who will serve on the staff.

FIFA petitions for pro players

A proposal that could open the Olympic Games to professional athletes will come before the executive committee of the International Olympic Committee at its meeting next month in Los Angeles.

According to the San Diego Union, which reported the story, the Federation Internationale de Football Association has petitioned the IOC to permit professional soccer players to compete in the Olympics. Reportedly, the petition has been well-received by members of the IOC executive committee and stands a good chance of being passed.

If passed, the proposal could open the door for professionals in other sports, such as basketball and ice hockey. The IOC allows each governing sports body to set its own eligibility rules.

The FIFA proposal, according to Scott Letellier, assistant vice-president of the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee, "has made no attempt to define amateurism. It simply says athletes are eligible to compete so long as their only payments come from a university, club, a league or an association."

Such a definition might rule out athletes who have endorsement contracts, a common practice in soccer. The FIFA proposal also would ban European and South American World Cup players from the Olympics.

Wesleyan gets money after all

A grateful alumnus has come to the rescue of Wesleyan University, which refused to change its football schedule for a chance to play on national television during the National Football League players' strike.

Wesleyan officials announced recently that the school received a check from an anonymous alumnus in the amount of $34,000, the same amount the school would have received from CBS to televise its October 2 game with Tufts.

Wesleyan turned down the CBS offer because it would have meant switching the Saturday contest to Sunday, which would have disrupted the homecoming plans of many people.

"This should adequately cover revenue 'lost' because Wesleyan, rightly, didn't let CBS interfere," wrote the donor, who added in parentheses: "hooray."

Council

endum would be required, with the understanding that a majority of the football-playing members of a division could request a special Convention to act upon its plan, rather than doing so in a mail referendum.

The resolution also would authorize the Council to seek an exemption from the Federal antitrust laws that would permit the Association or any other organization of institutions administering athletics as part of the educational program to have a football television plan.

The Council also agreed to consider in its pre-Convention meeting a proposed resolution in response to what the NCAA task force on gambling believes to be increased activities by organized gambling in regard to intercollegiate athletics.

"The Council believes it essential to alert the public that college athletic management is aware of gambling's threat to the integrity of college sports," Frank said.

Five collegiate swimmers honored

Five collegiate swimmers have been recognized by Swimming World magazine for their outstanding performances during 1982. Heading the list is Florida's Tracy Caulkins, who was named women's swimmer of the year.

As a freshman at Florida, Caulkins won five events to help the Lady Gators to the first NCAA women's title. She also became the all-time leader in U.S. swimming individual championships with 42, passing Johnny Weissmuller.

Southern Methodist's Steve Lundquist was named men's swimmer of the year. Lundquist currently holds the world and American records in the 100-meter breaststroke (1:02.53). Lundquist has won every NCAA 100-yard event he has swum.

Florida's Megan Neyer was selected women's springboard diver of the year by the magazine. In addition to winning both springboard titles at the inaugural NCAA championship meet, Neyer captured a total of five U.S. championships during 1982.

In men's diving, Greg Louganis of California-Irvine was honored as diver of the year in both springboard and platform competition.

Despite an early-season shoulder injury, Louganis became the first springboard diver in history to top the 700-point plateau, capturing the world springboard crown at the IV World Championships in Guayaquil, Ecuador, with a final score of 752.67.

Another student-athlete who earned a world title is Arizona's Tracie Ruiz, the synchronized swimmer of the year. Ruiz won the event at the IV World Championships and teamed with Candy Costie to place second in the duet competition.

Duke's Ulrich wins Hermann Award

Duke sweeper Joe Ulrich was selected last week as the winner of the 1982 Robert R. Hermann Award, emblematic of the nation's top collegiate soccer player.

The senior from Poughkeepsie, New York, led the Blue Devils to their best season in history, which ended Saturday with a 2-1 loss to Indiana in the NCAA Division I Men's Soccer Championship. Duke finished the season with a 22-1-2 record.

Ulrich, who attended Ulster County (New York) Community College before transferring to Duke in 1981, was the key to the Blue Devils' defense, which set a school record with 12 shutouts this season. Ulrich also scored six goals and added two assists this fall. He has been a first-team all-Atlantic Coast Conference selection two straight years and was a second-team all-America in 1981.

Ulrich was the first ACC player and first player from a Southern school to win the Hermann. Here is a look at the past Hermann winners:

1967—Dov Markus, Long Island; 1968—Mani Hernandez, San Jose State; 1969—Al Trost, St. Louis; 1970—Al Trost, St. Louis; 1971—Mike Seerey, St. Louis; 1972—Mike Seerey, St. Louis; 1973—Dan Counce, St. Louis; 1974—Farrukh Quraishi, Oneonta State; 1975—Steve Ralbovsky, Brown; 1976—Glenn Myernick, Hartwick; 1977—Bill Gazonas, Hartwick; 1978—Angelo DiBernardo, Indiana; 1979—Jim Stamatidis, Penn State; 1980—Joe Morone, Connecticut; 1981—Armando Betancourt, Indiana; 1982—Joe Ulrich, Duke.

seats and 17,000 paid attendance set forth in Bylaw 11-1(c)-(4).

Another Council-sponsored proposal that would affirm existing interpretations is No. 76, which would require conference championship competition to be conducted in the sport of football for the conference to vote on issues relating only to football.

In addition, the conference would have to conduct championship competition in the sport of football for an institution to use the attendance criterion exception for Division I-A conferences.

Proposal No. 73, sponsored by all eight members of the West Coast Athletic Conference, would permit a Division I institution to count the sport of football toward the minimum sports sponsorship criterion, regardless of the division in which the sport is classified. The proposal also would require an institution's football team to play a minimum of nine intercollegiate games for the sport to be counted.

The remaining membership and classification proposals are Nos. 78 and 79, sponsored by the Council. Proposal No. 78 would prohibit a women's program classified in a division other than the institution's regular membership division from being eligible for the multidivision classification opportunities available to women's programs.

Proposal No. 79 would permit an unclassified member institution, or an institution that does not meet new criteria adopted by its division, to use the waiver procedure in Bylaw 10-1(f).

Hansen chosen to replace Hallock in Pac-10 position

Thomas C. Hansen, a member of the NCAA staff for the past 15 years, is expected to replace Wiles Hallock as executive director of the Pacific-10 Conference when Hallock retires June 30.

Hansen was offered the position December 13 and is expected to accept after contract details are completed. He intends to join the Pac-10 staff early next spring, prior to Hallock's retirement date.

The conference announced that Hansen was selected from among 300 applicants for the position.

It will be the second time that Hansen has succeeded Hallock in a job. Hansen joined the NCAA staff October 1, 1967, as director of public relations and editor of the NCAA News, replacing Hallock when he moved to New York City as director of what was then the NCAA's National Collegiate Sports Services office.

A native of Seattle and a graduate of the University of Washington, Hansen served as information director for the Athletic Association of Western Universities, the forerunner of the Pacific-10 Conference, from 1960 until joining the NCAA staff.

He became an assistant executive director September 1, 1970, heading the Association's public relations (now communications) department, including the NCAA's football television activities.

Hallock has been executive director of the Pac-10 for 12 years and currently chairs the NCAA Football Television Committee and Professional Sports Liaison Committee.

Prior to the Pac-10 position, Hallock served three years as commissioner of the Western Athletic Conference.

All-America team will be expanded

The Women's Basketball Coaches Association and Kodak have announced that women's college basketball all-America selections will be expanded to four 10-member teams instead of the usual one.

Teams will be picked in these categories: university, large college, small college and junior-community college.

"The growth of women's basketball has been tremendous in the past few years," said Betty Jaynes, executive director of the WBCA.

"The women are bigger, faster, jumping higher and shooting with more accuracy than before. It's a quicker-paced game," Jaynes said.
