Toner, Davis elected to top offices

John L. Toner, director of athletics at the University of Connecticut, was named president of the NCAA at the conclusion of the 77th annual Convention January 12 in San Diego.

Toner, who has served as secretary-treasurer of the NCAA the past two years, replaces James Frank as the Association's top officer. Frank leaves the NCAA administration after serving four years on the NCAA Council, two years as secretary-treasurer and two years as president.

John R. Davis, faculty athletic representative at Oregon State University, was named to replace Toner as secretary-treasurer. Both Toner and Davis will serve the Association for the next two years.

Because of the passage of the NCAA Council restructuring proposal, three division vice-presidents were elected to serve with Toner and Davis as officers of the Association.

Gwendolyn Norrell, faculty athletic representative at Michigan State University, was named Division I vice-president; Edwin W. Lawrence, faculty athletic representative and director of athletics at Cheyney State College, was selected Division II vice-president, and Kenneth J. Weller, president of Central College (Iowa), was chosen Division III vice-president. All three vice-presidents were incumbent members of the Council.

Toner: Director of athletics at Connecticut since 1968, Toner is past president of the National Association of Collegiate Directors of Athletics and the Eastern College Athletic Conference.

Prior to serving as the NCAA's secretary-treasurer, Toner was a member of Council from 1977 through 1980. He also has served as chair of the Eligibility Committee and the Nominating Committee; a member of the Division I Steering Committee and the Special Committee on NCAA Governance, Organization and Services, and chair of the Special Committee on Legislative Review.

In addition to the ECAC, Toner has served as president of the Eastern Intercollegiate Football Association and the New England Track and Field Tournament Committee. In the Big East Conference, he serves as one of its directors and chairs the constitution and bylaws committee.

Toner coached the Connecticut football team for five years, sharing the Yankee Conference title in 1968 and winning the championship outright in 1970. His teams compiled a

A native of Dighton, Massachusetts, Toner is a graduate of Boston University. He left school for a 42-month tour in the European theater but returned to quarterback the Terriers to an 11-5 mark during the 1947 and 1948 seasons. BU honored Toner in 1971 with an outstanding alumnus award.

Convention acts on key athletic issues

More than 1,400 delegates, including a record number of chief executive officers, took significant steps at the 77th annual Convention January 10-12 to correct a number of problems facing intercollegiate athletics today.

The most significant action was the passage of Proposal No. 48, which produced more than two hours of debate and will implement tougher academic standards for incoming high school student-athletes.

"This Convention represented one of the most, if not the most, determined and forceful effort to deal with the serious problems of intercollegiate athletics that I have ever observed," Executive Director Walter Byers said at a press conference after the final business session.

"The Convention was very successful in concentrating on what we believe the leadership of higher education has concluded are rather grave problems that need treatment. I don't recall any Convention in which colleges and universities have taken such a substantial, if not gigantic step, forward."

The passage of No. 48 establishes, for the first time, a specific core curriculum for which a student must record a minimum 2.000 grade-point average in high school. It also requires an incoming student-athlete to register a minimum 700 combined score on the SAT verbal and math sections or a 15 composite score on the ACT for initial eligibility at a Division I institution.

Included in the core curriculum of at least 11 academic courses are three courses in English, two in mathematics, two in social science and two in natural or physical science, including at least one laboratory class, if offered by the high school. This amendment becomes effective August 1, 1986.

Delegates also approved Proposal No. 49-B, which will allow student-athletes who have an overall 2.000 grade-point in high school but who do not meet the above requirements, to receive financial aid; however, any such student-athlete will lose one season of eligibility.

A total of 23 speakers debated Proposal No. 48 on the Convention floor, including 15 CEOs, six faculty athletic representatives, one commissioner and one football coach.

The proposal was sponsored by the NCAA Council and the American Council on Education. Although the subject produced rather heated debate

See Convention, page 12

Council, Executive Committee undergo extensive restructuring

With the passage of Proposal Nos. 20, 21 and 22 at the 77th annual Convention, the NCAA Council and NCAA Executive Committee have undergone considerable restructuring.

Delegates approved the Council's plan (No. 20) to restructure the Council after they had approved No. 21, which was an amendment to the Council's proposal. No. 21, sponsored by three Division I institutions, was approved to allow four, instead of the proposed two, representatives on the Council from Division I member institutions that do not sponsor football in Division I.

Passage of No. 20 expands the Council from 22 to 46 members, which includes the president and secretary-treasurer as ex officio members.

The remaining 44 members of the Council include 22 (including at least six women) Division I members, 11 (including at least three women) Division II members and 11 (including at least three women) Division III members. The new representatives, who are pictured on pages 6 and 7, were elected by the membership of their respective divisions at the division round tables.

Among the 22 Division I representatives are one representative from each Division I-A football-playing conference, one representative from each of the four Division I-AA Football Championship regions, two representatives of Division I-A institutions that do not belong to a football-playing conference, four representatives of Division I members that do not sponsor football in Division I and the remaining three representatives selected at large.

The 44 members of the Council now are elected for four-year terms. The terms of no more than six Division I representatives, no more than three Division II representatives and no more than three Division III representatives shall expire in any one year.

The new Council structure also preserves the current minimum allocations for women on the division steering committees, establishes a partially federated format for meetings of the Council, establishes geographical representation regions for service on the Council and realigns the Nominating Committee.

Another new feature is the establishment of vice-presidents of each division and the inclusion of the vice-pres-

Computers tackle problem of football injuries

By Dennis Byrne
Chicago Sun-Times

It's the kind of tackle that excites the fans—and cripples football players for life.

Receiving a kickoff in his own end zone, the ball carrier runs headlong toward the blockers and defenders bunched near the 20-yard line. To avoid the pileup, he cuts right at the last moment.

But he doesn't see the tackler coming full tilt and straight at him. As the two collide at a combined speed of 20 miles per hour, the tackler's head spears the runner in his midsection like a battering ram.

The jarring impact stops the runner's torso dead in the air, but his head, legs and arms keep going, wrapping around the tackler.

The tackler's head is jarred to a stop but his back and the rest of his body, driven by the momentum, keep coming, compressing against the vertebrae in his neck.

In just one-hundredth of a second, the tackler's neck takes 5,000 pounds of force—the weight of a truck.

The ball carrier is the luckier of the two. He suffers only a ruptured spleen. The tackler's neck is broken, and now he is a quadriplegic.

Now, a team of Illinois Institute of Technology researchers is using sophisticated computer technology to find a way to reduce injuries.

The team, headed by Ray Vanderby Jr., assistant professor of mechanical engineering, is studying how much force a football player can absorb safely and whether equipment can be designed to protect the player against those forces.

Here how it's done:

By viewing the film of a game in which an injury occurred, the researchers can obtain some necessary information to feed the computer, such as heights and weights of the ball carrier and tackler, the speed both are running, whether they are slowing down or speeding up at the time of the tackle, whether the two meet head on or at an angle, and the type of tackle.

The computer processes the information, after complex mathematical formulas based on classical laws of physics, to figure out the effects of the tackle on various parts of the bodies. The results are displayed on a series of graphs that show the force in pounds that the player absorbs at points of his body and points in time.

The program gives the researchers

These computer simulations by an Illinois Institute of Technology research team are based on an actual case in which the tackler's neck was broken and the ball carrier's spleen ruptured.

In the instance before impact (frame 1), the ball carrier—160 pounds, 5 feet 10 inches tall—is running about 16 feet a second; the tackler—175 pounds, 5 feet 11—about 14 feet a second.

One-hundredth of a second later, the tackler's head has hit the ball carrier just below the ribs. Their combined speed at impact is 30 feet per second, or about 20 mph. The graph shows that in this short time, the tackler has taken about 5,000 pounds of force on his neck vertebrae.

To get an idea of the amount of force, imagine falling forward from an upright position without cushioning your fall with hands or arms and cracking your head on a hard floor. That would create about 1,000 pounds of force. Tests have shown that about 1,280 pounds of force can break a neck.

So in the first seven one-thousandths of a second, the tackler already may have a broken neck. But the effect of the collision continues. While the forces dissipate through his body, they remain high.

On the graph, the second line shows the forces at the tackler's first lumbar vertebra, almost opposite the naval, reaching a ton within the first 15 one-thousandths of a second.

The following frames show the tackler's hip, spine and the rest of his body being compressed behind his neck, his head bent lower by the buildup of forces.

As the tackler's helmet penetrates the ball carrier's midsection, his feet are lifted off the ground and his legs, arms and head begin to wrap around the tackler.

This entire sequence occurs in a fifth of a second—so fast that the eye cannot see it—and the course of at least one person's life may have been irrevocably changed.

great flexibility, even letting them project what will happen if Professor Vanderby is tackled by Mean Joe Greene.

It also could settle some saloon arguments: Would a tackler be hurt less if he speared a fat man or a muscular man in the stomach?

A flabby belly makes little difference; the tackler still gets hurt.

The computer allows the researchers to get instant results from checking the effectiveness of various designs. They will know quickly how the forces on the head change when, for instance, they change the placement and thickness of the padding in the headgear.

The process is shorter and cheaper than building experimental helmets and subjecting them to tests.

To the layman, building a better helmet may seem simple—just put in more padding.

But it doesn't always work that way, Vanderby said. You could end up with a huge, impractical helmet. And, he said, "It's possible to make a helmet that is very good for the head but very bad for the neck."

That's one of the problems of the voluntary standards for headgear adopted by the National Operating Committee on Standards for Athletic Equipment, he said.

The standards were based on the best available information at the time; however, more information is needed, Vanderby believes.

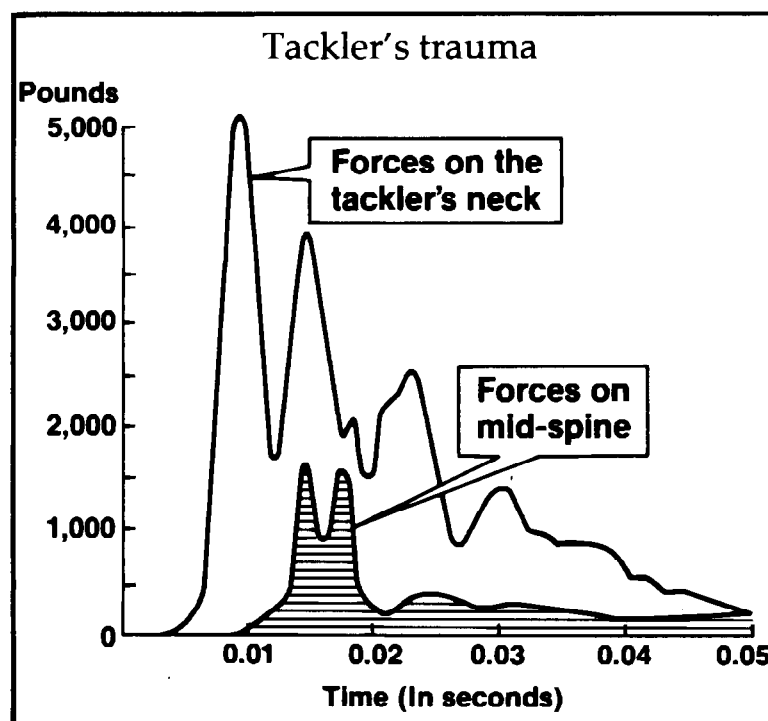

The industry realizes it needs more information and has given Vanderby's research "a tremendous amount of cooperation," he emphasized.

Vanderby and his team members, Edward E. Hahn, a consulting engineer, and Steven J. Bonifas, a graduate student, said they don't have the solutions yet.

But some things can be said already. "While the impacts that football players see are enormous, they are higher than many people realize," Vanderby said. "There is a potential for injury fairly often."

"One obvious thing is spearing. It is more dangerous to the person who spears. He aligns all his cervical vertebrae and gets the force right back through them. This is the way we get more compression fractures and broken necks."

"Spearing has been outlawed, but (the rule) is not strictly enforced. By pointing out with the computer program and with the numbers how dangerous it is, perhaps we can get stricter enforcement," he said.

Asked about the plaudits given by fans and football announcers to defenders who make the most spectacular, jarring tackles, Vanderby expressed some concern.

What should be applauded, he said, is the "clean, precise tackle that takes someone down with the precision of a surgeon's scalpel, rather than one like a bulldozer that wipes someone out."

Court ruling termed a threat to college sports

By Susan Headden
The Indianapolis Star

A lawyer for Indiana State University, Terre Haute, says the Indiana Court of Appeals rewrote state law and threatened the status of amateur athletics when it found that a student was entitled to workmen's compensation after he was injured in football practice.

James E. Sullivan raised the issues November 23 when he asked the Indiana Supreme Court to reverse the appellate court's ruling that Fred Rensing, playing football on a scholarship to ISU, was an employee of the university and therefore entitled to the compensation.

"While the courts can liberally construe the law, they don't have the right to insert an area that was not intended by the legislature even in the worst case," said Sullivan.

He asked the court to reinstate the decision of the state Industrial Board, which ruled against Rensing in 1979. The board said Rensing could not be considered an employee.

But lawyer James L. Crawford, representing Rensing, said that "football is enough" to qualify as work under the law. "He was brought here for one reason—to play football, and in attempting to comply with contractual obligations, he was injured."

Crawford said there was no difference between the contractual arrangements of ISU with Rensing and those of a professional football player with the National Football League. "Room, board, tuition and fees are pay," he said.

Further, he said, "Coaches are clearly employees, and the people who sell tickets at the same activity; then it seems to me that the football player, who is the star, is also an employee."

The Indiana Supreme Court heard arguments November 23 but has yet to rule on the case, which arose from a 1976 incident in which Rensing struck his head while tackling a receiver during a punting drill and was paralyzed from the neck down.

The appellate court's decision is without precedent in the state, and a number of state universities have filed friend-of-the-court briefs opposing it.

If the decision stands, dissenters say, the workmen's compensation law might then apply to students receiving scholarships for a variety of reasons.

Crawford rejected claims by opponents of the decision that offering workmen's compensation benefits was too costly to universities.

"The amicus (friend of the court) briefs have all suggested that we can't afford this. This has never been an excuse for a company having to award workmen's compensation benefits."

"If they (the universities) can't afford it, then they can't afford to offer scholarships in the first instance."

Sullivan cited cases elsewhere in the country that have addressed the application of workmen's compensation laws to students, but he said all were based on situations different from Rensing's.

In one, a student injured on a football field was considered an employee, but only because he also did maintenance work for the school. Sullivan said the workmen's compensation rule applied in that case because the student could not have had a job if he had not played football.

In another case, an appeals court ruled that a residence hall supervisor arguing for minimum wage was "basically a student," and that the reduction of his fees was intended not as pay, but as a "furtherance of his educational opportunities," Sullivan said.

The evidence in the Rensing case, said Sullivan, "is overwhelming that he was not an employee."

Corcoran wins struggle against cancer

Playing for keeps

Basketball always has been one of the more enjoyable aspects of life for North Dakota's Dona Corcoran. The game has become more than just sport for the junior forward these days—it is evidence that she is winning a battle for her life. Corcoran has come back from a bout with cancer to claim a starting spot on the Sioux team.

In the spring of her freshman year, Corcoran had a mole on the small toe of her left foot removed after it became rough and flaky. She had had the mole all her life; removal required a minor surgical procedure. However, lab tests indicated the mole to be cancerous. Doctors at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minnesota, told her they might need to amputate as far as her left knee, depending on how far the cancer had spread. She ended up losing the toe on which the mole had grown and part of the supporting bone and muscle on the left side of the foot as far back as her heel.

"I was lucky. I had noticed it in the early stages of the cancer's development," Corcoran told Greg DeVillers of the Grand Forks (North Dakota) Herald. "When I first found out I had cancer I thought, 'Gee, I might not ever play basketball again.' Then I started to go through the whole thing, you know, thinking how I might die. But I had to wipe those thoughts out of my head. You can't have negative thoughts. That just brings you down. Now, I look at it as more of a long-range thing. Now, I'm going to have to live the rest of my life knowing that cancer could show up somewhere else in me. I have to check myself every day and go in for a doctor's checkup every three to six months."

The removal of part of her foot means that Corcoran plays in constant pain, but the joy of being able to play compensates for the discomfort. "There are times when I'm in tears just thinking that I'm still able to play basketball," she muses. "I guess a lot of things have changed for me in that way. I don't take things for granted anymore. A lot of little things I used to make a big deal about really don't mean so much to me anymore."

"It was weird how basketball was so important to me," Corcoran recalls. "As soon as I could walk again after my surgery, I was out playing basketball. I couldn't run or jump, but I just had to go out shooting."

Former North Dakota coach Shirilan Mosley was surprised when Corcoran came out for basketball after her ordeal. "Dona has shown a lot of guts and courage," Mosley told DeVillers. "There aren't many kids who could do what she has done. At the time Dona found out about having cancer, she was crushed. We weren't worried about her playing again. We were more concerned about her being able to stay alive and live a decent life. There are still some things she can't do, but she's played with a lot of pain and still done well for us."

"To me, basketball has been a sort of therapy," Corcoran theorizes. "It has helped my foot get back to normal, physically. Mentally, it has been a way of proving to myself that I can still do normal things, things I always had been able to do. There are still times when I get almost depressed about the whole thing. Out of the clear, blue sky it will hit me about all that's happened. I just tell myself, 'Well, you're still here now. You're playing ball and going to school. You're doing everything you've always wanted to do.' I guess I don't really have it as bad compared to a lot of people."

Examples of excellence

The starting lineup for the DePauw men's team, which consists of four seniors and a junior, earned a combined grade-point average of 3.48 for the fall semester. The average for the entire roster, the remainder of which consists entirely of freshmen, was 3.01. Five players made the dean's list (3.50 or better). (David Rawnsley, DePauw SID)

Filling in

The Colby-Sawyer women's team has been short-handed during the month of January. Reserve forward Katie Foley and center Laura Dewing traveled to Ireland for the month as part of the school's Interim Abroad program. Foley, a freshman nursing major, is studying sociological aspects of modern Irish family life during her stay, while Dewing, a sophomore liberal arts major with a concentration in English, is studying the works of native Irish writers. In the meantime, their team was preparing to face New England College, a team they had been unable to defeat for 11 years and which had handed the Chargers their only regular-season loss last season. Because of the missing team members, coach Mike McMahon and sports information director Art Springsteen were forced to impersonate the two leading New England players during practice so the team could run strategic plays. The plan worked—Colby-Sawyer won the game—and McMahon and Springsteen are reported to be resting uncomfortably but happily. (Art Springsteen, Colby-Sawyer SID)

How do you spell relief?

After losing five of its first six games due to a tough early season schedule, which featured games against Pittsburgh, Nevada-Las Vegas, Maryland, Kentucky and Rutgers, Duquesne handed out packets of Alka-Seltzer to spectators attending the December 31 game versus Davis and Elkins. The remedy must have helped, as the Dukes won, 65-51, to snap the losing streak. (Nellie King, Duquesne SID)

Gunning for the top

Texas Southern senior Harry "Machine Gun" Kelly, last season's Division I individual scoring champion, is gunning for the top again after a slow start. Kelly ranked 27th in that category in the statistics of January 3 with a 21.6 average. He has notched 71 field goals and 45 free throws for 187 points in his last six games, a 31.2 average for those games, and now is averaging 26.0 points overall, placing him 11th on this week's list of scoring leaders.

Quotes of the week

Northwestern coach Rich Falk, whose Wildcats are off to their best start in more than 50 years (11-3 overall and 2-2 in the Big Ten): "Coaching is inspired teaching, and this basketball team is bringing out the best in me." This season, Northwestern already has posted three more wins than in the entire 1982 season. (Gary Johnson, Northwestern assistant SID)

Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs on freshman sensation Wayman Tisdale: "Wayman amazes me each time he

Texas Southern's Harry Kelly has moved to fifth in Division I men's scoring race with 26.0 average goes out and plays. He completely dominated everyone he played against in the Rainbow Classic and proved he can score against anyone. Anytime someone tries to guard us inside, they are going to have trouble with Wayman. He has really improved his rebounding the last few games. He still has some things to learn and makes freshman mistakes at times, but as long as he can score 44 points and get 17 rebounds in a game, we'll forgive him for his freshman mistakes." (Kerry Tharp, Oklahoma assistant SID)

Illinois sophomore Kendra Gantt, after making 22 of 27 field goals in a 49-point effort (one point shy of the NCAA women's Division I single-game scoring record) against Kent State: "I never even knew I was close to any record. Everybody looks for me to be a scorer, but I like to work on defense. I think it's beginning to come." (Lani Jacobsen, Illinois women's SID)

Lawrence had a 23-point lead with 11 minutes remaining in a recent contest with Carleton but saw it slip away and eventually lost, 82-76, in overtime. "Talk about dying of self-inflicted wounds," lamented coach Mike Gallus. "We found ways to turn the ball over that hadn't even been invented yet." (Rick Peterson, Lawrence SID)

American University senior forward Juan Jones, a mass communications major, has been responsible for producing the team's game videotapes and annual highlights film for the past three seasons. Little wonder, then, that last year's highlights film ended with a slow-motion slam-dunk by the 6-6 Jones. "Just something for folks to remember me by," explained the Washington, D.C. native. He adds, "Dominique Wilkins (former Georgia standout) may be the 'Human Highlights Film', but I am just one of the guys who makes it possible for those highlights to be captured. I could just as easily be the 'Human Eraser.'" (Terry Cornwell, American SID)

California women's head coach Gooch Foster muses: "I don't know why coaches spend their time trying to get their 'B' team to run the opponents' plays. They can't even learn their own plays, or else they wouldn't be on the 'B' team." (Chris Dawson, California women's SID)

Texas A&M's 76-63 victory over Rice January 8 was the 177th career Southwest Conference win for Aggie head coach Shelby Metcalf, giving him the record for most conference coaching victories. His comment? "It just means that I've had this job for 20 years. At least I've been employed." (John Tishler, Texas A&M assistant SID)

Bowling Green opened the Mid-American Conference portion of its schedule with road victories against Ball State (71-69) and Eastern Michigan (53-52). However, the Falcons had to rally from behind in the final minute of each game after building up leads of 21 and 12 points. Coach John Weiner remarked, "We weren't able to nail the coffin shut in either game, but fortunately the corpse was still in there when the game ended." (Allan Chamberlin, Bowling Green SID)

Western Michigan's Vernon Payne is another Mid-American Conference coach with a lament. "I'm not bothered by the fact we were picked to finish last in the Mid-American Conference, but what does bother me is that some people thought that was too high." (John Beatty, Western Michigan SID)

When the Southern Illinois women's team traveled to the Central Florida Holiday Classic, they were lodged in Orlando, 25 miles from the playing site. Travel back and forth during the three days of the tournament became monotonous. On the third day, while making a trip from the arena to the motel, someone in the travel party inquired as to the day of the week. The disgruntled reply was, "It was Friday when we left the gym, but we may have gone through a couple of time changes." (Mitch Parkinson, Southern Illinois women's SID)

Old Dominion's 6-8 senior center Anne Donovan recently had her 70-game double-figure scoring streak broken at Louisiana Tech, when she fouled out of the game with only eight points. Her academic average continues to soar, however—she posted a perfect 4.00 last semester and maintains an overall 3.48 average. (Debbie Harmison, Old Dominion SID)

The Western Maryland men's team got off to a great start on the court (8-1) and in the classroom as well. The team's top seven players averaged a combined 3.60 for the fall term.

Kenneth Lyons of North Texas State ranks sixth in Division I men's scoring with 25.5 average

Here's the breakdown: Jim Francis (reserve guard/forward), 4.00 in business and economics; John Seiler (starting center), 3.80 in economics; Doug Pinto (starting forward), 3.50 in the premed curriculum; Jeff Weyer (starting forward), 3.50 in business-pre-law; Kevin Ness (starting guard), 3.50 in business; Scott Kohr (reserve forward/center), 3.50 in sociology and Dave Engel (starting guard), 3.40 in social work. (Ed McDonough, Western Maryland SID)

Roll over, Beethoven

The parents of Cathy McDonald, a reserve point guard for Texas, are avid fans who try to track the team's progress at home and away. Following the away games requires some ingenuity on the McDonalds' part. They live in San Antonio, about 90 miles south of Austin, and cannot pick up the broadcast signal of the radio station that carries Longhorn games. First, they attempted to attach an additional antenna to their home stereo, but the arrangement meant one person had to stand outside the house holding the antenna. Then, they decided if the broadcast would not come to them, they would go to the broadcast. When the Longhorns played in the Giusti tournament in Portland, Oregon, the McDonald clan (including the family dachshunds, Bevo and Charity) piled into the car and drove to the north end of the city, where, if the car was pointed north and if poor weather did not interrupt the signal, they could hear the game in the car.

"There is a San Antonio station that plays classical music, and it's close to the basketball broadcast station on the radio dial," said Mrs. McDonald. "Since the reception from Austin is still pretty weak, we get frequent interruptions from the classical music. It's like listening to basketball and Beethoven at the same time." (Ivan Meltzer, Texas student assistant SID)

Moving on

Former Indiana standout Landon Turner, whose basketball career was ended when he suffered injuries in an auto accident in July 1981, is still a full-time student at Indiana, majoring in physical education. He drives a specially equipped van to the campus at Bloomington and attends all of the practices and games, using a motorized wheelchair. He returned to school at the insistence of Indiana coach Bobby Knight. Knight is encouraging the university to hire Turner as a counselor after he graduates. "Landon Turner will be a star here forever," Knight said.

"I keep my mind away from the bad thoughts now," Turner told Dave Kindred of the Washington Post. "It's not really hard to do. I go to school, I have my friends, I go to practice and the games. It's just that one part of my life is over and another part is going on."

Broderick Cup goes to Tracy Caulkins

After winning five NCAA titles as a freshman and helping the Florida women's swimming team to the national championship last year, there was not much left for Tracy Caulkins to conquer, except the Broderick Cup.

Caulkins capped an incredible 1981-82 season January 11 when she was named winner of the Broderick Cup, symbolic of recognition as the outstanding female athlete in collegiate sports.

In becoming the sixth Broderick Cup recipient, the talented Caulkins

Paterno, Wacker gain top honors

Joe Paterno and Jim Wacker have won coach of the year honors from the American Football Coaches Association.

Paterno coached Penn State to the 1982 mythical national championship, while Wacker's Southwest Texas State team won its second consecutive NCAA Division II championship.

was selected over many outstanding collegiate athletes. Among the other nominees were Candy Finn of Penn State, the only woman to win Broderick Awards (given in 17 different sports) in two different sports, and Pam Kelly of basketball power Louisiana Tech.

Caulkins has won more U.S. swimming championships than anyone in history (42), eclipsing former record holder Johnny Weissmuller. Caulkins currently holds nine American records and five national collegiate records. She has won competitions at every distance and in every stroke.

Caulkins was named women's swimmer of the year for 1982 by Swimming World magazine in addition to her selection for the Broderick Award and, later, the Broderick Cup.

The sponsor of the program is the Broderick Company of Parsons, Kansas, a manufacturer of team and leisure sports attire. The concept behind the program involves selecting the top woman collegiate athlete in each of 17 sports; these Broderick Award winners then are candidates for the Broderick Cup, which recognizes the outstanding woman collegiate athlete of the year.

Previous Broderick Cup winners: Lucy Harris, Delta State, 1976-77, basketball; Ann Meyers, UCLA, 1977-78, basketball; Nancy Lieberman, Old Dominion, 1978-79, basketball; Julie Shea, North Carolina State, 1979-80, track and field, and Jill Sterkel, Texas, 1980-81, swimming and diving.

13 top wrestlers to compete in freestyle meets in Russia

Thirteen of America's premier wrestlers, headed by 1981 world champion Chris Campbell, will travel to the Soviet Union this month to represent the United States in a series of international freestyle meets.

The highlight of the tour will be the invitational tournament in Tblisi, annually one of the prestige events of international wrestling. Dual meets are scheduled for the American team in Kiev, Minsk and Leningrad.

The team will be coached by J. Robinson of Iowa City, Iowa, a 1972 Olympic wrestler and a member of the 1976 Olympic coaching staff. Robinson is assistant coach at Iowa.

Campbell, who was a national collegiate champion for Iowa and is now a member of the coaching staff at Iowa State, won a silver medal in the Tblisi tournament in 1980 and was a member of the U.S. Olympic team. He captured both the world championship and the World Cup championship at 180.5 pounds in 1981 but missed the 1982 international season because of injury.

ABC-TV protects Olympic coverage

ABC-TV has purchased a $200 million insurance policy on its coverage of the 1984 Olympic Games.

The policy, for which the network paid $8 million, will cover losses due to earthquakes, other natural disasters, labor disputes or political upheavals that could affect any of 10 key nations. The insurance applies only if the setback adversely affects the network's Olympic broadcast ratings.

The ABC package exceeds the coverage NBC had in 1980, when its Olympic broadcasts were canceled following President Jimmy Carter's order of a U.S. boycott of the Moscow games. NBC reportedly collected $90 million in insurance settlements.

ESPN to expand programming

The Entertainment and Sports Programming Network, the nation's only all-sports national cable television network, will enter a new programming field this spring when it begins televising a morning business news report.

According to the release issued by ESPN, the addition of the business news summary "will allow ESPN to capitalize on the strength of its predominantly male audience, which has been developed through its sports news and event coverage. It will not be a complete departure from its sports-oriented approach, as updates of sports news and scores will appear within the business segment."

The network did not announce when the business news show would debut, saying only that it would be carried mornings beginning sometime during the first quarter of 1983.

Cal Poly-Pomona adds men's soccer

California State Polytechnic University, Pomona, will add men's soccer to its sports sponsorship list next fall.

After passing a $3 per quarter athletic-fee assessment last year, the Cal Poly-Pomona student body identified men's soccer as the first of two sports it would like to see added. A decision on adding a second program is forthcoming.

The Broncos' new soccer team will compete in the California Collegiate Athletic Association. Other members of the league are California State University, Bakersfield; California State University, Dominguez Hills; California State University, Los Angeles; California State University, Northridge; California State Polytechnic University, San Luis Obispo; University of California, Riverside, and Chapman College.

Institution drops golf program

The University of Wisconsin, Milwaukee, announced earlier this month that it was dropping its intercollegiate men's golf program.

Golf, a fall sport with a part-time coach at Wisconsin-Milwaukee, was dropped because of budget cuts, according to an announcement by the university.

Wisconsin-Milwaukee will continue to sponsor six men's sports: soccer, cross country, basketball, swimming, tennis, and track and field. All are classified in Division III, with the exception of soccer, which is in Division I. The school's seven women's sports are affiliated with the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics.

Women's competition approved

The State University of New York Athletic Conference (SUNYAC) has approved competition in a women's division starting in 1983-84 for 11 of the 12 conference members: the university centers at Albany, Binghamton and Buffalo, and the state colleges at Brockport, Buffalo, Fredonia, Geneseo, Oneonta, Oswego, Plattsburgh and Potsdam.

Championship competition will be conducted in nine sports: basketball, field hockey, cross country, soccer, softball, swimming and diving, tennis, track and field, and volleyball.

Gutkowski relinquishes ESPN post

Robert M. Gutkowski, vice-president, programming, for the Entertainment and Sports Programming Network since July 1981, has relinquished his position to pursue other business ventures, according to Scotty Connal, executive vice-president and chief operating officer. Gutkowski will work with ESPN in a consulting capacity, while Connal will oversee the programming department.

Gutkowski played a major role in the acquisition of such contracts as the USFL, NBA, NCAA (for championships events) and packages with Metro-sports, Mizlou and Raycom/Jefferson Productions for a variety of college football and basketball events.

Schembechler heads coaches' group

Bo Schembechler of the University of Michigan has assumed the presidency of the American Football Coaches Association. Schembechler succeeds Jim Ostendarp of Amherst College.

Dave Maurer of Wittenberg University was elected first vice-president; Vince Dooley of the University of Georgia, second vice-president, and Vic Rowen of San Francisco State University, third vice-president. Oree Banks of West Virginia State Institute was voted to the board of directors.

Ice hockey team's status raised

The NCAA Division II men's ice hockey champion the past two years is moving up to Division I competition in its own conference.

The Eastern College Athletic Conference has announced that the University of Lowell will compete in that conference's top division beginning with the 1983-84 season. The decision was approved by the ECAC Executive Council during a meeting in conjunction with the NCAA annual Convention in San Diego.

Lowell will compete as an independent next season and will be ineligible for ECAC tournament play. It will become part of the ECAC's Western division for the 1984-85 season.

A top contender for the NCAA Division II title again this year, Lowell will become the 18th institution to compete in the ECAC's Division I.

Convention

at times, the proposal passed without a count.

"This legislation is necessary to uphold the integrity of the NCAA and the institutions," said L. Donald Shields, president, Southern Methodist University. "These are reasonable standards for freshman eligibility, and our stewardship and integrity as leaders of higher education are at stake."

Five CEOs spoke in opposition to No. 48, including Luna I. Mishoe, president, Delaware State College. "The SAT is a restraint that penalizes low-income students and does not indicate whether a student can perform college work. Test scores have nothing to do with ability."

Another significant academic proposal that met with approval of Convention delegates was No. 56 regarding satisfactory progress. As amended by No. 56-1, hours earned by student-athletes at Divisions I and II institutions to meet satisfactory progress requirements must be degree credit toward the student-athlete's specific baccalaureate degree, effective August 1, 1984.

Another area of concern expressed by Convention delegates was that of enforcement of NCAA rules and regulations. Four specific proposals were passed that will assist the NCAA enforcement department in its investigation process.

Proposal No. 80, which passed by common vote in all divisions, cites four specific examples of unethical conduct. Student-athletes found in violation of this amendment will be ineligible for further intercollegiate competition, subject to appeal to the Council.

Institutional staff members found in violation of this regulation will be subject to disciplinary or corrective action as set forth in Section 7-(b)-(12) of the NCAA enforcement procedure.

The specific violations cited in this amendment are refusal to furnish information about a possible violation when requested to do so by the NCAA, knowing involvement in arrangements for fraudulent academic credit or false transcripts for a prospective or enrolled student-athlete, knowing involvement in offering or providing a prospective or enrolled student-athlete an improper inducement or extra benefit and knowingly furnishing the NCAA or the individual's institution false or misleading information concerning violations.

Delegates also approved Proposal No. 81, which clarifies the meaning of the term "extra benefit" for purposes of applying Constitution 3-1-(g)-(5).

Another significant piece of legislation that will assist the NCAA enforcement effort is No. 91, which prohibits representatives of an institution's athletic interests from participating in in-person, off-campus recruiting activities. This prohibits alumni and boosters from becoming involved in in-person, off-campus recruiting. This amendment is effective August 1, 1983.

Convention delegates also supported No. 129, which requires member institutions to include in coaches' contracts a provision that the coach's employment may be suspended or terminated if the coach is involved in violations of NCAA regulations.

"All of these (Nos. 80, 81, 91, 129) are quite an attack against those who choose to violate NCAA rules," Byers said. "I am pleased that the coaches supported these proposals."

Delegates also approved Proposal No. 133, a resolution from the NCAA Council regarding the future of the NCAA football television plan.

The resolution states that if all or any part of the football television plan is held to be invalid by the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals prior to the 1984 Convention, the NCAA Football Television Committee is authorized to implement and institute an alternative national television plan for Divisions I, II and III for the 1983 season.

The resolution also gives the NCAA membership, either through mail referendum or a special Convention, the right to authorize the NCAA Council to seek an exemption of antitrust laws from Congress.

In response to a growing concern regarding the enforcement of women's programs in the NCAA structure, delegates approved a resolution to apply the full NCAA enforcement program to women's programs at member institutions beginning August 1, 1983, rather than August 1, 1985, the date that was adopted at the 1981 Convention as part of the NCAA governance plan.

When women were brought into the Association's governing structure in 1981, the plan was to bring women's programs under NCAA rules slowly. Until August 1, 1985, an institution or its student-athletes only could be declared ineligible for NCAA championships. However, a number of women's athletics administrators feared that two more years without enforcement of NCAA rules and regulations would be detrimental.

"Some people think the women's programs aren't that visible, so there isn't a lot going on," said G. Jean Cerra, associate director of athletics, University of Missouri, Columbia. "People are doing things out there, however. People know the ineligibility for the national championships is the only penalty, so people who want to take advantage of that situation go ahead and break the rules because they know they are not good enough right now to make a national championship. What do they have to lose?"

Proposal No. 71, which would have established new criteria and refined existing criteria for membership in Division I, was soundly defeated by the delegates. Eight speakers, all CEOs, spoke in opposition to the proposal, while two delegates addressed the Convention in favor of the plan.

Other legislation approved included the following:

- The existing restrictions on contacts between a member institution and representatives of a certified postseason football game were eliminated.

- Division I-A delegates approved the addition of one assistant football coach and eliminated part-time assistant coaches. The proposal failed in Division I-AA.

- Division I approved an amendment to provide for an unlimited number of graduate assistant coaches, provided each is enrolled in at least 50 percent of the institution's minimum regular graduate program, does not receive remuneration in excess of the value of commonly accepted educational expenses, does not serve in the position for more than two years and has no additional employment arranged by the institution.

- Enacted legislation to permit Division I-A football member institutions to participate in the National Football Foundation benefit game played in the week prior to the beginning of the traditional fall season. The game will be excluded from the maximum number of contests in the sport of football. The game will be played in East Rutherford, New Jersey, on August 27 or August 29.

- Eliminated the June 15-30 time period from the evaluation period for the sport of basketball for Divisions I and II.

- Approved legislation to prohibit a member of the basketball coaching staff of a member institution from being employed by a basketball camp established, sponsored or conducted by an individual or organization that provides recruiting or scouting services.

- Approved legislation to prohibit any in-person basketball recruiting by a member of a Division I coaching staff during the semifinal and final rounds of the Division I Men's Basketball Championship. The National Association of Basketball Coaches also holds its annual meeting during this time.

- Established the National Collegiate Men's and Women's Skiing Championships and provided representation for women on the Skiing Committee.

idents as officers of the Association. The officers now form an Administrative Committee, which has authorization to conduct business between meetings of the Council. The five officers, along with the executive director, form the Administrative Committee of the Association.

Delegates also approved Proposal No. 22, which expands the NCAA Executive Committee from 12 to 14 members. This proposal also was sponsored by the Council and the Special Committee on Council Restructuring.

The 14-member Executive Committee now will include the president, secretary-treasurer, eight members representing Division I and two each from Divisions II and III.

The eight Division I members will include at least two women, five members representing Division I-A football, two members representing Division I-AA football and one member representing institutions that do not sponsor football in Division I.

Also included among the 14 members are the three division vice-presidents. In addition, at least one woman is to be included among Division II or Division III members.

In addition to increasing from two to three the minimum allocations for women on the committee, the amendment establishes a five-year term for members and provides that the Administrative Committee is authorized to handle business between meetings of the Executive Committee.
