NCAA testimony set in pro signing hearings

NCAA President John L. Toner is scheduled to testify tomorrow (March 17) before the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee to present the NCAA position regarding premature signing of student-athletes by professional sports organizations.

The hearings are in connection with a proposed bill (S. 610) by Sen. Arlen Specter (R-Pennsylvania) that would provide an antitrust exemption for professional sports leagues to preclude the drafting of undergraduate student-athletes before they have completed their eligibility without being in violation of the Sherman antitrust law.

The principal portions of the NCAA statement to be presented by Toner were approved this week by the NCAA Administrative Committee and include the following:

"I appreciate the opportunity to present to you today the views of the NCAA on S. 610, the Collegiate Student-Athlete Protection Act of 1983.

"In light of the recent action of the United States Football League permitting one of its teams to sign a student-athlete, Herschel Walker, to a professional football contract before his collegiate eligibility expired, the NCAA wishes to make clear its view that, in most instances, the advantages to be obtained from completing a college education far outweigh the immediate financial gains available from a premature professional commitment.

"It is the position of the NCAA that student-athletes should be encouraged to complete their college education. At the same time, however, the NCAA believes that a student-athlete should have the right to sign a professional contract during his undergraduate career if it is in his own long-term, best interest to do so. Accordingly, the NCAA never has had and does not now have rules restricting a student-athlete from pursuing a professional sports career. Similarly, the NCAA neither has nor seeks any agreement with professional sports leagues to preclude or limit the opportunity of a student-athlete to "turn professional. . . .

"Consistent with this policy, NCAA rules define the point at which a student-athlete becomes a professional athlete. Once a professional in a particular sport, an athlete no longer is eligible for intercollegiate competition in that sport. The NCAA rules consist of clear statements that young people can understand of the circumstances in which a student-athlete relinquishes his intercollegiate eligibility. The NCAA publishes a short summary of its rules relating to amateurism and eligibility in a pamphlet entitled NCAA Guide for the College-Bound Student-Athlete. The nation's high schools and NCAA member colleges and universities distribute this pamphlet to prospective student-athletes during the recruiting process.

"In brief, NCAA rules provide that a student-athlete becomes a professional when he is paid for participation in a sport, enters into an agreement of any kind to compete in professional athletics, agrees to negotiate a professional contract, signs a contract or commitment to play professional athletics, or contracts to be represented by an agent in the marketing of his ath-

Productions staff hurriedly syndicates tournament games

By James A. Sheldon
The NCAA News Staff

Last year's NCAA Division I Men's Basketball Championship played in Topeka, Paducah and Joplin. Even Bend, Oregon, got into the act.

No, those were not first-round sites. They were part of a 110-station television network assembled by NCAA Productions. This year's tournament will be covered just as extensively, thanks to the intricate and fast-paced work of the NCAA Productions staff.

C. Dennis Cryder, director of NCAA Productions, and James W. Shaffer, assistant director, annually face a mad-house, 24-hour period following the announcement of the Division I field. It is during this time that they field calls from stations across the country that want a piece of the tournament action.

"I don't know of any other sports event that syndicates its television coverage in this kind of time frame," said Cryder.

The phone calls started Sunday after the bracket was released. Stations interested in televising an opening- or first-round game had to submit bids by noon Monday. Cryder, Shaffer and five assistants will go through the same process again next week when bids are accepted for regional semifinal games.

In all, NCAA Productions will coordinate the production of 24 tournament games this month—all four opening-round games, 14 first-round games and six regional semifinals. Last year, the 22 telecasts produced by NCAA Productions netted $319,554, which goes into the revenue pot shared by the

Basketball championship features coaching elite

By James M. Van Valkenburg
NCAA Director of Statistics

The lineup for the 45th National Collegiate Division I Men's Basketball Championship is close to a Who's Who of Division I head coaches. From every angle, it is outstanding. For instance, of the 11 active coaches with at least 10 official NCAA tournament victories, eight are in the 1983 field.

North Carolina's Dean Smith heads the list. His 25 tournament victories rank third in history behind UCLA's John Wooden (47) and Kentucky's Adolph Rupp (30). Indiana's Bobby Knight (18), Houston's Guy Lewis (18) and Louisville's Denny Crum

(16) all rank in the top six (right behind Al McGuire's 20), and all are in the tournament. Also in the field are Kentucky's Joe Hall (13), Alabama-Birmingham's Gene Bartow (12), Arkansas' Eddie Sutton (10) and Maryland's Lefty Driesell (10). Only missing members of the 10-victory club are Notre Dame's Digger Phelps, DePaul's Ray Meyer and Kansas State's Jack Hartman.

Of the seven active coaches with at least one NCAA championship, four are on hand this time—Smith (last year), Crum (1980), Knight (1981 and 1976) and Hall (1978). Ten active coaches have reached the Final Four at least twice, and six are in the 1983 field—Smith, Crum, Knight, Hall, Lewis and Bartow. Eight more in the field have made the Final Four once each—Illinois' Lou Henson, Georgia's Hugh Durham, Rutgers' Tom Young, Nevada-Las Vegas' Jerry Tarkanian, Sutton, Iowa's Lute Olson, Virginia's Terry Holland and Georgetown's John Thompson.

This means that all of the 1982 Final Four coaches are back—Smith, Thompson (a 63-62 loser in that classic at New Orleans), Lewis and Crum. From another angle, 43 of the 52 tournament head coaches this time have been a head coach in the NCAA tour-namment at least once.

Getting away from tournament history, if you look at the 75 winningest coaches in college basketball history with at least 10 seasons as a Division I head coach, you will find 26 active coaches on the list, and 17 of these 26 are in the 1983 tournament.

Starting at the top, Tarkanian (.808), Crum (.791) and Smith (.765) rank 4-5-9 on the all-time list through

Chief executives discuss misplaced values

By Jeff Young
Lancaster (Pennsylvania) Intelligencer

While intercollegiate athletics is on the verge of major upheaval in this country, there are voices crying out on behalf of values that have been misplaced.

Two of those voices were heard recently as Franklin and Marshall's "Sports In The '80s" series continued with a look at morality, ethics and economics in big-time college sports. And neither appeared ready to surrender the notion that athletes also must be students.

Not surprisingly, both voices belong to university presidents. They are Bill L. Atchley of Clemson, which suffered one of the NCAA's toughest football probationations ever only three months ago, and Paul Hardin of Drew, also a former president of Southern Methodist.

They joined with moderator Royce Flippen, athletic director at MIT and formerly of Princeton, and Sports Illustrated writer-reporter Brooks Clark to establish a healthy exchange of viewpoints before a small but attentive audience.

Clark played the hard-eyed realist, suggesting the time has come to compensate athletes beyond the scholarships rendered for their football and basketball services. He was pointing to the exploitation of athletes, an issue that has been insufficiently addressed.

He spoke of a recent Indiana appeals court decision [since overturned by the Indiana Supreme Court] in which an Indiana State football player who was paralyzed during spring drills in 1976, for purposes of workmen's compensation, was employed by the university. He also noted the 1980 introduction of a bill by Nebraska state legislation suggesting salaries for Cornhusker football players.

"A major-college athlete," Clark said, "knows he's there to excel, to make money for the university — certainly in football and basketball. He's given a scholarship because he can do that. The first reality they come to grips with is that it's a full-time job, arduous and time-consuming."

While he may be equal to that job, the athlete is often not equal to — or even interested in — the scholastic workload accompanying it. He never graduates, and unless he is Julius Erving or Earl Campbell, his career burns out in a few, short years.

Clark's proposal, then, was to divorce the academic and athletic pursuits. Make football a job for 4½ months, he said, during which everyone receives a scaled salary, along with the privilege of attending school in the off-season — if the athlete so desires.

"The important fact," he said, "is that if someone doesn't want to go to school, he doesn't have to. This relieves the burden of the minimum-progress rule in eligibility, which the school never really could bear."

Hardin's reply was emphatic enough. "Universities," he said, "are totally inappropriate sponsors for the business of professional sports, on the bases of economic, legal and philosophical reasons."

Hardin claimed that outside of the 50 to 60 schools making money through television rights, most big-time programs are draining their schools' budgets.

"So what are we going to get out of calling a spade a spade and raising salaries? That puts a further drain on our general funds," he said. The suggestion was that subsidies could come from the pro ranks, which ultimately benefit from the college-trained athlete.

Hardin recounted the story that led to his departure from Southern Methodist and Division I to Drew and Division III in 1975. It began with his meeting the father of a young man who was a reserve quarterback for the Mustangs.

Hardin learned through the father, a policeman concerned that his son was bringing money home from Mustang games, that the coaching staff had established an incentive system designed to bolster the performance of their specialty (coverage) teams.

"It was $25 if you recovered a fumble, $25 if you forced a fumble, $10 for a solo tackle and $5 for a shared tackle," Hardin said. The year's total expenditure amounted to $365; Hardin turned in his school, which received probation, and his relationship with the board of trustees was never the same.

It was an example of how the "chief executive," as Hardin and Atchley preferred to call themselves, must be strong if a school is to stay clean.

Atchley, who came to Clemson in 1979 only to see the Tigers receive a two-year probation and loss of 20 football scholarships on the heels of their first national championship, addressed that development and its challenge.

"What this is going to mean to us," he said, "is a loss of dollars and suffering for a while. But as I've told our students and faculty, if we go through this adversity and do not come out of it stronger, cleaner and healthier, we've wasted a lot of time."

Atchley called for more responsibility on the student's behalf as well.

"I think the first time you find a violation of (recruiting) inducement," he said, "the high school student should lose a year of eligibility, because they know the rules. No. 2, a coach involved should be dismissed automatically and not be allowed to coach at another NCAA school."

Atchley also said colleges should maintain their responsibility of providing the athlete's education even beyond his four years of eligibility, as long as he makes reasonable progress toward a degree.

Parents should hand over education duties to teachers

Bill Yeoman, football coach

"I've been around secondary education all my life. I'm telling you, 99 percent of the problems come from the parents. Your high school student will get his education, if the parents will stay out of the act. I know because I've had some family involvement in secondary teaching. Who, boy, what a pain in the neck.

"There are very few people involved in secondary education who are not happy to teach a child. But they don't want to do it with a ton of harassment from mom and dad. They really don't mind disciplining your child, but they don't want to do it with a lot of harassment from mom and dad. What mom and dad have got to do is stop harassing the secondary teachers and demand that they teach their children to read and write. But what happens is that ego thing gets involved. If you tried to bring a kid in after school, if you tried to give him extra work, why, that was taken as an affront by the parents and they come in and start raising the roof.

"The parents are the ones responsible for the situation because they get just exactly what they demand in the way of education. It's not the college football coaches, the colleges, the high school instructors or anything else."

"In college, they tell you that you are a student-athlete. When you're on a football scholarship, they turn it around, make it athlete-student. The athlete part always comes first. I'm through with that. I've played my four years. Now it's up to me to make my own decisions, and that's why I'm

Pomona-Pitzer student-athletes have different incentives, ways of life

By Michael Semel

Pomona-Pitzer Student Life

There are some rumors floating around the offices of Memorial Gym. I heard that UCLA has dropped Pomona-Pitzer from its basketball schedule next year. It's just as well, I guess. The rivalry is becoming a rout. We've beaten the Bruins the last nine games. Besides, if Dean Smith consistently refuses to bring his Tar Heels into the Hen House, then why should Larry Farmer bring the Bruins?

I also heard that Roger MacDonell is holding out for a seven-figure contract. Also, Carol Ferren is bringing her case to arbitration next Tuesday. And if all this isn't bad enough, Anthony Kandel has decided to forego his final year of eligibility to jump to the Chicago Blitz of the new USFL.

Not only that, the Pomona-Pitzer baseball team is on probation for recruiting violations. And finally, the entire Sagehen athletic department is under an NCAA investigation for alleged ties to known gamblers. When will the madness cease? Can't the 'Hens go one year without an athletic scandal?

All right, so maybe I'm exaggerating a little. Pomona-Pitzer really isn't going to be on UCLA's schedule next year. And MacDonell might have to settle for six figures and a new car. Then again, maybe I'm exaggerating a lot. Maybe the most exciting off-the-field antics in the Pomona athletic department is who they're going to put into that chicken suit.

But that's good. Yes, there was a time when I wanted to go to some Division I powerhouse that not only wins national championships in football but wins them in fencing, too. At one time, I wanted to be able to say that I went to some Big 10 school that year in and year out produces a dozen pro athletes. But I've outgrown that phase.

It's much more fun to say that one of my best friends is going to wrestle in the national championships. It's much more fun to say that a girl in my English class made it to the final four in basketball. These are our friends out there. We know these people. We're more involved in the game that way. You see that tight end out there? He's got to write the same seminar paper that I do. It keeps the games on a personal level. It keeps the fun in the game.

A fellow named Howard Cosell once said that sport is no longer a sacred cow, and that the milk it emits no longer is pure (thanks, Howard). Well, in at least a few cases, Howard was wrong. Sport on the Division III level is indeed pure.

The only incentive for athletes at Pomona is fun. They're not on four-year, no-cut scholarships. They don't have to worry about how a particular event will affect their pro careers. They play ball for the sake of playing ball. They're doing it because they enjoy doing it.

That's pure sport, Howard.

Opinions Out Loud

get back in the signing bonus when the athlete turns pro. So, I think it is a common practice.

"What we're going to have in the future will be those who will abide by our restrictions, will be able to regulate the fees, will regulate their conduct, will have to abide by a code of ethics and agree to a standard contract with the player.

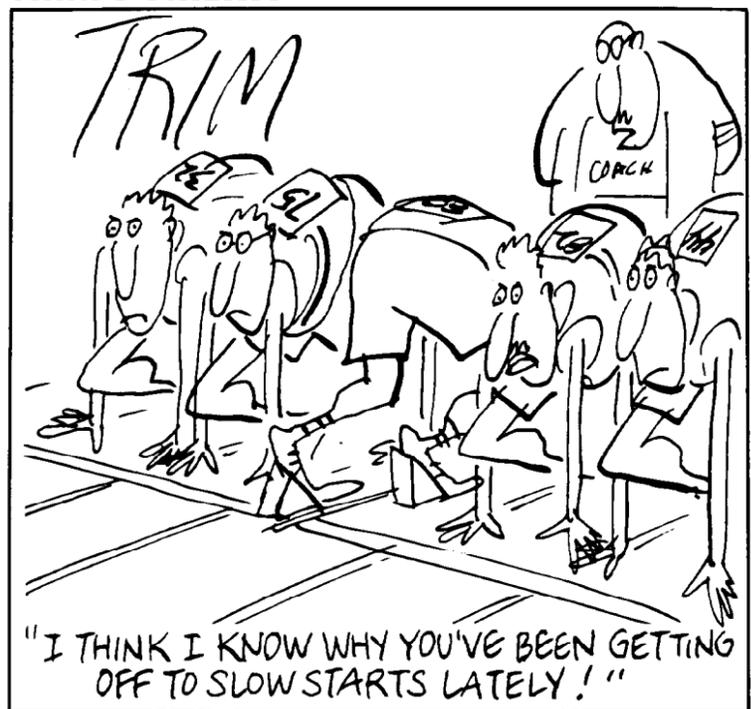

"I think we're going to finally clean up the mess that has been created as a result of the union's waiving its right to negotiate all wages."

deals in real estate, business, banking, medicine, law. It's part of the academic visit. . . .

"Whenever alumni are used, it's best that they're used under the direct supervision of a coach who would better know the rules and regulations.

"The least amount of (alumni) involvement is the best. There's no way we can properly educate these people to the rules and regulations. My gosh, we constantly have to update ourselves."

March 14, with Sutton (.739), Knight (.738), and Lou Carnesecca of St. John's (New York) (.738) all ranking in the all-time top 18. Others over .700 on this list are West Virginia's Gale Catlett (.717), Driesell (.707) and Hall (.703), with Thompson and Holland (both .694) very close.

The chart also shows 14 tournament coaches with at least 300 career victories and 13 more with at least 200—a total of 27, or more than half the field. Lewis heads the list at 526, Smith at 494, Driesell 455, Young 402 and Missouri's Norm Stewart, just one victory short of 400.

A quickie quiz

Ten coaches in the 1983 field also played in the NCAA tournament. Which of these scored the most points?

Give up? UCLA's Larry Farmer scored 83 points in 11 games from 1971 through 1973 (he is not listed in the 1971 championship game box score). That is a record for the 51 men who have both coached and played in the NCAA, surpassing the 69 by Gary Cunningham, all in four games in 1962. Also, Farmer's team was 11-0, surpassing the nine victories by Knight's Ohio State teams (1960-1962). Should Farmer's team win the 1983 title, he would be only the third man ever to play for and coach a title-winning team. Knight and Smith (Kansas 1952, North Carolina 1982) are the only two so far to accomplish this. Only three others have reached the Final Four as both player and head coach—Dick Harp (Kansas 1940 and 1957), Bones McKinney (North Carolina 1946, Wake Forest 1962) and Vic Bubas (North Carolina State 1950 and Duke 1963-1964-1966). Others in the 1983 field who also played in an NCAA game: Sutton, Thompson, Young, Catlett, La Salle's Lefty Ervin, Syracuse's Jim Boheim and Utah's Jerry Pimm.

The younger generation

Farmer is one of nine head coaches in the NCAA for the first time in 1983, and most, like Farmer, are members of the younger coaching generation. Farmer, for instance, played against teams coached by Knight, Tarkanian, Crum and Durham. Illinois State's Bob Donewald is a former Knight assistant and Ohio's Danny Nee a former Phelps aide.

Most improved teams

Rod Tueller was not fired after a 4-23 season at Utah State a year ago. After all, 6-7 Greg Grant, an excellent shooter and rebounder who missed 1982 with an injury, and 6-7 Ron Ence, a talented junior college transfer, were coming along to give playmaker Lance Washington a lot more ammunition. Tueller, who had taken the Aggies to the NCAA in 1980 in his first season as head coach, said, "The shooters are better this season and the shots will be, too."

Indeed, Utah State earned an NCAA berth with a 20-8 season—an improvement of 15 1/2 games over 1982 (16 more wins, 15 fewer losses totals 31; divide by two). This is the 11th year of most-improved compilations, and Utah State's 15 1/2 ranks fourth on the list. A 3-1 record in NCAA play (which would mean reaching the Midwest Regional finals in Kansas City) would enable Utah State to tie the 11-year high of 16 1/2 games.

Of the three teams above Utah State on the list, two were led by men in their first year as a head coach at a four-year college. Bill Blakeley's North Texas State team reached 16 games with a 22-4 in 1976, his first year (vs. 6-20 in 1975). He hardly was a novice, though, with a 360-129 record on the high school, junior college and pro levels. North Carolina A&T topped that with a 16 1/2-game improvement in 1978 (20-8 against 3-24) in Gene Littles' first season. And veteran coach Ron Greene tied that with 23-8 in 1980, his second season at Murray State, his alma mater (vs. 4-22).

Of the other most-improved win-

Guy Lewis

Terry Holland

Lou Carnesecca

ners, another was in his first year as a head coach at a four-year college—Tulsa's Nolan Richardson, with 26-7 and an NIT title in 1981 (vs. 8-19 in 1980) with the personnel from his top junior college team at Western Texas Junior College. Veteran coach Don Corbett led the 1981 list at 12 games (21-8 vs. 8-19) in his second season at North Carolina A&T. The other winners: 27-0 North Carolina State (Norm Sloan), 10 1/2 in 1973; 23-8 Kansas (Ted Owens), 13 in 1974; 20-8 Holy Cross (George Blaney), 11 in 1975; 21-8 Southwestern Louisiana (Jim Hatfield), 12 1/2 in 1977; 21-7 Wagner (P. J. Carlesimo), 13 in 1979; and 18-14 Fullerton State (George McQuam), 11 1/2 in 1982.

Xavier's 13 1/2 ranks high

Xavier is second this year at 13 1/2 games (22-7 vs. 8-20), and that is good for a tie for sixth in the 11-year rankings with Michigan State's 1978 team in Magic Johnson's first year (behind the 14 the same year by Fresno State in Boyd Grant's first season). Bob Staak coached Xavier to its first NCAA trip in 22 years. Southern Methodist was next at 11 1/2 in Dave Bliss' third year on the job, then Bucknell at 9 1/2 in Charles Woollum's eighth year and Nicholls State at 9 in veteran Gordon Stauffer's second season.

Only one man on the list was in his first year as a head coach at a four-year college. He is Andy Stoglin of Southern-Baton Rouge. Three had plenty of previous experience as a head coach and turned things around in their first year—East Tennessee State's Barry Dowd (who had not been a head coach since 1976; he assisted Abe Lemons at Texas since then), Youngstown State's Mike Rice (from Duquesne) and Stanford's Tom Davis (from Boston College).

Gerry Friel, a 14-year veteran at New Hampshire, celebrated his first winning team since 1974, while John Carpenter, a 17-year man at Rider, enjoyed his first winner since 1976. And Rich Falk had his first winner in his fifth season at Northwestern.

Among the nine most-improved teams entering the NCAA tournament is 24-6 Oklahoma State, led by Paul Hansen, a 10-year head-coaching veteran (and long-time Lemons assistant at Oklahoma City) making his first NCAA trip. Xavier's Staak, Ohio's Danny Nee and Illinois State's Donewald also are making their first NCAA trip as head coaches. In all, there were 28 Division I teams up at least 6 1/2 games—11 more than last season.

Among those Division I teams up six games, not one is in postseason play, but four of those up 5 1/2 are in tournaments—St. John's (N.Y.), Virginia Commonwealth, Robert Morris and St. Bonaventure. All could join the list, while a few could fall off.

"I'll make time"

South Carolina under Bill Foster makes the most-improved list. Foster suffered a heart attack in December and is now back on the bench (the university credits its 20-8 record to him as the head of the program; assistant Steve Steinwedel filled in). And he vows: "Now, I'll make time to smell the roses. I have to. It made me realize how much I had to live for. I just couldn't believe how many people cared."

Foster is now the only active coach to win at least 20 at four different Division I colleges (Duke, Utah and Rutgers prior to South Carolina). Only five active coaches have won 20 at three different colleges—Gene Bartow, Joe Williams, Lou Henson, Ralph Miller and Clemson's Bill Foster (no relation).

Two first-overs

There are 28 repeaters from 1982 in the 1983 NCAA field. Among the nonrepeaters are Georgia and Illinois State, making their first trips to the NCAA. Boston is making its first since 1959, Xavier and Morehead State each are going for the first time since 1961 and Oklahoma State, a power under Hank Iba, makes its first since 1965.

Explaining the seeds

You can determine the pairings with the seeds. In every region, the 9-8-1 seed-group winner meets the 12-5-4 winner, and the 11-6-3 winner meets the 10-7-2 winner in the regional semifinals. Then comes Midwest-Mideast and East-West in the Final Four.

Looking to get out

Almost every basketball team at every level of competition has, at one time or another, experienced the problem of finding the correct entrance to an opponent's gym or arena on arriving for a road game. The Stephen F. Austin State women's team had to cope with that problem when it visited McNeese State. After parking their vans in a lot near the gym, several of the women walked to the door nearest the lot, only to find it locked. A few minutes of loud knocking resulted in the door being opened by an unseen figure, and about half of the squad walked in—straight into the occupied men's locker room. The McNeese men's team had just completed practice, and most of the players were either preparing to shower or had finished and stepped out to dry off, much to the chagrin of the Austinites. Needless to say, those who were so anxious to get into the gym were equally anxious to get out. (Mark Conner, Stephen F. Austin State women's SID)

They make it look so easy . . .

Cleveland State, after losing several squad members through injury and other troubles, was down to seven uniformed players for its season finale against Wisconsin-Green Bay. Under the circumstances, it was decided that student manager Brian Maloney would dress and be allowed some playing time. The players suggested that he be allowed to start, and after a lengthy debate to select an appropriate nickname, settled on "Moses." "Moses" Maloney started and played the first two minutes, during which time he was fed the ball continually so he would have an opportunity to score. After the 5-7 rookie had his first shot blocked, however, he refused to put up any more attempts, and ended up going scoreless in Cleveland State's 74-66 win. (Len Wagner, Mid-Continent Conference SID)

Quotes of the week

Freshman Ivan Young, ordering a postgame meal at a McDonald's in Ruston, Louisiana, with his Texas-Arlington teammates, requested the two large soft drinks accompanying the meal be placed in separate paper bags. "What for?" asked teammate Danny Johnson. "You're going to throw them out the same window." (Gerry May, Texas-Arlington student assistant SID)

Cheryl Miller, the freshman sensation for the Southern California women's team, became interested in basketball while watching older brothers Saul and Darrell play with the backboard attached to the family garage. At the time, however, her life revolved around dolls and tea parties, thanks to the persistence of her mother. Those activities quickly went by the wayside. "My mom would buy the dolls, and I would cut all the hair off. That was the end of the dolls," she told Malcolm Moran of the New York Times. The tea parties did not fare any better. "After all the cookies and brownies were gone, so was Cheryl," she recalled.

Oshkosh to defend gymnastics crown

The best teams in Division II men's gymnastics competition may be better than ever at the NCAA championships, which will be contested March 24-26 at the University of California, Davis.

Defending national champion Wisconsin-Oshkosh, the only squad to win the overall title in the 1980s, again will send a strong, healthy unit to the championships. Head coach Casey Edwards, who has been involved as an athlete and coach at Wisconsin-Oshkosh for eight years, said this Titan team is different.

"The one thing we have this year is depth," he explained. "Having been around the team and the program for so long, I can say this is quite unique for us. And a lot of our people are all-around performers or multievent specialists."

"I think this might give us an advantage over some other people, since it has been my experience that an all-around or multievent specialist is a little stronger gymnast."

"We'll come in with a strong team, but we all realize that defending a national championship is sometimes very tough to accomplish."

"Our two goals for the regular season were to remain injury-free and qualify for the NCAA championships. Despite our tradition, qualifying is not easy to do every year."

"We made it through with no major injuries, and although we qualified for the NCAA meet, we never really did hit our peak score. Our scores on paper are not as high as we can go."

It is that theme — performing well but not getting it all together — that seems to characterize other contenders for the national title. East Stroudsburg State coach Bruno Klaus had similar feelings when he talked about the Warriors' prospects.

"We have scored around 255 during the regular season, but I believe we have the potential to go 264 or 265 at any given time. We haven't been hitting our routines, but we have gotten better each meet."

East Stroudsburg State finished the regular season with a 6-3 record, and Klaus said striving for consistency would be a key factor in his team's preparation for the national championships.

"Our routines are all very good. I believe they are more difficult than our competitors' in most instances. We just haven't seemed to be able to put it all together at one time. If we can, we should do quite well at the NCAA meet."

Both Wisconsin-Oshkosh and East Stroudsburg State will be battling a Springfield team that finished the regular season at the top of the Division II list in overall performance.

"As of now, we are ranked No. 1 in Division II, but it is all really close," said Springfield coach Stephen Posner. "We have got a good chance of winning the meet, but Oshkosh and East Stroudsburg will provide very strong opposition."

"Our dual-meet record was only 2-8, but it was basically against Division I competition. I think that pushes up the caliber of gymnasts we face during the regular season and ultimately helps us prepare for a meet like the NCAA championships."

Springfield returns Jeff Coelho, one of the best on still rings, as well as experienced gymnasts Jim Dragonetti, Mike Conlon and Bob Pealer.

Other top team contenders include Northern Colorado, Eastern Montana and Jacksonville State.

Division II women's gymnastics

Northridge State tops contenders

Defending champion Northridge State heads a group of four strong contenders for the 1983 Division II Women's Gymnastics Championships, to be held March 24-26 at the University of California, Davis.

Last year, almost eight points separated the top four finishers in the team competition. But the strength of the squads from Southeast Missouri State, Jacksonville State and Denver could make things tough for Northridge State.

"The outcome of the championships could come down to who hits their routines at California-Davis," said Northridge State coach Donna

Stuart. "We haven't peaked yet, and if we keep things together, we should do well."

Although her team has remained healthy all season, Stuart did mention some problems that have developed. "We are very fortunate that we haven't had any injuries, but the apparatus events (uneven parallel bars and balance beam) have been troublesome to us."

"When they hit their routines, our girls score well on those events. On the other hand, vaulting has been a strong point, and we have been consistent in the floor exercise."

Consistency — or lack thereof, that is — is a key word in the outlook of Southeast Missouri State coach Bill Hopkins.

"Our regular season record was 27-9, but we have been sporadic. In similar situations, we have been great one day and not so great the next."

"Being consistent in our performances is critical as we approach the NCAA meet. Floor exercise is our strongest event, and we should do well on the balance beam, although that can be a hit-or-miss event for any team."

Some of the strongest scores in the division have been turned in by a Denver squad that has shown constant improvement.

"We are in good condition at this point, and our scores have improved steadily throughout the year," said Denver coach Dan Garcia. "Fortunately, our only injuries have been a couple of sprains. We have lost no one for the year, and our mental and physical conditions are good as we approach the championships."

Garcia used a different approach in preparing his team. "We geared up for away meets this season with the idea that the NCAA would be another away meet. We felt that if we could do well at Utah State and Brigham Young, that successful experience on the road would help us at the NCAA championships."

"We won both of those meets, and now the girls are excited about the national championships. That is what they have trained for, and the approach has been very effective."

Jacksonville State coach Robert Dillard is concise in analyzing his team's potential. "Unless we blow everything, we have a super chance of winning the meet."

"Our weakest event has been the balance beam, but it could become our strongest if the girls get it together at the NCAA meet. Vaulting and floor exercise have both been strong for us, and we have not been bad on the uneven bars."

"We hope we can make it to the top, although we know Northridge State, Denver and Southeast Missouri all will be tough. I think the team that does the best job of holding things together through all four events will win it all," Dillard said.

Tartars set to defend crown in men's fencing

There are no 1982 individual champions returning to defend their titles at the 1983 NCAA Men's Fencing Championships, but Wayne State, Michigan, last year's team champion, has three top qualifiers ready to defend the Tartars' team title.

Wayne State, winner of three of the past four titles, will be challenged strongly by Notre Dame at the 13th championships March 24-26 at the University of Wisconsin, Parkside, in Kenosha, Wisconsin.

Coach Aladar Kogler, in his first season after replacing 30-year veteran coach Istvan Danosi, will count on his two sons, Stephan and Attila, and Ettore Bianchi.

Stephan Kogler will compete in the foil after finishing fifth last year. Bianchi, third in the epee last year, returns in that event, and Attila Kogler is one of the nation's top-ranked sabre contestants.

Notre Dame's hopes will rest with Marc DeJong (foil), Ola Harstrom (epee) and John Edwards (sabre).

Clemson, last year's runner-up, has dropped the sport, as has George Mason, Pennsylvania, last year's third-place team, will be in the running for the team title with Michael Weeks (foil), Stephen Trevor (epee) and Douglas Powell (sabre).

Other teams with qualifiers in each of the three events are Detroit, Illinois, Northwestern, Wisconsin, Air Force, Stanford, MIT, Princeton, Columbia, Harvard, Navy, St. John's (New York), Cornell, Penn State, Seton Hall, Rutgers-Newark, William Paterson, Haverford, Lafayette, North Carolina, Duke, Rutgers and Case Western Reserve.

Texas aims for Division I swimming title

Consolation heats in a swimming and diving meet never seem to capture the attention accorded the championship races, but they can be important. In fact, at least one coach thinks the consolation races of the Division I Men's Swimming and Diving Championships March 24-26 in Indianapolis could determine the 1983 NCAA team titlist.

"Generally, the team champion in an NCAA meet is determined by the results and points scored in the championship finals," said Texas coach Eddie Reese, who guided the Longhorns to a second-place finish in 1982.

"This year it will take a total team effort to win the NCAA title. The swimmers in the consolation finals definitely will help determine the overall winner."

While admitting that his team has to be considered one of the early favorites, Reese says, "It looks like a five-team race involving Texas, Southern Methodist, Stanford, California and Florida."

"Florida had a phenomenal conference meet, and those other teams have been excellent, too. I know we certainly can't win the title with five or six people scoring points. We need 12 or 14 people . . . a total team effort. I think this will be the tightest meet ever, with more teams having a legitimate chance for the championship than ever before. The competition will make us all better."

And how are the Longhorns preparing for the meet? "I know this will sound crazy, but we are working on resting," Reese said. "Getting some rest is the most important thing for us at this point."

Texas coach Eddie Reese

At Florida, head coach Randy Reese has his Gators fine-tuning their talents as the meet draws near. "For us to do well in the NCAA meet, we need to drop our times a little in every event. We can't change anything, so we are just trying to improve everything we can."

"We had a good conference meet, although we were not real fast. We are working on our starts, strokes, turns and everything else. With a little rest, we should be sharper for the NCAA meet, and we need to have four or five guys move up a couple of places to have a shot at the team title."

California coach Nort Thornton said his team had a fine dual-meet season but may not have the depth to contend with Texas, Stanford and Florida.

Banach brothers lead Iowa to wrestling title

Five Iowa wrestlers advanced to the finals of the NCAA Division I Wrestling Championships, but it really did not matter, at that point, for the other competing teams.

The Hawkeyes rode the semifinal victories of brothers Ed and Lou Banach and romped to their sixth consecutive team title, 24 hours before the tournament ended.

The Banach victories (Ed at 190 and Lou at heavyweight) ended a highly successful semifinal round that gave the Hawkeyes 121 3/4 points and mathematically clinched the team title.

Despite their lock on the championships, the Hawkeyes' intensity in the finals did not diminish. Four of the five Iowa finalists won titles. Barry Davis defeated Gary Bohay of Arizona State, 5-2, for the 126-pound title, and Jim Zalesky successfully defended his 158-pound title. The Banachs capped off Iowa's eighth national title in nine years with victories over Iowa State's Mike Mann and Wayne Cole.

Iowa finished the tournament with 155 points. Oklahoma State, which advanced three wrestlers to the finals, finished second with 102 points.

Ed Banach, ranked second at 190 pounds, recorded one of the most impressive semifinal victories for the Hawkeyes with a major decision over Nebraska's third-ranked Bill Scherr, 15-4. Brother Lou then scored a tough 3-1 decision over Oklahoma State heavyweight Mitch Shelton.

Iowa State's Nate Carr (150) and Oklahoma's Mark Schultz (177) finished brilliant careers as each won his third consecutive title. Carr had one of the most exciting matches of the tournament when he met Oklahoma State's Kenny Monday for the 150-pound title. The two battled to a 3-3 deadlock before Carr prevailed, 5-2, in overtime. Schultz, who won the 167-pound title last year, defeated Duane Goldman of Iowa in the finals.

Nebraska edges Vols in first championships

Nebraska scored points in six events, including a surprise second-place finish in the 1,000, to edge Tennessee, 47-44, at the 1983 National Collegiate Women's Indoor Track Championships.

It was the second straight indoor championship for Nebraska, which won the AIAW meet last year. The first-ever NCAA women's indoor meet was held March 11-12 in the Silverdome in Pontiac, Michigan.

Kirsti Voldnes handed the Cornhuskers a big gift in an otherwise predictable dual between Nebraska and Tennessee. The freshman took four seconds off her personal best in the 1,000 to finish second. Her eight points turned the corner for Nebraska.

Janet Burke, Angela Thacker and Marcia Tate were the workhorses for the Cornhuskers. The three accounted for 38 of Nebraska's 47 points. Burke won the 60-yard dash and ran the lead-off leg on the second-place mile-relay team. Thacker was third in the 60 and second in the long jump, and Tate was third in the 600 and anchored the mile-relay team.

Tennessee, a strong prechampionship favorite to win the meet, captured more individual titles than any other team but did not have the surprise effort that Nebraska got from Voldnes in the 1,000.

Delisa Walton Floyd won the 440, Joetta Clark captured the 880, and both ran on the mile-relay team that won with the best clocking in the world at 3:37.08.

The Volunteers also took second in the hurdles with Benita Fitzgerald, fourth in the 600 with Cathy Rattray and fifth in the shot put with Patricia Walsh.

Stanford was third with 28 points, and Houston was fourth with 24. The Cardinals were helped by first- and second-place finishes in the two mile. Houston won the long jump, was second in the 60 and third in the 1,000.

There were no double winners in the meet, and all of the first-place results in the finals were meet records except in the hurdles. Kim Turner, Texas-El Paso, turned in a 7.47 in the semifinals of the event to set the standard.

Mustangs dominate field events, win first indoor men's track title

Southern Methodist, relying on its strength in the field events, scored 43 points and won its first team title in the 1983 National Collegiate Men's Indoor Track Championships.

The Mustangs scored points with all but two of their entries and dominated the field-event scoring with 31 points in three events to hold off a strong challenge from Villanova, second with 32 points.

"We figured that if we did what we were capable of doing, we would be in pretty good shape," coach Ted McLaughlin said after the meet, which was held March 11-12 in the Silverdome in Pontiac, Michigan.

"We thought any other team would have to have a super performance to beat us," he said.

The Mustangs started quickly on the first day with Robert Weir's record-setting performance in the 35-pound weight throw. The two-time champion trailed going in to his final throw but sailed the weight 76-5 1/2 to win.

Weir's teammates, Richard Olsen and Anders Hoff, finished fifth and sixth, respectively, to give Southern Methodist 13 points.

"We like that event on the first day, because if we do well, it gives impetus to the whole team," McLaughlin said.

Southern Methodist also won the shot put on Michael Carter's throw, was second in the triple jump and mile relay, and placed fourth in the 880.

One of the biggest surprises in the meet was Keith Connor's second in the triple jump. The two-time defending champion from Southern Methodist finished behind Arkansas' Michael Conley.

"Conley is a great jumper," said McLaughlin. "He will be America's next great jumper. What surprised me was that he was able to do so well in both the triple and long jumps."

Conley was sixth in the long jump, but his 11 points helped Arkansas finish third with 29 points.

Villanova did not score a point in the field events but won more individual championships than any other team. Carlton Young won the 440, John Marshall captured the 880 and was fifth in the 1,000, and the two-mile relay team was first.

Those performances were good for 32 points, and that is where Villanova finished. The story might have been different if Marcus O'Sullivan, fourth in the mile last year and the fastest collegian this season, had made the finals in the mile and if Rodney Wilson, fifth in the hurdles last year, had not fallen in the semifinals.

The only double champion in the meet was Tennessee's Willie Gault, who won the 60-yard dash and 60-yard hurdles. It was the first time in the history of the meet that an athlete has won that particular combination.

Utah wins combined skiing championships

Utah used its strong showing in the Alpine events to hold off Vermont and capture the first NCAA Men's and Women's Skiing Championships March 9-12 in Bozeman, Montana.

Utah rolled up 696 points, followed by Vermont with 650 points and Wyoming with 629½. It was the second time in three years that Utah has won.

The Utes captured only one individual title, Kathy Kreiner's first-place finish in the women's giant slalom, but took second in both the men's and women's slalom and did not finish lower than 17th in any event.

After Utah's dominance in the slalom events the first day—the men captured second, third and 17th, and the women finished second, fourth and sixth—Vermont closed to within 21 points after the cross country competition.

Beth Heiden led the way for the Cats with a first in the women's 7.5-kilometer race. Todd Boonstra was third in the men's 15-kilometer event.

Even with Tor Melander's first-place finish in the giant slalom for Vermont, Utah continued to dominate the giant slalom as Kreiner finished first, Bente Dahlum third and Jill Robins fourth in the women's competition.

Utah's 67-point lead going into the final day's cross country relay events was too much for Vermont to overcome. Vermont won the men's relay and finished third in the women's relay to close the gap to 46 points.

Women's academic team chosen

Old Dominion's towering center Anne Donovan and Louisiana Tech's diminutive point guard Kim Mulkey head the 1982-83 College Sports Information Directors of America academic all-America women's basketball team.

The 6-foot-8 Donovan has a 3.500 grade-point average in leisure studies. She is a dominating force in women's basketball, ranking sixth in Division I rebounding (14.8 rebounds per game) and ninth in field-goal percentage (61.2 percent).

Mulkey does not have flashy statistics, but the 5-foot-4 sparkplug is a key to the Lady Techsters' NCAA Division I title defense. She has a 3.870 grade-point average in accounting.

Rounding out the first team are Judy Burns, a guard from Bradley; Carol Emanuel, a forward at Purdue, and Holy Cross forward Sherry Levin. All three rank among the division's top scorers: Burns with a 22.7 average, Levin at 21.1 and Emanuel at 19.4.

Heading the college-division squad with a 4.000 grade-point average in chemistry is Lawrence forward Carol Arnosti. Rounding out the college-division squad are Cindy Dorsey, Ashland; Denise Boll, Central (Iowa); Mary Manning, Air Force, and Shelly Blackburn, Capital.

Sampson on USBWA team again

For the third straight season, Virginia's Ralph Sampson heads the United States Basketball Writers Association all-America team.

Joining Sampson on the 10-man team are a pair of rival North Carolina Tar Heels — Sam Perkins and Michael Jordan. Also on the team is Oklahoma forward Wayman Tisdale, the first freshman ever selected to the USBWA team.

Rounding out the squad are Keith Lee, Memphis State; Pat Ewing, Georgetown; Sidney Green, Nevada-Las Vegas; Dale Ellis, Tennessee; Randy Wittman, Indiana, and Clyde Drexler, Houston.

The team is dominated by big men and underclassmen. Sampson, Perkins, Ewing and Green all play center. Jordan and Wittman are the only guards on the squad, and both have been used as small forward at times this season.

Sampson, Green, Ellis and Wittman were the only seniors selected. Perkins and Drexler are juniors, while Jordan, Ewing and Lee are sophomores.

Nonnetwork telecasts information needed

Information concerning nonnetwork telecasts again is being requested from NCAA member institutions.

Requests for information about such telecasts during the 1982 calendar year recently were mailed from the NCAA national office in connection with proceedings of the Copyright Royalty Tribunal. The tribunal allocates fees paid by cable systems for retransmission of nonnetwork over-the-air broadcast programs carried by cable systems on a distant-signal basis.

As has been the case for the past several years, the national office staff will undertake the responsibility for initial data collection and organization; the Association's Washington, D.C., legal counsel—Squire, Sanders and Dempsey—will file the formal claim with the Copyright Royalty Tribunal.

More than $168,000 in fees from 1978 telecasts has been distributed to participating institutions and conferences. Proceedings for 1979, 1980 and 1981 telecasts have not been concluded.

All institutions and conferences wishing to participate in the 1982 proceedings should complete the form and return it to Eric D. Zemper, research coordinator, at the national office. When compiling the list, it should be remembered that only nonnetwork telecasts qualify for statutory copyright royalty fees.

It also should be emphasized that all copyright fees are paid by cable systems. These proceedings place no liability whatsoever upon local broadcast stations, and the NCAA simply is claiming compensation for cable retransmissions of original television broadcasts.

In some cases, member institutions may not be aware that retransmission has taken place. If no information is submitted, though, no fees will be received for the transmissions.

Included in the information distributed this year is a suggested contract provision for reserving the copyright interests of member institutions in telecasts of their sports events.

Newsworthy

An NCAA Division I men's player has not averaged 20 points and 20 rebounds a game since the 1970-71 season, when three players managed that feat. Name at least two of them.

Cortland State to retain football

Intercollegiate football, which was scheduled for elimination from Cortland University College's sports program, will return next fall, according to Vincent J. Gonino, director of athletics.

The sport was restored after an administrative committee found that proposed budget cuts would not have to be as severe as first thought. Also restored was a position in the physical education department.

Wagner to remain in Division I

Wagner College has reversed an earlier decision to seek reclassification of its Division I sports program and will remain at that level of competition for at least three more years, according to Sam H. Frank, college president.

The earlier decision was based on financial difficulties the institution was encountering, but that decision was rescinded after two days of meetings by the board of trustees.

Frank said, "Our athletic council will review and report annually on all phases of our sports program."

The Staten Island, New York, institution plays a Division III football schedule but competes in Division I men's basketball, baseball, track and field, tennis, golf, and wrestling and in women's tennis, track and field, and baseball.

Women's softball added to program

St. John Fisher College will increase to seven the number of its varsity women's sports in spring 1984 with the addition of softball, according to Phillip Kahler, director of athletics.

A Division II institution, St. John Fisher College also offers seven men's varsity sports.

Spring soccer tourney planned

The reigning champions from all three NCAA men's soccer divisions plus the Division I runner-up will meet this spring in a unique off-season tournament.

Duke, the 1982 Division I runner-up, will host the four-team tourney April 9-10 in Durham, North Carolina. Also on hand will be Indiana, which defeated the Blue Devils, 2-1, in an eight-overtime final; Division II champion Florida International, and Division III titlist North Carolina-Greensboro.

North Carolina-Greensboro and Duke will meet on the first day of the tourney, and Indiana will face Florida International. The Hoosiers and Blue Devils will meet the following day, and Florida International takes on North Carolina-Greensboro.

Barnard, Columbia plan merger

The NCAA Council has approved an athletics consortium for Barnard College and Columbia University.

Women from Barnard, Columbia College and Columbia's School of Engineering and Applied Science, School of Nursing and School of General Studies will become members of university-wide teams.

Under the NCAA consortium arrangement, student-athletes at Barnard and Columbia will compete on the same teams and will be under the direction of one athletic department. The new name of the consortium, effective September 1, 1983, will be Columbia University-Barnard College. The consortium will be a Division I member.

Beginning in September, the consortium will field women's teams in archery, basketball, cross country, indoor and outdoor track, fencing, swimming, tennis, and volleyball.

This will be the third consortium arrangement among current NCAA members. The other consortiums are Claremont Men's-Harvey Mudd-Scripps Colleges and Pomona-Pitzer Colleges.

1: Julius Erving, Massachusetts (26.3 points per game, 20.2 rebounds per game); Artis Gilmore, Jacksonville (24.3, 22.7); Kermit Washington, American (20.1, 20.2).

TV in the News

Students obtain TV experience

Ferris State college students are getting on-the-job television experience as part of the school's self-produced hockey series.

The Big Rapids, Michigan, school is in its second year of producing a college hockey package, according to a report in Cablesports. The 18-game package is distributed to 15 cable systems in Michigan and Minnesota and also is carried on a local educational station.

Ferris State has put together its own advertising package, and the cable operators pick up the cost of distribution as well as providing stock tape. The school also distributed four football games last fall.

Hotels offered satellite service

The Entertainment and Sports Programming Network will be one of three satellite-delivered services offered by Spectradyne, Inc., to hotels nationwide.

Spectradyne is organizing a new "SpectraMax" package of in-room video entertainment, which will include the all-sports cable network. Also offered in the package will be Home Box Office and Cable News Network Headline News.

Spectradyne distributes "Spectravision," the largest pay-per-view hotel movie system, to more than 300 hotels in 113 cities.

NBC pays for 1980 Olympics

NBC-TV has confirmed that it is scheduled to pay the Soviet Union more than $14 million still owed in connection with the 1980 Olympic Games.

NBC officials said the payment includes interest earned on an escrow account in which the network invested. NBC still owed the Soviet Union $9.6 million under the terms of its contract to televise the Moscow games, which were boycotted by the United States following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. Even after insurance payments, NBC reportedly has taken a $34 million loss.

letic ability or reputation. In other words, a student-athlete crosses the line from amateurism to professionalism when he takes the initiative to become professional. . . .

"A student athlete does not turn professional simply by receiving an offer from a professional sports league or securing advice from an attorney concerning a proposed professional sports contract. It is only once the student-athlete affirmatively takes steps to offer his services to professional sports teams that he is considered to have become a professional. The fact that the contract is not enforceable, that the athlete is not selected for professional play or that he later decides to withdraw from the contract has no bearing on the conclusion whether he has become a professional. It is his action in taking the initiative to try to play professionally that determines whether or not he has crossed the line into professionalism, not whether he is successful in that endeavor.

"The NCAA's primary concern is that college student-athletes who sign with professional sports organizations often do not complete their undergraduate careers and fail to receive college degrees. The NCAA is more concerned with the possibility that a student-athlete will not complete his college education than with the possibility that he will not complete his eligibility. Moreover, many student-athletes who turn professional before completing their college eligibility and their college education ultimately do not succeed in their professional athletic careers. The statistics are sobering. In both football and basketball, only about one percent of college seniors playing those sports at NCAA member colleges and universities are successful in their efforts to play professionally.

"Although statistics are not available, it has been our experience that few athletes return to complete their college education once they have interrupted it to play professional sports. . . .

"The manner in which the USFL has been structured will exacerbate this problem and is likely to result in a marked increase in the number of student-athletes who do not complete their educational careers. Not only has the USFL permitted a student-athlete with eligibility remaining to sign a professional contract prior to his graduation from college, it also has indicated its intention to conduct an annual draft of college players that will encourage the selected individuals to leave college prior to completion of their senior year. These annual draft sessions will take place prior to the beginning of the USFL season, which is to begin in March of each year, and the players who are drafted will be encouraged to leave their institutions in order to participate during the spring in this competition.

"College football players who have completed four seasons of eligibility in the fall of their senior year thus are more likely to leave college after their seventh semester, before their graduation from college, in an effort to play professional football with a USFL team than they would be in the case of NFL teams, where both practice and the playing season take place after the close of the academic year.

"In addition, the NCAA believes that the actions taken by the USFL, and the attitude exhibited to date by the league's leadership, will encourage individuals acting as agents to contact undergraduate student-athletes to try to persuade them to forgo their remaining eligibility and the completion of their college education in order to obtain contracts with USFL teams. Although premature signings with other professional sports leagues have occurred, those leagues have avoided many potential problems by announcing their policies and practices and adhering to them, thus allowing affected parties to plan accordingly. Based upon the USFL's record to date, it is not certain that the USFL is prepared to do that.

"The NCAA strongly urges the USFL and other professional sports leagues to state clearly their governing policies and practices with regard to the signing of undergraduate student-athletes, and then to hold to those standards. . . .

"The NCAA is empathetic to the position of many college coaches that the drafting of athletes prior to completion of their college eligibility disrupts the intercollegiate sports program in which those athletes compete. We understand their concern that the action of the USFL in permitting the signing of Herschel Walker may lead to widespread recruiting of college football players in the absence of professional-league rules barring such recruitment. The NCAA is in favor of measures to reduce the pressure on college coaches and it does not want to encourage the drafting of student-athletes who have not completed their college education and who have eligibility remaining. Nonetheless, the NCAA does not believe that a student-athlete should be denied the opportunity to choose to become a professional player prior to completion of his undergraduate education.

"If Congress wishes to ensure the enforceability of professional-league rules encouraging student-athletes to complete their undergraduate education, the NCAA agrees, based upon the Spencer Haywood case and advice from its legal counsel, that an exemption from the antitrust laws would be necessary. We disagree with the suggestion that the prohibitions implied by the Haywood case can be avoided by the establishment of some form of "screening committee" to determine—on the basis of skill, maturity or economic "need"—which student-athletes will be authorized to "turn professional" before completing their intercollegiate eligibility, and which will not. In any event, we do not consider this to be a wise policy.

"We do not believe that the present number of student-athletes who are tempted to sign prematurely warrants the adoption of a national policy to prevent an individual from having that choice. The NCAA, however, remains principally concerned by the fact that there are student-athletes at many colleges who do not receive their degrees following completion of their athletic eligibility, and the NCAA member institutions are committed to improving this state of affairs."

Earlier this week, the College Football Association's coaches committee issued a statement calling on USFL teams to place in writing their position regarding signing of undergraduate college players.

The coaches said they were not satisfied with verbal promises and did not agree with a statement made earlier this month by some members of the American Football Coaches Association that "the Herschel Walker case is behind us" and is a "dead issue."

The CFA coaches committee also called on the USFL to support Sen. Specter's bill in the Senate.

participating institutions. Primarily because of increased coverage by CBS-TV, those figures were down somewhat from 1981 when a record 159 stations carried 25 games, creating net revenues of $385,875. When NCAA Productions first undertook the task of producing tournament games in 1977, 92 stations bought 14 games, and net revenues of $95,864 were realized.

Under terms of the Association's contract with CBS, NCAA Productions is obligated to contact CBS affiliates first. However, that does not exclude other stations from bidding, and it is the bidding process that often causes Cryder and Shaffer some of their more nerve-racking moments.

"Some station managers just do not understand the rights-awarding process, and they are surprised when they learn what the rights will cost," Cryder said. "It isn't a case of outlandish rights fees being charged. It is a case of what a particular market will bear."

In fact, while the money generated by NCAA Productions is an important part of the championship revenue pool, dollar figures really are secondary concerns.

"If we can provide coverage for every team back to its home television market and break even on our production costs, we have been successful," said Cryder. "We want the institutions to have as much home-market television coverage as possible."

Those production costs are not cheap, considering "everything is delivered right to the station's doorstep," according to Cryder. NCAA Productions arranges announcers, equipment and a production crew; supplies a production format complete with 15 minutes for local advertising spots, and even arranges the satellite transmission.

Even with all those services provided, some station managers do not understand why they cannot use their own announcers.

"They don't understand that we are feeding the same game to other markets, which would like to have their announcers on as well," explained Cryder. "We have a group of announcers and production people that we've worked with over the years, and they have done an excellent job."

Through six years of experience, Cryder has found that the "glamour" games may not necessarily command the biggest market or highest bidding.

"The smaller institutions in the big television markets are the toughest to sell," he said. "Sometimes, the institution will go out and raise the money to buy the air time on a commercial television station just to get the exposure."

Teams in rural areas that receive coverage from several smaller markets often attract higher rights fees and more stations. Last year's Kansas

State-Arkansas game in the second round was a good example. Ten stations, including Topeka, Kansas, and Joplin, Missouri, channels, picked up the game at a total price of $54,900. A Paducah, Kentucky, station and six others carried the first-round contest between Kentucky and Middle Tennessee State, and KTVA in Bend was part of the 10-station network for the Idaho-Oregon State regional semifinal.

In addition to the local exposure, the Entertainment and Sports Programming Network picks up the NCAA Productions telecasts. All 24 games produced this year by NCAA Productions will be carried by ESPN, which reaches 25 million homes via cable. Ten of the games will be carried live by ESPN, while the others will be shown on a tape-delayed basis.
