A step back into history of basketball

Women's basketball returns to the Gay '90s this week with a series of events in Northampton and Springfield, Massachusetts, commemorating the sport's 90th anniversary.

The first recorded women's basketball game was played March 22, 1893, in Northampton. The Smith College freshmen defeated the sophomores, 5-4, in a game that was closed to men (the bloomers and long-sleeved blouses were considered too risqué).

Players from Smith and Wellesley reenacted that first game last night in Northampton, and another reenactment will be staged Saturday between halves of the 1983 NCAA Division II Women's Basketball Championship in Springfield.

Smith coach Jim Babyak has reconstructed the game from newspaper accounts. Besides squeezing 18 players onto a 70-foot by 35-foot court, the early rules also called for no dribbling, a point for each basket

Testimony heard on Specter bill

NCAA President John L. Toner last week told the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee that "the present number of student-athletes who are tempted to sign [professional contracts] prematurely does not warrant the adoption of a national policy to prevent an individual from having that choice."

Toner was among several members of the collegiate sports community who testified concerning a bill to grant a limited antitrust exemption allowing professional leagues to adopt rules against the signing of underclassmen without the threat of being sued by the player.

The legislation was sponsored by Sen. Arlen Specter, Pennsylvania Republican, after the United States Football League signed Herschel Walker of the University of Georgia to a professional contract while he had one year of college eligibility remaining.

University of Michigan football coach Bo Schembechler and Pennsylvania State University football coach Joe Paterno testified in favor of the bill.

Toner told the committee the NCAA believes that "a student-athlete should have the right to sign a professional contract during his undergraduate career if it is in his own long-term, best interest to do so."

When questioned about the NCAA rule declaring a student ineligible if he hires a lawyer-agent to look out for his best interests, Toner said, "There is no gray area between eligible and ineligible."

Toner told the committee that the See Testimony, page 12

Compliance with policy encouraged

Member institutions are encouraged by the NCAA Administrative Committee to comply with the provisions of new Recommended Policy 13, as adopted by the membership (Proposal No. 85) at the 1983 NCAA Convention.

The new policy urges members to identify an institutional staff member to be responsible for coordinating the application of NCAA rules to the institution's athletic program. It was sponsored by the NCAA Council in an attempt to control the rapidly increasing number of contacts with the NCAA national office for rules interpretations and other legislative services.

"Some institutions already have identified in writing the individual on the campus who will serve in this capacity," according to Stephen R. Morgan, director of legislative services.

"In addition, we are monitoring the calls we receive from each institution and sending letters to the institution in cases where we continue to take calls from several different campus personnel, including coaches."

The Council decided to submit the recommended policy after reviewing the significant increase in calls and letters to the national office seeking assistance in applying NCAA legislation. The Council noted that individuals at member institutions apparently were bypassing their normal campus and conference channels and contacting the national office directly.

"We are studying additional ways to encourage institutions to comply with this policy," Morgan said, "and the Administrative Committee has directed us to contact all allied conferences in this regard. While a recommended policy does not constitute enforceable legislation, we will be able to serve all members more efficiently if the new policy is implemented."

Rules or not, scoring shows increase

By James M. Van Valkenburg
NCAA Director of Statistics

It now is obvious that a national scoring increase would have come this season in Division I basketball, regardless of the experimental rules. The 12 conferences—108 teams in all—using either the three-point goal or shot clock, or both, simply have made the scoring increase a little larger.

The scoring increase reverses a seven-year downward trend. The figures are through the regular season, but the increase will hold up despite the much lower scoring in the NCAA tournament, where defense has taken charge. More about that later.

The semifinal national trends compiled by NCAA Statistics Service show that national scoring has reached 138.61 points per game (both teams combined, all 7,485 regular-season games involving at least one of the 274 Division I teams), and this does include all three-point field goals. This is an increase of 3.53 points per game over the final 1982 average of 135.08—lowest in 30 years.

This breaks down to 141.18 for the 108 experimental teams and 136.93 for the 166 teams (60.6 percent of Division I) using the same old rules under which the college game has reached unprecedented heights of popularity.

Interestingly, if all three-point goals were counted as two points, the national scoring average would be 137.56, and this would break down to 138.65 for the experimental teams and 136.85 for those using the same old rules. Obviously, a scoring increase was coming regardless of any rules changes.

It is important to note that the national scoring average of 138.61 breaks down to 70.03 offensively for Division I teams and 68.58 defensively. The figure is not simply divided in two because it includes the scoring by non-Division I teams that played Division I teams, and the majors annually win close to 90 percent of nearly 600 games with nonmajors, often by wide margins.

The 12 experimental conferences combined averaged 71.89 offensively, an increase of 4.12 points per game over last season and 1.86 above the national offensive average of 70.03. The rest of the nation averaged 68.82 offensively, up 0.34 points per game.

National field-goal shooting accuracy declined a second consecutive season, but it is likely it would have increased without the three-pointers. As it is, the national average through the regular season is 47.66 percent, compared to the final 1982 figure of 47.91 percent, down slightly from the record 47.97 percent in 1981.

College coaches face tremendous pressure

By George White
Houston Chronicle

This must be the price we've got to pay for living in a society where man's No. 1 motivator is greed. If it's not six inches long, green and decorated with a picture of George Washington, it's not worth discussing.

The learned types remind us that sports merely mirror the society that spawns them. This, then, is where we find our pastimes today—in a mess.

At the bottom level, a preteen in Alief, Texas, is the subject of a fierce tug-of-war between two rival midget-league football teams, one finally suing to retain the "rights" to the youngster. At the high school level, a small, though growing, number of coaches engage in the distressing practice of "shaking down" college recruiters before allowing the recruiters to confer with the top athletes. At the top, the professionals are once again talking strike. This time, the National Basketball Association players are threatening to follow the lead of their brethren in football and baseball.

The colleges, virtually sacrosanct for so many years, suddenly find themselves squarely under the sewer sluice. The unabashed dollar dash has severely jolted the integrity of the amateurs. Corruption within the ranks is threatening to topple the entire structure. The difference here is that the colleges appear genuinely interested in ridding themselves of the slime within.

Regardless of rhetoric to the contrary, the only one who can ultimately police the college program is the head coach. Unfortunately, there is an axiom among the athletic fraternity: A coach will get fired for losing before he will get fired for cheating.

Recognizing the validity of that bromide, school administrators took a tentative first step to erasing that blot at the NCAA Convention in San Diego. There they passed a rule that was full of gobble-dy-gook but saturated with meaning:

"Contractual agreements between a coach and an institution shall include the stipulation that the coach may be suspended for a period of time, without pay, or that the coach's employment may be terminated if the coach is found to be involved in deliberate and serious violations of NCAA regulations."

Translated into Texan, that means that every coach's contract will contain a clause that the coach can be fired if he breaks the recruiting rules.

Admittedly, the rule contains too many "ifs," "maybes" and "shalls" to have a lot of bite. Still, the intent is clear. And, at last, the coaches are making an attempt to include the school's administration in the effort to mop up. It is hoped that the administrators will accept part of the blame along with the coaching staff, said University of Houston coach Bill Yeoman.

"I think it's an attempt to make university presidents more responsible. A coach doesn't always know what's going on. I found out the hard way (presumably in the Darrell Shepherd case), and right now I know of coaches who are not running their programs.

"It's hard to fire an old boy when he doesn't know what's going on."

Evidence continues to mount that a lot of the "old boys" are revolted by the extent of the coaching misdeeds. When Donnie Duncan resigned his head coaching job at Iowa State, he said the most disappointing aspect of his coaching position was the cheating he saw in recruiting.

The pressure is extreme, however, to produce winners. College football today is big business, and colleges have become extremely competitive in the dollar derby. Football revenues at some schools now are approaching $10 million. No matter how much money they make, though, they never seem to get enough.

Ticket prices have more than doubled in the last 10 years. And now comes a most distasteful practice, many colleges forcing season-ticket hopefuls to first contribute a large sum of money to the school's athletic fund before they are eligible to spend more money for their tickets. These programs are completely professional in every aspect but the open paying of the players.

You think the universities are too pristine to sully themselves in such a reprehensible manner? The College Football Association was formed by schools trying to maximize their football income by doling out the tiniest of portions to the smaller schools. The CFA would further benefit by setting up a television program outside the limitations of the NCAA. Two schools, Oklahoma and Georgia, have gone to such limits as suing for the right to cut their own television deals.

With such a shameless race for more revenue, it hardly is surprising that the coach finds himself under enormous pressure to do whatever it takes to win. If he is consistently successful, his annual income easily can outdistance the salaries of his pro counterpart. If he fails, though, he will be fired.

Forget the Pollyanna theory that the college experience should be an education, and the coach should prepare the youth for manhood as well as for the pros. No one wants to know how many of your former players now are involved in the Jaycees. Successful coaches don't build character, they build winners. That, at least, seems to be the yardstick by which college presidents judge these fellows.

A coach who thus is "successful" can always find another job, regardless of whether his methods in building a winner at his last stop were legitimate or not. This has rankled some of the honest segment, who tried to pass a rule at the 1982 NCAA Convention that would have prevented a coach from avoiding penalties simply by jumping to another college job. Under that proposal, a coach would not be able to get another job until his old school was out from under its probation.

"The thing that upsets people is when a coach builds a championship program, then he leaves and the school winds up on probation," explained Air Force coach Ken Hatfield.

"The school and everybody else gets a black eye, but the coach goes on to better himself. The coach should be penalized. He should not be rewarded with a better job."

The result, of course, is a soiled reputation that quickly is deteriorating to the level of the professionals. University of San Francisco President Rev. John LoSchiavo has had the most intimate of experiences with the subject. He shut down the USF basketball program after he discovered the school no longer could control the athletic shenanigans.

"There's no way of measuring the damage to the university's most priceless assets—its integrity and its reputation," he said.

Parents find recruiting procedure rewarding

To the Editor:

We have just had the pleasure of participating with our son, Doug Wills, in the recruiting process leading to his signing a National Letter of Intent to participate in the football program at Colorado State University. From the time the process began last year to its culmination on February 9, 1983, it has been a fun, learning and rewarding experience.

There seems to be so much negative publicity that we wanted to cast our vote with the "yes" side. The system is working. We're sure some people do bend the rules, but no one we had the pleasure of seriously working with in our contacts even alluded to anything except as outlined in the NCAA Guide for the College-Bound Student-Athlete for 1982-83.

Of course, we initially began with many institutions. Doug weeded them down to those in which he felt a true interest. We made some on-campus visits to see the facilities and attend some games, per your rules, and in the whichever place our son chose to attend, knowing that the influence of these fine people would help him grow and mature in his college years. Even after accepting one offer and declining the next four years of participation.

To the Editor:

The NCAA has set new academic standards for Divisions I-A and I-AA institutions. These new standards seem to have been implemented to help the student-athletes become aware of the importance in taking more academic courses in math, English, social science and the sciences.

These courses definitely would help one to achieve higher scores on the SAT or ACT and better enable one to handle the academic courses of study in college. Also, these new standards put a stronger value on achieving a college degree.

I hope these are the reasons for the new standards and not for the purpose of controlling recruiting in bigger schools. If these standards are good for student-athletes at the larger schools, why are they not good for the Divisions II and III schools?

It seems to me, if these new standards are of the value indicated, then they should be good for all student-athletes and not just for the "Big Institutions." I feel the NCAA is working in a positive direction for student-athletes but it needs to be consistent.

Most coaches are not cheaters

Fred "Tex" Winter, president
National Association of Basketball Coaches
The Basketball Bulletin

"I venture to say very few coaches are really cheaters at heart. I also say that most coaches are fair, considerate, compassionate and sensitive people with the interest of the athlete at heart. They will help their athletes in a time of need and, in so doing, actually violate the letter of the rules. Rules are administered by people 'not in the arena' who are not sensitive to the needs of the athlete and could care less. You make the choice as to who is right and who's wrong. If you are a basketball coach today, it is a question you must face."

Nick Peters, columnist
The Oakland Tribune

"College football coaches ranting and raving about the USFL's dastardly deed makes me want to cry. If this isn't unmitigated gall, it surely smacks of monumental hypocrisy. Imagine, coaches who find every conceivable means of beating the system by bending the rules are actually crying, 'Foul.' If this isn't a classic case of the pot calling the kettle black, I don't know what is."

Houston Chronicle

"At the college level, athletics and education go together. If we're not telling our kids that, we're sending the wrong message. We can't let athletics overshadow education."

"In many cases, I feel that's what we're doing. It's time we started acting as though education were more important than athletics, which is the way it is. I think Proposal No. 48 (passed at the recent NCAA Convention) is a step in that direction. I really don't feel it's asking too much of students to come to class and be attentive.

"When students come out of high school or college, the only way they can participate in society is if they've developed marketable skills. Proposal No. 48 can help educators concentrate on educating the kids and developing those skills."

Rules

But Division I teams using the same old rules shot 48.29 percent offensively for the regular season, and that includes the minuscule number of three-pointers they made while playing the experimental folks. That's a slight increase over the 48.13 offensive mark in 1982. Now let's look at the experimentals. Excluding all three-point attempts, they shot 48.64 percent offensively—a smidgen above their 48.63 in 1982. But the three-point attempts dropped the experimentals to 48.06 percent offensively.

Obviously, some of the three-pointers would have been attempted from that range anyway, even if they counted two points. How many is pure speculation. But it is reasonable to argue that field-goal accuracy would have set an all-time high without three-pointers, since the national offensive average was 48.44 percent vs. 48.32 in 1982.

You see, the national three-point accuracy figure was 38.25 percent, led by the Atlantic Coast (where it was only 17 feet, 9 inches to the center of the basket from the top of the key for three points) at 41.99 percent. All others but the Big Sky (22-0) used 19-9.

Of the 12 experimental conferences, nine, or 80 teams, used the three-point goal. As a group, they attempted 8.97 three-pointers per game and made 3.42 (both teams combined, all 2,177 games involving these 80 teams). In boxcar totals, they made 7,435 three-pointers with 38.08 percent accuracy, while the rest of the country made just 434 and shot 41.33 from three-point range.

Adding up all the three-pointers, we find they added just 7,869 points to the national total of more than one million points in the regular season (1,037,489, to be exact). It would seem the shot clock added more to the scoring increase, but as the chart will show, the clock, plus the three-pointer, was the most potent combination. By the way, free-throw accuracy added nothing to the scoring increase because it was 68.37 percent, down from 1982's final 68.61 percent.

With scoring up and accuracy down, players must be shooting more. They are, but it is nothing dramatic—113.98 field-goal attempts per game nationally through the regular season vs. the final 111.21 in 1982, an all-time low. The experimentals averaged 115.41, the rest of the country 113.09—again, nothing dramatic. Free-throw attempts were up slightly to 42.29 per game vs. 41.57 for last season.

Not surprisingly with its 17-9 three-point distance, the Atlantic Coast Conference had the biggest scoring increase by far. The ACC is up 13.39 points per game to 78.18 offensively, a jump of 20.7 percent from 1982 (in conference games only, the gain is much greater, but remember, all figures in this survey include all games). And the five conferences using both the clock and three-pointers are up 7.71 per game to 73.89 as a group. The four using just the three-pointers are up only 2.02 to 70.29, and the three using only the clock are up just 1.57 to 70.88 (all three-pointers included in each case). And, as mentioned, the 12 experimental conferences are up 4.12 to 71.89 offensively.

Here are the scoring-offense figures for all 30 Division I conferences through the regular season, with the change compared to the final 1982 figures (three-point goals are included):

As the chart shows, the Atlantic Coast leads the country in scoring, with the Missouri Valley second, Atlantic-10 third, Big East fourth, Southwestern fifth, Ohio Valley sixth, Mid-Eastern seventh, Pacific Coast eighth, Metro ninth and ECAC Metro 10th.

Southeastern leads in accuracy

In field-goal percentage offense, the Southeastern leads the country at 50.66 percent, with the ECAC South second at 50.10 percent, Big Eight third at 49.90, West Coast fourth at 49.54 and Metro-Atlantic fifth at 49.52. The Trans America is sixth at 49.10, Metro seventh at 49.04, perennial leader Atlantic Coast eighth at 48.84 (49.92 if three-point attempts were excluded), the Big East ninth at 48.83 percent, and the Pacific-10 completes the top 10 at 48.81.

Defensively, the three-point conferences are helped in field-goal percentage defense (vs. being hurt in offensive accuracy). The Western Athletic leads, allowing 45.72 percent, but three-point experimentals hold the next four places: Big Ten 45.75 percent, Big Sky 45.94, Pacific Coast 46.11 and Atlantic Coast 46.13.

In scoring defense, the top five are the ECAC South, allowing 63.47, the Western Athletic 63.51, East Coast 64.25, Southwest 65.25 and Big Ten 65.71.

Lowest since 1949

Defense has taken charge in the NCAA tournament. Entering the four regional semifinals, scoring had fallen to 120.17 points per game (both teams combined)—the lowest since the eight-team 1949 tournament produced an average of 112.20. Last year, scoring fell to 131.09, lowest since 1952. In 1981, the tournament average was 132.75. Until the 1980s, tournament scoring normally was higher than the national season average.

Why? One major reason is that more and more top teams are emphasizing strong defense and conservative offense, and the top teams are playing each other in the tournament. Most major upsets now are the result of inspired defense and conservative offense. Although the top-16-seeded teams won 13 times in the second round, and the higher-seeded team won 10 of 16 in the first round, many barely survived against inspired defense.

Ten games were decided by three points or less, including five two-pointers and three one-pointers (none by four points). The 1982 tournament produced a record 21 games decided by four points or less in overtime, breaking the 19 in 1981. In 1981, though, an incredible 11 games had the winning points coming with five seconds to go or less.

(It's true, there is no three-point or shot clock in the NCAA tournament, but remember, the experimentals outscored the conventionals only 71.89 to 68.82 offensively. It's not really much of a factor in the lower scoring.)

45 years of growth

The most-asked tournament question these days concerns expansion—when and how much. The first 12 NCAA tournaments (starting in 1939) had eight-team formats (district play-offs often were held, the winner entering the eight-team field, but these district games were not part of the tournament). The field was expanded to 16 teams for two seasons—1951 and 1952. From 1953 through 1974, the field ranged between 22 and 25 teams; the maximum was 25 but the committee sometimes decided there were fewer worthy teams. The figures were 22 in 1953 and 1966; 23 in 1957, 1965, 1967 and 1968; 24 in 1954, 1955, 1958, 1959 and 1961; and 25 teams 11 times—in 1956, 1960, 1962, 1963, 1964, 1969, 1970, 1971, 1972, 1973 and 1974.

The field was expanded to 32 teams the next four seasons—1975, 1976, 1977 and 1978; went to 40 teams for 1979 only, then to 48 in 1980, 1981 and 1982 and to 52 this year.

The next most-asked question involves tournament receipts and attendance. Here, the 45-year growth pattern has been amazing. Attendance for the first tournament in 1939 was only 15,025, and after expenses it showed a loss of $2,531. The National Association of Basketball Coaches treasury could not cover the loss, thus the NABC asked the NCAA to underwrite the deficit and assume full responsibility, financial and otherwise, for all future tournaments. In 1940, the tournament showed a profit of $9,523.

Here's a decade-by-decade comparison of gross receipts and attendance: In 1941, gross receipts were $31,120 and attendance 48,055; in 1951, $222,497 and 110,645; in 1961, $514,692 and 169,520; in 1971, $1,937,009 and 207,200; and in 1981, $14,419,486 and 347,414. Last year gross receipts reached $20,106,130 and attendance 427,151, both records. This year's estimates are $21.8 million and 350,000. The first year of television revenue was 1963—$140,000. This year's TV estimate: $16.5 million. And the list of highest-rated basketball TV games in history is dominated by the NCAA finals.

The Sweet 16

Since UCLA's last championship in 1975, 23 different teams have won the 28 Final Four positions. North Carolina made the Final Four three times since then; Indiana, UCLA and Louisville twice each, and 19 other teams once each. Entering the regional round of 16, the "Sweet 16," if you don't mind, 66 different colleges have been represented in the Sweet 16 during the eight years since 1975. There are seven repeaters from 1982 in the 1983 field—Louisville, North Carolina, Houston, Memphis State, Virginia, Boston College and Villanova. Arkansas, Indiana and Utah last made it in 1981; Iowa, Kentucky and Ohio State last in 1979, North Carolina State not since 1974, and this is Georgia's very first NCAA tournament.

Indiana and Louisville now have five Sweet 16 trips each since 1975 (tying UCLA and Notre Dame); North Carolina, Arkansas, Kentucky and Utah four each. If you go back to 1970 and compare Sweet 16 appearances by the current field, Kentucky leads with nine, while Louisville has eight, Indiana seven and North Carolina and Villanova six each.

Women's Sweet 16

In the second annual NCAA Division I Women's Basketball Championship, there are 10 repeaters from the 1982 Sweet 16—defending champion Louisiana Tech, Tennessee, Kansas State, Southern California, Arizona State, Long Beach State, Penn State, Cheyney State, Maryland and Old Dominion. The six teams in the Sweet 16 for the first time are Mississippi, Auburn, Texas, Oregon State, Georgia and Indiana.

Indiana and Georgia are the only colleges with teams in both the men's Sweet 16 and the women's Sweet 16. Before the unranked Hoosier women beat Ohio State, says coach Maryalce Jeremiah, "Coach (Bobby) Knight came into the dressing room and spoke to the team. He told them, 'You don't have to play super to win. Just play to your potential.'"

After the Ohio State victory, the Hoosier women went on to upset No. 11 Kentucky, 87-76, to reach the round of 16.

After the Georgia women won the Southeastern Conference tournament, and the Georgia men won the men's SEC tournament to reach the NCAA tournament for the first time in history, the teams held a joint press conference.

The Georgia women's coach, Andy Landers, took over a program that had won only 37 games in six years. Since then he has compiled an 89-37 record, including this season's 25-6 entering the round of 16. His 1982 team lost its opening game in the NCAA tourney.

Men's tournament leaders

Thirteen of the Sweet 16 have played just once, and in this group the top scorers are Memphis State's Keith Lee with 28 points, Arkansas' Alvin Robertson 26, St. John's Chris Mullin 24, Arkansas' Darrel Walker 23, Indiana's Randy Wittman 22 and North Carolina's Sam Perkins, Louisville's Lancaster Gordon and teammate Charles Jones, 18 each.

Lee also leads the one-gamers in rebounds at 15, with Virginia's Ralph Sampson at 12, Jones 11 and two with 10 each—Boston College's Jay Murphy and Villanova's Ed Pinckney. In blocked shots, it's Sampson and Pinckney on top with four each, then three with three each—Perkins, teammate Michael Jordan and Houston giant Akeem Abdul Olajuwon.

The top man in field-goal accuracy in this group is Jones with 87.5 percent (using a minimum of six field goals made; he is 7-for-8). Then come Arkansas' Joe Kleine 85.7 percent, Mullin 76.9 (on 10-for-13) and three at 75.0—Jordan, Sampson and Villanova's Dwayne McClain. Robertson leads in steals at eight and Virginia's Othell Wilson has five.

Among the three surviving teams that played twice, the top scorers are North Carolina State's Thurl Bailey, averaging 21.0, Iowa's Greg Stokes and his teammate Bob Hansen, both 19.5. Bailey's teammate Lorenzo Charles leads in rebounds at 12.5, Stokes in blocked shots at 2.0, Iowa's Steve Carfino in steals at 3.5, and Utah's Angelo Robinson in field-goal accuracy at 70.6 percent (12-for-17), with Stokes next at 60.9.

North Carolina's 65.8 field-goal mark against James Madison is the tournament high and makes the select list of history's 65-percent games. Villanova's 64.9 against Lamar is next.

Women's tournament leaders

All of the women's Sweet 16 played one tournament game, and there are some impressive figures. Penn State's Kahadeejah Herbert leads the scorers at 31, then come Arizona State's Olivia Jones and Cheyney State's Rosetta Guilford 28 each, Kansas State's Angie Bonner and Southern California's Cheryl Miller 27 each, Old Dominion's Anne Donovan 26, teammate Helen Malone 25, Cheyney State's Yolanda Laney 24, and four with 23 each—Oregon State's Jan Martin, teammate Robyn Clark, Auburn's Brenda Hill and Indiana's Denise Jackson.

Cheyney State's Debra Walker leads the rebounders at 19, followed by Tennessee's Paula Towns 17, Miller 13, Jackson 12, Mississippi's Eugenia Conner 12, and Texas' Cheryl Hartman 12. In field-goal accuracy, Clark leads at 83.3 percent (10-12, using a minimum of six made), then come Southern California's Pam McGee 81.8, Bonner 80.0, Indiana's Linda Cunningham 77.8 and Jones 75.0. Bonner and Jones are also perfect at the line, 11-for-11 and 10-for-10, respectively. Donovan leads in blocked shots at five with Louisiana Tech's Janice Lawrence next at four. In steals, Jones, Laney and Tennessee's Pat Hatmaker have five each. Penn State shot 67.2 percent from the field in its game for the tournament high and Indiana's 64.6 is next.

Quote of the week

Two months ago, Utah was 7-10 and going nowhere fast. Now the Utes are in the Sweet 16 and 18-13 after upsetting UCLA. "We were picked sixth in our conference," said coach Jerry Pimm. "We'll go just as far and be just as loose as we can." Senior Pace Mannion put it this way: "I had dreamed about playing UCLA my whole life. I wasn't nervous at all. I figured we had nothing to lose." Pimm again: "We were ugly coming in. Now we're getting prettier. Cinderella's slipper might fit here in a little bit."

Scranton wins Division III basketball title

Scranton used clutch free-throw shooting to hold off Wittenberg, 64-63, and win the 1983 NCAA Division III Men's Basketball Championship March 19 in Grand Rapids, Michigan.

The Royals, who entered the tournament as the division's No. 1 team, scored seven of their last nine points from the line. That came after Scranton had overcome a five-point half-time deficit by outscoring the Tigers 20-10 to begin the second half.

Leading Scranton was forward Bill Bessoir, the son of coach Bob Bessoir. The younger Bessoir pumped in 27 points in the final and was named the tournament's most outstanding player.

Joining Bessoir on the all-tournament squad were teammate Mickey Banas; Jay Ferguson, Wittenberg; Mark Linde, Wisconsin-Whitewater, and Gerald Holmes, Roanoke.

The victory marked the second Division III title for the Royals, who won the second annual championship in 1976. Scranton now joins North Park, which captured three straight titles between 1978 and 1980, as the only school to own more than one Division III crown. Wittenberg, which won the 1977 title, and Scranton have appeared in more tournaments (eight) than any other Division III school.

Division III women's basketball

North Central beats Blue Jays

Elizabethtown's hopes of a second straight title were shot down by an impressive North Central squad, which took a 83-71 decision in the final of the 1983 NCAA Division III Women's Basketball Championship March 19 in Worcester, Massachusetts.

The Blue Jays won last year's inaugural NCAA Division III women's basketball title but could not match North Central's potent attack, led by forward Brenda Sanders and center Bonnie Hansen. Sanders and Hansen combined for 49 points in the final, while guard Kim Wallner directed the attack with nine assists and 15 points.

Elizabethtown countered with 21 points from Page Lutz, who was named the tournament's outstanding player, and 16 from Sherri Kinsey. Lutz hit for 25 points in the Blue Jays' semifinal victory over host Clark (Massachusetts).

Joining Lutz on the all-tournament squad were Wallner and Sanders; Judy Hodge, Clark, and Jackie Moore, Knoxville.

The triumph made North Central the first institution to capture two NCAA titles during the 1982-83 academic year. The Cardinals took the Division III Men's Cross Country Championships title last fall.

Stanford women swimmers defeat Florida

Surprise performances by Tammy Thomas of Kansas highlighted the Division I Women's Swimming and Diving Championships as Stanford used a strong all-around effort to win the team title in the meet, held March 17-19 at the University of Nebraska, Lincoln.

Thomas made her presence known early in the competition, upsetting Jill Sterkel of Texas in the 50-yard freestyle and erasing Sterkel's collegiate, American and U.S. open records in the process with a clocking of 22.17.

The Jayhawk freshman then duplicated that feat in the 100-yard freestyle, posting a time of 48.40. Sterkel finished second at 49.88 and again saw her collegiate, American and U.S. open records in an event (48.61) fall by the wayside.

The Cardinal victory was due in part to another strong performance by Marybeth Linzmeier, whose time of 4:39.95 in the 500-yard freestyle improved the collegiate record she already held.

Florida's Tracy Caulkins, holder of more national swimming titles than anyone in American history, swept the individual medley events and lowered her collegiate record at 200 yards with a time of 2:00.34.

Penn State wins crown at home

Penn State, the host institution, defeated Stanford, Temple and Wayne State (Michigan) to win the 1983 NCAA Women's Fencing Championships March 17-19 at University Park, Pennsylvania.

Led by Jana Angelakis, who won the individual championship; April Miller, and Hanne Skattebol, the Nittany Lions turned back defending champion Wayne State, 9-6, in the championship bout.

Angelakis had to defeat Northridge State's Ruth Botengan twice to earn the individual championship. Angelakis defeated Botengan, last year's runner-up, 4-8, in the first confrontation.

Botengan came back through the loser's bracket to defeat Angelakis, 7-8, to force yet another match. Angelakis won the deciding bout, 7-8.

Division III men's swimming

Kenyon takes fourth crown

Kenyon scored a meet-record 336 1/2 points en route to its fourth consecutive NCAA Division III Men's Swimming and Diving Championships March 17-20 at the C. T. Branin Natatorium in Canton, Ohio.

Kenyon's Chris Shedd was a big factor in the Lords' championships performance. The senior won two individual events, swam on two winning relays and finished second in the 50-yard freestyle.

Claremont-Mudd-Scripps coach Mike Sutton was voted Division III coach of the year. His swimmers edged Williams for second place, 194-183.

Records were established in every racing event except the 1,650-yard freestyle. Claremont-Mudd-Scripps swimmers Douglas Jones and Tom Harrison each set records in three events. Jones established new marks in the 500-yard freestyle, 100-yard backstroke and 200-yard backstroke. Harrison's record-setting performances came in the 200-yard individual medley, 400-yard individual medley and 200-yard butterfly.

Alfred's Howard Seideman set records in the 100- and 200-yard breaststroke events. Joseph Gentile of William Paterson broke the 100-yard freestyle record he established last year with a time of 45.36. Dan Young of Grove City won the one-meter diving competition, and Will Oberholtzer of Kalamazoo won the three-meter competition.

Division II men's ice hockey

Rochester Tech surprises Lowell

Winning a national championship just three years after beginning play in one of the NCAA's competitive divisions is a feat that long will be remembered in Rochester, New York.

The Rochester Tech Tigers accomplished the feat in the 1983 NCAA Division II Men's Ice Hockey Championship, defeating Bemidji State, 4-2, in the final game. It was RIT's third season in Division II play.

To reach the championship game, though, the Tigers pulled off an even more surprising feat by upsetting two-time defending national champion Lowell, 4-1, in a semifinal match.

Lowell had the home-ice advantage and a 28-1 record entering the game, but RIT's nearly errorless game, led by the goaltending of Dave Burkholder, was too much for the Chiefs.

Burkholder dominated play in both the semifinal game and the championship decision over Bemidji State, earning honors as the tournament's most outstanding player.

He had help from forward Chuck Samar, who got RIT started against Lowell after the Chiefs' Chuck Sage had given the defending champions a 1-0 lead. Samar came back in the third period to break a 1-1 tie with a short-handed goal. A power-play goal by Bobby Trowell, after Lowell had pressured Burkholder, seemed to clinch the victory midway through the final period. Chris Johnstone's goal into an empty net in the final minute completed the scoring.

Bemidji State, the top-ranked team in the West, reached the final game with a 3-1 victory over Babson. The Beavers' Wendall Jellison scored seven minutes into the second period to tie the game, and Bemidji State scored the winning goal during the first minute of the third period when all-America center Joel Otto set up Kurt Dade.

Controversy reigned in the closing minutes when Dade scored on a breakaway that seemingly put the game out of reach. An appeal by Babson, though, resulted in the goal being disallowed because Dade's stick was found to be illegally curved. With 42 seconds left, however, Jellison found the empty Babson net for the clinching score.

After Lowell came from behind to win the third-place game over Babson, 5-3, RIT and Bemidji State traded goals in the opening period of the championship contest.

In the second period, though, Samar scored another big goal, giving RIT a lead that the Tigers never relinquished. They came out strong in the third period as they had against Lowell, and Mike Holzman's goal at 5:10 made the score 3-1. Rich Brouwer's goal at 10:17—Samar picked up an assist—widened the gap further, but Otto came back to score just a minute later to make the score 4-2.

The final nine minutes tested RIT's strong defense, but the Tigers held on. The championship gave RIT a 23-8 record for the season, while Bemidji State, playing in its first NCAA championship, finished 30-6-1.

Northridge State wins third straight swimming title

Coaches Peter Accardy of Northridge State and Peter Hovland of Oakland waited anxiously for the 400-yard freestyle relay at the Division II Men's Swimming and Diving Championships March 19 at the Belmont Plaza Pool in Long Beach, California.

With 17 races completed and one event remaining, only one point separated Oakland (321 1/2) and Northridge State (320 1/2).

The whole meet had been a nip-and-tuck battle between these two Division II teams. Northridge State edged Oakland in the 400-yard relay and won its third straight team title.

Oakland swimmers won seven events, while Northridge State dominated both diving events and two of the three relays.

Ice hockey players chosen for collegiate all-star game

Thirty-four of the nation's top collegiate men's ice hockey players have been selected to compete in the fourth annual East-West College All-Star hockey game. The game, sponsored by the American Hockey Coaches Association, will be played March 28 at the Met Center in Bloomington, Minnesota.

Jerry York, head coach at Bowling Green State, will coach the West team along with Steve Serich of St. Scholastica. The East team will be coached by Fern Flaman of Northeastern and Steve Stirling of Babson.

West team members are goalies Marc Behrend, Wisconsin, and Jerry Bren, Gustavus Adolphus; defensemen Ken Leiter, Michigan State; Pat Ethier, Wisconsin; Dave Jensen, Minnesota; Mike O'Connor, Michigan Tech; Tim Rood, Bemidji State; Mike Piette, Wisconsin-River Falls; forwards Brian Hills, Bowling Green State; Scott Bjugstad, Minnesota; Kirt Bjork, Notre Dame; Brad Tippett, Michigan; Bryan Erickson, Minnesota; Mark Hamway, Michigan State; Steve Nelson, St. Olaf; Tom Kern, Mankato State; Kurt Dade, Bemidji State.

Selected as alternates to the West team were Kevin Beaton, Miami (Ohio); John Evickson, Bethel; Tim Roberts, Gustavus Adolphus; Ted Speers, Michigan; Steve Griffith, Minnesota; Mike Lauen, Michigan Tech; Rick Hjelm, Gustavus Adolphus, and Craig Ranheim, St. Olaf.

North Carolina State penalized

North Carolina State University has been placed on probation for a one-year period, effective March 3, 1983, by the NCAA's Committee on Infractions as a result of violations occurring in the recruitment of a prospective student-athlete in the sport of football during the 1981-82 academic year.

The university has disassociated two representatives of its athletic interests from any further recruiting activities on behalf of the institution as a result of their involvement in the violations.

The case involved five recruiting violations in the recruitment of one prospective student-athlete who enrolled at the university. The violations will affect the young man's eligibility to represent the university in a postseason football bowl game. The university may appeal to the NCAA Eligibility Committee for restoration of eligibility if the university believes such an appeal to be appropriate.

"Although the violations were limited to the recruitment of only one prospect," said William L. Matthews, Jr., acting chair, NCAA Committee on Infractions, "the committee believed a one-year institutional penalty was appropriate in light of the possible recruiting advantage gained as a result of the violations, as well as to emphasize the university's responsibility to avoid similar violations in the future."

The penalty in the case does not include sanctions that would affect the university's eligibility for football bowl games or television appearances.

Hockey all-America teams selected

Harvard defenseman Mark Fusco and high-scoring Brian Hills of Bowling Green State are among the selections to the 1983 Titan all-America team of the American Hockey Coaches Association.

Four teams were selected by the coaches, one each for East and West in Division I and in Divisions II-III.

Fusco is one of the members of the Division I East team, along with goalkeeper Darren Eliot of Cornell. Others are forwards Colin Patterson of Clarkson, Kurt Kleinendorst of Providence and Bob Brook of Yale. Randy Valischek of Providence was the other defenseman selected, while Gray Weicker of St. Lawrence was chosen as an additional goalkeeper.

In addition to Hills, the Division I West team includes defensemen Doug Lidster of Colorado College and James Patrick of North Dakota; forwards Pat Flatley of Wisconsin and Kurt Bjork of Notre Dame, and goalie Ron Scott of Michigan State.

Divisions II-III selections in the East are forwards Mike Carr of Lowell, David Lair of Oswego State and Steve Murphy of St. Anselm; defensemen Hap Grabeldiner of Elmira and Jean Roy of Bowdoin, and goalie Chris Trincerri of Norwich.

Western selections in Divisions II-III include forwards Joel Otto of Bemidji State, Tom Kern of Mankato State and Steve Nelson of St. Olaf; defensemen Drey Bradley of Bemidji State and Michael Piette of Wisconsin-River Falls, and goalies Mark Liska of Bemidji State and Doug Desorcie of Alaska-Fairbanks.

1983-84 Manual mailed to membership

The 1983-84 NCAA Manual, which reflects all of the legislative actions taken by the 1983 NCAA Convention, was mailed during the past week to all members of the Association.

Legislation that was adopted or amended at the 1983 Convention in San Diego was incorporated in the new Manual by the NCAA Constitution and Bylaws Committee, chaired by Alan J. Chapman, Rice University, former NCAA president who serves as the Association's parliamentarian. Other members of the committee are Clayton W. Chapman, Eastern College Athletic Conference; Hubert Heitman Jr., University of California, Davis, and Nettie Morrison, Pomona-Pitzer Colleges.

Copies of the Manual are sent automatically to the chief executive officer, faculty athletic representative, director of athletics and primary woman administrator of athletics programs at each active member institution. Allied, affiliated and associate members also receive copies automatically.

The 1983-84 Manual includes 345 pages, of which 142 are devoted to the constitution and bylaws. The constitution and bylaws case book takes 117 pages, and the remainder of the book presents the Association's executive regulations, special rules of order, recommended policies, enforcement procedure, consortium criteria, instructions to the NCAA committees and the administrative organization listing, as well as a table of contents and an index.

Many member institutions purchase additional copies of the Manual to distribute to their coaches, athletics committee members and others. The book is priced at $3 per copy for members and $6 for nonmembers and may be ordered from NCAA Publishing, P.O. Box 1906, Mission, Kansas 66201.

Women's basketball celebrates anniversary

By Tricia Brown
Springfield College

James Naismith had no idea it would ever be played by women.

But, it did not take the women long to catch on. They started playing basketball on a college campus one year after the first public men's basketball game was played in Springfield, Massachusetts.

Women's basketball has come a long way since the first official game was played at Smith College March 22, 1893. The classes of 1895 (sophomores) and 1896 (freshmen) played each other in a game closed to men because the young ladies were clad in bloomers and long-sleeved, button-up blouses. The game—which was a low-scoring affair, 5-4, with the sophomores winning—thereafter became an annual event on the Northampton, Massachusetts, campus.

Most responsible for bringing basketball to Smith was Senda Berenson. A Lithuanian born in 1868, she was the Smith physical education director from 1892 to 1911. Berenson emphasized that she felt "we should encourage the instinct to play, not necessarily competition."

Playing for the joy of playing was enough.

"Mild competition is good, and, indeed, necessary; but this can be brought about in interclass play," she said. Thus, Smith did not compete in intercollegiate basketball until 1971.

In his book, "Basketball," published in 1941, Naismith noted that Berenson attended a physical education convention at Yale in 1893, where she first approached the game's inventor. She inquired as to whether women could play the game. Naismith informed her that Maude Sherman of Springfield, later to become Mrs. James Naismith, had organized a group of clerical works and faculty wives who were playing basketball on an informal basis in Springfield at the old Buckingham Grade School.

Berenson organized the interclass game at Smith immediately upon her return from Yale. Soon after, Bryn Mawr took up basketball; and in April 1893, it was introduced in Greenville, Texas, by H. L. Carver. One of the first intercollegiate games was played April 4, 1895, between California and Stanford.

Physical and moral self-control were emphasized.

"Physical education should not only produce health and endurance and poise and self-control, but it can be made the most direct way of bringing out ethical, mental and moral forces—making the human body a splendid instrument with which to meet all life's activities more easily, more vitally and more joyously," according to Berenson.

"Enthusiasm without hysteria" was what she wanted.

In 1899, a women's basketball committee of four was formed by representatives of Oberlin, Radcliffe, Smith and the Boston Normal School of Gymnastics. Berenson, the Smith representative, became editor of what the committee agreed upon as the official rules. Even though the committee got the A. G. Spalding Company to publish the official rules as late as 1914, one authority believed one-half to two-thirds of organized teams were playing at least five different versions of women's basketball.

The direction women's basketball would take in the colleges for the next generation had been set by the 1920s. The game was to differ from the men's in terms of rules and was not to be played intercollegiate.

By 1930, it was reported 80 percent of all colleges had "play days." This consisted of girls from a number of schools gathering for a day of sports activities ranging from basketball to tennis. Individual schools would not compete against each other. Teams composed of players from a number of schools would play. Thus, play days were the means by which girls from different institutions could socialize athletically.

As the years rolled on, a change in thinking occurred concerning the amount and type of physical activity in which women could participate. This reflected the influence that men's intercollegiate athletics had on women's athletics.

The first National Women's AAU Basketball Championship was held in 1926 at Pasadena, California, and became an annual event in 1929.

A survey in 1951 and another in 1954 revealed the play-day concept was still the most popular form of athletic competition for women in college. Attitudes, however, were changing toward intercollegiate athletics. By 1955, half of the women physical educators favored intercollegiate team sports, while 70 percent favored individual sports on an intercollegiate basis. In the Eastern United States, about one-third of the schools sponsored intercollegiate basketball. It was a startling change from the period dominated by play days.

The 1960s saw not only a change from play days toward greater intercollegiate competition, but also rule changes, which made the women's game resemble the men's game. By then, the Division for Girls' and Women's Sports was working closely with the influential AAU Basketball Committee on the standardization and modification of rules.

Among the notable events in recent history of women's basketball are the following:

1969—West Chester State hosted the first national invitational college tournament for women; first time college women squads competed in a national tournament without AAU teams; provided impetus to form the Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women.

1971—Women's rules changed size of team from six to five players.

1972—Beginning of national collegiate championship for women in the AIAW; Immaculata defeated West Chester State, 52-48, for the title at Illinois State.

1975—First women's collegiate game in Madison Square Garden; 11,000-plus saw Immaculata play Queens.

1976—Women's basketball became an Olympic event, with the United States winning a silver medal, bowing to the Soviet Union, 112-77, in the championship game at Montreal.

1978—Carol Blazejowski of Montclair State became the first recipient of the coveted Margaret Wade Trophy as the nation's most outstanding female collegiate basketball player. It is named for coach Margaret Wade of Delta State, a pioneer in the establishment and advancement of women's collegiate basketball.

1978—At Milwaukee Arena, a crowd of more than 7,000 turned out for the official opening of the Women's Professional Basketball League. The final score: Chicago Hustle 92, Milwaukee Does 87.

1980—Old Dominion defeated Tennessee, 68-53, at Mount Pleasant, Michigan, to win its second straight AIAW championship. The game was nationally televised.

1982—Louisiana Tech won the first NCAA Division I Women's Basketball Championship in Norfolk, Virginia, by defeating Cheyney State, 76-62.

Collegiate women's basketball had been for the first seven decades of the 20th century a dominating physical activity and sport. It had seen many transformations. Rules had been changed and later returned to their almost-original form. The early examples of intercollegiate competition, which had nearly been given a death knell, returned to thrive again.

With the introduction of the first National Invitational Collegiate Women's Basketball Tournament in 1969, the development of the AIAW and, now, the major role of the NCAA, it is probable that basketball, will continue to play an important role in the sporting activities of women throughout the world.

Rodgers wins court appeal

The Georgia Court of Appeals last week ruled that former Georgia Institute of Technology football coach Pepper Rodgers was entitled to compensation for perquisites he lost when he was fired in 1979, two years before his contract expired.

The decision overturns a ruling by Superior Court Judge Thomas Moran, who had held that Rodgers was not eligible for such compensation.

Rodgers maintained in a $331,000 damage suit filed against the Georgia Tech Athletic Association in 1980 that he was entitled to compensation for perquisites such as profits from radio and television shows, summer football camps, the use of a new Cadillac, and tickets to professional sporting events. During arguments in Superior Court, lawyers for the athletic association maintained that Rodgers was entitled only to perquisites common to other association employees.

The appeals court, however, said, "The record discloses that Rodgers, during his tenure as head coach of football, did receive perquisites in addition to those received by other association employees. Accordingly, we conclude that the parties intended that Rodgers would receive perquisites."

Rodgers' attorney, John Dunlap, said the decision means that a coach's compensation goes beyond his base salary and includes all the "legitimate fringe benefits that go with the job."

The suit did not make an issue of the salary that was due Rodgers for the remaining years of his contract. When he was fired, Georgia Tech paid Rodgers the $42,500 annual salary for the remaining two years.

Aggies join Pacific Coast league

New Mexico State University is dropping its membership in the Missouri Valley Conference and will join the Pacific Coast Athletic Association, effective December 31.

The announcement was made by Gerald W. Thomas, president, and Keith Colson, athletic director, in Las Cruces, New Mexico.

New Mexico State has been a member of the Missouri Valley since 1970. The institution will compete in PCAA football and basketball in 1984.

The Pacific Coast league includes seven California schools, Utah State University and the University of Nevada, Las Vegas.

New Mexico State officials said Aggie teams would save $25,000 a year in travel costs in the new affiliation, while taking in $50,000 to $75,000 more each year in television revenues.

NAIA vetoes two-level proposal

Delegates to the annual meeting of the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics last week soundly defeated a proposal that would have created two levels of competition in the 46-year-old NAIA basketball tournament.

The vote was 145-20 against the two-division proposal in men's basketball and 136-30 in women's basketball. Defeated by voice votes were proposals for split divisions in baseball and women's volleyball.

The defeat of the split-division proposal means the NAIA will retain its traditional 32-team, one-division concept in men's basketball. The tournament has been held in Kansas City, Missouri, since 1937.

Big Ten adds seventh official

Seven-man officiating crews and a 25-second field clock will be used for Big Ten Conference football games next fall, according to Wayne Duke, conference commissioner.

The NCAA Football Rules Committee has given conferences the option of using seven-man officiating crews.

Hugh D. Hindman, director of athletics at Ohio State University, said, "The mechanics of seven-man crews provide maximum coverage of the field. There will not be any open gaps created by formations or actions as we have experienced in six-man mechanics. Both sidelines will be covered at all times, short and deep, so that all sideline pass plays will be adequately covered."

The new official will be called a side judge and will be on the same side of the field as the line judge.

The additional official also will improve coverage of the kicking game, an area where there has been a high incidence of injury, Hindman said.

(the ball had to stay in the peach basket) and a point when the opposition committed three consecutive fouls.

Also, any player committing her second personal foul had to sit out until the opponents scored a point. And anytime a ball went out of bounds, it randomly was tossed back in by the official.

The organizer of that first game, Smith physical education instructor Senda Berenson, soon discovered that those early rules—which were the same as the men's rules—were too physical for women. In fact, a Miss Mann of the Smith class of 1896 reportedly dislocated her shoulder in the first half of the original game.

Berenson later was instrumental in developing rules for women's basketball. (For a look at the development of women's college basketball, see story on page 9.)

In addition to the two reenactments, the city of Northampton sponsored a luncheon, which featured NCAA President John L. Toner and Sports Illustrated writer Lisa Twyman as speakers. The luncheon also featured a fashion show of women's basketball uniforms from the 1890s through the 1960s.

Northampton Mayor David Musante proclaimed March 22 "Women's Collegiate Basketball Day" in the city.

"Northampton has many things to be proud of," Musante said, "and we want to educate everyone to the fact that women's basketball started here because, with the way women's basketball has grown in 90 years, having it begin here is something that we can all take great pride in."

Testimony

NCAA could not support the legislation as it currently is drafted but indicated there were ways in which the bill could be amended that would result in benefits to college sports and the student-athlete.

Schembechler, representing the American Football Coaches Association, told the committee that coaches "have a great problem of keeping unscrupulous agents from contacting our players before their eligibility is complete."

"If we allow the signing of undergraduates, we are opening the door to unscrupulous agents. For every Herschel Walker, there will be twice as many—no, five times as many—who will go and will be unsuccessful. You can ask any of the pros; an undergraduate player is not physically, mentally or emotionally ready to go into pro football."

Sampson, Jordan are consensus all-America basketball selections

Virginia's Ralph Sampson and North Carolina's Michael Jordan were the only consensus first-team selections on the major wire services' men's basketball all-America teams announced recently.

For Sampson, a 7-4 senior, it was the third straight year he was selected to the first five by both the Associated

Schaefer fills select committee chair for Gardner

John P. Schaefer, executive director of the Select Committee on Athletic Problems and Concerns in Higher Education and former president of the University of Arizona, has been asked by the NCAA Administrative Committee to chair the remaining meetings of the select committee.

He will replace David P. Gardner, who resigned as chair after being named president of the University of California system. Gardner will continue as a committee member.

Schaefer served as president of the University of Arizona for 11 years before being named president of Research Corporation. He was retained by the NCAA to staff the select committee and is assisted in that function by Arthur Gissendaner, who is on leave from his position as an education writer for the Arizona Republic.

The select committee will meet April 5-6 in Atlanta, Georgia, and plans to conclude its assignment during the summer months.

Festival hockey coaches named

Coaches of four of the nation's top collegiate men's ice hockey teams will head four regional squads that will compete in the 1983 National Sports Festival this summer in Colorado Springs.

Jeff Sauer of the University of Wisconsin, Madison, winner of the Western Collegiate Hockey Association tournament, will coach the South teams. Brad Bluetow of the University of Minnesota, Twin Cities, will coach the West; Lou Maloriello of Providence College the East, and Jerry York of Bowling Green State University, regular-season champion of the Central Collegiate Hockey Association, will coach the North team.

The Amateur Hockey Association of the United States (AHAUS) will select 80 players for the sports festival competition; of those, 26 will be chosen for the U.S. Olympic team that will compete in February 1984 in Sarajevo, Yugoslavia.

The College Football Association, by letter to the committee, endorsed the bill and said that the CFA "may be in favor of even stronger measures than what is included in S. 610." Paterno, testifying as a representative of the College Football Association, said, "Our concern is with the 19- or 20-year-old who is thrown into the open market. He is made to feel he is better than he is, and he gives up his college education."

Paterno, noting that colleges should get some protection from the professionals signing top college players, also said:

"It's a two-way street. Herschel Walker is worth a couple of million dollars because college football enabled him to develop his skills."

Toner testified further that "... The NCAA remains principally concerned by the fact that there are student-athletes at many colleges who do not receive their degrees following completion of their athletic eligibility, and the NCAA member institutions are committed to improve this state of affairs."

Specter, speaking for his legislation, said, "Congress should give careful consideration to this bill to preserve the current arrangements regarding recruitment of college football players that have worked reasonably well over the many years. The absence of any successful legal challenge to the existing rule is significant evidence of its value."

Schembechler said the AFCA would meet in June to discuss the signing of Walker by the USFL New Jersey Generals while he still had eligibility remaining. Schembechler said the AFCA would not vote on any proposal to improve strained relations with the USFL until the annual coaches association meeting next January.

Pac-10 has basketball contract

The Pacific-10 Conference has announced a three-year basketball television contract worth a minimum of $3 million.

The agreement is with Metrosports, a division of Metro Communications, Inc. A minimum of 33 games will be carried, both over the air on local stations and on national cable networks.

The $3 million is for minimum base rights to all games except those televised by a national network or those games already committed under existing contracts.

ESPN pay-per-view event set

The Entertainment and Sports Programming Network will undertake its first pay-per-view cablecast when it presents four boxing matches May 20.

ESPN and ABC Video Enterprises, Inc., will produce the fight package and handle its distribution as the initial offering in their joint venture, "Reserved Seat Video Productions." The package will be marketed to cable systems, satellite television and closed-circuit television exhibitors across the nation.

The program will feature a pair of heavyweight championship bouts: World Boxing Council champion Larry Holmes vs. Tim Witherspoon and World Boxing Association champion Michael Dokes vs. Mike Weaver.

Turner may be seeking merger

Increased competition in the cable television field could force Turner Broadcasting System, Inc., to seek a corporate merger or partnership, according to a recent story in Advertising Age.

Ted Turner, head of Turner Broadcasting, said none of the three major networks had expressed any immediate interest in the idea. Turner, however, said he intended to hold talks with other companies, including the Gannett Company, the nation's largest newspaper chain.

Although the system is expected to incur a $3 million loss in 1982, Turner said he is not being forced to put his company on the block by pressure from banks holding $50 million in Turner Broadcasting debts.
