Program preps inner-city youth for college

Several hundred Chicago inner-city youths begin successful college careers every year, in large part because of the help they have received from a special program sponsored by the University of Chicago.

University officials connected with the program regard it as a model that could be exported to other campuses.

The educational enrichment project, which depends heavily on the attraction of sports participation, is called simply "The Program" by its director, Larry Hawkins, who heads the Office of Special Programs at the university. Students involved are from grades seven through 12.

The program has existed in some form since 1969. Since then, more than 70 percent of the 5,000-plus youths who have participated have gone on to successful college careers at institutions across the country, including some of the more academically prestigious schools.

Students in the program are grouped according to their academic needs. They attend special classes, receive tutorial assistance with their regular high school curriculum and in other academic areas, and engage in a wide variety of sports. Hawkins meets with various school boards and actively recruits students for the program in cooperation with teachers and parents.

Hawkins, a former Harlem Globetrotter, says, "The underlying principle of the program and its activities is to help youth, particularly black youth, to achieve academic success, and we are convinced that sports is an important vehicle through which to achieve that assistance."

The program receives its funding from a combination of local and Federal grants.

The program is conducted year-round, but it is markedly expanded in summers in conjunction with the NCAA-sponsored National Youth Sports Program, which Hawkins also oversees at the university. About 500 youths now are assisted annually by the program.

"The program is something the university is very proud of," says Mary Jean Mulvaney, director of athletics at the university and a member of the NCAA Council.

"It grew out of the problems of the 1960s. It was a move the university made to alleviate the situation then, and we didn't let it go when things got better," Mulvaney said.

The program is monitored carefully by a prominent group of faculty members, who are known as the

Films may be produced to combat drug abuse

An NCAA-produced videotape or film for use by member institutions in combating drug abuse may be available by fall 1984.

That is the goal of the NCAA Drug Education Committee, which discussed the project with representatives of the Fiesta Bowl. The Fiesta Bowl already is involved in financial support of NCAA antidrug efforts.

"The committee members have been reviewing existing materials that might be of use to athletic departments of member institutions," said Eric D. Zemper, NCAA research coordinator and committee liaison. "Unfortunately, they have not discovered many useful materials directed at the student-athlete and have decided that the NCAA will have to produce its own."

"It is hoped that the Fiesta Bowl Committee will help procure funding for production of a 30-minute videotape or film, possibly two. The association would duplicate the tape or film and offer it for sale or rent to members."

This would be the first step in an educational effort by NCAA members in the area of drug abuse. A year ago, the Drug Education Committee recommended that member institutions implement educational and care programs for staff members and student-athletes.

That recommendation included a suggestion that institutions make use of local experts and locally produced materials for educational purposes and use local facilities for the care program. These NCAA-produced audio-visual materials would supplement the local efforts.

Zemper said that the Fiesta Bowl representatives seemed very interested in the idea and would attempt to help the NCAA secure funding for the production.

Most prep basketball standouts have indicated college choices

Projecting 17- and 18-year-old high school basketball stars into major-college programs is, at best, a risky business.

Every year, however, there is a select group that just about any college coach would stake his job on—the can't-miss prospects.

Any coach in the nation this year would have been more than willing to gamble on the likes of Reggie Williams, Dwayne Washington, Antoine Joubert, James Blackmon, Winston Bennett or Henry Dalrymple.

"This is one of the happiest days of my coaching career," said Georgia Tech coach Bobby Crimmins after signing Dalrymple last Wednesday.

Between last week's traditional signing date and the new one-week signing period in November, most of the "blue chips" have signed national letters of intent. Williams (Georgetown), Washington (Syracuse), Joubert (Michigan), Blackmon (Kentucky) and Bennett (Kentucky) are no exception.

It is clear that the November signing period instituted by the Collegiate Commissioners Association, which regulates the letter-of-intent policy, was a factor in this year's recruiting chase. Of the 47 high school stars listed below, 30 signed in November.

There still are a few key unsigned players. Falling into that category (as of April 20) are Dave Popson, 6-10, Kingston, Pennsylvania; Mark Cline, 6-7, Williamson, West Virginia, and Ricky Winslow, 6-7, Houston, Texas.

Then, of course, there will be the "sleepers"—the players who virtually were ignored on the numerous prep all-America teams but who could end up outperforming the blue chips. Players to watch are Steve Beck, 6-3, Detroit, Michigan (Arizona State); Shawn Watts, 6-2, Midlothian, Illinois (Northwestern); Olden Polynice, 6-10, Bronx, New York (Virginia); William Bedford, 6-11, Memphis, Tennessee (Memphis State); Scott Johnson, 6-4, Meridian, Idaho (Southern Methodist), and John Culbertson, 6-9, Mouth of Wilson, Virginia (Iowa State).

Even harder to figure is the impact of junior college transfers. Missouri appears to have landed a plum in 6-7 Malcolm Thomas of Moberly (Missouri) Junior College. He was named the outstanding player in this year's national junior college tournament. Indiana coach Bobby Knight took his first-ever juco transfer this year, 6-8 Courtney Wittc from Vincennes (Indiana) Junior College.

Here is a look at where some of the nation's leading high school players have signed:

Arkansas—Kenny Hutchinson, 6-4, New York, New York. Auburn—*Frank Ford, 6-4, Kissimmee, Florida. Brigham Young—*Carl Pollard, 7-2, Orem, Utah. *Mike Smith, 6-10, Los Altos, California. DePaul—Dallas Comegys, 6-8, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Lawrence

The Council expands

The first full meeting of the expanded 46-member NCAA Council was conducted April 18-20 at the Hyatt Regency Hotel in Kansas City, Missouri. Delegates to the January 1983 Convention approved expansion of the Council from 22 to 46 members to assure more equitable representation within each of the three NCAA

Long-term contracts essentially meaningless

By Bob Lipper
Richmond Times-Dispatch

This eventually will get into a discussion of college coaching and integrity—strange bedfellows, granted—but first, follow me while we track the movements of Gary Colson and Lute Olson.

Aside from the coincidence that their last names rhyme, Colson and Olson have a few other things in common. For one thing, they are college basketball coaches. For another, each made a splash in Southern California—Colson at Pepperdine, Olson at Long Beach State—before stepping up a notch in status, Colson to New Mexico, Olson to Iowa.

Beyond those concrete similarities, both men have a healthy appreciation for security in an unstable profession. Colson is on the hot seat at New Mexico, where a lot of people tend to remember Norm Ellenberger's many victories and turquoise-jewelry flash while ignoring the fact that his overzealous recruiting got the Lobos sentenced to NCAA probation. Worried about his future, Colson would like a vote of confidence.

Olson also is interested in keeping the wolves—not to mention discontented alumni and bottom-line athletic directors—from his door. He was so interested, in fact, that in 1979 he negotiated a nine-year extension of his contract at Iowa. He was happy. The folks in Iowa City were happy. They figured they had a successful coach who'd be around for awhile. Everything seemed fine and dandy.

Aside from the legal matter—breaking contracts is frowned upon in district courthouses—and the fact that one school and its constituents have been jilted in favor of the fatter contract another school dangled before its coach, there is a larger issue involved here. It is called integrity.

Coaches have been talking up integrity in recent years. They say they are four-square in favor of integrity, of honor, of doing good. This sort of stance goes over big with college administrators and the media, both of whom would like to think Gandhi could make it as a model college basketball coach. In reality, he might jump at a better offer from Bangladesh.

Let's get back to Colson—and then to Olson. During a clinic Colson gave at the National Association of Basketball Coaches convention, he detailed the difficulties and pressures he faces at rules in order to survive. Their proposal: tenure. Just like bio-physics professors.

That seems reasonable enough until a case like Olson's comes along. Then all the lamenting and high-minded statements sound a little hollow. For coaches do move around. They actively seek to better themselves, to make more money, to establish a wider base of operations. It is called upward mobility. It is perfectly legal.

Walking out on contracts is not (legal). And yet, that seems to happen frequently in the coaching racket. The upshot is that long-term contracts are essentially meaningless; they protect the coach but not the institution. Moreover, colleges are reluctant to enforce the terms of the contracts their coaches sign. School A does not press charges against the coach who ran out on his agreement because someday it might want to romance School B's coach. And so on. It's like a good-ol'-boys network. And it helps create a marketplace for nomadic coaches and United Van Lines truckers.

In that regard, Arizona is as much a culprit in this particular case as Olson. A year ago, the school fired its coach, Fred Snowden, and hired Ben Lindsey from the successful NAIA program he had built at Grand Canyon. One 4-24 season later, Arizona got rid of Lindsey. That's when Olson departed Iowa, conveniently ignoring the remaining years on his contract. His replacement is George Raveling, whose contract at Washington State still had five years to go.

Musical coaches. Sing a song of six pence—and throw in a car, a TV show, a summer camp and country-club membership—and watch 'em dance off into the sunset. Even Colson, who has one year left on his contract at New Mexico, knows the tune. Last week, after decrying his situation, he interviewed for the Long Beach State job.

Columnary Craft

New Mexico. "I came into a place where there was a major scandal, and I've won 14 games each of the last two years," he said. "But if I don't win, I'm gone. It's that simple."

Here's something else Colson said about college coaching: "It is a very unfair job. It's unfair, and it's going to get worse."

I feel for Gary Colson. He has a wife, a family, and he's in a tough spot. A lot of coaches are. They are supposed to win a bunch of games and make bundles of money for their schools, and some of them even are expected to do it without cheating. Those who make the grade prosper. Those who don't are gone. I'm not sure coaching is unfair, but it sure is unsafe.

Coaches like Al McGuire, who got out, and Dean Smith, who could stay forever at North Carolina, have harped on this topic. They—and others—have mourned the difficulty many of their brethren labor under. And they long have advocated job security for men who otherwise might be tempted to bend or break the

"It says here—emphatically—that the colleges and the coaches are hypocrites. Olson had eight years left on his Iowa contract when he headed west. He also had six blue-chip freshmen and sophomores on his Iowa roster—five from out of state. The reality is that he—not the university—recruited them. But I don't hear the Walker critics protesting the coach's action."

"Olson reportedly will receive about $150,000 a year in salary and benefits at Arizona—reason enough to make the switch. But Walker's remuneration for leaving Georgia, where at best he had a one-year 'contract' remaining, was $1.5 million. He had 10 times as many of the same reasons."

"I think it goes back to the individual—whether he really wants an education or not. If he wants one, he is going to get it."

Questions/Answers

Q. How are officials selected for the NCAA Division I Men's Basketball Championship?

A. Arrangements for officials are handled by the Division I Men's Basketball Committee. The number of officials from the various conferences is determined by the number of teams that conference had in the tournament the previous year. For instance, the Big Ten Conference will have five officials in the 1984 tournament because it had five teams in this year's tournament. Conferences submit their top officials to the committee, and the committee selects 16 three-man crews for the tournament. The highest-rated crew from each regional semifinal double-header advances to the regional championship game. The committee then selects the crews to work the Final Four. Those selections are based upon officials' performances in the tournament's previous rounds.

Draft information unnecessary

The nation's colleges and universities should not require male students to disclose whether they have registered for the draft when they apply for Federal grants and loans, the Department of Education has stated.

The policy was implemented after a Minnesota court ordered a temporary injunction barring the enforcement of a law making draft registration a requirement for Federal assistance.

Judge Donald D. Alsop of the U.S. District Court for Minnesota issued the injunction pending the outcome of a case that challenges the constitutionality of the law. A suit was filed by six students who had not registered for Selective Service but were seeking Federal financial aid for 1983-84.

The justice department, fearing that the government might be held in contempt for continuing to require proof of registration from students at other institutions, urged that the practice be abandoned until Judge Alsop rules on the constitutionality of the law.

Women bypass teaching careers

Many of the nation's high-caliber women students are choosing careers other than teaching, which will result in the undermining of the quality of schools, an education research specialist has reported.

Emily Feistritz, who holds a doctorate from Indiana University and publishes education newsletters in Washington, D.C., recently has published a 63-page study on the status of women in education, which was reported in the Washington Post.

The report says that the number of brighter women entering business, law and other professions has drained away many of the top teaching prospects, and those career choices are a reason for an alarming decrease in the academic quality of new teachers.

The number of women graduating with degrees in business rose from 9,000 in 1970 to about 63,000 in 1980. Women law graduates increased from 801 to 10,761 during the same period.

Women continue to compose about 70 percent of the number of teachers in the United States.

"Women, like men, go now to money and prestige," Feistritz reported. "That means they go elsewhere than into teaching."

ROTC enrollment shows increase

Since the 1973-74 academic year, nationwide enrollment in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps has increased 87 percent, according to a report in the Wall Street Journal.

Reasons cited for the resurgence are high tuition costs, an uncertain job market and improved attitudes toward the military.

Current enrollment is estimated at 114,451 as compared with 61,279 in 1974.

Freshmen should remain eligible

To the Editor:

There is not the slightest shred of evidence to show that playing football in college as a freshman interferes with the academic progress of a student. In football, student-athletes miss few, if any, classes. Young people are going to do something, and a normal two to 2½ hours of practicing football or basketball is better than many alternatives. Most of this time would not be spent in the library anyway. All coaches work practice around labs and classes and not vice-versa. If there is a class freshman eligibility will be costly and accomplish absolutely nothing for the student-athlete. In fact, it will create problems. Athletic departments will have to field freshman teams to keep the young men interested. (A year layoff with no practice or participation is really detrimental to a player's performance.) There will be a need for more coaches, more scholarships, more equipment and more travel. If this really accomplished anything beneficial for the student-athlete, it could be a worthwhile expense, but it does not. No student would gain, and the richer schools would have a very unnecessary advantage.

I would hope that Proposal 48 would be allowed to work and only the freshman student-athlete who has a low score on the test or in the core curriculum would be ineligible to participate. We should not include the student-athletes who have the academic qualifications to take part in the entire college program. Let them join fraternities, take part in plays, debate, school newspaper, band, chorus, football, tennis, golf, basketball, fencing, student government association, yearbook, rodeo, or bar them from all of these activities. We are getting overly concerned about 35 young men out of some 500 to 5,000 freshmen who arrive at our institution each fall.

conflict, the student misses the meeting or the entire practice in every institution I know anything about.

A freshman needs to associate with the older players and progresses much more in total growth from this experience. I feel that making freshmen ineligible for varsity athletics will have a negligible effect on their academic progress. I coached football when freshmen were not eligible, and there were more problems then than we now have. Most freshmen will not make the travel squad anyway, and that lets them stay home and study on weekends if they need to.

I am very hopeful that those of us who feel as I do can prevail at the next NCAA Convention. Abolishing

By Cynthia Tucker
Atlanta Journal

Fielding winning teams to enhance academic reputations is a growing movement by liberal arts colleges.—The New York Times, February 16, 1983

Long ago, in a galaxy far away, athletics was merely an extracurricular activity, designed to provide some simple recreation.

That, though, was light years and solar systems away. Today, in these United States, collegiate athletics is Big Business.

It is, perhaps, because collegiate athletics is such a lucrative financial enterprise that the debate over the new academic standards for athletes adopted by the NCAA has become bogged down in illogic, half-truths and nonsense. Some of the educators, I'll bet, don't want to come right out and say what concerns them most: the loss of big bucks from winning athletic programs.

But some of the rhetoric will not hold up under scrutiny. And some of what has been omitted from the public debate needs to be included. The following points are intended to pierce the thick fog of speciousness:

It is true that many superior athletes are very poor students. That is not because they are terminal dummies. It is because throughout their formative years, they concentrated disproportionately on achieving athletic prowess. While other kids were studying,

Academics is the name of the game, Auburn athletes tell fifth graders

Auburn athletes are not just talking about the new NCAA academic requirements. They are doing something about them.

Five Auburn athletes—Bo Jackson, Lionel James and Randy Campbell from football and Beth Bryant and Mark Cahill from basketball—went to Boykin Street in the Auburn city school system and talked with about 250 fifth graders about the importance of academic excellence as well as athletic excellence.

James was the nation's leading punt returner last year. Jackson was Auburn's leading rusher last season, and Campbell came out of nowhere to lead Auburn to a 9-3 season and a victory over Boston College in the Tangerine Bowl.

Bryant was a forward on the Auburn women's basketball team, which was invited to the NCAA tournament for the second year in a row. Cahill was a forward on the Auburn men's team, which had its best record in seven years.

The program was arranged by Kathy Donald, one of the fifth-grade teachers at Boykin, who became concerned that her students were placing their athletic dreams above academic reality.

The new NCAA academic standards require a freshman to make at least 700 on the SAT or a composite of 15 on the ACT for initial eligibility at a Division I member institution, effective August 1, 1986.

"They all wanted to be athletes," said Donald, "but they didn't seem to realize that their school work would play an important part in their opportunity to be an athlete. Very few people go from high school to the pros without going through college first, and even then, a very small number actually succeed in the pros."

Here is what the Auburn athletes told the students:

Randy Campbell: "If you are serious about wanting to play college football or basketball, the first thing you have to do is to be serious about the quality of your education. You can't wait for the ACT test or the SAT test. You have to worry about your next test. Be determined to do as well as you can do on that test. Work to improve your scores on every test. Work as hard on improving your test scores as you do on improving your athletic skills.

"Keep your dreams in proportion. Don't let your dreams get out of touch with reality. I'm serious about my education because I know I'm not going to play professional football. I know my future depends on my education, not my football."

Mark Cahill: "Wanting to be an athlete is not enough. Getting an education is part of being a college athlete. With the new NCAA rules and regulations, a lot of coaches won't even look at you if you don't have the grades. They can't afford to."

"It's great to have dreams of being a pro, but you can't live your life on four years, which is about what the average pro career is. When I was in the fifth grade, I dreamed of playing pro ball, too, but you can't live your entire life for four years. A couple of knee operations put a dent in my dreams. Now I've got to fall back on my high school and college education."

Lionel James: "When I came through elementary school and junior high school, I didn't pay much atten-would not have gone to school without an athletic scholarship. That does not mean they could not have gone.

Some educators, I think, are masking another message in purporting to defend the "poor kid." What they really mean is that there are some poor kids who are great athletes who will not get the chance to compete for the disproportionately high salaries of professional athletes without college athletic scholarships.

If college administrators and educators decide that should be one of the functions of college, they should say so and stop hiding behind the claim of educating those kids. The athletic and academic programs of colleges can be completely separated so that athletes don't have to take classes at all, if they don't want to. The money currently spent on instructors who teach underwater basketweaving to athletes can be spent instead on more library books.

There are, fortunately, voices of sanity ringing through the clamor. Dr. Reatha Clarke King (chair of the board of directors of the American Council on Education, the organization that drafted the new NCAA standards) had this to say: "I think we should keep in mind the basic intent of the American Council on Education—to help the student. We want to improve circumstances for the athletes, bring an end to their exploitation, enhance their education for the future and improve the image of higher education in this country."

Academics

tion to my academic work. But when I was recruited in high school, I realized that coaches were looking at my academic work as well as my athletic accomplishments. If you haven't proven yourself in the classroom, you may not have a chance to prove yourself on the field.

"To succeed, you have to be determined. If you should fail in the classroom or on the football field, you have to be determined to keep going until you succeed."

Beth Bryant: "To be a good athlete, you first have to be good in the classroom. In elementary school, junior high and high school, you have somebody looking after you, making you go to class and study. You have to do that on your own in college. You have to develop good attitudes about class work when you are young, the same way you have to develop good attitudes about your work on the field."

Jackson, who turned down a reported six-figure contract with the New York Yankees to play football at Auburn, also had a few words for the fifth graders on how to live their lives and make decisions.

"Don't go out and do what your friends tell you to do," he said. "Be yourself. Be the boy or girl, the man or woman you want to be. Live life like you want to live it. If you get in trouble on down the road, your friends won't be there to take the blame for you. You are responsible for your own life and your own decisions."

Jackson asked how many of the fifth graders wanted to be athletes. Virtually all of the boys raised their hands. Few of the girls did. That caught Bryant's attention. She pointed out that she was paying for her college education through her athletic endeavors, and she encouraged the girls to give a try.

"Nobody expects you to be the best," she said. "They just want you to be the best you can be. It starts in school. The more you put in to your class work, the better off you will be on the court. Pride is not something you can turn on or off. It starts and ends in the heart."

Was the visit to Boykin a success?

"They seemed really interested," said Bryant. "They all wanted to ask questions, and I was really surprised at how attentive and how interested they were. Some of them wanted to know how many hours we were taking."

"If it helped one person, it was worthwhile," said Cahill. "If we helped change the direction of one life, maybe that one person can help change the lives of his classmates and friends on down the road."

For the record, Cahill's major is in business management. James is in engineering, Campbell is in industrial management, Bryant is in premed and Jackson is in educational psychology and geography.

Although the presentation to the fifth graders was not a project of the Auburn athletic department, it was in keeping with the philosophy of Auburn athletic director and head football coach Pat Dye.

"If the new NCAA rules stand as written," he has said, "our elementary, junior high and high school teachers and coaches are going to have to do a great job of teaching young men and women to make them eligible to receive a college scholarship."

Dye's comments are what prompted the program for Boykin's fifth graders.

Wichita State outfielder Kevin Penner

Kevin Penner returns to action

By Brad Del Barba

Few thought Wichita State University outfielder Kevin Penner ever would play baseball again, let alone lead the nationally ranked Shockers in hitting this season. Yet, that's the case this spring as Penner leads the Shockers with a .439 average, while adding three home runs and 13 stolen bases in 30 games. The Shockers are 29-9 and ranked sixth by Collegiate Baseball and Baseball America.

Wichita State head coach Gene Stephenson called it "slightly more than a miracle" that Penner has bounced back from the injury that nearly ended his baseball career.

On June 11, 1982, in the second inning of the Wichita State - Texas semifinal College World Series game, Penner was struck in the face by a pitch from Longhorn hurler Calvin Schiraldi. Penner was knocked unconscious and taken to an Omaha hospital.

The blow put him in the Nebraska hospital for a week. He was transferred to the University of Michigan, where he underwent a four-hour operation to reconstruct the left side of his face. For the next three months, Penner experienced double vision.

Upon returning to Wichita State in the fall, his vision cleared. Penner cautiously participated in fall workouts.

Coach Stephenson had a special batting helmet made for Penner, which has a football face mask attached to it, to protect him from further injury.

"Coming back, the only thing I could think about all summer was whether I was going to get to play again," Penner said of his two-month wait.

"Coach Stephenson has given me a lot of confidence," Penner said. "He helped me a lot with the fundamentals of hitting. I was starting all over again."

Stephenson is quick to point out that Penner's progress in the fall was rapid, and in fact, Penner was "performing as well as anybody we have" by the end of fall workouts.

"I think a lot of people are surprised to a point," Penner said of his .439 average, "but I can't get too relaxed and take things for granted. You've got to go out and play every game hard and to concentrate all the time."

Stephenson notes that Penner has matured more, both as a person and a player. "He's had to provide us with leadership this year," Stephenson says. "He's very intense and competes really hard."

In addition to his consistency at the plate, which includes hitting streaks of 10 and eight games this year, Penner is a swift left fielder who displays a strong arm and who has committed only one error since his freshman year.

Other injuries also have plagued Penner throughout his career at Wichita State. Last season, he separated his left shoulder diving for a fly ball during a game with Colorado State. That injury caused him to miss two weeks of the season. Penner also developed a circulatory problem in one of his legs as a result of being hit by a pitch, which forced him to sit out a game last year.

This season, a slightly pulled hamstring has sidelined Penner for several games, though he has since returned to the lineup. He just keeps on coming back.

"I really don't feel any pressure to come back from the injuries," Penner said. "But the pressure is on the whole team to better our performance of last year, now that the team has lost some key players."

Penner looks at the head injury as a "once-in-a-million occurrence. This summer, I really didn't think I would ever play again. I'm just really glad to be back, and whatever I do, it's just icing on the cake. Just playing again is enough for me."

Del Barba is a graduate assistant to the sports information director at Wichita State University.

'Maniac' boosts Miami attendance

By Ken Lee

In a day and age when money is becoming the driving force in college athletics, and putting people in the stands is the easiest way to fill the need, it is not surprising that Ron Fraser, baseball coach at the University of Miami (Florida), recruited a mascot to bolster attendance. Miami has led the nation two years in a row in attendance and hopes to keep going.

That is mascot as in rah-rah and fuzzy overstuffed costumes. That is mascot as in all for one and one for all. That is mascot as in crowd pleaser.

In the last 10 years, Fraser's Hurricanes have posted winning records and have made five straight trips to the College World Series. Last year, Fraser's squad won the first national team championship in the school's history. Yet he still looks for more.

Being the master promoter and entrepreneur, the Hurricane coach knows a good thing when he sees it. In the case of the mascot, he saw John Routh (pronounced Ruth) as Cocky at the University of South Carolina and knew that Routh would be perfect in Miami as the Hurricane's mascot—the Miami Maniac.

Routh was equally impressed with Fraser and his offer but waited until last December before finally accepting.

The 23-year-old Columbia, South Carolina, native was tempted to fly south but stood pat until an arrangement with the Gamecocks fell through. Routh remembers well the day he got the official offer.

"I had a long talk with Rick Remmert (Miami promotions director) during the rain delay of that 19-3 disaster Miami won in Columbia last year. They (Fraser and Remmert) said they'd like to have me come down to Miami for a tryout, so to speak," Routh explained.

Routh performed as the Maniac for the Miami-Florida State series, which drew a Miami three-game record crowd of 17,216. The fans were wowed, and Fraser was convinced that Routh was his man.

Negotiations continued in a casual manner as Miami and South Carolina steamed toward the College World Series. In fact, it was there two years ago that Routh and Fraser became allies.

In 1981, Routh as South Carolina's Cocky went to the CWS as a cheerleader for the Gamecocks. With the help of South Carolina coach June Raines and Fraser, Cocky was adopted by the NCAA as the official mascot of the CWS. A year later, back in Omaha, Raines and Fraser came to Cocky's rescue again.

During the off-season, the NCAA ruled that no mascot would be allowed on the field during the course of a game at Omaha. Raines and Fraser lobbied for the right to have Cocky serve as the official mascot of the series and won.

"They (the NCAA) made the rule that no mascot would be allowed on the field for the series or regional games. I was the only mascot to show up in 1982; that's when Raines and Fraser stepped in for me. If it wasn't for them, I would've been confined to the stands, and that would've really limited me to a fraction of my act," explained Routh, the winner of the 1981 Universal Cheerleading Association mascot-of-the-year award.

Cocky performed at the College World Series. Afterward, when Miami emerged as the champion, Fraser approached Routh and extended an offer with the message, "contact me in Miami at Christmas."

By the holidays, Routh had been contacted by some minor-league baseball clubs as well as the Atlanta Hawks and Braves basketball and baseball teams. However, none of the offers was worthwhile to Routh, who decided to go to Miami and take over as the Miami Maniac.

Since coming to Miami, Routh slowly has gained the support of the fans. But things have not always been so good for Routh, who started his mascot career as the papier-mache chicken "Big Spur" at South Carolina. He has changed his costume three times in the last four years because of fan support problems.

"The experience of so many changes has made me a better mascot," Routh said. You can't let yourself fall into the same routines; it'll turn people off.

"Coach Fraser has given me free run of the field. He's seen what I can do and knows how I perform. The only real concern that I have is finding the props I use during the games. I had a big box of props I used at Carolina, but I didn't have room in my car when I drove down here. So I have to find the right kind of toy store. Props are a major portion of what I do. I get a prop, anything that is available sometimes, and play off of that."

Routh believes that the real key to in the mascot business is to be spontaneous. "You have to be able to react properly to what happens on the field," he says.

That's a quality Routh has developed well, so well that he can change the tempo of the fans' participation with a dive home or mimicking a bad play on a ball.

Despite his popularity on the field, he's like the guy in the American Express commercials. You wouldn't know him unless he told you who he is.

On the field in costume, he's a man possessed, a character with two screws, each half loose. Off the field, he's a public-relations man. He knows that the costume allows some liberties he would not otherwise enjoy.

"I wouldn't do 95 percent of the things I do if I didn't have on the suit. It allows me to do a lot of things that I've always wanted to do, like knock the hat off the umpire," Routh said.

Without the masquerade, Routh would be working back home instead of enjoying the Miami sunshine, an

1983-84 bowl games approved

The NCAA Postseason Football Committee has denied certification requests from three organizations seeking postseason bowl games for the 1983-84 season.

The certifications were denied after the committee reviewed presentations for postseason bowl games by Tucson, Arizona; Tampa, Florida, and Anaheim, California. The committee afterward submitted 16 recommendations for bowl-game certification to the NCAA Council for approval.

"Each presentation and each city and each bowl committee was judged on its individual merits," said Milo R. Lude, chair of the committee, which met April 12-14 in San Diego, California. "The committee just thought that, in the best interest of intercollegiate football, it was not appropriate to certify the requests."

The following games were submitted for 1983-84 certification:

Aloha Bowl, December 26; Bluebonnet Bowl, December 31; California Bowl, December 17; Cotton Bowl, January 2; Fiesta Bowl, January 1 or 2; Florida Citrus Bowl (formerly Tangerine Bowl), December 17; Gator Bowl, December 30; Hall of Fame Bowl, December 30; Holiday Bowl, December 23; Independence Bowl, December 10 or 17; Liberty Bowl, December 29; Orange Bowl, January 2; Peach Bowl, December 30; Rose Bowl, January 2; Sugar Bowl, January 2, and Sun Bowl, December 24.

According to the committee, these 16 bowl games generated gross receipts of approximately $35 million, of which $27 million was distributed to the participating teams.

The committee reaffirmed the policy of permitting radio broadcasts by stations or networks that have carried a team throughout the regular season. Adjustments will be made in the fee structure to ensure that the bowl radio rights are not less than what is paid for regular-season broadcasts. In addition, language will be developed to clarify "geographic boundaries" to eliminate misunderstandings regarding this aspect of the policy.

The committee also recommended that legislation be adopted to deal with violations of Bylaw 2-2, which deals with the administration of postseason bowl games. The committee recommended that legislation be adopted to impose a financial penalty against the management of the game if there is failure to comply with bylaw provisions regarding bowl games. Under the proposal, the amount of the fine would be determined by the committee and approved by the Council. The fine would be divided between the institutions that competed in the contest.

Hockey conferences may merge

Intercollegiate ice hockey's three Division I conferences soon could become two, if recent action by the Central Collegiate Hockey Association is welcomed by the Western Collegiate Hockey Association.

Athletic directors of the CCHA recently voted to proceed with merger talks with the WCHA. Michigan State University Director of Athletics Douglas W. Weaver chaired the meeting and said the merger could be completed "very rapidly." The directors agreed to contact the WCHA to determine how the members of that conference felt about joining with the CCHA.

Weaver discussed the possibility of a merger with WCHA athletic directors and coaches several weeks ago during informal meetings at the site of the NCAA Division I Men's Ice Hockey Championship in Grand Forks, North Dakota. He said that the WCHA then seemed quite interested in a merger.

Harvard University.

J. W. Peltason, president of the ACE, told the black educators' organization April 15 that the ACE group was ready to consider various options to improve the new standards. The ACE panel now includes several presidents of black colleges.

Peltason noted that Proposal No. 48 does not prohibit colleges from admitting students or giving them scholarships, but it would require a student to spend the freshman year studying, not playing sports, if the student's record indicates the probabilities of graduation are slim.

Michigan State is one of several institutions in the CCHA that formerly belonged to the WCHA. The CCHA was formed several years ago when a number of institutions in the Great Lakes area began varsity intercollegiate ice hockey programs that were close geographically.

Coaching staffs selected

The Athletics Congress has announced the coaching staffs for several U.S. national teams involved in upcoming track and field competition between June and September.

Coaches from NCAA member institutions comprise a majority of the staffs for the teams. Included among the coaches are:

USA vs. East Germany, June 25-26, Los Angeles—Harry Groves, Pennsylvania State University (head men's coach); Al Cantello, U.S. Naval Academy, and Steve Miller, Kansas State University (assistant men's coaches); Clyde Hart, Baylor University (assistant men's manager); Terry Crawford, University of Tennessee, Knoxville (head women's coach), and Fred LaPlante, San Diego State University (assistant women's coach).

World University Games, July 5-11 in Edmonton, Canada—Larry Ellis, Princeton University (head men's coach); Roy Griak, University of Minnesota, Twin Cities (head men's manager); Ken Shannon, University of Washington, and Tom Tellez, University of Houston (assistant men's coaches); Brooks Johnson, Stanford University (head women's coach), and Doris Heritage, Seattle Pacific University (assistant women's coach).

USA vs. Scandinavia, July 26-27 in Stockholm, Sweden, and World

Championships, August 7-14 in Helsinki, Finland—Stan Huntsman, University of Tennessee, Knoxville (head men's coach); Dean Hayes, Middle Tennessee State University, and Russ Rogers, Fairleigh Dickinson University, Teaneck (assistant men's coaches), and Ernie Cunliffe, U.S. Air Force Academy (assistant men's manager).

Pan-American Games, August 23-28 in Caracas, Venezuela—John Randolph, University of Florida (head men's coach); Richard A. Hill, Southern University, Baton Rouge (assistant men's coach); Harmon Brown (California State University, Hayward (head women's coach) and Crawford, Tennessee (assistant women's coach).

USA vs. Canada (junior team competition), July 26-31—Tom Pagani, California State University, Fresno (head men's coach); Tom Jones, North Carolina State University (head men's manager); Robert Johnson, Wabash College, and Joseph Lang, Georgetown University (assistant men's coaches); Dorothy Doolittle, University of Houston (head women's coach), and Sherry Calvert, University of Southern California (assistant women's coach).

USA vs. USSR (decathlon competition), September 3-4 in Kiev, USSR—Rick Sloan, Washington State University (head coach and manager).

Group may test Proposal 48 in court

The NCAA's Proposal No. 48 will be tested in court if it is not rescinded or amended, according to a statement April 15 by the board of the National Association for Equal Opportunity in Higher Education, a group of 114 predominantly black colleges.

Black college presidents, meeting in Washington, D.C., called the new eligibility rule for freshman athletes "a misguided attempt to cure the atrocities in lucrative, big-time college sports."

The organization adopted a policy paper attacking Proposal No. 48, but it offered to negotiate changes with a special panel of college presidents who had championed the proposal.

The proposal will require freshman athletes at Division I institutions to score at least 700 out of 1,600 on the Scholastic Aptitude Test or 15 out of 36 on the American College Test starting in 1986.

The proposal was adopted at the NCAA Convention in January 1983 after its approval was urged by a group of college presidents acting under the auspices of the American Council on Education. The group was led by Derek Bok, president of

C. A. "JAKE" FREEZE, a former star pitcher at Baylor and for the Chicago White Sox, died April 9. He was 81. JESS NEELY, 85, died April 9. He had a 207-99-14 record during 40 years of coaching football at Southwestern (Tennessee), Clemson and Rice. He later was AD at his alma mater, Vanderbilt. DONALD LIEBENDORFER, 82, who was SID at Stanford from 1924 to 1969, died April 7. DAN MCCLIMON, 41, University of Wisconsin track and cross country coach died last week. Wisconsin won the 1982 NCAA Men's Cross Country Championships, and McClimon was named coach of the year for the third time since 1971. He had been head track coach since 1977.

CORRECTION

The March 30 issue of The NCAA News indicated that Paul Schmidt of Princeton won the foil competition at the 1983 NCAA Men's Fencing Championships. This information was taken from the early results received by the national office. However, the official results indicate that Demetrios Valsamis of New York University defeated Schmidt in a fence-off.

The trivia quiz in the April 6 issue of The NCAA News identified Bob Bender as the only player ever to play for two different schools in the Final Four. Steve Kraficisin (North Carolina, 1977, and Iowa, 1980) also played on two different Final Four teams.

Centennial conference organized

Eight private institutions in eastern Pennsylvania and Maryland will compete in football as members of the Centennial Football Conference, reflecting the fact that each of the schools was founded more than 100 years ago.

The conference members are Dickinson College, Franklin and Marshall College, Johns Hopkins University, Muhlenberg College, Swarthmore College, Ursinus College, and Western Maryland College.

Through the 1982 season, the eight institutions played football as members of the Middle Atlantic Conference Southern Division. The institutions will remain members of the MAC in other sports.

The University of South Carolina ended 12 years of independent status in all sports except football by joining the Metropolitan Collegiate Athletic Conference April 14.

Director of Athletics Robert K. Marcum said, "Television money is very important to athletic programs today, and I thought that the Metro offered an opportunity for growth." Of particular attraction, Marcum said, was a conference commitment to consider championship tournaments for additional sports if five of the eight league members request it.

Marcum said other conference members—the University of Cincinnati, Florida State University, the University of Louisville, Memphis State University, the University of Southern Mississippi, Tulane University and Virginia Polytechnic Institute—are situated in large media markets where broadcast revenue would be substantial.

The Gamecocks' athletic director also said the present situation of leaving football out is "ideal. It's a question of revenue. Most independents in football are doing well. South Carolina certainly would be willing to discuss a football championship if the issue arises."

League competition will be held in men's basketball, baseball, tennis, indoor and outdoor track, and women's basketball, volleyball and tennis.

Brayton reaches 700th victory

Washington State University baseball coach Chuck "Bobo" Brayton reached a milestone earlier this month with his 700th career victory.

The Cougars defeated Central Washington University, 11-6, to run their 1983 record to 17-6-1 and give Brayton the landmark victory. Brayton, who is in his 22nd year as head coach at Washington State, has taken six Cougar teams to the National Collegiate Championship. Two of those squads have advanced to the College World Series.

Kentucky-Louisville talks progress

Progress was made last week toward a regular-season men's basketball series between Kentucky and Louisville when the University of Kentucky Athletics Association passed a resolution ordering the school's athletic department to open negotiations.

The resolution apparently puts an end to the department's long-term policy of not scheduling other in-state schools, at least in terms of a match-up with Louisville. The Wildcats and Cardinals have not played a regular-season game since 1922. They have met only in postseason play, including this year's 80-68 Louisville victory in the finals of the NCAA Midwest regional.

The athletics association was acting on a recommendation passed by the University of Kentucky Board of Trustees. Both Kentucky coach Joe B. Hall and Director of Athletics Cliff Hagan opposed the idea, arguing that they should retain scheduling power.

St. Cloud women change leagues

St. Cloud State University's women's athletic program will begin competition in the North Central Conference during the fall of 1984.

"While we regret leaving such a fine organization as the Northern Sun Conference, we are very much looking forward to competing in the North Central Conference," said Brendan McDonald, president of St. Cloud State. St. Cloud State's men's program began competition in the conference in 1981.

The North Central Conference is composed of Augustana College (South Dakota), North Dakota State University; South Dakota State University, the University of Nebraska, Omaha; the University of North Dakota, and the University of South Dakota. Mankato State University will begin competing in the conference in the fall of 1983. All conference members are affiliated with Division II of the NCAA.

Ice hockey team moves up

The United States national ice hockey team has regained its place in the "A" Group in world competition.

The U.S. team earned that spot in March by winning the International Ice Hockey Federation (IIHF) World "B" Championship in Tokyo. The team was 6-0-1 during the competition, finishing its year-long season with a 32-9-2 record.

The return to Group A play was essential to the United States in order to defend its gold medal in the 1984 Olympic Games.

New athletic center approved

The Connecticut College Board of Trustees has announced the approval of plans for a $3.9 million college athletic center to be built on a site adjoining the Dayton Arena in New London, Connecticut. Construction is scheduled to begin this spring, with completion scheduled by fall 1984.

Some features of the center include three basketball-volleyball-tennis courts, a complex of offices, increased spectator space, two general locker rooms, four team rooms, two visiting team rooms and an athletic training room.

Oakes Ames, president of the college, said, "The real perspective here is that we are talking about the whole man or woman. Education takes many forms, and learning occurs in both the classroom and on the field or in the gym."

Director of Athletics Charles Luce said, "We believe that this facility will be a plus for Connecticut's total program; today's college men and women see athletics as an important part of their education."

advisory board. Mulvaney is a member of that group.

Mulvaney considers the project a model program and would like to see similar programs undertaken at other institutions. She has offered her assistance to any interested NCAA member.

Mulvaney also shares a dream with Hawkins, who told an interviewer from Ebony magazine, "The more kids we can push from being one of the top students in their schools to being one of the top students in the country, the more we can improve education generally."

Sports can be a key to unlock the door to improved academic performance, Hawkins believes.

"Walk down the street in any inner-city neighborhood, and you always can start a conversation, providing you talk about one subject—sports," he said.

"A kid will do almost anything for his coach but not for his teacher," Hawkins asserts.

"Why not? What we try to do here is to make the academic arm as demanding and as stimulating as the athletic arm. Our students work half again as hard as others. I don't think for a minute it's too much pressure."

Sports should be considered part of the high school and junior high curriculum, Hawkins believes. "Coaches should be put to work in line with these goals," he says, "because achievement in sports is not incompatible with achievement in academics."

Hawkins expounded on his idea of using sports as leverage for academic improvement in an interview with the Chicago Tribune.

"I'd like to redefine the purpose of school athletics. The universities have already defined their purpose. It's a business. School athletics is not yet a business . . . and there, we must use sports as a tool for education. The teacher has to understand that the kids want to play, and then the teacher, in consonance with the coach, can use that fact as a lever to make sure he does his work. It (sports) can't be an end in itself. It has to fit into the goals of the school and be used as a tool to better the life-preparation of the student."

There also is an interesting potential in sports for academic consistency, Hawkins believes.

When he was coaching basketball at Carver High School in the early 1960s, Hawkins noticed that the dropout rate among students fell dramatically from 16.1 to 3.2 percent—during a period when the athletic teams were excelling.

"Sports should be made more meaningful in the life of a kid," Hawkins says, "not just be important to him."

To add to the continuity of the program, Hawkins sponsors a College

Day each spring at which the high school athlete can meet and talk with the college coaches. Parents and high school coaches also attend. About 30 to 40 colleges usually send representatives.

A vast majority of high school athletes do not receive college grants-in-aid, the students discover. Therefore, they realize that they must be prepared to apply for financial aid. And financial aid, of course, depends on a student meeting certain academic requirements.

To assist the student in preparing for college, the program administers four national academic tests during the year and encourages students to take others.

"I think our kids are going to be put in a tough circle," Hawkins said in the interview with Ebony, speaking of the uncertain future of many of the country's black students. "They're going to have to grab the handkerchief and really fight to stay in there."

Hawkins acknowledged the dissension caused in educational circles by the new academic requirements recently approved by the NCAA to take effect in 1986, but he sees the change in a more positive light.

"The rhubarb has created an atmosphere in which we might get something done. At least now I can yell about it in school board meetings and no one walks out on me anymore."

Advertising increase foreseen

ABC President Fred Pierce recently predicted that advertising revenues for the three major networks would increase 17 percent this year and would double by 1987.

Pierce cited sporting events as a major reason for the projected increase, Advertising Age reported. He said revenue gains during 1983 should benefit from the lack of a National Football League players strike, which cost the networks $122 million in lost revenues during the fourth quarter of 1982. He also pointed to the 1984 Olympics, to which ABC-TV owns the rights, as a reason revenues could be up 20 percent next year.

A "robust upfront selling season" was another prediction by Pierce. John Severino, president of ABC-TV, said the networks face "an extremely ripe environment" that is "totally a seller's market."

Soap-opera ratings protected

Advertising Age reports that ABC-TV will cut back its weekday afternoon coverage of the 1984 Summer Olympics, apparently because of concern about soap-opera ratings.

ABC originally scheduled 207½ hours of coverage of the Los Angeles Games but may cut as many as 20 hours out of the 70 hours planned for weekday afternoons.

The network, which is the leader in weekday daytime ratings, reportedly hopes to carry shortened versions of its daytime lineup.

ABC-TV completes baseball pact

The second half of major league baseball's record $1 billion television contract was completed recently when ABC-TV signed its half of the agreement.

NBC-TV previously had signed a five-year contract for $500,000 and had indicated it would be willing to pick up the other half of the contract if ABC declined.

ABC, however, did sign a six-year pact. The two networks will divide postseason play, while NBC's regular-season coverage will be on Saturday afternoons, and ABC will televise Monday night and Sunday afternoon contests.

Program to end

The University of Baltimore has announced it will end its intercollegiate athletics program next fall because of low student participation. A program of intramural sports will be instituted, said H. Mebane Turner, university president.

Only a small percentage of the Division I member's 5,000 students participate in team sports.
