NCAA President John L. Toner addresses the Division I round table meeting at the 1984 Convention

Legislation, membership head Council agenda

Legislative activity at the 1984 NCAA Convention dominated the January 6-10 meeting of the NCAA Council in Dallas. Legislative issues are not printed in this issue of The NCAA News because the Convention still was in progress at press time.

Among the nonlegislative actions by the Council in Dallas were several dealing with the Association membership. Three new members were elected by the Council: Hawaii Loa College, associate membership, and the Intercollegiate Women's Lacrosse Association and the National Collegiate Golf Coaches Association, both affiliated membership.

In other membership actions:

- The Division I Steering Committee granted a waiver per Bylaw 10-5 to permit Butler University to reclassify its women's basketball program from Division II to Division I.

- The Division II Steering Committee denied a request by Guilford College for a geographical waiver per Bylaw 11-2(f) and granted a waiver to Quincy College to permit the institution to be eligible for election to membership in that division.

- The Division III Steering Committee denied an appeal by the University of Minnesota, Morris, sustaining its earlier action in denying a geographical waiver for that institution.

In additional action, the Division I Steering Committee appointed a subcommittee to study several issues relating to equivalency awards. The subcommittee includes Wilford S. Bailey, Auburn University; Lewis A. Cryer, Pacific Coast Athletic Association, and Jack V. Doland, McNeese State University.

A complete listing of the Council's nonlegislative actions will appear in the January 25 issue of The NCAA News.

64-team field is approved for basketball tournament

Meeting January 8 at the NCAA Convention in Dallas, the NCAA Executive Committee approved expansion of the Division I Men's Basketball Championship from 53 to 64 teams for 1985.

The proposal to expand the tournament was included as a resolution (Proposal No. 91) at the NCAA Convention but required only Executive Committee approval.

With 64 teams, there will be no byes, and teams will be seeded one through 16 in each of the four regions. Afternoon/evening double-headers will be played at each of the eight first- and second-round sites. As in past first-round play, half of the field will play Thursday-Saturday tournaments, with the other half playing Friday-Sunday tournaments.

"We will be doing most of the things we have done in the previous tournaments," said David R. Gavitt, chair of the Division I Men's Basketball Committee and commissioner of the Big East Conference. "We plan to keep the competitive balance in each region through the use of seeds. We will stay away from replaying conference championships in early rounds."

The seeding format for each region that was approved by the Executive Committee is as follows: No. 8 seed vs. No. 9 seed, No. 1 vs. No. 16, No. 5 vs. No. 12, No. 4 vs. No. 13, No. 6 vs. No. 11, No. 3 vs. No. 14, No. 7 vs. No. 10 and No. 2 vs. No. 15.

The 1985 championship will mark the fourth consecutive year for expansion of the tournament. A 48-team field was in effect in 1982, followed by an increase to 52 teams in 1983, 53 in 1984 and 64 in 1985.

Gavitt said he foresees no further attempts to expand the tournament beyond 64 teams. "I feel we have the right number now," he said.

In other Executive Committee business, it was voted that the Division I Men's Basketball Committee and the Executive Committee give consideration to a ratio for distribution of profits from the Division I Men's Basketball Championship of 50 percent to participating institutions, 40 percent to the Association and 10 percent to a quasi-endowment program for the Association's enforcement program.

The Executive Committee reported that with the increase in the number of appeals by Division I members, a potential fund to offset increased enforcement costs would be created by the endowment plan.

The basketball committee had requested in its report to the Executive Committee a distribution ratio of 60

Committee will study I-A play-off

A four-member subcommittee has been appointed by the NCAA Post-season Football Committee to study the feasibility of establishing a championship in Division I-A football.

Milo R. Lude, chair of the Post-season Football Committee and director of athletics at the University of Washington, announced the formation of the subcommittee Sunday in Dallas. The committee was meeting in conjunction with the 78th annual NCAA Convention.

Currently, Division I-A football is the only sport under NCAA jurisdiction that does not have a national championship. Lude said the subcommittee would "explore the ramifications of a Division I-A championship" and anticipated submitting

Delegate record set at 1984 Convention

A record number of delegates attended the Association's 78th annual Convention in Dallas, Texas, January 9-11, marking the fourth consecutive year that a record attendance was reached.

Preliminary figures showed that 1,711 delegates registered for the meetings, 190 more than the previous record of 1,521 set last year in San Diego, California. Since the 1980 Convention in New Orleans, when 1,075 delegates attended, attendance has increased 59 percent.

Following the 1980 Convention, 1,314 delegates attended the historic 1981 Convention in Miami when women were included in the NCAA governance structure. The following year in Houston, 1,315 delegates were in attendance.

Early registration figures indicate that of the total eligible voting membership of 859, 686 institutions and voting conferences registered. The number of voting delegates represents 80 percent of the Association's active and voting allied membership, the highest percentage ever of eligible-voter attendance.

In the past, registration had approached 80 percent but never eclipsed the mark. In 1982, 79.2 percent registered; and last year's figure was 75.7 percent.

Included among the 1,711 delegates were more than 100 representatives

School nicknames acquired in unusual ways

By Erik Brady
USA Today

Charlie FitzSimons is a 21-year-old accounting major at the University of South Carolina—at least, that is who he is most of the time. But when he puts on a bird suit for his school's athletic contests, he becomes someone else: Cocky the Gamecock, the 6-foot-6, cartoon-like character who prances and pantomimes along the sidelines like Harpo Marx in feathers.

"When I put the suit on, it's almost like a switch goes off in my head—I'm not Charlie anymore. I'm Cocky," says FitzSimons. "I do things as Cocky that Charlie would never do: leer at pretty girls, make fun of officials. It's all for fun. A mascot is his school's goodwill ambassador."

Notre Dame's ambassador is Richard McNamara, an engineering student who takes 75 minutes before every game donning his leprechaun suit. At Stanford University, it's Pat Leckman, a communications major who dresses like a tree but who has been mistaken at times for an artichoke or a pickle.

"Mascots are very important to a school; they give athletic teams and student bodies something to rally around," says Ray Franks, author of "What's in a Nickname? Exploring the Jungle of College Athletic Mascots." "A mascot may not seem important, but it is. It becomes a school's symbol, gives it its identity."

Franks surveyed more than 2,000 colleges and junior colleges across the United States and Canada and found that the most popular nicknames are Eagles (there are 72 of them) and Tigers (68). Rounding out the top 10: Cougars, Bulldogs, Warriors, Lions, Panthers, Indians, Wildcats and Bears.

"Actually, Indians would top Eagles if you took all references to the American Indian (Chiefs, Braves) as one category," says Franks.

Even so, there are fewer schools with Indian mascots than there used to be: Stanford, Dartmouth College and Syracuse University retired theirs during the 1970s after native American students protested the use of Indian mascots as derogatory stereotypes. The schools turned to colors instead: Stanford Cardinal, Dartmouth Big Green and Syracuse Orange. Other universities (such as North Dakota, St. Bonaventure and Florida State) have clung to their buckskin and war paint.

Many Dartmouth alumni were angered by the change.

Syracuse took it in better humor; if the Saltine Warrior could no longer do his sideline war dance, there would be a giant Orange, instead.

Stanford's students were even more whimsical. When it came to a vote in the mid-1970s, the winning entry was Robber Barons, an irreverent jab at founder Leland Stanford Jr., a railroad magnate who the voting students would have you believe amassed his fortune by unscrupulous means.

The Stanford Trees and Stanford Sequoias finished high in the polling (there is a sequoia in the school seal); and when those votes were combined, they represented a majority. So the Stanford band adopted the sequoia (a large evergreen), and that is why Pat Leckman dresses as the Tree for all Stanford games. "It's all very unofficial," Leckman said.

Columnary Craft

Schools with Indian mascots are not the only ones that change names. Last year, Skidmore College in Saratoga, New York, did away with the Wombat (an Australian marsupial). "The name was so silly, some of the athletes got embarrassed," says school official Wendy Williams. Now Skidmore teams are called the Thoroughbreds, a testimonial to the famous race track nearby. It also might be taken as a reference to the bloodlines of Skidmore's largely affluent student body.

Other schools are happy to keep their odd nicknames: There are the University of California, Irvine, Anteaters ("Zot!" chants the student section, mimicking the pen-and-ink anteater in Johnny Hart's comic strip "B.C."); the Georgetown University Hoyas (a hybrid Latin term meaning "what rocks"); the Texas Christian University Horned Frogs, and the Heidelberg Student Princes (so named because an official of the school in Tiffin, Ohio, was struck by the title of the 1926 movie "The Student Prince in Old Heidelberg").

Perhaps the strangest mascot story of all is the one told by the Tufts University Jumbos in Medford, Massachusetts. It seems that circus impresario P. T. Barnum was a school trustee. When Jumbo (then billed as the world's largest elephant) died in 1885, Barnum gave the skeleton to the Smithsonian Institution and the hide (all 1,538 pounds of it) to Tufts.

The school mounted the hide in the lobby of Barnum Hall; it stood until a fire destroyed the building in 1975. The next day a school official scraped up Jumbo's ashes—they are kept in a peanut butter jar in the athletic department safe. Before games, coaches and players solemnly rub the jar for good luck.

Other schools have mascot traditions, too. At St. Joseph's University in Philadelphia, the Hawk must flap his wings from start to finish of every game. Accounting major Dennis Sheehan loses five pounds each time he plays the Hawk.

Schools with established men's sports and developing women's teams have run into special problems. Some have found simple solutions: Pittsburgh's Duquesne University Dukes became the Duchesses. It is not so simple for others: the State University of New York, Buffalo, Bulls became the Lady Bulls, a contradiction in terms; now women's teams there are called the Royals.

Sometimes schools get their nicknames from commercial products. Teams at Stetson University in Deland, Florida, (named for hat manufacturer John B. Stetson) are known as the Hatters. The ultimate in commercial nicknames is the Converse All-Stars. Converse College has no relation to the athletic shoes, but students at the Spartanburg, South Carolina, women's school voted for it anyway.

For every oddball nickname, such as the University of Akron Zips, there are a dozen common names, such as the Niagara University Eagles or the Princeton University Tigers.

Some schools prefer mythological beasts: The Golden Griffin (a monster with the head and wings of an eagle and the hindquarters and tail of a lion) makes his home at Canisius College in Buffalo, New York. There are factual reasons for the mythical presence: Le Griffon, the first ship to sail the United States' inland waters, was built nearby on the Niagara River in 1679.

Other schools take their nicknames from other historical events. The Wright Brothers, inventors of the airplane, hailed from Dayton, Ohio; thus, the Dayton University Flyers. Alfred University is named for King Alfred of England; thus, the Alfred Saxons. And Rear Adm. Robert E. Peary, the first man to reach the North Pole, was an 1877 graduate of Bowdoin College in Brunswick, Maine; thus, the Bowdoin Polar Bears.

Questions/Answers

Q. Can the NCAA terminate the membership of any active or allied member?

A. The membership of any active or allied member that fails to maintain academic or athletic standards required for membership may be terminated or suspended or the member otherwise disciplined by a vote of two-thirds of the delegates present and voting at an annual Convention. The member cannot be suspended or terminated unless a notice of this intention is given in writing to the secretary of the NCAA and the chief executive officer of the member institution on or before the first day of November prior to the Convention. The NCAA Council also must approve the notice, and the notice must be included in the Official Notice of the annual Convention.

Q. What action is a member institution obligated to take when it discovers, after the fact, that an athlete has played while ineligible?

A. Under terms of Constitution 4-2-(a) of the NCAA Manual, if a student-athlete is ineligible, the institution is obligated to apply the rule and withhold the student-athlete from all intercollegiate competition. Subsequently, the member institution may appeal to the NCAA Eligibility Committee if the member institution believes that the circumstances warrant restoration of the student-athlete's eligibility. Such appeal must be submitted by the chief executive officer, faculty athletic representative or director of athletics of the member institution; and at least one of those individuals must participate in the hearing of the appeal.

Winning requires devotion to cause

Dale Brown, basketball coach
Louisiana State University
The Basketball Bulletin

"A commitment, a belief in something can make you win. It's not false. Unity involves a devotion; you've got to convince teams of this. It involves a devotion and dedication to a common cause, which brings everyone closer together.

"Sports is the beacon of life; it's the bay window to your school. If coaches don't teach unity, that unity leads to winning, we must rededicate ourselves to a commitment. You'll have failure and disappointment; but if you really believe in one another, it's amazing what you can do. We seem to apologize to one another when it seems someone is motivated. Is it wrong to say, please, thank you, I love you?"

Opinions Out Loud

Judith R. Holland, women's athletics director
University of California, Los Angeles
USA Today

"Women's intercollegiate athletics has risen very fast in terms of growth, quantity and quality compared to men's sports. The popularity of men's sports did not happen overnight; in fact, it was built up over 75 years through the NCAA. Women's sports has grown to the point where we are now in less than 10 years.

"We have been slow to gain interest and spectator support, but basically I believe it is because the mass media has slowly changed its view of women's athletics. . . .

"Either women's sports has hit a plateau and is not going to go any farther, or everything will continue to rise upward. There is no question that women's athletics now has the quality programs to attract people to events."

Los Altos (California) High School
National Federation News

"One of the great things a person learns in participation in sports is that hard work and dedication will bring results. There are no shortcuts or easy ways to achieving success. . . . A good athlete knows that he must first be the best human being he can be. He should make sure he has allowed for alternatives in his life so that if an injury takes him out of his sport, he can follow something in life which will bring rewards."

F. Don Miller, executive director
U.S. Olympic Committee
The New York Times

"The problem concerning drugs is not only national governing bodies. It's the school-college community, it's across the board. So, many organizations have had the opportunity to do something about it, and they have not. Sure, some of us in the administrator's role may have had our head in the sand; but the U.S. Olympic Committee's head is now out of the sand, and we're prepared to do something about it."

Mike Krzyzewski, basketball coach
Duke University
The Washington Post

"I don't think there's any excuse for cursing at an official. But there are times when you're going to say, 'Hey, you blew that call.' That's part of the game; and if you get a technical for that, that is ridiculous. This memo says coaches should kneel in front of their benches. That's silly. We're trying to coach. You can't do that on your knees."

Hayden Fry, football coach
Iowa University
The 5th Down

"I really think the worst thing that exists in college recruiting is coaches taking shots at other coaches or other universities, rather than selling their own schools. Sometimes, coaches have a tendency to knock another school in order to get the recruit to come with them, rather than selling their own product. I think that's tragic. One coach is really knocking his own profession by knocking another coach."

Basketball notes

Bauman sets women's scoring record

Lorri Bauman, a 6-3 senior forward at Drake, broke the Division I women's single-game scoring and field-goal records in spectacular fashion January 6 in her team's 116-83 victory over Southwest Missouri State. Bauman shot an amazing 27 for 33 from the field, a percentage of 81.8, and made four of five shots from the free-throw line for a total of 58 points. The scoring record was 53 points, held by Chris Starr of Nevada-Reno. Delta State's Deborah Temple held the record for single-game field goals with 25. Bauman's performance becomes even more remarkable considering that she is playing on a sprained ankle. Her ankle is heavily wrapped for games; and she tries to stay out of the battle zone under the basket to avoid aggravating the injury, so most of her shots are from long range. She played 34 minutes against Southwest Missouri State, her season low in playing time.

Spectacular scoring is nothing new for Bauman, an elementary education major and Iowa native who played the six-on-six version of high school girls' basketball popular in Iowa and Oklahoma (though in Iowa, only two dribbles are allowed before the ball must be passed or shot). Earlier this season, she pumped in 37 points against Cheyney and managed 33 points in an 87-81 upset of powerful Texas. Bauman holds a number of Division I records, including single-game and season free-throws (22 and 275, respectively) and tournament single-game scoring (50), field goals (21) and free throws (16).

Bauman, presently scoring 29.3 points per game, needs only to maintain a pace of 22 points and three rebounds per contest for the remainder of the season to attain the rare 3,000 career points and 1,000 career rebounds double. According to available information, only one woman in Division I has achieved those plateaus. Lynette Woodard of Kansas scored 3,649 points and grabbed 1,734 rebounds during her career (1978-1981). (Note: New Orleans' senior forward Sandra Hodge also has a chance at reaching those career milestones this season.)

Tisdale joins 60-point club

Oklahoma sophomore Wayman Tisdale joined history's 60-point club with his 61 points against Division I Texas-San Antonio, now 7-5. That was the most points by a Division I player against a Division I team since Anthony Roberts of Oral Roberts scored 65 against Oregon March 9, 1977, at Tulsa in a first-round game of the National Invitation Tournament. Roberts also scored 66 that season against Division I North Carolina A&T. Then, you must go back to the 63 by Mississippi's Johnny Neumann against Louisiana State in 1971.

In major college basketball history, Tisdale's 61 points has been surpassed only 10 times by major college players (seven different players) against major teams. The record point total by a major collegian against a major team is 69 by Pete Maravich of Louisiana State against Alabama in 1970. Sixty points or more by a Division I player against Division I opposition has been accomplished just 19 times in history by only 14 players, including Tisdale. Maravich did it four times, Neumann and Roberts twice each and 11 other players including Tisdale once each.

(There have been 14 other 60-plus games by major collegians against non-Division I opposition, topped by Furman's Frank Selvy's 100 against Newberry in 1954. Portland State's Freeman Williams had games of 81, 71 and 66 in 1977 and 1978.)

Just what was Tisdale trying to do? "I was just trying to score as many points as I could because I knew I was going to be taken out," he replied. Said coach Billy Tubbs, "You really don't realize he's scoring that many—he makes it look so simple and easy." Tisdale was 24 of 34 from the field, 13 of 18 from the line and pulled down 22 rebounds.

Fred Battenfield, Texas-San Antonio SID, reports that after the game. Derrick Gervin, himself a 20.6 scorer for Texas-San Antonio, was asked, "Did you ever see a player score that many?" Replied Gervin (a brother of George "Ice Man" Gervin), "Yeah, I used to live with one."

The international flavor

Georgia Tech's Yvon Joseph, a muscular 6-11 and 245 pounds, is a 26-year-old junior from Cap-Haitian, Haiti, who never even saw a basketball until July 1980. After scoring a career-high 33 points and grabbing 12 rebounds against Central Michigan to win the Casaba Club Classic, he was interviewed on the Tech postgame radio show. Joseph wished the listeners a merry Christmas in four languages—French, English, Spanish and Creole. Joseph wanted to become a mechanical engineer and was working in a baseball factory and saving money to come to college in the United States when he saw his first basketball game. His game was volleyball, and he was an outstanding killer-blocker for the Haitian national team. A friend suggested he could get a scholarship playing basketball simply by coming to Miami and talking to a junior college assistant coach who had watched him play volleyball.

"I said I didn't know how to play, but he offered a scholarship right there," Joseph says. "He said, 'We're going to teach you.'" A year and a half later, he had many scholarship offers. "I had never felt so proud in my life, when everyone said they wanted me. I developed so fast, the coach (Miami-Dade's Bill Alheim) had to play me." (Mike Finn, Georgia Tech SID)

Detlef Schrempf, a 20-year-old junior at Washington, is from Germany and played soccer until he was 13. Quick and 6-9, he leads the team in assists as well as scoring and rebounding, and some compare him to Magic Johnson. Schrempf bristles at suggestions that he is more comfortable playing this year because of the addition of countryman Christian Welp, a seven-foot freshman. "I don't know him all that well," Schrempf told Blaine Newham, Seattle Times. Schrempf's buddy is Alvin Vaughn, a black point guard from Seattle. "We're close," said Vaughn. "We go to dances together; we do lots of things together." Vaughn, you see, accepts Schrempf by offering no sympathy for the taunts of "Nazi," which

Lorri Bauman of Drake has moved to fourth in Division I women's scoring with 29.3 average

Schrempf has heard at some games. Vaughn knows the same line with a different word. Said Vaughn, "He'll have to get used to it, that's all."

Arizona freshman guard Steve Kerr (a 6.0 scorer and 55 percent shooter as the sixth man) pays more than scant attention to news reports from Lebanon. Kerr's father, you see, is president of the University of Beirut. In fact, Steve was trapped by the shelling of Beirut Airport this past August and was unable to leave the country for a week. He almost missed the opening of classes at Arizona. (Butch Henry, Arizona SID)

Quotes of the week

Oklahoma City coach Abe Lemons says, "We've got four wins now; and we feel if we can get to 7-4, we'll have a good chance for a bowl bid—that's what we're shooting for."

Lemons on his talent: "I have one player whose sweat is so rare it will cure cancer. Another player wore out five pairs of shoes, just from stumbling."

Lemons on assistant coaches: "I know a coach who asked if he could hire two assistants. He hired a psychiatrist and a hairdresser. The psychiatrist went crazy in six months. The hairdresser is still there." (Larry McAlister, Oklahoma City SID)

Canisius coach Nick Macarchuk, lighting his victory cigar following a 70-69 triumph over St. Francis (New York), remembered he had yet to congratulate his seven-foot center, Mike Smrek (20 points, nine rebounds, three blocks) and announced: "I'm going to go in and kiss him right now." (John Maddock, Canisius SID)

Dartmouth first-year head coach Reggie Minton after his team lost, 103-58, to North Carolina: "We're like that old Timex watch commercial—we take a licking and keep on ticking." (Bruce Wood, Dartmouth assistant SID)

Western Kentucky coach Clem Haskins, a consensus all-America at Western in 1967, went down with a knee injury while demonstrating a play the day after Christmas. He underwent knee surgery but did not miss the next game, which he worked from a wheelchair, then returned to the hospital (the trip was good medicine—Western won, 92-61, at home over Middle Tennessee State). Asked what caused the accident, he thought a moment, then said: "It was a 20-20 injury—20 years too old and 20 pounds too much." (Paul Just, Western Kentucky SID)

Illinois State had come back from a 29-29 tie at half time to beat Northern Iowa, 67-46, so coach Bob Donewald was asked what inspirational dialogue took place at half time. His response: "I just said, 'Will you please play harder?'" (Tom Lamonica, Illinois State SID)

Asked what he was happy with so far this season, Colorado coach Tom

Oklahoma's Wayman Tisdale tops Division I men's scoring with 29.4 per-game average

Apke replied: "One, our defensive cards are a pretty color this season; two, Ralph Patterson's surgery (an appendectomy in Iowa) is an apparent success; three, the red lights on the goals seem to be working well; four, the pregame meals have been extra special at home this year; and five, Randy Eccker's hair seems to be recovering from an early season mishap with trainer Brian Barry and his clippers." (John Claggett, Colorado SID)

Questioned about C. W. Post's turnaround from 14 losses when he arrived four years ago to 7-1 now, senior center Mike Henderson replied: "We are not rebuilding—we are built." (Bill Huffman, C. W. Post SID)

So that's the thanks we get

Sheila Tighe, a 5-9 senior at Manhattan, recently served an internship in the sports information office at Wagner College in Staten Island. Tighe, a native of Staten Island, was not bound by loyalty to either her employer or home borough when Manhattan faced a hot Wagner team last month. Manhattan ended Wagner's five-game victory streak, 71-54, with Tighe contributing 33 of the 71 points. Tighe shot 12 for 20 from the field and nine for 11 from the free-throw line and, for good measure, added nine rebounds. (Steve Rosner, Wagner assistant SID)

What's your name again?

The first time Loyola (Illinois) women's head coach Marty Hawkins yelled, "Kathy, come here" at one of his team members during practice, he thought he had started a stampede. Loyola boasts no fewer than four Kathys—Kathy Anderson, Kathy Meyers, Kathy Leyden and Kathy Tokarz. To simplify matters and to avoid being trampled, Hawkins substituted each Kathy's class standing for her last name. Anderson became "Kathy senior." Meyers is "Kathy junior." Leyden became "Kathy sophomore" and Tokarz "Kathy freshman." Though he denies that his recruiting philosophy is "a Kathy a year, fewer losses to fear," Hawkins admits, "I don't worry about forgetting too many names." (Paul Mettewie, Loyola SID)

A perfect situation

Regardless of which team won the championship game of the recent Providence College Invitational Tournament, Virginia Palazzi was assured a good time. Her husband, former Holy Cross all-America and women's head coach Togo Palazzi, brought his team to face not only Providence but the Palazzi's daughter, Mary Ann, the Providence assistant coach. Mrs. Palazzi elected to sit at half-court and cheer for both teams. (Kathy Walsh, Providence assistant SID)

Excellence from Purcell

Oklahoma coaches looking for talented athletes need look no farther

Joe Dumars of McNeese State is third this week in Division I with 28.5 scoring average than the town of Purcell, Oklahoma. The path from Purcell to Norman has been well traveled by several members of the McCurdy family, most recently by senior forward-guard Lynn McCurdy. The tradition apparently began with her great-uncles. Walt McCurdy played both basketball and tennis for the Sooners, and Dr. Bob "Manacles" McCurdy was one of coach Bruce Drake's favorite basketball guards in the early 1940s.

Lynn's mother, Rose Mantooth McCurdy, also was considered an excellent basketball player in her youth, and her uncle, Lawrence Mantooth, won two national collegiate wrestling titles in 1929 and 1930 at Oklahoma. McCurdy's father, Tom, played basketball for the Sooners, as did his brother, Mike. Mike and another brother, Rick, also spent some time on the gridiron. Rick started as an end for the 1962-1964 football squads and still holds the school record for single-game fumble recoveries (three). Tom, now the publisher of the Purcell Register newspaper, was appointed to the university's board of regents in 1980.

Lynn is following the McCurdy tradition of outstanding achievement. She earned honorable mention all-Big Eight honors in 1983 and has become only the third woman at Oklahoma to score more than 1,000 career points. Off to a good start this year, she was named to the all-tournament team after participating in the Dial Classic in Pullman, Washington, last month.

Jim Weeks, sports editor of the Norman Transcript, expressed the opinion of many Oklahoma fans. "As long as there is a Purcell, there will be a McCurdy," he wrote, "and as long as there is a McCurdy, Oklahoma athletics are bound to benefit." (T. J. Goss, Oklahoma sports information student assistant)

Just one of those weeks

Holiday tournaments generally guarantee enjoyable experiences for most college basketball players, but the Tangerine Tournament in Winter Park, Florida, was more trial than triumph for 5-7 point guard Carol Simon of Colby. Her troubles began when she and her teammates were chased from the dormitory in which they were lodged by some unidentified rodents. Later, playing against Tulane in the tournament championship game, Simon tore ligaments in her knee. After dining in a Florida restaurant, she discovered she had lost her wallet. The adage "every cloud has a silver lining" proved true, however. Riding home from the airport in New York after the team's return flight, Simon spotted her grandfather's car, which had been stolen several days earlier in New Haven, Connecticut. ## Briefly in the News

The Columbia University men's soccer team made a $1 million impression on Lawrence Wien when they played in the NCAA Division I Men's Soccer Championship in Fort Lauderdale, Florida, last month. During the second half of the championship game with Indiana, Wien turned to Alvin R. Paul, Columbia's director of athletics, and said he would give the university $1 million for a soccer stadium, plans for which had been shelved for lack of funds during the planning of a new athletics complex. Wien, a 1925 graduate of Columbia College and a 1927 graduate of Columbia Law School, had given the institution $3 million in the spring of 1982 to kick-off a fund-raising campaign for a new football stadium, which will be ready for the 1984 season. Wien had no athletic involvement when he was at Columbia. He said he was giving the $1 million for the soccer program "because of the exemplary manner in which the young men on the team represented the university," according to Kevin G. DeMarrais, sports information director.

James M. Litvack, executive director of the Council of Ivy Group Presidents, has resigned his position, effective June 30, 1984. Litvack joined the Ivy Group office in 1974 and has served as executive director since 1976. Hunter College will dedicate a new athletics complex January 19. The complex was begun seven years ago when the state grant was approved, but construction was delayed numerous times because of state cutbacks in funding. Boston College has been awarded the Lambert Trophy, which goes to the top college football team in the East. The Eagles finished the season 9-3 as did second-place West Virginia.

Cleveland State University officials are hoping the Ohio Controlling Board will approve funds for a feasibility study for a domed stadium in downtown Cleveland to be used by the university and possibly the Cleveland Indians. The university is seeking $216,000 to fund the study. Sometimes, there are as many as three brothers on the basketball court at one time for Lewis University coach Chuck Schwarz. Starters Charles and Tom Niego are 6-foot-5 twins. Younger brother, Joe, is the first guard off the bench. Another brother, Mark, expects to make it a foursome when he enrolls at Lewis in a couple of years.

TV in the News

Orange Bowl takes ratings battle

As expected, the 1984 Orange Bowl—with the national championship implications of the Nebraska-Miami (Florida) matchup involved—easily won the television ratings war with the Sugar Bowl.

Both games were shown during prime time January 2—the Orange Bowl on NBC and the Sugar Bowl on ABC. The Orange Bowl had a 23.5 rating and 38 share compared to an 8.8 rating and a 13 share for the Sugar.

The two bowls have traded rating victories the past three years, depending on the significance of the game. In 1983, it was the Sugar Bowl (Penn State vs. Georgia) with a 23.5 rating and 38 share compared to 8.8/13 for the Louisiana State-Nebraska contest in the Orange Bowl. In 1982, Clemson-Nebraska in the Orange Bowl outdistanced the Sugar Bowl matchup of Pittsburgh and Georgia (25/42 to 11.8/18).

Advertising exclusivities examined

The three major networks and three of the nation's leading breweries and their advertising agencies faced a January 9 deadline to comply with civil investigative demands filed by the Justice Department's antitrust division.

The Justice Department has launched a wide-range investigation of the networks' sale of product exclusivities in live sports programming. The three breweries involved are Anheuser-Busch, Miller and Stroh.

Though centering on live sports programming, the investigation could have ramifications on other television programming and local sports coverage, if the practice is found to violate fair trade laws.

Ohio Valley signs cable contract

The Ohio Valley Conference and SportsTime, the fledgling regional cable television network backed by Anheuser-Busch and Multi-Media Communications, last month signed a two-year contract.

OVC commissioner James E. Delany said the contract with SportsTime will put "six figures" into conference coffers. The contract guarantees that at least a dozen OVC games will be shown, beginning in 1984-85.

SportsTime is expected to begin operations in April. Its 16-state network covers the OVC membership in Kentucky, Tennessee and Ohio.

'Monday Night' ratings are down

Last year's players' strike, warm early season weather and disappointing seasons for several key teams are being cited as reasons for a drop in the ratings of ABC's "Monday Night Football."

This year's final rating for the prime-time National Football League telecasts was 18.1 (31 share). That compares to a 20.6 rating and a 34 share in the strike-shortened 1982 season. In 1981, the rating was 21.7, with a 36 share.

Network officials cited four disappointing teams that drew poorly—San Diego, Cincinnati, and the New York Jets and Giants. Only four of the 16 games matched teams with winning records.

The Dallas Cowboys were involved in the series' two highest-rated games of 1983—the season opener against Washington and the season finale against San Francisco. The Cowboy-49er matchup had the series' best rating of the year (23.6 and 39).

Kentucky prep final to go national

Sports Production, Inc., of Dallas has purchased rights to the Kentucky high school basketball championship game and has guaranteed the state high school association that either the 1985 or 1986 boy's final will be on national television.

According to Russ Potts of Sports Production, the nationally televised game will be offered to Turner Broadcasting System, Inc.; ESPN, and the USA Network. Potts told the Louisville Courier-Journal he was confident that this year's boy's final could be sold to enough stations in Kentucky and bordering states to make it financially successful.

The Kentucky High School Athletic Association is guaranteed at least $27,500 for rights to this year's final. In addition, Sports Production has agreed to protect the KHSAA by buying up to 3,000 tickets if attendance is below the three-year average of 15,000. The tournament is played at Rupp Arena in Lexington.

Schipp named manager at NBC

John Schipp has been named manager, on-air promotion, at NBC Sports. In the new post, Schipp will produce, write and direct both day-to-day and long-range promotion campaigns, including on-air promos for network affiliates.

percent to participating institutions and 40 percent to the Association.

A loss-of-revenue insurance program was approved by the Executive Committee. It would offset a portion of the losses incurred by a Division I men's basketball tournament participant if circumstances prevented the team's appearance in the tournament after having been selected. The program will be administered by the Association.

The Division III Football Championship will be expanded from eight to 16 teams effective in 1984. The championship is scheduled to begin November 17, with first-round games, followed by quarterfinal competition November 24. Semifinals are scheduled December 1, and the championship contest will be played December 8.

The 16-team bracket will provide a 1:12 ratio with the current 196

Division III member institutions.

In actions related to other specific sports, the Executive Committee asked for further rationale from the Men's and Women's Track and Field Committees regarding a proposal to expand the number of relay teams in the indoor championships from 12 to 16. A limit of 12 teams will be in effect for 1984 competition.

In additional action, the Executive Committee denied a request to increase the Division II Men's Golf Championships from 88 to 100 individual participants and affirmed the limit of 83 participants for the 1984 championships only. The committee also upheld a previous committee decision to withhold automatic qualification to the Gateway Collegiate Athletic Conference for the NCAA Division I Women's Softball Championship and granted an appeal by the Southwestern Athletic Conference that five teams in the con-

Among the items the subcommittee would examine are the possibility of lost classroom time, the attitude of faculty senates at member institutions and the effect on the current post-season bowl structure.

The subcommittee will be chaired by DeLoss Dodds, director of athletics at the University of Texas, Austin. Other subcommittee members are Col. John J. Clune, director of athletics at the U.S. Air Force Academy; Ann Marie Lawler, associate director of athletics at the University of Alabama, Tuscaloosa, and Rocco J. Print-media representatives included a large portion of the major markets across the country. Among the media covering the Convention were Steve Wieberg, USA Today; Doug Tucker, Associated Press; Gordon White, The New York Times; Manny Topol, Newsday; Ian Thomsen, Boston Globe; Bob Kilborn, Christian Science Monitor; Herschel Nissenon, Associated Press; Scott Vance, Chronicle of Higher Education; John Garrity, Sports Illustrated; Chris Jenkins, San Diego Union; Mike Rabun, United Press International; Gannett News Service, and Fred Russell, Nashville Banner, who worked his 39th consecutive Convention.

In the Division I round table session, the membership of that division considered a proposed Division I statement of philosophy and remanded it to the Division I Steering Committee for additional study.

The philosophical statement originally was proposed by the Special Committee on Division I Criteria and had been approved by the Division I Steering Committee.

The Executive Committee will study revenues from the Division I Men's Basketball Championship and an unallocated surplus of $204,810 from 1983 championships. In addition, the committee will review the new basketball television contract with CBS in hopes of allowing guaranteed per diem for Divisions I, II and III teams, if receipts are sufficient. The Executive Committee will review these proposals in August.

Subsequent to the committee's meeting, representatives of 14 of the

"We discussed the play-off situation and reaffirmed our position as being against a play-off," said Jim Brock, executive vice-president of the Cotton Bowl and chairman of the bowl group. "That's as far as we'll go at this time."

Reports published on small-ball studies

Editor's Note: These two articles are reprinted from the Backboard Bulletin, the official publication of the Women's Basketball Coaches Association. An earlier report on experiments with a smaller ball for women's basketball appeared in the November 21 issue of The NCAA News. William S. Husak is director of the motor behavior laboratory at California State University, Long Beach. Jackie Dailey and Bette Harris are assistant professors of physical education at Bowling Green State University and Longwood College, respectively.

By William S. Husak

In a previous issue of Backboard, we reported the findings of research that we conducted investigating the effects of a slightly smaller-sized basketball on the skill performance of women. In general, the findings indicated that a smaller-sized basketball did indeed result in improved skilled performance. Since this research, which was supported by the Wilson Sporting Goods Company, we have continued to investigate ball size effects for women basketball players through a grant awarded by the NCAA.

During the past summer, we conducted a two-pronged study. The first aspect of this research was to provide a longer exposure period for high school athletes to the smaller ball as well as to further investigate attitudes. Five summer basketball camps located in the western part of the United States agreed to use the smaller balls along with the regulation balls during the camps. Near the end of the camps, four shooting and four ball-handling skills tests as well as an attitudinal survey were administered. The data analyses revealed that all of the significant findings were in favor of the smaller ball. Also, those tests that did not attain statistical significance demonstrated an advantage for the smaller ball. Furthermore, with an extended exposure to the smaller ball, drastic changes in attitude appeared. Initially, approximately 60 percent of the campers who had a preference of balls favored the regulation ball. At the end of the camp, about 60 percent of the girls who voiced a preference favored the smaller ball.

The second step of this research consisted of introducing the smaller ball in competitive play. Two summer developmental basketball leagues on the East and West Coasts agreed to use both the small and large balls during league contests. Once again, the statistics collected indicated that the quality of play would be improved with the smaller ball.

Currently, further evaluation is being conducted on the smaller ball in competition. Statistics from the state of South Dakota, which has adopted a smaller ball for all interscholastic play, and the Empire State Conference, an NCAA Division II collegiate conference that has agreed to use the smaller ball for all league games, are being collected and will be evaluated. The findings will be reported in the spring.

In conclusion, it does appear from all of the evidence gathered to date that the smaller ball does indeed result in better performance for women basketball players. It also appears that with exposure to the smaller ball both players and coaches tend to prefer it.

By Jackie Dailey and Bette Harris

Research on the smaller and lighter basketball (one inch less in circumference and 2½ ounces lighter) was conducted at the 1983 Michigan State University Summer Sports Camp under the directorship of Karen Langeland. The study was supported by grant monies secured from Wilson Sporting Goods and the National Association for Girls and Women in Sport. The 480 players who attended one of the first of three weekly sessions (experimental group) practiced only with the smaller ball during the week. The 274 players who attended one of the last two weekly sessions practiced only with the regulation ball (control group).

Players had their hand size and grip strength assessed by the two investigators at registration and were then divided into teams so that their coaches could take them through a series of skill tests: speed pass, dribbling, 30-second shooting and figure 8s behind-the-knees. These tests were then readministered five days later to determine what effect, if any, practice had on player performance. When compared to the control group, players in the experimental group were younger, shorter and weighed less. They had a smaller grip size and less grip strength in both hands.

For under-the-basket shooting, age, height and grip size were all significantly related to the number of baskets scored in 30 seconds. The younger group shot 0.21 more baskets and the older group 0.64 more using the smaller ball. In dribbling, age and grip size were found to be significantly related to how fast a player could dribble 45 feet around six large cones and back again. Only the younger players, however, were found to dribble faster (0.16 seconds) using the smaller ball. Age, weight, grip size and strength were found to be significantly related to how fast players passed the ball against the wall from nine feet and retrieved it for 10 passes. However, only the younger players passed faster (0.42 seconds) using the smaller ball. Lastly, age, grip size and strength of the right hand were found to be significantly related to how many behind-the-knee figure 8s a player could complete in 30 seconds. On this test, the younger group completed 0.58 more figure 8s and the older group 1.1 more using the smaller ball.

From the evidence presented in this study, the smaller basketball made a significant difference in performance even for players who did not practice with it. A more complete summary of results will be available from the WBCA.
