Box for coaches begins in basketball

The NCAA Men's Basketball Rules Committee, meeting April 2-3 in Seattle, adopted the use of a coaching box, effective for the 1984-85 season.

The committee also voted to continue experimentation with a 45-second shot clock, left on the entire game with no lack-of-action count, and a combined experiment involving the 45-second clock and a three-point play, measured 19 feet, nine inches from the center of the basket.

In another rules change, the committee increased the number of timeouts in games involving the electronic media from three to four per game.

"The committee felt that the adoption of the coaching box would be a significant step in improving bench decorum and the image of an already great game," said Edward S. Steitz, secretary-rules editor of the committee and director of athletics at Springfield College.

Coaching-box experiments were used in six Division I conferences last season. Coaches, players and bench personnel were required to remain in a designated bench area except to request specific information from the scorer's table during a timeout, address a correctable error or, in the case of players, report into the game.

Steitz said the committee carefully examined conference reports on shot-clock and three-point play experiments conducted during the past season. Twelve conferences (10 in Division I) experimented with the 45-second clock last season, and four (two in Division I) used the three-point play. Conferences were not permitted to use both experiments simultaneously last season.

"It was evident from our experimentation that we have focused on two specific areas—the 45-second clock left on the entire game with no lack-of-action counts and a three-point play from 19 feet, nine inches," Steitz said. "We felt further experimentation was necessary on the shot clock and the shot clock in concert with the three-point play."

NCAA coaches surveyed on both topics this year supported a 45-second clock (53 percent in favor)

Texas court to determine if funds relate to Title IX

The U.S. Supreme Court March 26 denied certiorari in West Texas State University vs. Bennett, thereby requiring a Federal district court in Texas to consider whether a university's receipt of Federal student aid and construction funds subjects its athletics program to Title IX.

In the case, the female student plaintiffs contended that the university had violated Title IX by denying women equal opportunity in its intercollegiate athletics program. They argued that the athletics program directly received Federal assistance in the form of work-study benefits to students employed in the athletics department, Federal student aid received by athletes, compulsory student fees (in part indirectly paid by Federal student-aid funds) that supported the athletics program, and subsidized housing and dining facilities used by athletes.

The district court entered summary judgment for the university, holding that this type of aid was general and indirect and did not subject the athletics program to Title IX. On appeal, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit ruled that the plaintiffs should have been allowed to introduce evidence concerning direct Federal funding to athletics from such sources and sex discrimination in the athletics program, and it remanded the case for further consideration.

Confidence expressed in growth of women's programs

(First of two articles)

The long, continuing struggle over Title IX in the nation's courts has become an anachronism, a number of administrators of women's intercollegiate athletics programs believe.

Despite the recent public outcry by women's rights groups after a

Supreme Court decision apparently limited the scope of the equal-opportunity legislation, these leading women administrators no longer believe that Title IX is of great importance in the development of women's sports programs

"It's not a question of law," says

Judith R. Holland, director of women's athletics at the University of California, Los Angeles. "Things are in motion. . . . It is now a question of how far we can go and how fast we can get there.

"Things are well on their way," says the former NCAA Council member, long a prominent figure in women's intercollegiate athletics. "There is a momentum, and the NCAA has played a large part in that. I really do not see Grove City as a setback for anyone." (The Supreme Court ruled February 28 in Grove City College vs. Bell that Title IX was program-specific and not institutional in scope.)

Although there are women's athletics administrators who do not completely share Holland's outlook, she is not alone in her confidence and optimism.

Libba Birmingham, women's athletics coordinator at Mississippi State University and chair of the NCAA Division I Women's Volleyball Committee, says that Title IX has nothing to do with women's athletics at her institution.

"People I work with in the Southeastern Conference view their men's and women's sports teams as part of one overall program. Whenever we talk about athletics at Mississippi State, we say 'we.' We all want to prosper together.

"Anyone in college athletics is an educator first and does not care whether it's men's or women's athletics; both are strictly part of the educational system for anyone who is sincere in sports.

"Any limitations put on Title IX should have no effect on the sincere programs," Birmingham says. She also is a member of the NCAA Recruiting Committee.

One manifestation of the commitment to women's athletics in the SEC was the creation last year of the

USFL to screen early-signing requests

The United States Football League will organize a panel or review board to hear requests from undergraduate football players who want to join the USFL.

USFL Commissioner Chet Simmons, who informed many of the top Division I colleges and universities of this panel, has encouraged college coaches to cooperate with the league in devising some way to allow undergraduate players to compete in the USFL.

"There must be a relationship between us that we are not conceived as a league that takes anybody who wants to come out of college and play here," Simmons said. "We're going to try it. We need the coaches and colleges to work with us."

A Federal court recently ruled that the USFL could not bar undergraduates from its teams. Simmons says the league will try the panel method to determine whether a player should be denied access to the league until his class graduates.

Although the timetable and procedure of the panel have not been decided, it would be composed of an athletics director, a neutral college football coach, an attorney, a league official, an academic adviser and a physician.

The league is considering whether the athlete would have to abide by the decision of the panel or whether it would serve in just an advisory capacity. Whatever system is adopted, Simmons said it should be one that allows qualified players to try out for the league but discourages those who aren't qualified.

The proposed system might work, said Carl C. James, commissioner of the Big Eight Conference and a member of the NCAA Professional Sports Liaison Committee.

"I understand what Chet is saying," James said. "There are going to be times when it would be advantageous to a student-athlete to go to the professional teams, and we should allow for that."

Meyer's career has disappointing ending

By Robert Markus
Chicago Tribune

It was 5 o'clock in the morning Saturday before Ray Meyer fell asleep. "At a quarter after 6," he said, "the operator called and said someone had left two tickets at the desk. That was my night's sleep."

Now Meyer tried to move through the hotel lobby to the bus that would start him on the long, somber voyage home. He had expected to be on his way to a press conference at this hour to discuss Sunday's Midwest regional title game.

Instead, he was headed for the airport and, at long last, the end of his journey. "My boys are all on the bus. I'm keeping them waiting," he fretted as he was handed a telephone at the checkout desk.

The caller was a television man from New York, incredibly demanding to redo an interview that had not turned out Friday night. For once in his life, Meyer said no. His boys were waiting.

Then he signed for a telegram and patiently signed his name once more, a coveted souvenir for the Western Union messenger. A little boy asked if he could have an autograph, too, and Meyer replied kindly, "Son, you sure can."

An attractive brunette came up to him and buried her face in his chest, her tears wetting his shirt. Meyer put a consoling arm around her. "I'm fine," he told her. "Don't worry about me."

The girl, Patty Carey of New Orleans, followed Meyer out to the bus and stood crying bitterly as it pulled away. She and Meyer have been unlikely pen pals since the day she worked up her courage and called his room when the DePaul coach was at the Final Four in New Orleans two years ago.

"I don't know how this could have happened to such a nice person," she sobbed. "Anybody but him."

It wasn't supposed to end like this. After 42 years, a man shouldn't have to lay his broken heart out on a table and let the vultures feed on it.

But Ray Meyer wouldn't have it any other way. "I'll never change," he had said all through this final season, and he never did. And so, in his hour of despair, when he was surrounded by men peering into the very depth of his soul, there he was, giving one last piece of himself to the world.

Life didn't end for this 70-year-old marvel when Wake Forest's Danny Young ended DePaul's season that Friday night with a last-second basket in overtime. But a huge slice of him died.

"I knew for me, it was all over," Meyer said. "I walked down that gauntlet of newspapermen and saw the lights flashing, and I knew it was the last time I would ever make that walk."

"I lost a good friend in basketball. It's sinking in rapidly now. I've lost a real close friend that's been with me for so long. For three quarters of my life, I've been in basketball."

It all came to an end with Wake Forest's 73-71 victory in the semifinals of the Midwest regional.

It was a bitter defeat for DePaul, which led almost from the opening tip, still had an eight-point lead with under three minutes to play and had the game wrapped up until Kenny Patterson threw the ball away with 26 seconds left in regulation time.

DePaul led 67-65 at the time, and Patterson tried to throw an alley-oop pass to Tyrone Corbin on a two-man break. The ball sailed far over Corbin's head, giving Wake Forest another crack at the tying basket.

Even then, the Demons missed another chance to win when Dallas Comegys hauled down a rebound and heaved it just a foot too far away from Kevin Holmes.

Holmes did manage to keep the ball in bounds but threw it directly to a Wake Forest player. The ball then went to Delaney Rudd, whose 20-footer swished through just as the clock went to all zeroes. "When he shot it," said Meyer, "I said, 'It looks good,' and it was."

Wake Forest, which had played six previous overtime games and won five of them, went ahead 69-67 in overtime, but DePaul came back to take a 71-69 lead before Young scored the game's last two baskets.

The game-winner, a driving layup, came with two seconds left after Patterson had missed the front end of a one-and-one with the score tied just 19 seconds from the finish. Patterson missed just about everything he threw up Friday—layups, jump shots, free throws and that fatal pass to Corbin.

"But he had played an excellent game," said Meyer, "and then he blew up late. With 26 seconds to go, I thought the game was over. When he came over to the bench, I said, 'Why?' And he put his head down."

"But I can't blame him. If the pass had been right there and Tyrone had dunked the ball, Kenny would have been a hero. There were so many ifs in that game. You can always look back and reflect. But no matter what we do, the scoreboard is always going to read two more points for Wake Forest."

"I have to accept it. I'm not going to die because we lost a ball game. You win a few and you lose a few, but I hated to end a career like that."

As much as he mourned the end of his life's work, Meyer mourned more the shattering end for the team he had come to love more than any other.

"I don't want anyone to feel sorry for me," he said. "Feel sorry for the players. I'm very disappointed I went out this way, but I feel worse for the players who made the bad plays. They're taking it very hard."

"They should just forget it. It was only a basketball game. We tried and we had a fine year, and I don't think the boys are losers because they lost this game. If they were pros, I could fine them, but now I just love them. I don't blame them; I blame myself. But I was helpless on the bench. I wish I could have gone out there and made the pass myself. Next year, they'll be back and they won't make the same mistakes."

But they'll be back without the man who led DePaul basketball teams for 42 years and became a legend through the simple fact of his goodness.

Already he is feeling keenly the loss of much that he held dear in this world. "I'll miss it when we get out to Seattle," he said. "I'll talk to the coaches and I'll realize then that I'm no longer a part of them, I'm no longer a part of the game."

"And it will be a sad day for me next October 15 when the boys go out on the gym floor again and I do not. I'll sit in my office and I'll hear the ball bounce and I'll wish I were down there to help them."

"The tournament (conference postseason basketball tournament) has focused a lot of outside attention on our conference. But its greatest value is retaining the intensity level during the season. You want to have your best team at the end of the season represent your conference in the NCAA. Presumably, this team will do well in the tournament. Also, a team that falls behind during the season might just play out the string. But with a tournament, everyone knows they've got a chance."

Southern Cal retains hold on women's basketball title

Cheryl Miller and the McGee twins, Pam and Paula, scored 49 points as Southern California overcame a five-point deficit with 11 minutes remaining to defeat Tennessee, 72-61, and win its second straight NCAA Division I Women's Basketball Championship April 1 in Los Angeles, California.

Pam McGee's three-point play with 6:20 left in the game gave the Lady Trojans, 29-4, the lead for good. Tennessee, appearing in its third NCAA championship and second final four, finished the season with a 23-10 record.

Miller, named the tournament's most valuable player, was held to six points in the first half by a harassing Tennessee defense, but the 6-3 sophomore altered her style in the second half and finished with 16 points.

"I think our experience took over at the six-minute mark, and that was the turning point," said Southern Cal coach Linda Sharp. "We're more experienced than we were last year, and the experiences they've had in winning a national championship showed up. I'm glad it's over."

Miller was the main reason the Lady Trojans were playing for the national title. The 6-3 all-America hit a 10-foot shot two minutes left and scored the final five USC points in a 62-57 semifinal victory over Louisiana Tech. Miller led the Lady Trojans with 22 points, and Janice Lawrence, this year's Wade Trophy winner, led the Lady Techsters, 30-3, with 28 points.

The all-tournament team could pass for an all-America team. Joining the McGee twins, Miller and Lawrence on the squad was Tennessee's Mary Ostrowski, who scored 35 points in the Lady Volunteers' 82-73 semifinal victory over Cheyney.

Freshmen propel Hoyas to men's basketball crown

Georgetown placed five players in double figures—two freshmen, two sophomores and a junior—and overcame a quick start by Houston to down the Cougars, 84-75, at the 1984 NCAA Division I Men's Basketball Championship April 2 in Seattle, Washington.

Houston, appearing in its third consecutive Final Four, hit its first seven shots and took an early 14-6 lead, but the Hoyas of Georgetown, helped by freshman reserves Michael Graham and Reggie Williams, came back and led 40-30 at half time.

Houston places three, Georgetown two on all-stars

Georgetown's Patrick Ewing, the most valuable player at the 1984 Final Four, was joined on the all-tournament team by teammate Michael Graham and three players from Houston—Alvin Franklin, Michael Young and Akeem Olajuwon.

In other activity associated with the Final Four in Seattle, Kansas State coach Jack Hartman was elected president of the National Association of Basketball Coaches, and winning coach John Thompson of Georgetown was elected one of four NABC vice-presidents. Joining Thompson as vice-presidents are Bobby Knight of Indiana, Eddie Sutton of Arkansas and Billy Key of Missouri-Rolla.

Lee Benson, sports editor of the Salt Lake City Deseret News, was elected president of the United States Basketball Writers Association. Bill Millsaps, sports editor of the Richmond Times-Dispatch, was elected first vice-president.

David Wingate combined for 49 points and 13 rebounds. Other Hoyas in double figures were junior center Patrick Ewing (10) and sophomore guard Michael Jackson (11).

It was Georgetown's third trip to the Final Four and the second under coach John Thompson. The Hoyas were defeated by Wyoming in the 1943 championship and lost to North Carolina in the 1982 final. Georgetown finished the season with a 34-3 record.

Georgetown, which limited regular-season opponents to 39.7 percent of their field-goal attempts, held Kentucky to nine percent (3 of 33) in the second half in the semifinals, coming back from a 29-22 half-time deficit to defeat the Wildcats, 53-40.

Houston, 32-5, was led by Alvin Franklin (21 points), forward Michael Young (18) and 7-0 center Akeem Olajuwon (15 points, nine rebounds). It was the second consecutive loss in the final for the Cougars, who fell victim to North Carolina State last year. Houston, which has appeared in the Final Four five times, also was seeking its first NCAA championship.

"I've had an obsession with winning the national championship, so much that I'd wake up in the middle of the night saying, 'national championship,'" said Thompson. "Now, I've got the monkey off my back. If 'Hoya Paranoia' makes us the way we are, maybe someone else better catch it."

Lawrence wins top award

Louisiana Tech's 6-3 senior center Janice Lawrence was named winner of the 1984 Wade Trophy, emblematic of the most outstanding player in women's collegiate basketball.

Lawrence received 45 of the 99 votes cast by a national panel of women's coaches, sports information directors and sportswriters. Louisiana State guard Joyce Walker finished second in the balloting, which was announced last week in Los Angeles just prior to Louisiana Tech's loss to NCAA champion Southern California in the semifinals of the 1984 NCAA Division I Women's Basketball Championship.

Lawrence is the sixth recipient of the award.

The talented center also headed the 1984 Division I women's all-America team, as selected by the Women's Basketball Coaches Association. She was joined on the 10-woman first team by three other players involved in last weekend's final four—Pam McGee and Cheryl Miller of Southern California and Yolanda Laney of Cheyney.

Miller, Lawrence and Walker were the only repeaters from last year's first team. McGee made the first team ahead of her twin sister, Paula, who had been a two-time first-team selection.

NAIA members reject athlete's fee

The National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics has overwhelmingly rejected a proposal to assess an $8.50 fee per athlete to increase revenues. Fewer than 20 of 143 delegates approved the proposal at a business meeting in Kansas City, Missouri, in March.

Delegates to the annual NAIA meeting adopted several legislative proposals, subject to approval by a majority of the association's membership voting by mail.

Among the proposals was one that would require each member institution's faculty athletics representative to be a regular member of the faculty, not associated with the athletics department. Another proposal would require the president of each member institution to appoint a faculty athletics representative.

Two new editions of rules books available

Two new editions in the series of NCAA playing rules will be available in April—Men's Water Polo Rules and Football Rules and Interpretations.

Each book costs $3, and quantity discounts are available.

Another publication available from the NCAA is the Official NCAA Baseball Scorebook ($3). The most recent edition of the scorebook has been expanded to include space to score 40 games. It also contains information on how to use the book, NCAA baseball scoring rules and a sample score sheet.

To place an order or to inquire about bulk rates, contact NCAA Publishing, P.O. Box 1906, Mission, Kansas 66201. Payment, which includes fourth-class postage, should accompany all orders. Those who want books mailed first class should include an additional $2 per book.

Otahkians' team score in floor exercise by more than a point, and the margin of victory on the balance beam was .95. That was enough for a 173.40-171.45 victory and Jacksonville State's first NCAA team championship.

Debbie Lindemer of Wisconsin-Oshkosh, the only competitor from that institution, beat Jennifer McFarland of Jacksonville State by one-tenth of a point for the all-around title. Scores of more than nine on the uneven bars and in floor exercise helped make the difference for Lindemer, who also won the uneven bars with a 9.15.

A year ago, the five individual titles were won by only three gymnasts. In 1984, Lindemer was the only multievent champion in individual competition. The division's variety of champions continued; after three years, there has not been a repeat champion in either team or individual competition.

Division I men's gymnastics

Nebraska faces tough struggle in quest of sixth straight title

As the Division I men's gymnastics season nears its final chapter—the NCAA championships April 12-14 in Los Angeles—the competition takes on all the ingredients of a mystery thriller. It is a story of suspense and uncertainty for the competitors and their coaches, particularly Nebraska coach Francis Allen, whose Cornhuskers will be seeking a sixth straight title after having been defeated by UCLA and Oklahoma during the regular season.

UCLA took an early victory over Nebraska and five other top-rated squads in a February invitational meet. Then, Oklahoma humbled the Cornhuskers in winning the Big Eight Conference title.

The plot thickened when an upstart Minnesota squad, which had the 12th-best average score through the regular season, pushed aside perennially tough Ohio State and Iowa and Illinois to capture the Big Ten Conference title. The Gophers all but assured themselves a role in the NCAA championships, while the Buckeyes, Hawkeyes and Fighting Illini may find themselves staying home at championships time.

The Cornhuskers still are strong but obviously not of the caliber of past championship squads. Was UCLA's victory a fluke? Was Minnesota's? And what about Oklahoma? Then, there are two other strong squads that cannot be discounted—Penn State and Southern Illinois.

Turning the final pages of the season in the championships at UCLA should be exciting enough to pique the interest of even the more casual gymnastics fan.

Despite its disappointment, Nebraska still has plenty of potential. Chris Riegel and Jim Mikus are set to join former Cornhuskers Jim Hartung and Scott Johnson on the list of NCAA gymnastics champions. Riegel already has enjoyed a taste of the second-place squad based on this average? It is not the Cornhuskers. Ohio State holds the No. 2 spot with a 279.72 mark, followed by Nebraska at 279.47.

The Buckeyes finished fifth a year ago, and juniors Jay Foster, Noah Riskin, David Moskowitz and Tim Muench appear ready to lead a charge for the team title. Even so, the loss to Minnesota in the Big Ten championships may hurt.

Another Big Eight squad with national-championship aspirations is Oklahoma. Like Minnesota, the Sooners already have tasted a championship this season. Mike Sims' score of 9.85 won the conference vaulting title and gave the Sooners a one-tenth-of-a-point victory over Nebraska.

Sims, Mark Oates, Scott Wilbanks and Rob Mahurin have been important members of a squad that has a five-meet regular-season average of 279.01. In winning the Big Eight, Oklahoma managed only two individual victories. Obviously, Oklahoma's depth will be a key at UCLA.

Penn State is the last school to reach the 279-point plateau in the regular-season averages compiled by Young. The Nittany Lions finished third in the championships a year ago and appear to be capable of another title challenge.

Few predictions can be made about the outcome of the championships. It seems safe to say the meet will be very close, and one break in one routine could determine the team champion.

Championships Preview

championships glory; he tied with Oklahoma's Mark Oates for the NCAA vaulting title last year.

Wes Suter, Mike Bowers and Brandon Hull will join Mikus and Riegel in trying to keep the championship trophy in Lincoln.

UCLA wants to give the home crowd something to cheer about. Seniors Tim Daggett and Mitch Gaylord, along with Mark and Chris Caso, have been the catalysts for a team that has averaged 281.58 during the regular season.

This top-ranked average, compiled by Wayne Young, gymnastics coach at Brigham Young and chair of the NCAA Men's Gymnastics Committee, is based on an institution's top five scores during the regular season; at least three of the scores reported to Young for computer compilation must have been totaled during road meets.

Briefly in the News

Paul Steinert, senior pitcher at Florida International University, does not make a habit of taking on difficult situations. Nonetheless, Steinert wishes there were a pair of big shoes to fill on the baseball team this season—his own. Steinert, with a size 16, may have the biggest pair of feet in college baseball, and he can't find a pair of cleats to fit. Head coach Danny Price has searched far and wide, and even baseball shoe manufacturers have swung and missed at Price's requests. Steinert has been using a three-year-old pair of baseball shoes and holding the cleats in place with tape. The Sunblazers are offering a lifetime pass to anyone who can find a home for Steinert's meandering metatarsals, according to Rich Kelch, sports information director. . . George Ockershausen, longtime four-sport coach at East Stroudsburg University of Pennsylvania, has established a scholarship fund to aid ESU athletes. The Doc Ock scholarships will go to student-athletes in the sports that he coached—football, golf, wrestling and baseball. . . Duke University's men's soccer team will play the U.S. Olympic soccer team in the second annual McDonald's Soccer Challenge at 2 p.m. April 15 at the Duke field. "To me, this is the biggest soccer event that's ever happened in the state of North Carolina," says coach John Rennie, whose teams have reached NCAA championships competition the past four seasons.

Grove City College swimming coach Jim Longnecker has produced the school's only National Collegiate Championship team. His divers have won five of the past eight NCAA Division III titles. With specialization between swimmers and divers the order of the day in collegiate swimming, Longnecker is a member of that rare breed that still is working with both disciplines. A 27-year veteran at Grove City, Longnecker has produced those champions without the aid of a diving coach. He does not even have an assistant coach. . . Samford University, which dropped its football program after the 1973 season, will reinstitute the sport in 1984 in NCAA Division III. Thomas E. Corts, Samford president, said, "Interested alumni, fans and former players have suggested that something went out of the Samford experience when football was dropped. A football Saturday on a lovely fall afternoon is a great campus event. It's great for the students. Our decision to reinstitute football is prompted by our desire to offer a well-rounded university experience." . . . Talk about playing for nothing. Women's softball teams from Northern Iowa University and Oklahoma City University played to a scoreless tie after 26 innings over a four-hour period March 15 in Oklahoma City. The game, called because of darkness, will not be completed. Lori Cook of Northern Iowa and Tina Gailey of Oklahoma City went the distance.

Championship reaches milestone

The NCAA Division III Men's Basketball Championship celebrated its 10-year anniversary during half time at the 1984 championship final March 17 in Grand Rapids, Michigan. Recognized during the ceremonies were former members of the NCAA Division III Men's Basketball Committee, four of whom were present—Paul Maaske, Cornell College; Leon Eastlack, Colorado College; Russ DeVette, Hope, and Russ Granger, Clark (Massachusetts).

North Park coach Dan McCarrell was named the tournament's coach of the decade. McCarrell led North Park to championships in 1978, 1979 and 1980.

Two of McCarrell's former players, Michael Payne and Michael Thomas, were named to the all-time all-tournament team. Payne was named the most outstanding player in the 1978 and 1979 tournaments, and Thomas was chosen for the same honor in 1980.

Rounding out the all-time team were three other former tournament most valuable players—Rick White, Wittenberg, 1977; Derrick Rowland, Potsdam State, 1981, and Pete Metzelaars, Wabash, 1982.

North Park and Scranton, the 1976 and 1983 champion, have won the title more than once. Other winners were LeMoyne-Owen (1975), Wittenberg (1977), Potsdam State (1981), Wabash (1982) and Wisconsin-Whitewater (1984).

Based on winning percentage, the quality of the field also has improved. The 28 entries in the inaugural championship in 1975 had a winning percentage of .731, a mark that improved to .797 for this year's 32-team field. "Probably the greatest advantage of this championship is its ability to be so meaningful to so many institutions, because it provides an opportunity for teams to get into postseason play," said Will Renken, director of athletics and men's basketball coach at Albright, who chaired the first Division III Basketball Committee. "Even today, we need to get more teams involved in postseason play." In the 10 years of the championship, 128 institutions have participated, representing more than 41 percent of the Division III membership.

Legislative Assistance

Exceptions to transfer rules

Recently, the NCAA Administrative Committee approved three interpretations concerning 1984 Convention Proposal Nos. 72 and 74 (Bylaws 5-1-(m)-(14) and 5-1-(m)-(13), respectively, 1984-85 NCAA Manual). These interpretations, which will be reviewed by the NCAA Council at its April meeting, are as follows:

1. The nonrenewal of a student-athlete's financial assistance specified in Bylaw 5-1-(m)-(14) (ii) must be for reasons unrelated to the student's transfer from that institution; e.g., the student would not qualify under that condition if the nonrenewal occurred after it was learned that the student was planning to transfer.
2. To meet the conditions of Bylaw 5-1-(m)-(14)(iii), the transferring student must be one who would have been eligible had he or she remained at the institution from which the student transferred, and he or she also must be eligible at the certifying institution under the provisions of Constitution 3-3-(a).
3. The first student-athletes who are permitted to take advantage of the provisions of either Bylaw 5-1-(m)-(13) or 5-1-(m)-(14) are those who begin regular attendance at the certifying institution after the August 1, 1984, effective date of the legislation.

Eligibility at Division II institutions

The Administrative Committee also affirmed that beginning in the fall term of the 1984-85 academic year, Division II institutions must apply to regular-season competition eligibility rules at least as stringent as those of Bylaw 5 that are applicable to Division II [per Bylaw 11-2-(d)]; therefore, a transfer student who was eligible to participate in regular-season competition in 1983-84 under the rules of the institution or conference without meeting the one-year residence requirement set forth in Bylaw 5-1-(j)-(7) would have to complete that requirement before becoming eligible in 1984-85.

The Administrative Committee noted that this ruling was applied consistently to Divisions I and III institutions when those divisions began to apply Bylaw 5 eligibility rules to in-season competition. This interpretation also will be reviewed by the Council, as well as the Division II Steering Committee, this month.

Five-year rule

On page 81 of the 1984-85 NCAA Manual, Case No. 270 is mistakenly cited as applying to Bylaw 4-1-(a)-(1). Case No. 270 is actually an interpretation concerning Bylaw 4-1-(a)-(2). Similarly, the case (page 319) mistakenly refers to Bylaw 4-1-(a)-(1) rather than Bylaw 4-1-(a)-(2). This legislation applies only to a student-athlete's eligibility at Division I member institutions. Please make a note of these corrections.

but rejected the three-point play (77 percent against). Steitz noted that coaches and conferences that had used a shot clock overwhelmingly favored the use of a clock by a greater percentage than did the entire coaching fraternity.

Steitz also said the committee would continue to encourage experimentation with a rear-boundary arc, a concept that would reduce the area of the front court. The committee views this as a possible alternative to a shot clock; however, this concept has not been tested significantly.

Conferences wishing to conduct experiments during the 1984-85 season should submit a written application to Jerry V. Krause, men's basketball coach, Eastern Washington University, by August 1.

Senator questions fairness of grants-in-aid

Sen. Howard M. Metzenbaum (D-Ohio) will hold a hearing in April to decide whether to propose legislation that would require colleges to continue grants-in-aid for athletes until they receive their degrees or stop making progress toward them.

Since 1973, the NCAA has required its member institutions to renew scholarships or grants-in-aid on or before July 1 of each academic year.

In accordance with Constitution 3-4-(g), the institution is to notify the student-athlete whether a scholarship or grant-in-aid has been renewed, and the student-athlete has the opportunity for a hearing before the institution making the financial award.

position of conference coordinator for the transition of women's sports into the conference structure.

Suzanne Stogner, who was appointed to that position, says it is not a question of whether those schools with minimal numbers of women's sports will add other sports to their programs; it is only a matter of the order in which the sports will be added, she says.

"Our women (administrators and coaches) are dedicated, and our conference has made a commitment toward the growth of women's programs," Stogner says.

"Our women have come through the ranks, and our programs are led by women with long experience. The 1984-85 sports seasons will include women's sports as official SEC activities," she said. Stogner is a former sports information director at Birmingham-Southern College.

At the University of Nebraska, Lincoln, women's athletics director June B. Davis says, "Women's programs are well-entrenched enough to maintain a good level of growth. The awareness of women's athletics over the years has brought about increased support, now that women's programs are a positive part of the educational system for women.

"Title IX does not have much to do with women's athletics at this stage," Davis says.

In the Southwest Athletic Conference, which voted to incorporate women's programs into the conference structure about two years ago, assistant commissioner Hal Lahar says women's sports are building a following in the league.

He says conference members point with pride to the national championships won by women's teams—Texas A&M in softball; Texas Christian University in golf, and the University of Texas, Austin, in swimming—in the past two years. "Women's basketball at Texas also is a source of pride for the conference," Lahar said.

He emphasized that there is a commitment to women's programs in the conference, and he says further growth in women's programs is anticipated.

Currently, the nine conference institutions sponsor an average of 7.1 women's sports.

At the University of Southern California, women's athletics director Barbara Hedges says, "In my opinion, our university has made a commitment to men's and women's sports, and it has an obligation to maintain those programs. I would be awfully surprised if the budget were reduced in light of recent court actions." Hedges is chair of the NCAA Women's Tennis Committee.

Although some institutions are having budget problems, there is no indication that men's programs will be favored over women's for any proposed cutbacks.

At Stanford University, it has been we're giving them enough in return," said Joel Johnson, legislative assistant to Metzenbaum. "What we're considering is something along the lines of requiring universities to make a commitment to an athlete to provide an education until he or she graduates, as long as the student is working toward a degree." Metzenbaum is a member of the Labor and Human Resources Committee.

John L. Toner, athletics director at the University of Connecticut and president of the NCAA, said one-year renewable scholarships have not created a problem, and he believes the issue should be considered first by the NCAA.

"This has not been enough of a concern on the part of our members that it was brought to the attention

Convention voted for equality in numbers of women's sports

Delegates to the 1984 NCAA Convention in Dallas approved legislation (Proposal Nos. 109 and 111) to increase the minimum sponsorship of women's sports as criteria for membership in Divisions I and II.

Proposal No. 109, approved by a vote of 141 to 126, requires that Division I member institutions sponsor a minimum of six women's sports during the 1985-86 academic year, seven women's sports in 1986-87, and eight women's sports for the 1987-88 academic year and thereafter.

Division II members approved, with no count necessary, Proposal No. 111, which requires member institutions to sponsor five women's sports in 1986-87 and six such sports during the 1987-88 academic year and thereafter.

According to figures compiled by S. Patricia Walden, NCAA administrative assistant working with women's issues, the average number of women's sports being sponsored in 1983-84 at Division I-A institutions is 8.3. There are 70 institutions sponsoring eight or more women's sports, and 34 institutions sponsor seven or fewer women's sports in Division I-A.

The average number of women's sports in Division I-AA is 7.3, with 36 member institutions sponsoring eight or more women's sports and 47 members sponsoring seven or fewer sports for women.

In the nonfootball-playing portion of Division I, the average number of women's sports is 5.7. Eighteen institutions sponsor eight or more women's sports, and 71 members are sponsoring seven or fewer.

In Division II, there is an average number of 6.2 women's sports per institution, with 132 members sponsoring five or more women's sports and 70 schools sponsoring four or fewer women's teams. The overall Division II figure in 1982-83 was 5.8. In 1981-82 it was 5.5.

estimated that the athletics budget may be as much as $1.7 million in the red, "depending on how one looks at the figures," says Steve Raczynski, sports information director. He expects certain "trimming measures," which are under consideration, to be in effect for fall.

Whatever cuts are made, they will be on an equal basis, and women's programs will not be shoved out the back door, Raczynski says. Stanford has 14 varsity sports for men and 10 for women.

In terms of the funding that has been available to Cardinal teams, Raczynski says there are "no complaints when it comes to schools on our level."

Stanford's level, of course, is the top of the intercollegiate athletics heap.

When considering the overall status of women's intercollegiate athletics around the country, some women administrators say they are concerned about the apparent abridgment of Title IX powers, although to what extent still is uncertain.

Betty W. Miles, associate athletics director at Drake University, says, "There are some programs where women administrators are in control, and they won't be affected (by any watering-down of Title IX powers); there are other programs whose women administrators have never taken control, and they are in trouble." Miles is a member of the Division I Women's Basketball Committee.

Looking at women's intercollegiate athletics as a whole, Mikki Flowers, assistant director of athletics at Old Dominion University and chair of the NCAA Field Hockey Committee, says, "Some programs are still looking for stability, and many cannot yet stand on their own two feet. But there are more programs that have more credibility on their own campuses now than in previous years.

"Some programs are coming along and reaching the point of acceptance in their own right and not because of the government's saying that's the way it should be. Top programs are, or have been, accepted and have presidential support as programs in their own right and not because of government pressure. They attempted to reach a level of credibility earlier and not because of Title IX. They had presidential support and thought it philosophically was the right thing to do."

Flowers also sees a strong commitment to women's sports in NCAA Division III. The problems, she says, are in Division II, where athletic ambitions often are outstripped by economic realities.

Part of the answer, Flowers believes, is in promotion.

"Women's programs have to promote themselves, but the bottom line is respect and acceptance for what you are doing, not because of what you can do for someone else."

She is optimistic that "women's programs are improving and support for them is improving. Administrators are becoming more knowledgeable, too," she says.

natives for increasing the scholarship or grant-in-aid assistance available to student-athletes.

"For Congress to get involved in something of this nature is an unnecessary intrusion into activities that are far less significant than those activities that Congress should be devoting its time to," Scott said.
