I-A play-off issue referred to summer meetings

The NCAA Council has referred the issue of establishing a Division I-A football play-off to the Division I-A midyear legislative meeting, the Division I summer meeting and the NCAA Presidents' Commission.

Meeting April 16-18 in Kansas City, the Council received a detailed report on the concept of a Division

I-A football championship from the Postseason Football Committee and its subcommittee that was appointed to consider the feasibility of such a play-off. The Council complimented the subcommittee on the thoroughness of its report.

Carl C. James, commissioner of the Big Eight Conference and a member of the Postseason Football Committee, presented the report of its play-off subcommittee, which was chaired by DeLoss Dodds, director of athletics at the University of Texas, Austin. James emphasized to the Council that neither the committee nor the subcommittee was recommending that a play-off be established.

"The Postseason Football Committee took no action on the subcommittee report except to forward it to the Council," James said. "The committee's position is just that if a play-off were adopted, here is the best format."

The Council also did not discuss the merits of establishing a Division I-A play-off.

"It's a big issue," NCAA President John L. Toner said. "In referring it to the Divisions I and I-A summer meetings and the Presidents' Commission—which we hope will be able to meet this summer—the Council's attitude is that we should develop as much information as possible. We will take it to the members and let them give the Council their recommendations."

The football play-off issue was one of several major topics covered at the April meeting, the Council's first full meeting since the 1984 Convention. The Council also voted to approve a player-agent registration form and approved in concept a drug-testing program as directed by 1984 Convention adoption of a resolution sponsored by the Pacific-10 Conference. (See separate stories on those issues beginning elsewhere on this page.)

Another major agenda item was a review of the establishment of the first NCAA Presidents' Commission.

Ryan elected Commission chair

John W. Ryan, president of Indiana University, Bloomington, has been elected to serve as the first chair of the new NCAA Presidents' Commission.

He was elected by the members of the Commission in a balloting procedure that was completed Tuesday (April 24). Eight members of the Commission were nominated for the position and none received a majority on the first ballot earlier this month.

The top three vote-getters on that ballot then were recirculated to the Commission members, and Ryan received the highest number of votes.

Members of the Commission are being notified of Ryan's election this week. At the same time, they are being asked to nominate candidates to serve as chairs of the Divisions I, II and III subcommittees of the Commission. Each member will be permitted to nominate and eventually vote for an individual from his or her own division. The same balloting procedure used to select the Commission chair will be used.

Ryan, selected by the Big Ten Conference to be its representative on the Commission, will serve as chair for a two-year term.

He has been president of Indiana University since 1971 and is a past chair of the Association of American Universities. Prior to accepting the presidency, he was vice-president and chancellor for Indiana's regional campuses.

He also has served as an administrator at the University of Massachusetts, Boston; Arizona State University; the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, and the University of Wisconsin, Madison.

The Chicago native earned his bachelor's degree at the University of Utah and a masters and Ph.D. at Indiana.

All aspects of women's programs to be discussed in May meeting

About 300 primary women administrators of athletics programs are expected to attend the NCAA women's meeting May 30-31 at the Hyatt Regency O'Hare in Chicago. The meeting was mandated by the passage of Proposal No. 42 at the 1984 NCAA Convention.

The general session, to be chaired by NCAA President John L. Toner, begins at 2 p.m. May 30, followed by division meetings. All sessions will be continued May 31, with adjournment scheduled for 3 p.m. Information regarding registration and reservations was mailed to member institutions April 23. Agenda topics were taken from survey material that was returned to the national office.

An agenda for the meeting was completed, with the use of survey results, by the NCAA Special Committee on Women's Interests, which met April 16-18 in Kansas City. The ranking of topics was calculated for all three divisions.

The priority order under legislation was eligibility, recruiting, playing and practice seasons, academic requirements, championships, governance, financial aid, membership and classification, personnel limitations, and amateurism. Discussion topics, in order of priority, are sports-committee functions, championships, organization and operation of the NCAA, strategies for legislation, enforcement procedures, committee involvement, and financial operations.

Canham appointed

John D. Swofford, director of athletics at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, has been named by the NCAA Council as the new chair of the NCAA Football Television Committee, effective immediately.

Swofford replaces Hugh D. Hindman, who has resigned as athletics director at Ohio State University. The Council appointed Donald B. Canham, director of athletics at the University of Michigan, to take Hindman's place on the committee.

Currently in his fourth year as athletics director at North Carolina, Swofford has built a well-rounded athletics program that has won six national championships during his tenure. Swofford, who has served on the Football Television Committee since 1982, is a 1971 graduate of North Carolina and was a three-year football letterman for the Tar Heels.

Canham previously served on the Football Television Committee from the 1971-72 academic year through 1977-78. He also has served on numerous other NCAA committees, including the Track and Field, Promotion and International Relations Committees and the NCAA's delegations to the U.S. Collegiate Sports Council and the U.S. Track and Field Federation.

Canham was named athletics director at Michigan in 1968. The Wolverines have won 55 Big Ten Conference championships under his leadership and have set several national football attendance records. Canham was an all-conference high jumper as an undergraduate at Michigan and was an assistant track coach in 1946 and 1947 before beginning a 19-year tenure as head track coach.

Swofford's first duty as chair will be directing an April 25 telephone conference, during which the committee and the carrying networks (ABC and CBS) will choose special dates for the 1984 season. Those dates will be announced in the May 2 issue of The NCAA News.

Also upcoming on the committee's schedule are meetings of its administrative subcommittee. While exact dates have not been set, the subcommittee will meet within the next month to begin reviewing principles for current and future television plans, enabling the committee to continue to provide recommendations to the membership regarding football telecasting and cablecasting.

Drug testing endorsed

An NCAA-administered drug-testing program for championships and campus sites has been endorsed by the NCAA Council.

The plan, one of three alternatives included in a preliminary report by the Special NCAA Drug Testing Committee, would include testing for stimulants at championships and random testing of student-athletes in specified sports for anabolic steroids at campus sites during the academic year.

Carl S. Blyth of the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, special committee chair, said this alternative "would probably be less expensive than testing for all drugs at championships and overall would be a much more effective program."

The recommendations were developed after Resolution No. 163 was approved by the 1984 Convention, which directed the development of a plan to test student-athletes for "controlled substances" and "performance-enhancing" drugs. The resolution requires that a proposal be reported to the membership prior to July 1. A recommendation must be ready for consideration by the 1985 Convention, including testing procedures and a list of prohibited substances.

Other alternatives presented in the preliminary report involved testing for all drugs at NCAA championships or

Player-agent plan set

NCAA member institutions soon will be able to obtain accurate information about player agents through a player-agent registration program adopted by the NCAA Council during its April 16-18 meeting in Kansas City.

The Council approved a program originally adopted by the Special Committee on Player Agents enabling individuals interested in serving as player agents to register with the Association.

Registering with the NCAA, a player agent would agree to notify the director of athletics, or a designated representative, at a member institution before contacting an enrolled student-athlete who has eligibility remaining. Lists of registered agents then would be available to NCAA member institutions.

"This is not a referral service, and we have no intention at this point of certifying agents," said John H. Leavens, assistant director of legislative services, who will be responsible for implementing the program. "This is a process for bringing information about agents to light. It is the first step in gathering information so that we can make some objective analyses. All information we have about player agents thus far is by

College baseball gaining in quality, popularity

By Cindy Morris
USA Today

On a warm February evening, 5,127 people pack the University of Miami (Florida) baseball stadium for one of the best shows in town.

Mickey Mantle throws out the first pitch under the glittering lights. A Miami attorney wins a color television during a fifth-inning giveaway. An orange-and-yellow mascot, "The Maniac," dances to "Beat It" and "New York, New York." And amid the hoopla, the Miami Hurricanes, one of the slickest teams in college baseball, whip up a 7-0 victory against rival Florida State.

"When Miami had a Triple A team in the mid-50s, it wasn't as much fun as this," said fan Martin Wales Jr., "unless Satchel Paige was pitching."

The start of Major League Baseball and United States Football League seasons have grabbed the headlines, but college baseball is the name of the game for growing numbers of people across the United States. The wave of enthusiasm begins every February in the warm-weather states and sweeps north as the cold-weather clubs stage opening days.

College baseball traditionally has been a money-loser. But attendance roughly doubled in the past five years to about eight million, according to Allan Simpson, editor of Baseball America. As a result, many top NCAA Division I schools are closing in on balanced budgets.

Miami, which drew 55,687 fans in 1978, set an unofficial record of 163,261 in 1981 and has led the nation in attendance since. Even with a $480,000 budget, the team makes money.

The University of Texas, Austin, the defending national champion, drew 112,775 fans last year and generated $250,000, enough to break even. Athletics director DeLoss Dodds expects higher sales this year; 1,200 season tickets already are gone, 33 percent more than last year.

Even at the University of Michigan, which plays only day games because many nights are too cold, up to 5,000 often jam the stadium.

Baseball, said Arizona State University athletics director Richard league quality lighting, electronic scoreboards and seating for up to 8,000;

•Media coverage has risen dramatically. Most major teams have radio coverage of home and away games and some coverage by local cable stations. To the delight of ESPN, the national cable sports network, last year's College World Series broadcast was viewed in more than 750,000 homes. ESPN will air its fifth series in June from Omaha, for the first time and no first-round picks. In 1981, all of the Houston Astros' 30 selections in the draft came from the college ranks. And by last year, 67 percent of first-time draftees and 15 of 26 first-round picks were collegians.

Whether a player should go to college or directly into the minors is a hot topic. Texas coach Cliff Gustafson said if players "select a college with a good program, they can probably advance more quickly through college than in lower minor leagues."

But some scouts disagree. "We never pass up the colleges," said Thomas Giordano, director of player development for the Baltimore Orioles. But with younger players, "we feel if they're going into pro baseball, the pros should teach them from the beginning. In other words, if you have to go to the doctor, don't go to the pharmacist."

Yet for many young men, the advantages of college are overwhelming. Miami's Weinstein calls the major leagues "almost a closed shop based on good luck and ability."

College also can be more comfortable and exciting than the minors. "We're spoiled compared to minor-leaguers," said UCLA outfielder Shane Mack, regarded as the likely No. 1 draft pick in June. "We ride on planes."

The college route might not be any faster than the minors, but it is a proven one. When Bob Horner, third baseman for the Atlanta Braves, was drafted out of high school, he was offered $8,000. After three years at Arizona State, he signed in 1978 for $225,000 and was instantly on the Braves' roster.

"If the money's there when a kid's in high school," said Arizona State coach Jim Brock, "it'll be there when he's in college. We'll develop him just the way the minors would."

"And if he doesn't make it to the major leagues, he'll have an education. That's what we sell."

Columnary Craft

Tamburo, is "one of the main sports on campus. In the spring, it's the one."

College coaches and scouts say this is because:

•More talented youths are choosing college instead of the minor leagues when they are first drafted out of high school. Half the University of Texas squad was drafted but opted to remain in school. (Under major-league rules, players cannot be drafted again until after their junior year.) Arizona State's roster includes sophomore outfielder Barry Bonds, son of former San Francisco Giants player Bobby Bonds and a second-round draft pick out of high school, who turned down a $90,000 offer from San Francisco;

•Coaching has improved, and there are more assistant coaches. University of Miami coach Ron Fraser got his first full-time assistant in 1976 and now has two, including Jerry Weinstein, former Milwaukee Brewers farm team instructor;

•Administrations are springing for new ballparks that feature major-

Nebraska, and for the first time will broadcast a game of the week for seven weeks;

•Colleges are playing longer, tougher schedules. Clubs in warm climates play up to 100 games in the spring and fall—only 40 short of a minor-league schedule.

Miami's Fraser also has stirred excitement. He was the first college baseball coach to double as salesman and promoter. He once staged a $5,000-a-plate fund-raiser on the diamond and, during one game, cut a promotion deal on the dugout telephone.

Miami games, Fraser said, are "40 percent baseball, 60 percent entertainment." Giveaways at Mark Light Stadium in the past few years included a $42,000 Mercedes, trips to New York and Las Vegas, Nevada, and free open-heart surgery.

In addition to the hoopla, collegiate baseball gets an A-plus, according to the toughest judge—the June draft.

In 1971, college talent accounted for only four of 10 players drafted

Letter to the Editor

To the Editor:

It seems that every so often I read something in the news that rankles me, and your excerpt from Charles Baird of Cal State Hayward did that. It rankles me more so that there were parts that I had to agree with, after some of his statements were obviously ill-stated. I only wish I had read his entire article so as not to brand him for something he may or may not have said.

I agree that taxpayers should bail out no private college—white or black. There is enough money in this country that such should not be necessary. Educators who seek as their first and foremost goal to educate students and who use their positions to secure all methods of raising money for that purpose have kept their schools more than afloat. I, too, have been critical of boards of trustees and presidents of some of these colleges who have perceived their roles as the "great savior" of the institution instead of doing what their roles call for. This may have been truer in earlier days than at present as we begin to see the "business side" of any college.

I am very much in disagreement with Mr. Baird on the service to students. Black colleges serve a unique function in American society—they take what our society deems as unfit for the high-pressured world we live in and prepare students to meet its challenges. Evidently, Mr. Baird has not traveled through the areas that these colleges were founded in. The people were deprived at their inception and, I submit, most of those deprived then are deprived now. To continue the slogan, "A Mind Is a Terrible Thing to Waste," has always been the goal and role of the black college.

Better than 70 percent of America's Blacks in the corporate structure are graduates of black colleges; better than 80 percent in education are products of black colleges, and those who participate in professional athletics who come from black colleges have degrees at a ratio of better than 3:1 than those from white institutions. Black colleges have served their students well and prepared them to the maximum of both the school's and the student's ability. The contrary implication is one built from sheer nonsense.

Donors are another source. Black alumni are reactors and, as with black students, generally become active upon necessity rather than over the long haul. They don't have much to give when caught up with the lifestyle they may desire or be forced to live. Blacks are survivors of the American society and so are black colleges. They most often do what they have to do. They don't own General Motors, a Kellogg Foundation, IBM, Xerox and other great conglomerates—rather they must seek these types of firms out for help. One thing is basic—if black colleges don't ask for help, there is usually not nearly enough coming in from alumni or philanthropic donors. I have never been naive enough to believe that Shaw University, St. Augustine's, J. C. Smith and Livingstone, four of the black private schools in North Carolina, could collectively match the donors of any two white private colleges. I should hope those who question the implications of black college problems would be no less naive, but not being Black or having lived in the black environment would really not give a true picture.

Lastly, I take issue with the statement that "Black students probably recognize that the path to success is more certain through unsegregated colleges than through those that do not reflect the real world."

"The real world," Mr. Baird, is that Black is still Black and not regarded as being intelligent or worthwhile. They must continually prove themselves, regardless.

The path to success for a white youth could be where he or she comes from; for the black youth, it's where he or she wants to go and how bad he or she wants to get there. The unsegregated school does not show that real world in its truest sense; but then, colleges should not be so dramatized. My only retort to anyone who questions whether black students attend black colleges for sentimentality is to say that we take students "where they are and will carry them where they want to be." Tain't so otherwise.

Black colleges must exist as long as America maintains a dual society. There can be no other way.

"I have to live with myself. I know what my strong and weak points are. I think I do a very good job of getting the best out of basketball players. That's what I've always said I wanted my eventual reputation to be—that I was a coach who got the very best out of his players."

"College football, despite dire predictions to the contrary, will survive without major damage from the recent court ruling that opened doors for undergraduates to enter professional football.

"At first, I shared the view of many of my former colleagues that the Federal court judgment would rock the very pillars of the college game. Further reflection, however, leads me to believe that pros will limit their raids to only a few gifted players in skilled positions. The effect will be damaging but not terminal."

"Division III football concentrates on the student-athlete concept, and most players are not concerned with a career in professional football. There are no athletic scholarships, no spring practice or compulsory conditioning programs.

"Division III football is the microcosm of Division I, yet the coach's responsibilities are magnified. In most cases, Division III coaches carry teaching loads and coach other sports. Chances are that you operate without such allied help as graduate assistants, strength coaches, special secretaries, academic counselors, managers, trainers, and travel and equipment managers. The Division III coach must concern himself with the "socks and jocks" program. For 14 of my 15 years as head football coach, I operated without a certified, full-time trainer. Last fall, we hired our first."

"I heard people (presumably other coaches) in the stands around me criticizing Guy (Houston coach Lewis), people who never had been able to get one team to this tournament in their life. They're sitting there criticizing this man who was coaching for the fifth time in the Final Four.

"I just couldn't believe it. Let me just say this: If Guy Lewis can't coach and yet he gets his teams here five times, then I hope I catch whatever he's got."

UCLA favored for '84 men's volleyball title

When UCLA volleyball coach Al Scates said this year's team "should start faster and be stronger in the end" than his 1983 team that won the NCAA Men's Volleyball Championship, he still may have been underestimating the Bruins' potential.

UCLA has been unbeatable, compiling a 35-0 overall record and clinching the California Intercollegiate Volleyball Association title with a 17-0 mark. The regular-season finale against California-Santa Barbara was the only game standing in the way of an undefeated regular season for UCLA.

Regardless of the outcome of that game, UCLA has clinched the CIVA title and a West region berth in the NCAA championship, which it will host May 4-5.

Joining UCLA in the four-team, single-elimination tournament will be one team each from the East and Midwest regions and one at-large selection.

The at-large berth will go to the winner of a tournament involving Pepperdine, Southern California, Long Beach State and California-Santa Barbara.

Pepperdine, ranked second in the latest Volleyball News poll, had an 18-6 record in mid-April and has what many feel is the best chance to keep UCLA from an 11th title in the 15-year history of the championship.

The Waves, led by all-America setter Jeff Stork, served notice that they are a contender by defeating Manitoba, a top Canadian team, this season.

Southern California, out of championship contention since 1977, has made dramatic improvement after a seventh-place CIVA finish last year. The third-ranked Trojans were 25-9.

The Midwest berth is up for grabs between Ohio State and 10th-ranked Ball State. Ohio State came on strong late last year to edge Ball State for the Midwest berth, but the Buckeyes might not be as good this year. Ball State, an experienced team, defeated the Buckeyes in four games earlier this season.

George Mason has been a surprise, emerging as the top team in the East region ahead of Penn State. The seventh-ranked Patriots had a 36-3 record late in the season and have defeated Penn State, Ball State and Ohio State. George Mason never has appeared in the final four.

Penn State, fourth last year, could edge George Mason for the East berth. The Nittany Lions have a strong front line and several players with play-off experience.

UCLA - which returns five starters including all-Americans Ricci Luyties, the most outstanding player of last year's championship, and powerful 6-6 hitter Doug Partie - features a strong blocking game and an explosive offense. The Bruins have no starters under 6-4.

UCLA has demonstrated its strength against Pepperdine and Southern California. The Bruins rallied from large deficits in both matches. Against Southern California, UCLA scored 13 consecutive points to overcome a 12-2 Trojan margin.

UCLA's Ricci Luyties (11) and Doug Partie (20)

Legislative Assistance

Financial assistance from sports national governing bodies

Recently, numerous questions have arisen related to the provision of financial support to an individual for training and other expenses by national governing bodies (NGBs) in various sports and to the establishment of individual trust funds for an individual's training and competitive expenses. In light of the differences between NCAA legislation and the regulations of some NGBs, institutions are reminded that the provisions of Constitution 3-1-(a) would be applicable to such activities and could affect an individual's eligibility for intercollegiate athletics competition at an NCAA member institution.

In this regard, Official Interpretation 2 (page 9, 1984-85 NCAA Manual) provides that any expenses received from an outside amateur sports team or organization (e.g., an NGB) in excess of actual and necessary travel and meal expenses for practice and game competition shall be considered pay. Under the provisions of Constitution 3-1-(a)-(1), an individual shall not be eligible for participation in an intercollegiate sport if the individual takes or has taken pay, or has accepted the promise of pay, in any form, for participation in that sport, including the promise of pay when such pay is to be received following completion of the individual's intercollegiate career.

In other words, it is not permissible for an individual to receive room and board and ongoing training expenses that exceed those permitted in O.I. 2. As an example, if an individual resides 10 miles from the practice location, the individual could receive the actual expenses incurred to travel 10 miles each way between the individual's residence and the training location. In addition, the individual could receive actual and necessary expenses (e.g., transportation, room and board) to travel to other sites for practice or for any competition in which the individual participates.

In recent years, international amateur organizations have modified their amateur regulations to permit individuals to establish trust funds to be administered by the NGB in the involved sport. For the most part, these trusts permit funds received by an athlete for participation in domestic or international competition and other donations on behalf of the athlete (including funds paid for a commercial endorsement or for use of a particular manufacturer's equipment) to be placed in the trust on account for the athlete. On some occasions, the funds deposited for competition would not be limited to actual and necessary expenses and could be related to the athlete's place finish in the competition.

In addition to the restrictions of Constitution 3-1-(a), Constitution 3-1-(c) prohibits student-athletes from being involved in commercial endorsements and Constitution 3-1-(i)-(1)-(v) requires that awards received by student-athletes conform to NCAA legislation.

Interpretations of this legislation make it clear that an individual cannot protect his or her collegiate eligibility by designating that the improper expenses, cash or comparable prizes be forwarded to another individual or organization (such as a proposed trust). This would be the case even if the funds were held in a trust account until the student-athlete had exhausted his or her intercollegiate eligibility. Further, even though a cash award may be permitted by the recognized amateur organization of the sport in question, its receipt by a student-athlete would render the individual ineligible for intercollegiate competition.

Basketball recruiting calendar

Institutions are reminded of the following changes in the basketball contact and evaluation periods for Divisions I and II member institutions. [Note: In-person contacts and scouting activities in connection with the recruitment of prospective student-athletes for an institution's women's intercollegiate basketball team shall be exempt from provisions of Bylaw 1-2-(a)-(5) and 1-3 until August 1, 1984, in Division I and until August 1, 1985, in Division II.]

As set forth in Bylaws 1-2-(a)-(5) and (6), off-campus, in-person contacts with prospective student-athletes shall be permissible in the sport of basketball only during the period between September 1 and October 10 and the period between March 1 (or the date of the completion of the prospective student-athlete's final high school or junior college contest, if it occurs thereafter) and May 15, except for the period surrounding the National Collegiate Division I Men's Basketball Championship game.

As set forth in Bylaw 1-3, the involvement of institutional staff members or representatives of athletics interests in off-campus scouting activities designed to evaluate the academic standing and playing ability of prospective student-athletes in the sport of basketball shall be restricted to the permissible periods for off-campus, in-person recruiting contacts in that sport, with the following exceptions: Such scouting activities also shall be permissible during the period between June 15 and August 1 and the period between the prospective student-athlete's initial and final high school or junior college contest.

Stringer spurs interest at Iowa

By Rick Klatt

During a press conference about a year ago to announce her appointment as head women's basketball coach, C. Vivian Stringer said she could see the day when the University of Iowa's Carver-Hawkeye Arena would be filled to capacity for a women's game.

Stringer's first Hawkeye team did not fill Iowa's 15,000-seat basketball facility. However, it did establish the attendance standard for the Big Ten Conference while enjoying its most successful season in years.

Iowa's high-water attendance mark of 7,130 was the March 2 home finale against Northwestern. That turnout erased the previous high of 6,499 (set at Iowa, January 29) and pushed the Hawkeyes' home-attendance average to 3,382—a 2,700-plus improvement over a year ago.

"The enthusiasm everyone has shown is more than any coach could ask for. Everyone knows that behind every successful program are great fans. We have great fans here at the University of Iowa," Stringer said.

Stringer has indeed provided Iowa with a winner. The 1983-84 Hawkeyes finished with a 17-10 record. The 1982-83 record was 7-20. In the Big Ten, Iowa improved from 2-16 a year ago to 11-7 and a third-place finish this season.

Iowa was a tough opponent in its one-year-old arena. The Hawkeyes lost only their season opener to Drake and a midseason game to Ohio State, the Big Ten champion.

Much of the credit for the Hawkeyes' turnaround is aimed at Stringer, and rightly so. She is a charismatic person who excels at getting the most out of her players. What her players lacked in talent, they replaced with a burning desire to win for their coach.

And winning is something Stringer came to enjoy while coaching at Cheyney University of Pennsylvania. She compiled a remarkable record of 251-51 in 11 years before making the move to the Midwest. She also led the Wolves to a second-place finish in the first NCAA Division I Women's Basketball Championship in 1982.

Her goal as Iowa's head coach was clearly outlined: "Iowa is a sleeping giant. We hope to bring the program to the level of national prominence in women's athletics and certainly on a par with the (Iowa) men's program."

Stringer wasted little time instilling in her Hawkeyes what she called "the learned behavior of winning." After dropping the opener to Drake, Iowa won a school-record six in a row.

The experience at Iowa seems to indicate that with the right combination of coaching, dedicated student-athletes, promotion and commitment from the administration, fans will respond. In short, it is proof that the future is indeed bright for all women's basketball programs.

"In the not-so-distant future, Iowa will have a program the rest of the country will envy," Stringer says, without a trace of hesitation.

Some will argue it already does.

Klatt is women's sports information director at Iowa.

Honors nomination deadline is July 1

Nominations for several awards presented during the NCAA Convention honors program must be submitted to the Association's national office by July 1. Included are nominations for the Theodore Roosevelt Award, the highest honor the NCAA can confer on an individual; nominations for the Silver Anniversary awards, and nominations from winter and spring sports for Today's Top Five awards.

The Theodore Roosevelt Award is named after the former president, whose concern for the conduct of intercollegiate athletics led to the formation of the NCAA in 1906. It is presented annually to a distinguished citizen of national reputation and accomplishment who is a former varsity letter-winner and has maintained a continuing interest and concern for physical fitness and competitive sport.

Last year's "Teddy" recipient was Vice Adm. William P. Lawrence, a 1951 graduate of the U.S. Naval Academy. Other former winners include Presidents Dwight D. Eisenhower and Gerald R. Ford.

College Athletics Top Ten: Today's Top Five and Silver Anniversary

awards respectively honor five current student-athletes and five outstanding former student-athletes who graduated 25 years earlier. Both groups are selected on academic achievement and athletics prowess; a distinguished career following graduation is another characteristic of Silver Anniversary winners.

Following completion of this nominating process, a second mailing in the fall will request Today's Top Five nominees from fall sports. Completed forms should be returned to David E. Cawood, assistant executive director, at the NCAA national office.

I-A play-off

The Council voted to approve a set of principles to enunciate the relationship between the Council and the Commission, emphasizing procedures to assure regular cooperation and interchange.

It also voted to refer the following five subjects to the Commission for possible inclusion in the agenda for its first meeting, in addition to the Division I-A football play-off topic:

- Major recommendations of the Select Committee on Athletic Problems and Concerns in Higher Education that have not been acted upon.

- Additional academic policies and requirements, including draft legislation—approved in concept by the Division I Steering Committee during the April meeting—to establish an academic auditing procedure in which member institutions would be required to report appropriate academic information annually to the Association in order to be eligible for NCAA championships competition. The information to be reported would reflect institutional practices and student-athletes' compliance with that requirement, and the graduation rate of student-athletes.

- Ways and means of enhancing institutional control of athletics programs and institutional observance of NCAA legislation. The Council will forward to the Commission a statement in that regard by Charles Alan Wright, University of Texas, Austin, and Frank J. Remington, University of Wisconsin, Madison, the immediate past chair and current chair, respectively, of the NCAA Infractions Committee.

- The NCAA membership structure, including past efforts to enhance a federated approach to legislation.

- Ways and means of controlling heightened costs of major intercollegiate athletics programs.

The Council emphasized that the football play-off issue should be considered especially by the Division I-A members of the Presidents' Commission.

A listing of all actions taken by the Council and the division steering committees in the April meeting will appear in the May 2 issue of The NCAA News. Other highlights included these:

Postseason Football

The Council voted to approve 1984-85 certifications of the same 16 postseason football games that were conducted last year. It voted to direct the Postseason Football Committee to assure that all approved bowl games met all of their obligations under NCAA legislation and committee policies before recommending them for recertification in the future.

Noting that the play-off issue could affect the future of some bowl games, the Council deferred action on two proposed new games—The Cherry Bowl in Detroit, Michigan, and the Freedom Bowl in Anaheim, California—until after the Divisions I and I-A June meetings discuss the play-off matter and a suggestion that a moratorium be established on certification of any new games.

In a related action, the Council voted to sponsor legislation at the 1985 Convention to delete Bylaws 2-2(j) and (k) from the postseason football legislation, which would eliminate the regulations on when invitations to participate in a postseason game may be extended and accepted.

Conventions

The Council received a report from the Special Committee on Convention Operations, which also will be reviewed by the Executive Committee in its May 7-8 meeting. The Council noted that the special committee does not recommend use of electronic voting on every issue at the NCAA Conventions and that the committee will continue to investigate use of a card system or a "mark sense" system for roll-call votes.

"Although electronic voting should be accomplished more quickly and accurately, it would change the character and perhaps the integrity of the Convention," NCAA Secretary-Treasurer John R. Davis, chair of the special committee, reported. "It would eliminate the traditional 'open voting' by show of paddles and make every issue, in effect, either a secret ballot or a roll-call vote." Davis also noted that the projected cost of an electronic voting system for all issues probably would approach $400,000.

The special committee also will submit legislation for consideration by the Council in August to permit voting in a division round table on matters applying only to that division. If sponsored and adopted at the 1985 Convention, the round-table provision would be effective for the 1986 Convention.

Other Actions

The Council appointed persons to fill vacancies on the Nominating Committee and the Men's and Women's Committees on Committees and elected a chair of each of those committees. Those appointments will be reported in the May 2 issue of The NCAA News.

In response to concerns voiced by individuals at member institutions in regard to the possible effect of the recent Supreme Court decision regarding the scope of Title IX, the Council unanimously adopted the following statement: "The NCAA Council reaffirms its commitment to the continued support and development of men's and women's athletics programs at its member institutions."

The Council voted to sponsor most of the amendments it sponsored at the 1984 Convention that were defeated or not considered. Those will be listed in the summary of all Council actions in the May 2 issue of the News.

sicians, pharmacologists and a staff member of the laboratory doing the testing, would determine whether a positive result was a normal therapeutic dose of a compound on the banned-drug list that was taken for legitimate medical reasons or a dose sufficient to indicate an attempt to enhance performance.

Recommended sanctions have not been determined, Blyth said; however, the committee believes that "if the testing program is to be effective, sanctions must be strong and must affect both the student-athlete and the institution."

The special committee will meet April 26-27 in Chicago to discuss the Council's reaction and to continue development of final recommendations. It is expected that preliminary cost figures will be developed for the NCAA Executive Committee to consider at its May 7-8 meeting.

championships will be effective only for the stimulant drugs that would be taken just prior to competition.

"Such testing will not be effective in discouraging the use of anabolic steroids," he said, "when the student-athlete may go off the drug two months before the championship but use the drug the other 10 months of the year."

Institutions would be notified prior to a proposed campus visit. A collection team would obtain urine specimens from randomly selected student-athletes in specific sports. All institutions would be visited within a specified period, which has not been determined.

To protect student-athletes, the special committee suggests that an adjudication board be organized to review positive test results before administering any sanctions. Members of the board, which might include phywhom player agents have been involved.

"This information will be provided to NCAA institutions and student-athletes and no one else," Leavens said. "We think this program will benefit everyone, including the agents. This will provide an opportunity for the agents to have access to NCAA member institutions' campuses. It will be done on the up-and-up and will be more beneficial for everyone."

This program does not affect any NCAA legislation regarding player agents. According to Constitution 3-1(c), student-athletes are ineligible for intercollegiate athletics if they contract with an agent for the marketing of the student-athlete's individual athletic ability or reputation.

The player-agent registration program is voluntary, and it is intended to help student-athletes in making two decisions: (1) their ability for a future career in professional sports and (2) their selection of honest and competent representation once their collegiate eligibility is completed.

Approval of the player-agent registration program is the second step taken by the NCAA to help student-athletes deal with player agents. Legislation was passed at the 1984 NCAA Convention that permits an institution to provide counseling to student-athletes about a future professional athletics career. This is done through a three-person panel appointed by the institution's chief executive officer from among the school's full-time employees outside the athletics department. The institution is required to notify the NCAA when a panel is appointed.

Few NCAA schools have drug-education programs

Drug and alcohol education and testing programs are in little evidence at NCAA member institutions, according to a recent survey by the Drug Education Committee.

More than 460 athletics directors responded to the survey; only nine percent of those institutions have a drug-education program for student-athletes. Less than three percent of the respondents have testing programs.

The survey sought to determine the number of local education and testing programs. One of the committee's priorities is to develop materials for use by members in such localized efforts.

More than 26 percent of those with education programs said that the Drug Education Committee's recommendations influenced their decision to start a program. And 86 percent of the respondents read the recommendations when they were published in The NCAA News.

Ten percent of the institutions without education programs are planning to initiate education efforts for student-athletes, and 17 percent plan to start programs for coaches and other staff.

There is less interest in testing, with only 3½ percent of those without testing programs actively planning to initiate such efforts. Less than half of those responding believe that student-athletes should be tested for drugs.

If testing is to be initiated, members are divided about the appropriate method. Thirty-one percent believe the institution should conduct any drug testing, but 42.2 percent believe it should be conducted either at the national level by the NCAA (23.5 percent) or at all levels—institutional, conference and national (18.7 percent).

A complete report of the survey results is available from Eric D. Zemper, research coordinator, at the NCAA national office.

Richard Perry, a gambler charged in the Boston College point-shaving scandal, has been arrested in Canada and turned over to U.S. authorities.

Perry, 38, fled the United States in November after being indicted on sports bribery charges. He was arrested in Coquitlam, British Columbia, where he was charged with using stolen credit cards to place telephone calls for a bookmaking operation. He was fined $2,550 by a Canadian judge and then turned over to the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Five men, including former Boston College player Rick Kuhn, have been convicted in the scheme, which involved games during the 1978-79 season. Two other men—former Golden Eagle guard Ernie Cobb and Peter Vario, a reputed Brooklyn organized-crime figure—were acquitted last month. Cobb, Vario and Perry were indicted together last fall.

Seminar registration continues

Registration continues for the NCAA-sponsored Professional Development Seminar June 1-2 at the Hyatt Regency O'Hare in Chicago.

The seminar is designed to assist athletics administrators in the areas of promotion and marketing. Host Communications, Inc., Lexington, Kentucky, is the coproducer. The seminar is being planned as an annual service to the NCAA membership, according to Cheryl L. Levick, assistant director of communications.

Discussion leaders will include experts in college athletics promotion and fund-raising and top officials in television and radio sports broadcasting.

A registration form appeared in the April 18 issue of The NCAA News, and it will appear again in the May 2 News. The registration fee for NCAA members is $145. There will be no late fee assessed until after May 15.

testing at championships only for performance-enhancing drugs, with institutions testing for street drugs. The committee did not project costs for any procedures.

The committee has interpreted "controlled substances" to mean street drugs (e.g., marijuana, cocaine, LSD, heroin). "Performance-enhancing" drugs refer to nervous-system stimulants, such as amphetamines and anabolic steroids.

Testing for street drugs is not supported by the Council; instead, institutions would conduct those tests. The NCAA would concentrate on performance-enhancing drugs, but championships testing would be supplemented by institutions' tests.

Leavens said that lists from other organizations, such as the Association of Representatives of Professional Athletes, will be used, as well as names of agents who have contacted the Association individually. The data will be compiled during the summer, and it is hoped that the information will be available to NCAA member institutions by September.

Following are the areas considered in developing the registration form: number of individuals serving as sports agents, educational background and experience of sports agents, types of services and basic fee structures of sports agents, and development of a list of former student-athletes with
