New NCAA officers, Council candidates announced

The NCAA Nominating Committee has announced its slate of candidates for four NCAA offices and to fill January 1987 vacancies on the NCAA Council.

The committee's slate appears in the Official Notice of the 1987 NCAA Convention, which was mailed November 21 from the national office, and is concurrently announced in this issue of The NCAA News.

Nominated by the committee to serve as officers of the Association in 1987 and 1988 are:

- President: Wilford S. Bailey, current NCAA secretary-treasurer and faculty athletics representative at Auburn University.

- Secretary-Treasurer: Thomas J. Frericks, vice-president and director of athletics at the University of Dayton. Frericks was a member of the NCAA Council from 1983 through 1985.

- Division I vice-president: Albert M. Witte, professor of law and faculty athletics representative at the University of Arkansas, Fayetteville. Witte has been the Southwest Athletic Conference representative on the Council for the past two years.

- Division II vice-president: Howard "Bud" Elwell, director of athletics at Gannon University and a Council member for the past four years.

The fifth officer, Division III Vice-President Judith M. Sweet, continues her two-year term. She is director of athletics at the University of California, San Diego.

Bailey is nominated to replace John R. Davis of Oregon State University as NCAA president at the conclusion of the 1987 Convention in San Diego. Frericks is nominated to replace Bailey as secretary-treasurer. Witte and Elwell would replace Lewis A. Cryer, commissioner of the Pacific Coast Athletic Association, and Asa N. Green, president of Livingston University, respectively. Both Cryer and Green are completing their terms on the Council.

Elections of the president and secretary-treasurer will occur during the Convention's general business session January 9-10, while the division vice-presidents will be elected during their division business sessions January 8. The vice-presidents then will be ratified in the general business session.

The Nominating Committee's recommendations to fill Council vacancies also are voted upon in the respective division business sessions January 8. The committee's nominations for Council positions are as follows, all to serve four-year terms

Five academic-requirements issues set for roll-call votes

(Editor's Note: This is the second in a series of articles detailing the legislation to be considered at the 1987 NCAA Convention. This article reviews the proposals dealing with academic requirements.)

There are 12 proposals in the "academics" grouping for the 1987 Convention in San Diego, and five of them will be acted upon by roll-call votes as directed by the NCAA Presidents Commission.

Division III agenda topics sought

Representatives of Division III member institutions are invited to submit suggested topics for a "round-table" session that will be held in conjunction with the Division III business session at the 1987 NCAA Convention in San Diego.

Correspondence should be directed to Judith M. Sweet, NCAA Division III vice-president and chair of the Division III Steering Committee, which is making plans for the round table. The group intends to address topics that are of interest to a cross section of the division.

Information from Division III

The academics section follows a grouping of 18 amendments identified by the Commission for early action in the Convention agenda. Those were reviewed in the November 17 issue of The NCAA News.

Two of the proposals in the earlier grouping also dealt with academic issues, directly or indirectly: an NCAA Council proposal to strengthen the satisfactory-progress requirements in Divisions I and II and a resolution members will enhance the steering committee's planning for the session, so the membership is encouraged to contact Sweet by mid- to late December with ideas and suggested topics.

The Division III business session is scheduled for Thursday, January 8, and the Division III Steering Committee will finalize arrangements for the round table during its January 5 meeting.

Correspondence concerning the round table should be directed to Sweet, Director of Athletics, University of California, San Diego, S-005, La Jolla, California 92093.

submitted by the chief executive officers of six member institutions to declare support in principle for freshmen being ineligible in Division I-A football and Division I men's basketball.

Included among the 12 amendments in the academics grouping are seven dealing with the initial-eligibility provisions of Bylaw 5-1-(j), three more that would affect the satisfactory-progress requirements and two relating to the Division I academic-reporting legislation.

All but two of the proposals will be acted upon during the division business sessions January 8, rather than in the general Convention business session beginning the following day. Only two of the satisfactory-progress topics—involving both Divisions I and II—will be on the agenda for the general session.

Roll calls

Two of the roll-call votes will occur in the Division I business session, with three in the separate Division II business session.

In Division I, the voters will record their votes publicly on an amendment (No. 62) to modify and simplify the academic-reporting requirements by eliminating from the calculation of the graduation rate for students in general all consideration of transfer students and of those students who left the institution in good academic standing.

Incoming transfer students would be included only in the calculation of the student-athlete graduation rate; however, those who left in good standing and those who continue to be enrolled as full-time students and who are maintaining progress toward a specific degree would not be included.

The proposal, sponsored by the Council, is intended to reduce the confusion that reportedly has existed in determining graduation rates during the first year of the requirement.

The other Division I roll-call vote will be on an amendment to Bylaw 5-1-(j)-(2) submitted by six member institutions, proposing that the partial qualifier under that legislation is entitled to only three seasons of eligibility after the freshman year, regardless of whether the individual receives financial aid in the freshman year.

Currently, the partial qualifier—one who fails to meet the Bylaw 5-1-(j) core-curriculum or test-score requirement but who had a 2.000 overall grade-point average in high school—can retain four years of collegiate eligibility if he or she does not receive financial aid during the first year of enrollment.

Meanwhile, Division II members will be faced with the possibility of three roll-call votes, all on alternative approaches to adoption of requirements for initial athletics eligibility in that division.

Included is the only proposal being sponsored directly by the Presidents Commission at this year's Convention. That proposal (No. 64) would have Division II adopt the provisions of Bylaw 5-1-(j) exactly as they currently apply to Division I, including the Division I test-score and core-curriculum requirements and the eligibility index to be used in 1987-88.

That proposal also was submitted by all members of three Division II

Some women's leagues to use three-point shot

By Timothy J. Lilley

Managing Editor, The NCAA News

Two dozen women's basketball conferences have received approval from the NCAA Women's Basketball Rules Committee to experiment with a three-point field goal this season—three times the number of men's conferences that experimented with the three-pointer in 1985 and 1986.

"If interest in experimentation is any indication, the three-point goal appears to have a great deal of support in women's basketball," said Dianne C. Jones, head women's basketball coach at the University of Wisconsin, Whitewater, and a member of the women's rules committee.

"I was overwhelmed with the interest in the three-pointer," said Jones, who is coordinating the collection of data from conferences for the committee. "I believe we will receive excellent information, since the conferences represent all parts of the country and a cross section of NCAA membership divisions."

Permission to use a three-pointer has been granted to 14 conferences in Division I, six in Division II and four in Division III. All leagues will use a three-point line that is 19 feet, nine inches from the center of the basket—the same dimensions for the three-point goal that were adopted by the NCAA Men's Basketball Rules Committee last April.

Conferences set to use the three-point goal include:

Division I—Eastern College Athletic Conference, Gateway Conference, Ohio Valley Conference, High

Country Conference, Gulf Star Conference, Atlantic 10 Conference, West Coast Athletic Conference, Southwestern Athletic Conference, Southwest Conference, Midwestern Collegiate Conference, Mountain West Conference, Mid American Conference, Southland Conference and New South Conference.

Division II—Northeast-8 Conference, Sunshine State Conference, Great Lakes Valley Conference, Great Lakes Conference, Gulf South Conference and Northern California Athletic Conference.

Division III—Midwest Athletic Conference for Women, New England Women's 6, Wisconsin Women's Conference and Women's Intercollegiate Athletic Conference.

Contrasting the apparently enthusiastic interest in a women's three-point field goal is the fact that only eight men's conferences experimented with the long-range shot during the two seasons immediately preceding its adoption for use in all men's intercollegiate competition, beginning this season.

Three Division I leagues—the Atlantic 10, the Big Sky and the Pacific Coast Athletic Association—used a three-pointer during 1984-85. Last season, the Big Sky and PCAA experimented in Division I; the Central Intercollegiate, Gulf South, and Mason Dixon conferences in Division II, and the Iowa Intercollegiate Athletic and State University of New York Athletic Conference in Division III.

"I am delighted with the number of

Athletes need help in managing time

By Rev. William J. Byron

The high school I attended provided a first-rate college-preparatory experience. It required of all its students three hours of homework each night.

Our six-class-hour school days (we had no in-school study periods) added up to a 30-hour instructional work-week. Three hours of homework five nights a week gave us a minimum class-hour to study-hour ratio of two-to-one.

In my college experience, class hours decreased and the expected out-of-class study burden increased. This was spelled out during freshman blocks (15 on the average) representing class time. Black out another 56 for sleep (eight hours a night). Take out another 14 (two a day) for meals and personal care. Give yourself at least two hours a day for recreation and you will have "spent" 99 hours a week before any of the remaining 69 hours (shown by the large areas of white space, particularly in the weekend columns) have been committed to out-of-class study, part-time jobs, nonathletics extracurriculars or practice time associated with a varsity sport. Sixty-nine hours waiting to be budgeted.

As they look at their unspent weekly "wealth" of 69 hours, students have to be reminded of an important distinction between a spending-money budget and a study budget. Money not spent this day, this week or next, is there to be spent sometime thereafter. Study time not "spent" today or tomorrow simply isn't there to be spent in the future. Hence, the cramming phenomenon so familiar to every student procrastinator.

As a dean and classroom teacher, I always advised students to commit themselves in advance to study hours, specific as to time and place, Monday through Friday, and marked in red on a study budget. Blocking out appropriate weekend reading and study time also was highly recommended as a safeguard against the recurring temptation to drop everything and run, at a moment's notice, because "I don't have class" or "I'm free; I don't have anything to do."

This is all, of course, highly idealistic. But it also is quite instructive in providing perspective for a look at the proper ratio of study time to practice time for the student-athlete.

Officials at most colleges and universities have a ready reply to inquiries about institution-wide student-faculty ratios. Few could provide, and most would be embarrassed if they knew, the practice-hour to class-hour ratio for students participating in varsity sports.

Athlete drug testing a logical step

Eugene (Oregon) Register-Guard

From an editorial

"Our belief that courts will allow drug testing for student-athletes rests mainly on the fact that the penalty for failure is the loss of a privilege, not a right.

"No one is born with an inalienable right to play on the college football team or volleyball team. Team membership is a privilege that historically has been conditioned on good behavior as defined by a variety of rules. The new policies simply make drug avoidance part of the required behavior.

"There are, after all, direct effects of drug use on athletics competition. The list of forbidden drugs includes a number of them, such as steroids, that can enhance performance. Those drugs skew the competition and make it unfair. Other drugs, including street drugs, either impair physical and mental performance or instill a false sense of heightened ability. Both results are unwanted on the playing field.

"So colleges can justify a rule against drug use by athletes on grounds related to the health and safety of the athletes as well as the fairness of competition. And they can justify testing as the only way to be certain of compliance.

"One other factor is involved. Outstanding student-athletes are highly visible. They are role models for young people and public relations representatives for their schools. For both purposes, it is desirable that they be free from the influence of drugs.

"The courts ultimately may decide that no mandatory, random drug testing can pass constitutional muster, regardless of whether it applies to student-athletes or prison guards.

"But for the time being, universities and colleges following the strong NCAA recommendation to institute drug testing should get credit for good-faith effort to attack a serious problem in an appropriate way."

Billy Tubbs, head men's basketball coach
University of Oklahoma

The Sunday Oklahoman

"The bottom line is that all coaches work for the university. They do not work for the NCAA, and the NCAA has no right to control salaries or anything else. It's none of their business.

"The NCAA is getting into a lot of things that are really none of their business, not only coaches' employment, but also drug testing and a lot of things in which they're overstepping the bounds of what they were originally meant to do.

"I don't think the (coaches') contracts that are in existence can be overridden by universities or by the NCAA. We've got some legal problems down the line.

"If they want to do that (control or monitor outside income) with the coaches, that's fine. Let's do it with the presidents. Let's take their perks away from them. Let's not let them live in those free houses. Let's not let them drive those free cars. Let's not let them be on the board of directors (of corporations). Hey, the presidents have more perks than anybody.

"And if you want to be fair, let's do it to the professors in the law school. Let's not let them have any outside income."

"Independents have got it great. There's not only a monetary advantage you have (no sharing of revenues with conference members), but you get to pick and choose, and it's a tremendous advantage.

"...when you start getting into a play-off (Division I-A football using bowl sites as part of the play-off system), it ceases to be the vacation-type situation the bowls are now. It becomes an 'in-out' situation, like the NCAA regionals or first-round games in basketball. People go in the day before the game and come home right after the game. With bowls, they'll go in three or four days ahead of time, stay through it and make it a winter vacation.

"...there's no way—and I don't care what alphabet letters you're putting into this, NCAA, CFA or any other creation—any group like that is going to entrust the administration of any form of its play-off to any group of laymen in New Orleans or Miami or Dallas or Pasadena or wherever. They'll do the work themselves, just like they do with the basketball tournament.

"So I just can't conceive of a way it would work. Plus, when you start making it an 'in-out' experience, the cities are going to back off, too, in their support. Most people don't really realize what accrues to a bowl and to the participants of a bowl from the city at a very lost-cost

Use common sense in decisions

To the Editor:

I have never been one who has been in favor of committees; however, after spending 38 years in intercollegiate athletics, I think it is imperative that the NCAA has a "Common Sense Committee." The criteria for this committee must include college coaching and recruiting experience. Far too many of our rules have been made by people with no practical experience.

This committee would have the power to make a quick decision on situations that arise like the University of Alabama football players attending a teammate's funeral, coach Vince Dooley not being allowed to watch his son play in the Georgia High School All-Star Game, etc. I hope the NCAA would consider having such a committee, as it might save a lot of embarrassment to our member institutions.

Whoa! Stay off Bennett's bandwagon

(Remarks are addressed to Joan Beck, Chicago Tribune columnist, who was quoted in the October 27 issue of The NCAA News.)

Don't jump on the Bill Bennett bandwagon too quickly!

It takes $20,000 per year to get a superb education—along with room and board—compared with $40,000 per year to maintain one prisoner.

Universities, compared to Mr. Bennett's government, all prisons and, possibly, the Tribune, are models of cost-effectiveness.

Watchdog press could use a SWAT with its own newspaper

By John McGrath
The Denver Post

I do not gamble on sporting events. On those periodic occasions when friends offer to place a bet for me, I show them my bravest Nancy Reagan frown. And then, I just say no.

Such a righteous stance will never make me a candidate for sainthood, or the side of Mount Rushmore. I'm susceptible to a good many other vices—enough, let's say, to render me a patently unqualified arbiter of Right vs. Wrong.

I'm quite capable, in other words, at throwing money away on my own. I do not need the assistance of nervous 20-year-old athletes playing against arbitrary point spreads.

You might be surprised to learn that most people similarly disdain gambling. According to the 1986 Sports Illustrated Sports Poll, only three in 10 American adults placed money on a sporting event during the last 12 months.

Moreover, those who did bet averaged one $7.80 wager per month, or $90.50 annually.

But try telling that on the mountain upon which the Fourth Estate sits. For some curious reason, newspapers across the country are convinced each and every reader is a gambling junkie, steeped in the Runyanesque argot of smoke-filled speak-easies.

No longer do newspapers consider it sufficient to publish point spreads—a dubious practice somehow justified as “a service to the readers.” Nowadays, entire seasons are wagered on mythical bankrolls.

The Washington Post, which once maintained a virtuous policy against publishing point spreads—and which, 13 years ago, barked a president out of office because he happened to break the law—currently runs a column whose sole “service” is to encourage a recreation, gambling, that is illegal in most places.

But then, those of us who work at The Denver Post can ill afford to point fingers. The Voice of the Rocky Mountain Empire shouts out point spreads daily and touts college football's best bets each Saturday.

During the baseball season, the sports bettor is treated in the Post to a pitching form detailing all pertinent minutiae for laying down a wager, including the latest line, and the three-game trends of both starting pitchers.

At the risk of sounding Pollyanna preachy, permit me one question: What the hell ever happened to respecting the law? The law states it is illegal to gamble on sporting events in Colorado. It does not state, “it's OK to gamble as long as your bookie is a good guy and won't break your kid's kneecaps if you welch.”

I won't insist all laws are fair laws, or sensible laws. (In Alaska—and you can look it up—it is illegal to look at a moose from the window of an airplane. Idahoans are prohibited, by law, from giving away a box of candy weighing more than 50 pounds. In Kentucky, every citizen is required, by law, to take a bath once a year.

And then there was 16th century Turkey, where anyone found drinking coffee was put to death.)

The morality of gambling is not the issue here. The issue is legality. It is forbidden to wager on sporting events. Period. And yet the press—that allegedly brave, iconoclastic champion of justice, the wary watchdog of authority—has assumed a front-row seat on the other side of the law and left its noble standards to wilt in the wind.

Why? For no other reason than a good, old-fashioned craving for readers, and, by extension, money. The gambler who buys his morning paper with one quarter and then calls up his bookie an hour later with another, had better find the latest line in his sports section or else he'll pick up another company's newspaper! Horrors!

With the press so blatantly casual about its treatment of gambling (“So what if it's against the law? Some gamblers are always going to gamble,” the editors' refrain goes. “Why not give them what they want?”), it would only seem to be a matter of time before it tacitly endorsed another illegal activity—say, recreational narcotic use.

Makes sense. A huge portion of the American adult population—probably more than three out of every 10 persons—has experimented with an illegal drug. Why don't newspapers consider a “reader service” in the form of a self-help advice column?

Where's the best place for an out-of-towner to get a hold of some weed? What pills mix and match better than others? How can you tell the purity of coke?

There'd likely be some outcries if the paper printed something like that, but the editors could respond, “So what if it's against the law? Some drug users are always going to find a way to do drugs. Why not give them what they want?”

Forgive me for equating two such disparate vices as gambling and drug use. It's just that I've got this dumb, crazy notion they're both against the law, and coddling up to one while scorning the other strikes me as the very paragon of hypocrisy.

A good watchdog barks at everything.

Athletes

typical college football player spends 49 hours a week during the season preparing for, participating in and recovering from football games,” it may well be time for presidents, deans and other academic administrators to begin examining practice-time to class-hour ratios for their student-athletes.

I am assuming reasonable adherence to a normal class schedule on the part of the student-athlete. I also am assuming a curriculum sufficiently rigorous to justify its classification as higher education. Although 15 class-hours a week would be considered normal, I see nothing wrong with a reduced fall class schedule for football players if compensatory class hours have been successfully completed during the previous summer session. That seems reasonable to me, much more so than what I would regard as an unacceptable alternative of a compensatory fifth year of academic enrollment after the four years of playing eligibility have been spent. Reasonable adjustments for other major sports also are conceivable.

It is not really necessary, for my present purpose, to try to separate training time from practice time. Nor is it really important to distinguish time spent reviewing game films from time spent on the field preparing for the next game. The point is to take a look at total time devoted to an intercollegiate sport during a five-day academic workweek and compare that with time spent in class and in class-related study. Those responsible for maintaining a balance between academics and athletics on their campuses might find ratio analysis useful.

This is not a matter for NCAA regulation. It is an issue of concern to administrators, not just academic administrators, but also those administrators more immediately concerned with the supervision of athletes.

Just as anyone serving anywhere in a college or university administrative staff might be expected to have a reasonably precise reply to an inquiry about the institution's student-faculty ratio (it appears in most recruiting brochures), so administrators might be expected to become familiar with the class-hour to practice-hour ratio on campus for the sport in season.

As I indicated earlier, 99:1 or 1:1 would be extreme and untenable guidelines for the quantitative relationship between students and faculty. No outside agency legislates or regulates an appropriate ratio in this regard. But any accrediting group and every academic planner has a sense for what is an educationally healthy and economically sound student-faculty ratio. That “sense” produces a workable guideline for a given institution.

The on-campus managers of higher education in America must fashion a similar guideline for the right relationship between practice time and class time. Special circumstances and special cases always will justify some deviation from what most would regard as normal.

But no circumstance can justify a disregard of this important relationship. And no coach or academic administrator can pretend to be serving student-athletes and yet remain ignorant of, or indifferent to, the proper balance between classroom time and practice time during the five-day workweek within which the traditional teaching-learning transaction is expected to take place.

“One to one” might be a useful opening quotation to begin both discussion and analysis.

Virginia gridders register 88 percent graduation rate

The University of Virginia has won this year's College Football Association Academic Achievement Award.

It is the second straight year the school has been honored as the association member with the highest graduation rate among members of its football team.

Of the players who entered the university in the fall of 1980 and got financial aid, 88.8 percent graduated within five years, the association said.

Two previous winners, the University of Notre Dame and Duke University, also were recognized for graduation rates above 80 percent.

Robert M. O'Neil, Virginia's president, said the school's program “has excelled in that rare blend of academic achievement and intercollegiate competition.”

“We were delighted to have them recognized by the College Football Association for top honors last year but are even more pleased to repeat the honor this year,” he said.

The award is sponsored by the Touchdown Club of Memphis and will be presented at the Liberty Bowl luncheon December 29 in Memphis, the association said.

“All too often we hear about what's wrong with college football,” said Keith Ingram, president of the Touchdown Club. “It is time (we heard about) what is right in college athletics.”

The CFA has conducted an annual graduation-rate survey of its members since 1981, and the institution that graduates the highest percentage of its football team is declared the winner of the academic achievement award.

1986 Column No. 39

Scouting services—video materials

The NCAA Administrative Committee reviewed in 1985 the application of Bylaw 1-5-(b) and Case No. 207 (1986-87 NCAA Manual) to a situation involving a scouting service that offers both printed and video materials. The committee concluded that member institutions should be permitted to use video services so long as only regularly scheduled (regular season) high school or junior college contests are involved, an institution is not permitted to contract with the service in advance to have a particular contest videotaped, the service is available to all institutions, and the same service and costs are applicable to all institutions. Any member institution that has additional questions regarding the application of NCAA legislation to videotape scouting services should contact the national office, inasmuch as this issue will be reviewed further by the Administrative Committee during its December 7, 1986, conference.

Bylaw 5-1-(j)—outside competition

An official interpretation was published in the October 20, 1986, edition of The NCAA News to indicate that a partial qualifier or a nonqualifier under the provisions of Bylaw 5-1-(j) may not participate on an outside sports team during the initial year of enrollment at a Division I member institution. This official interpretation included the stipulation that a partial qualifier or nonqualifier would be permitted to participate in the institution's intramural program (so long as the intramural team is not coached by a member of the institution's athletics department staff), but it would not be permissible for such an individual to participate during the first year of enrollment in athletics competition on an institutional club team or an outside sports team. During its November 20, 1986, conference, the Administrative Committee concluded that the application of this official interpretation would preclude a partial qualifier or a nonqualifier from involvement during the initial year of residence on a national team in international competition. The committee agreed that this aspect of the official interpretation would be reviewed further during the Council's January 4-6, 1987, meeting.

Ethical conduct—drug usage

The Administrative Committee has reviewed the provisions of Constitution 3-6-(b), which stipulate in part that staff members of the athletics department of a member institution who have knowledge of the use contrary to Bylaw 5-2 by a student-athlete of a substance on the list of banned drugs set forth in Executive Regulation 1-7-(b), and who fail to follow institutional procedures dealing with drug abuse, shall be subject to disciplinary or corrective action as set forth in the NCAA enforcement procedure. The committee noted that this regulation would apply to a staff member's knowledge of the use of such banned substances at any time by a student-athlete and would require the staff member who becomes knowledgeable of such a situation to take action at that time to follow the appropriate institutional procedures dealing with drug abuse.

Celebrity sports activities—basketball

The provisions of Bylaw 3-3-(k)-(3) permit the participation of individual athletes in local celebrity sports activities conducted for the purpose of raising funds for charitable organizations so long as no more than two athletes from any one sport are participating in such activities. The Administrative Committee has reviewed the application of this regulation in light of the provisions of Constitution 3-9-(b) that prohibit participation on an outside team in "organized basketball competition." The committee concluded that the provisions of Constitution 3-9-(b) would preclude a basketball student-athlete from participating in local celebrity basketball team activities; however, it was noted that basketball student-athletes could participate per Bylaw 3-3-(k)-(3) in local celebrity activities involving other sports.

This material was provided by the NCAA legislative services department as an aid to member institutions. If an institution has a question it would like to have answered in this column, the question should be directed to William B. Hunt, assistant executive director, at the NCAA national office.

Eligibility Rulings

Marquette University

The eligibility of a basketball student-athlete found in violation of NCAA Bylaws 1-2-(a)-(5) and 5-1-(i) was restored immediately. The committee determined that the institution did not receive a significant recruiting advantage. It also noted that this case involved institutional responsibility and that it be forwarded to the appropriate department for a review.

California State University, Los Angeles

The eligibility of a basketball student-athlete found in violation of Bylaw 1-6 and Case No. 211 was restored immediately. The committee determined that the institution did not receive a significant recruiting advantage and that the case involved institutional responsibility.

conferences—the California Collegiate Athletic Association, Lone Star Conference and Sunshine State Conference. The last of those has reported that it intends to apply Bylaw 5-1-(j) as a conference regulation even if Division II fails to adopt it.

The second Bylaw 5-1-(j) alternative (No. 65) in Division II is sponsored by the members of the Gulf South Conference. It would adopt core-curriculum and test-score requirements for initial eligibility in Division II, but with lower test scores (600 SAT and 12 ACT instead of 700 and 15, respectively) and with more liberal eligibility indices, covering both the 1987-88 and 1988-89 academic years. The Gulf South also does not alter the current Division II requirements for junior college transfer students, a matter that is treated in the Commission's proposal.

Third in the sequence, the division has the option of adopting a proposal (No. 66) sponsored by the Council on behalf of the Division II Steering Committee. This alternative would require use of the Bylaw 5-1-(j) core-curriculum provisions in Division II, but with no test-score requirement and no provisions for the "partial" qualifier (i.e., one with a 2.000 overall grade-point average in high school but not meeting the core-curriculum requirement).

If Division II adopts the Commission's proposal, the following two will be moot; or, if it adopts the Gulf South Conference approach, the last of the three would be moot.

Others

The most significant of the other seven proposals in the grouping is the Big Ten Conference's fifth attempt to establish qualitative (grade-point average) requirements for satisfactory progress (No. 70). There has been such a proposal before every Convention since 1981, when the satisfactory-progress legislation was adopted, except in 1985.

When the NCAA Council-sponsored progress regulations were adopted at the '81 Convention, a Big Ten proposal to require certain GPAs for each succeeding year of eligibility (1.850 after one year, 2.000 each year thereafter) was defeated by all three NCAA divisions.

The following year, six members of the Big Eight Conference attempted a similar approach, but with 1.600, 1.800 and 2.000 GPA progressions. It was defeated by both Divisions I and II. In 1983, the Big Ten came back with its original sequence—1.850 and then 2.000—and the proposal was defeated in Division I (133-158) and Division II (56-78).

In '84, the Big Ten introduced its current version of the qualitative requirements—1.700 for eligibility after the freshman year, 1.850 the year after and 2.000 each year after that. It lost by a 107-189 count in Division I and by a show of paddles in Division II.

Last January, the same proposal was defeated by Division I, 134-178. This year's subcommittee also is for Division I only.

Meanwhile, the Ivy Group is suggesting (No. 71) that no student-athlete who is considered to be in "good academic standing" by his or her institution should be denied eligibility under the satisfactory-progress rule because the student misses a term of attendance. The Ivy Group also proposes in No. 68 that the Bylaw 5-1-(j) nonqualifier or partial qualifier in Division I be permitted to participate on institutional club teams while ineligible for intercollegiate competition and practice as a freshman.

Summary

Following is a summary of the 12 proposals in the academics grouping for the 81st annual Convention.

No. 62: Modify the Division I academic-reporting requirements to provide that graduation rates for students in general be based upon the percentage of freshmen enrolled at the institution during a particular academic year who graduated from that institution within a five-year period, including transfer students only in the calculation of the graduation rate for student-athletes. Roll-call vote.

No. 63: Specify that the Division I Bylaw 5-1-(j) nonqualifier and partial qualifier are limited to three seasons of eligibility after the freshman year, regardless of whether financial aid is received in that freshman year. Roll-call vote.

No. 64: Adopt the current Division I Bylaw 5-1-(j) provisions in Division II. Roll-call vote.

No. 65: Adopt initial athletics eligibility standards in Division II comparable to those in Bylaw 5-1-(j) but with less stringent core-curriculum/test-score indices and lower test-score requirements. Roll-call vote.

No. 66: Adopt initial athletics eligibility standards in Division II that include the current core-curriculum requirement in Bylaw 5-1-(j) but no test-score requirement and no provision for "partial" qualifiers. Roll-call vote.

No. 67: Specify that the SAT or ACT score used for establishing initial eligibility under Bylaw 5-1-(j) must be achieved not later than the July 1 immediately preceding the student's initial enrollment in a collegiate institution. This would eliminate taking the test in the fall prior to enrolling at midyear.

No. 68: Permit partial qualifiers and non-qualifiers under Bylaw 5-1-(j) to participate on institutional club teams while ineligible as freshmen.

No. 69: Permit a student-athlete who was educated in a secondary school outside the United States, and who is admitted to a Division I member institution that does not require the SAT or ACT for such students generally, to meet the Bylaw 5-1-(j) test-score requirement by taking the test at his or her first opportunity after enrolling at the institution.

No. 70: Establish qualitative academic progress requirements for eligibility in Division I (1.700 after the freshman year, 1.850 the year after that and 2.000 each year thereafter).

No. 71: Permit a student-athlete who is considered by the Division I or II institution to be in good academic standing to avoid any ineligibility that might result under the satisfactory-progress rule as a result of missing a term(s) of attendance.

No. 72: Permit a student-athlete at a Division I or II institution who has completed 24 semester or 36 quarter hours of academic credit acceptable toward a degree since the beginning of the institution's last season of competition in the sport involved to be eligible under the satisfactory-progress rule, while retaining the alternative opportunity to establish eligibility by completing the 24 or 36 hours since the beginning of the individual's last season of competition.

No. 73: Authorize the NCAA Council to modify the Division I academic-reporting requirements in keeping with established institutional methods for compiling information regarding admissions standards, academic progress and graduation rates.

of women's teams by adding the three-point play, and I am not sure it will even become a regular part of most teams' offenses."

Margie McDonald, executive director of the High Country Conference, said that teams with wide-open offenses probably will try more three-pointers, and she should know. The High Country pioneered experimentation with the three-point shot, having used it as early as the 1983-84 season, when the women's game still was played under rules published by the National Association for Girls and Women in Sports (NAGWS).

"We used a three-pointer during the 1983-84 and 1984-85 seasons," McDonald said. "At that time, Utah had two little guards who could light it up from out there. I attended some of their games during those seasons, and every time one of those girls touched the ball, the crowd started chanting 'put it up...put it up!' I think you will find that the crowds are going to love the three-pointer."

"As far as when it will be used," she continued, "I believe that will depend a lot on coaching styles. Those teams that play a wide-open offensive game will use it more, especially if they have a couple of good shooters. It can become a 40-45 percent shot. A lot of our women players shoot from the top of the key."

Jones said that the type of usage the three-point goal gets is one of a number of things members of the rules committee hope to analyze. "We are going to look at things like the three-point field-goal percentage vs. overall shooting percentage, the number of players attempting three-pointers per team, the areas of the court from which the shots were taken, and whether it is used in a positive sense. That is, when teams are trailing late in games this season, will they try three-point shots instead of fouling to get the ball back?"

"We also hope to find out when most of the three-pointers are taken—throughout the game or only at the end," Jones said, "and we also hope to

Irish, Penn State schedules toughest over 10-year period

By James M. Van Valkenburg
NCAA Director of Statistics

The Division I-A team with the toughest schedule over the last 10 seasons?

With this 10th season of national toughest-schedule rankings nearly completed, the NCAA computer shows Penn State and Notre Dame in almost a dead heat for No. 1, with Florida, currently the 1986 leader, a close third.

Penn State's opponents have a .607 winning percentage to .606 for Notre Dame's foes over the 10-year period, 1977 through 1986. That is so close that Notre Dame still might move to the top in the remaining games. Notre Dame ranks second this season, while Penn State is running 38th (of the 105 I-A teams). Florida has .596 and still might reach .600 because its current top-ranking figure for 1986 is .695 through games of November 15.

Penn State's I-A opponents have won 608, lost 389 and tied 22 against other I-A teams when not playing Penn State, while Notre Dame's foes have won 630, lost 406 and tied 25 when not playing Notre Dame. Deleting games against the team in question is a vital element in the program. Without it, a winning team is at a strong disadvantage, and a losing team's schedule strength is greatly exaggerated.

All games vs. teams below I-A are deleted because I-A teams annually win 70-plus percent of such games. But otherwise, the program says nothing about the opposition faced by each I-A team on the schedule (for instance, one 7-3 team might be stronger than another 7-3 team, but the program keeps them the same).

Notre Dame's opponents have won 22 more games vs. I-A foes than have Penn State's opponents. This is a reflection of the fact that Penn State occasionally plays a game against a I-AA opponent, and such games are deleted. If one prefers to rate the schedules on the basis of total I-A victories, Notre Dame would be No. 1; and some teams far down the list in the table (at right) would jump into the top 20. More about that later.

Independents dominate

The table shows that independents and a handful of strong conferences dominate. Independents are not locked into a conference schedule, while conference teams to rank high must benefit by their fellow members winning their outside games.

Nine independents are in the top 20 in this 10-year table—Penn State, Notre Dame, Florida State, Miami (Florida), Pittsburgh, Temple, Boston College, South Carolina and West Virginia.

The Southeastern Conference has five in the top 20 (Florida, Alabama, Auburn, Kentucky and Mississippi State, in that order), the Pacific-10 Conference three (Southern California, UCLA and Stanford), the Southwest Athletic Conference two (Rice and Texas) and the Atlantic Coast Conference one (Maryland).

This is because these conferences, along with the Big Eight Conference and Big Ten Conference, have been consistent winners against outside I-A foes over the 10 years (The Pac-10 now leads for 1986, with the SEC second. The former now has five members in the top 10, the latter two). Here is the 10-season top 50:

*Tie computed as half won, half lost.

Penn State ranked at least third nationally seven of the first eight years and was No. 1 in 1981, 1982 and 1984. Notre Dame has ranked high consistently and was No. 1 in 1978 and 1985. Florida had ranked 3-4-3-3 the last four seasons and is now first. The other annual champions were Miami (Florida) in 1977, UCLA in 1979, Florida State in 1980 and Auburn in 1983.

Notre Dame holds the 10-year single-season record at .709 in 1978, and its .707 last year ranks second. Florida has an outside chance to break that this season. Before the advent of the computer program, Missouri led in 1976 at .682.

The top conferences

Looking at the entire top 50, there are 11 independents. The SEC has eight teams, the SWC and Big Eight seven each, Pac-10 six, ACC five, Big Ten four and Pacific Coast Athletic Association one.

Most-victories leaders

Ranking the schedules by most I-A victories by I-A opponents, the 10-year leaders are Notre Dame (630), Penn State (608), Florida (604), Southern California (599), UCLA (593), Alabama (575), Michigan (575), Stanford (575) (a three-way tie), Oklahoma (567), Auburn (563), Kentucky (562), Texas (561), Miami (Florida) (559), Nebraska (557), Illinois (557), Mississippi State (556), Maryland (554), Pittsburgh (553), Texas Tech (549) and Iowa (549).

Florida A&M leads in I-AA

Florida A&M leads the Division I-AA toughest-schedule rankings (this is the fifth season for the program) at .587, meaning its I-A and I-AA opponents won 176, lost 123 and tied five vs. other I-A and I-AA foes over the last five seasons, including this one.

Massachusetts is second, South Carolina third, Holy Cross fourth and Northwestern State (Louisiana) fifth. Then come Alabama State, Grambling, Western Kentucky, Southern-Baton Rouge and Boston U. Here is the top 20 over five years:

Florida A&M ranked 7-1-4-3 the last four years and currently is seventh through games of November 15—remarkably consistent. The current leader for 1986 is James Madison, with Bucknell a very close second (.6194 to .6190), and Harvard, Richmond and Montana State in a tight race for third, currently in that order.

Football notes

Most victories leaders

On the basis of most victories by I-A and I-AA foes against other I-A and I-AA foes, the picture changes considerably. Holy Cross becomes No. 1 at 269, followed by Massachusetts (257), North Texas State (242), Boston U. (239), Richmond (236), William & Mary (234), Louisiana Tech (233), Connecticut (232), Arkansas State (228), Western Kentucky (227), Colgate (222), Northeast Louisiana (220), Tennessee-Chattanooga (217), Virginia Military (217), Tennessee Tech (211), Lehigh (210), Grambling State (207), McNeese State (207), Nevada-Reno (207) and Southern-Baton Rouge (207).

This great variance is because some conferences, like the Yankee Conference and Southland Conference, have played many I-A opponents and few below I-AA, while several conferences play few-to-zero I-A teams and many teams below I-AA. Former independents like Holy Cross are now in the Colonial Athletic Association.

Only 17 above .500

Note that only 17 teams have played five-year schedules above the .500 level. This is a reflection of the fact that I-AA teams as a body have played only about .250 football vs. I-A foes (and games vs. those below I-AA are deleted). There are 86 teams in I-AA, so only about 20 percent have played .500-up schedules.

80 years later

This season marks the 80th anniversary of the first forward pass in 1906. St. Louis University, coached by Eddie Cochems, was the first team to use the pass early that season. The pass had been made a legal part of football that year after President Theodore Roosevelt, concerned about deaths and injuries in the game, called on college leaders to take action. This led to the formation of the NCAA in 1906, and the NCAA made passing a part of football.

With that in mind, it would be nice to report that passing yardage in Division I-A will set another all-time record this season. But that probably will not happen, because passing yards per game (both teams combined) is down about 90 inches (2½ yards) from the all-time high of 372.2 in 1985, with an average of 369.7 and games dwindling down. Passing emphasis will reach a record high, however, as 38.6 percent of all plays have been passes this season. The record is 38 percent in 1984. Also, touchdown passes seem headed for a record high, at 2.20 per game vs. the record 2.16 in 1982.

The record in TD passes seems certain to bring the largest national scoring increase in 19 years. The average now is 45.4 points per game vs. the record 44.7 set a year ago. This is true even though field goals per game are down a second straight year, to 2.15, vs. 2.18 last year and the record 2.30 in 1984. Total offense, like passing, is merely second highest in history at 706.7 rushing-passing yards per game, vs. the record 710.5 last year, although yards per total offensive play remain the same at 4.95. Yards per attempted pass at 6.80 rank second to the record of 6.82 in 1985, but yards per rush at 3.81 are up a bit over last year's 3.80.

I-AA trends similar

Division I-AA trends are quite similar in some respects. Passing yardage per game—371.3 through November 15—is slightly (3.3 yards) behind the all-time record of 374.6 set last year, with touchdown passes per game at 2.46 equaling last year's record. Scoring is headed for an all-time record in I-AA at 45.5 points per game vs. the record 44.2 set last year.

Yards per attempted pass also is setting a record in I-AA at 6.58. So is yards per total-offensive play at 4.87, even though total offense is down a bit at 686.9 rushing-passing yards per game vs. the record 689.8 set last year.

Unlike I-A, field-goal production and accuracy are headed for record highs in I-AA, with 1.71 per game vs. the record 1.61 set last year and 60.6 percent accuracy vs. the record 60.3 in 1983. Field goals, however, account for less than 25 percent of the big scoring increase in I-AA; the rest is coming from rushing TDs, since TD passes have remained the same.

Sweeney overtakes Flutie

Fresno State's Kevin Sweeney broke Doug Flutie's Division I-A career record for passing yardage in his final regular-season game November 22 with a 216-yard game against Utah State. Sweeney finished with 10,623 passing yards to 10,579 for the Boston College quarterback who won the Heisman Trophy in 1984.

In total offense, however, Flutie still holds the I-A record of 11,317 yards. He had a net of 738 yards rushing after sacks were subtracted, while Sweeney wound up with minus rushing yardage after sacks—as most quarterbacks do. Sweeney's final total offense figure was 10,252, second to Flutie in I-A history. (Both are far from the collegiate, or all-divisions, NCAA records for passing and total offense of 13,220 and 13,345, respectively, by Neil Lomax of Portland

Rensselaer senior Tom Wood has amassed over 5,000 all-purpose yards in his career

State, whose career ended in 1980. And both trail the No. 2 man, Mississippi Valley State's Willie Totten, with 12,711 and 13,007, respectively, from 1982 to 1985.)

Attendance down

Attendance climbed November 22 and pushed the season average in Division I-A to 41,928 per game, with 79 percent capacity. However, these are press box figures and the final audit always has subtracted about 100,000 in total attendance. The final 1985 audited per-game average was 42,040—79.1 percent capacity. The remaining big-attendance traditional games will push the press box average above 1985 but the final audit likely will bring it back down, so the final average would be slightly under 1985. However, the total may be up, simply because the 105 I-A teams are playing more games this season. In I-AA, the current press box figure of 10,866 is under the final 1985 audited figure of 10,892 per game for the same 86 teams.

Palmer sets all-purpose record

Temple's Paul Palmer gained 171 all-purpose yards vs. Rutgers November 22 to finish with 2,633—a Division I-A season record, breaking the 2,559 by Southern California's Marcus Allen in 1981, the season he won the Heisman Trophy.

Palmer, however, missed the I-A per-game record in all-purpose running. That is the oldest major record in the book, set in 1937 at 246.3 over eight games by Byron "Whizzer" White of Colorado. Palmer ended at 239.4.

In rushing, Palmer's nation-leading season total of 1,866 yards is ninth highest ever and his career total of 4,895 ranks sixth in I-A history.

Jaeger sets field-goal record

Washington's Jeff Jaeger kicked three field goals vs. Washington State November 22 to end his career with 80, one more than the record set a year ago by UCLA's John Lee. Jaeger's record-breaking kick, a 27-yarder, came with 3:16 left in a 44-23 Washington victory.

Historic seasons

Rose-Hulman finished 8-2 for only its second eight-win season in 90 years of football (the other was 1958). (Joe Hargis, assistant director of college relations)

Susquehanna completed its first 10-0 season in its 88-year football history by beating Albright November 15. Said coach Rocky Rees after his team had clinched the Middle Atlantic Conference title with a game left: "Nine is fine but 10 is divine." (Scott Deitch, Susquehanna SID)

Buffalo beat Frostburg State November 15 to finish 9-2 for its first nine-win season ever, going back to the first season in 1894. Junior tailback O. D. Underwood, a Kent State transfer, became the first 1,000-yard rusher in Buffalo history. (Larry Steele, Buffalo SID) final game to West Chester, 7-3, on November 15, the Marauders have their first nine-win season since football started here in 1889. (Greg Wright, Millersville SID)

Macalester, the college that as recently as 1980 set the NCAA record of 50 straight losses, has rebounded strongly under coach Tom Hosier and finished 7-2-1 this season to equal the school record for victories. The team also broke the NCAA record for takeaways at 58, with 28 interceptions and 30 opponents' fumbles recovered. Tennessee held the old record, forcing 57 turnovers in 1970.

Quotes of the week

Tulane reserve quarterback and deep snapper Clay McCall has 84 perfect snaps in 86 tries this season. Says McCall: "The way I look at it, I'm still passing the football—I'm just upside down when I do it." (Jeff Seal, Tulane SID)

North Carolina State punter Kelly Hollodick: "It's weird. I want to kick; but if the team is playing well, I won't get many opportunities. So in that respect, I'd rather not get the opportunity." (Ed Seaman, North Carolina State SID)

4,005 for Rogers

Emory and Henry senior Sandy Rogers has smashed the Division III season rushing record and has become the eighth player in division history to surpass 4,000 yards rushing over a career. He is only the 58th 4,000-yard rusher in all divisions in NCAA history. This is the 50th year of official NCAA statistics (Division III began in 1973.)

Rogers finished with 1,730 yards this season, breaking the 1,629 set last year by Plymouth State's Joe Dudek, who also set the division career record at 5,570 and established an NCAA all-divisions career record of 474 points scored.

Dudek received some votes for the Heisman Trophy last year. With that in mind, students at Richland, Virginia, High School, where Rogers graduated, have been sending "Sandy for Heisman" letters to a number of major publications, reports Patsi Barnes Trollinger, sports information director at Emory and Henry.

The 5-11, 195-pound Rogers is not particularly fast but has an uncanny sense of balance and exceptional upper-body strength. "My linemen take big pride in me," Rogers says. "Without them, I'm virtually harmless." Rogers has led the team to a 10-1 record and the Division III national play-offs.

Rogers attributes his strength to weight training and to the demanding summer job assigned him by his father, a mine owner. Three of the last four summers he had the dirtiest, toughest jobs in the business—cleaning and stacking spare machinery parts, usually 10 hours a day. His father wanted him to walk on at Tennessee but warned that wherever he went to college, he would see it through to the end. So when he wanted to leave his freshman year, his father said no.

A two-way standout

When 11 players on the 52-man squad went down with injuries at San Francisco State, Darryl Carter, a 6-5, 210-pound junior offensive end, started playing both defensive end and defensive back. Carter, a broadcasting major from Oakland, California, helped the team to its first victory of the season November 15 (28-12 over Humboldt State) as he had two quarterback sacks and caught three passes for 31 yards. (Sam Goldman, San Francisco State SID)

Versatility personified

Tom Wood, senior tailback at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, is a dean's list student who has thrived playing three different positions over his career—quarterback, wide receiver and now tailback. Along the way, he has piled up more than 5,000 yards in all categories. In 35 career games, the Herkimer, New York, native has passed for 732 yards, rushed for 2,270, caught 103 passes for 1,284 yards and collected 975 more in kickoff and punt returns for a total of 5,261. (Alan Shibley, RPI SID)

Concordia's (Illinois) Marty Redlawski, who set a Division III record for yards per catch at 26.9 last year (1,022 on 38), had another good year with 49 catches for 812 yards, 16 punt returns for 226 yards and a 14.1 average and two carries for 69 yards rushing.

Football is fun

College football is fun. With a 49-0 lead in the final game, Case Reserve coach Jim Chapman fulfilled some player requests: Mike Ciani, a 6-3, 230-pound guard, was allowed to return punts; 5-7, 145-pound kicker Dan Pazara, made a tackle at defensive back; linebacker Steve Rosiek tried punting and hit a 41-yarder, and 240-pound Erwin Grabisna went to tailback and got 18 yards on three carries. The Spartans under Chapman are 36-7-1 since 1982 for .830—best in Ohio in all divisions—and they are having fun doing it. (Dale Meggas, Case Reserve SID)

In the annual game for the Secretary's Cup (awarded by the secretary of transportation), Merchant Marine beat Coast Guard, 28-0; but the best misdirection came off the field. About 25 Coast Guard cadets left the stands and raced toward the flagpole to take down the Merchant Marine flag. While most of the Merchant Marine freshmen left the stands to stop them, another pack of Coast Guard cadets ran to the opposite end of the stadium and grabbed the cannon that the Merchant Marine fires after every touchdown. They managed to escape the stadium before the USMMA midshipmen saw them and gave chase. By the third quarter, the cannon was back on the field and calm was restored. (Dennis O'Donnell, Merchant Marine SID)

South Carolina's Sterling Sharpe is among I-A leaders in pass receptions

Tommies win both cross country crowns in Division III

St. Thomas (Minnesota) tied the record for lowest team score in winning its second team title at the Division III Men's Cross Country Championships November 22 at Fredonia State.

The Tommies placed five runners among the top 20 finishers and tied the scoring record of 51 points set by North Central in 1982. Leading the way for St. Thomas was senior Nicholas Manciu, who placed fifth with a time of 27:28 on the same course where he won the individual title as a freshman in 1982.

This year's individual titlist was Arnie Schraeder of Wisconsin-Stevens Point, who finished eight seconds ahead of runner-up James Batchelor of Wisconsin-LaCrosse. Schraeder's winning time was 26:47.

Batchelor's finish helped Wisconsin-LaCrosse claim runner-up honors in the team competition, with 72 points.

By winning the team title, St. Thomas' men joined the school's women's team for the second time to win championships in the same year. Both teams also were titlists in 1984.

Lisa Koelfgen adds to NCAA titles with victory

Lisa Koelfgen captured individual honors and led St. Thomas (Minnesota) to the team title at the Division III Women's Cross Country Championships November 22 at Fredonia State.

St. Thomas' women joined the school's men's squad as 1986 team titlists and won their third championship in six years at the meet.

Koelfgen's winning time of 19:14 was 10 seconds better than the second-place time turned in by teammate Jennifer Hintz. The Tommies' Shari Sullivan also was in the top 10, finishing ninth. As a team, St. Thomas scored 45 points.

The win made Koelfgen a multi-sport champion in NCAA competition. She previously has won indoor and outdoor 1,500-meter Division III individual titles in track for the Tommies.

Ithaca finished second in the team competition, led by Jannette Bonrouhi, who finished 10th. The Bombers posted 73 points, 19 better than third-place Wisconsin-Oshkosh.

North Carolina women regain trophy in Division I soccer

North Carolina regained the National Collegiate Women's Soccer Championship with a 2-0 victory over Colorado College November 23 at George Mason. The Tar Heels had won three consecutive titles before being dethroned by George Mason last year.

Sophomore midfielder Tracey Bates opened the scoring with an unassisted goal at 10:45. Wendy Gebauer, also a sophomore midfielder, added the second goal at 31:25, with an assist from senior forward April Heinrichs.

Heinrichs was the heroine in North Carolina's 3-2, overtime victory over George Mason in the semifinals. She scored the game winner at 95:50, with an assist from senior midfielder Marcia McDermott. North Carolina finished the year with a 24-0-1 record, while George Mason was 16-3-1.

Colorado College, which ended the season 17-4-1, reached the finals with a 1-0 victory over Massachusetts in a shootout. The Tigers advanced with a 3-1 edge in penalty kicks.

Named to the all-tournament team were: Forwards—Wendy Gebauer, North Carolina; Catherine Spence, Massachusetts; Lisa Gmitter, George Mason. UNC-Greensboro gets its fourth men's soccer crown

North Carolina-Greensboro won its fourth Division III Men's Soccer Championship in the last five years with a 2-0 victory over UC San Diego November 22 at North Carolina-Greensboro.

The Spartans' first goal came at 52:55 when a UC San Diego player deflected junior forward Willie Lopez's shot into the goal. Sophomore midfielder Alvin James scored the game's only other goal, with an assist from sophomore forward Carl Fleming. Junior goalkeeper Tony Hannum recorded his fifth shutout of the season.

North Carolina-Greensboro has a 21-2 record in six years of tournament play. Spartan coach Michael Parker has won five NCAA titles (including three at Lock Haven).

"It was difficult playing the role of defending champion; but in the end, we did what we hoped to do—successfully defend the national title," Parker said.

North Carolina-Greensboro, which ended the season with an 18-5-0 record, defeated Fredonia State, 3-2, in the semifinals. Fredonia State finished with a 19-2-2 mark.

Edinboro, Cal Poly-SLO take cross country crowns

Edinboro placed three runners among the top 10 individual finishers to win its first-ever team title at the Division II Men's Cross Country Championships November 22 at UC Riverside.

The Fighting Scots' Mike Platt finished seventh on the 10,000-meter course with a time of 31:35 to lead the squad, followed by teammates Luil Graham in eighth place (31:38), and Tim Dunthorne in 10th (31:49).

In the individual competition, East Texas State's Samson Obowocha successfully defended his 1985 title in a course-record time of 30:52.

Edinboro scored 56 points to slip past defending team champion South Dakota State, which placed two runners in the top 10. The Jackrabbits finished with 79 points.

Coach Doug Watts' Scots placed five runners among the top 25 finishers, compared to South Dakota State's three.

The Scots' title comes after two consecutive second-place finishes at the championships.

Following are top-10 team and individual finishes. Complete results will be published in the December 1 issue of the News.

Team results

1. Edinboro, 56; 2. South Dakota State, 79; 3. Southeast Missouri State, 135; 4. Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo, 143; 5. Mankato State, 159; 6. Cal Poly-Pomona, 166; 7. North Dakota State, 196; 8. Lowell, 197; 9. Keene State, 208; 10. Cal State Northridge.

Division II Women

Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo captured its fifth consecutive team title and also claimed the individual crown at the Division II Women's Cross Country Championships November 22 at UC Riverside.

Gladys Prieur, who sat out last year after a third-place finish in 1984, captured individual honors to lead the Mustangs. Prieur overtook defending individual titlist Bente Moe of Seattle Pacific with a strong kick in the final 150 meters of the 5,000-meter course and crossed the finish line with a time of 16:43, six seconds better than Moe.

The time broke a course record set just two weeks earlier by Prieur at the West regional meet.

The Mustangs placed two other runners in the top 10 and finished with 39 points to lead a West region sweep of the top three team spots. Cal State Northridge and Seattle Pacific, which finished second and third respectively in the region, also were second and third at the championships.

Following are top-10 and individual finishes. Complete results will be published in the December 1 issue of the News.

UC San Diego wins volleyball title

UC San Diego had to battle a tough Calvin team and more than 3,000 screaming Calvin fans to win its third NCAA Division III Women's Volleyball Championship November 22.

The Tritons easily defeated Calvin in the first game, 15-4, but soon the momentum changed, and the Knights and the partisan sellout crowd of 3,275 had UC San Diego on the run. Calvin won the next two games, 15-10 and 15-3.

But just as quickly as the momentum changed before, it changed again—this time spurring the Tritons to closing wins of 15-3 and 15-5.

Wisconsin-LaCrosse defeated Juniata for third place, 12-15, 15-12, 15-4, 15-11.

Since the tournament began in 1981, UC San Diego has been the most dominant team in Division III volleyball. The Tritons have played in every championship game except one—they lost to La Verne in the 1985 regionals. In addition to this year's title, they finished first in 1981 and 1984, and second in 1982 and 1983.

En route to this year's title, UC San Diego defeated La Verne, 15-3, 15-11, 11-15, 11-15, 15-11; Menlo, 8-15, 15-13, 15-8, 15-7, and Juniata in the semifinals, 15-10, 16-14, 15-1. Calvin knocked off Buffalo, 15-4, 15-11, 15-13; Ohio Northern, 6-15, 15-18, 15-6, 15-7, and semifinalist Wisconsin-LaCrosse, 15-10, 15-9, 7-15, 15-11, to reach the finals.

All-tournament selections include: Monica Bradley, Carol Lipsom and Kim Stonecipher of UC San Diego; Kim DeHaan and Roxane Helmus of Calvin, and Sue Ketter from Wisconsin-LaCrosse.

'Refrigerator' look-alike hopes to earn spot in Knox backfield

By Mike Trueblood

While growing up in the Fiji Islands, Knox College freshman Ilaisa Tagitupou never played American football. But rugby is a popular sport on the South Pacific islands; and thanks to his considerable size, Tagitupou excelled at the game.

About a year ago, while attending school in Israel, Tagitupou saw his first Chicago Bears' game on video tape. He also read accounts of Chicago's "Refrigerator" Perry in Sports Illustrated. Like they did for millions of other young people, Perry and the Bears sparked Tagitupou's interest in football.

"I was amazed," said the 6-3, 300-pound member of the Knox Siwash football team. "It was somebody I could relate to."

Attending high school in Israel while his father worked as an engineer for the United Nations in Lebanon, Tagitupou was dubbed the "Refrigerator" by his classmates. Somewhat inspired, when it came time to select an American college to continue his education, football became a prime consideration.

"I got an outstanding international student award from the European Council of International Schools," he said. "They recommended Knox."

At first, Tagitupou hoped to enter USC or UCLA to play rugby, as well as learn American football. Because of a total lack of experience in the American game, however, the political science and international relations student made a more realistic choice for his athletic goals.

"I'd never had equipment on before, and it was kind of strange," he said of his introduction to football. "The equipment kind of hindered my coordination."

Tagitupou arrived on campus this fall unannounced to football coach Randy Oberembt. Although interested in seeing the former member of Fiji's national high school rugby team try out, Oberembt was not overly excited about his walk on. "We have a very diverse student population, and we welcome participation from everybody," said Oberembt. "We were pleased to offer him the opportunity without expecting a great deal."

After a few practices, however, Oberembt could see he had a large, quality athlete on his hands. "He ran amazingly well for a man 305 pounds," said the Knox coach. "He has very good hands. I think that's from his rugby background."

"He has the potential to be an outstanding football player. He's a fine athlete."

Unfortunately for the 3-4-1 Siwash, there was no way to accelerate the learning process for Tagitupou. He saw limited playing time as a defensive lineman this season, although he was assigned additional duties on special teams.

"It's so difficult to learn football unless you've grown up with the game," Oberembt said. "We take so much for granted since we've experienced the game."

Said Tagitupou of his football education, "Learning the plays, that's the big thing. I get kind of confused by the numbers."

Actually, that doesn't make him much different than most players. But learning to adopt the mentality the game requires has been a greater adjustment.

An articulate, soft-spoken 19-year-old known as "Fiji" on the Knox campus, Tagitupou lacks the unwavering intensity football coaches like to see. But he says with all seriousness, he is afraid he might hurt somebody if he plays too rough.

Tagitupou has seen several players permanently paralyzed in rugby, which he considers a rougher sport.

"I just can't go out there with the objective to hurt people," he said. "I'm always afraid I'll hurt somebody, because I've been capable of hurting people."

Oberembt admitted, "When he does show more aggressiveness, he'll be a better football player."

There are signs of that happening. "If somebody hits me hard first, I usually retaliate," said Tagitupou.

The learning process and his adjustment to football's aggressive style may not be the most frustrating aspects of this new game for Tagitupou, however. He has yet to satisfy his burning desire to run with the football.

He's not merely trying to imitate Perry—with whom he shares an amazing in-uniform resemblance—but that's what Tagitupou frequently did while playing rugby. "I'm hoping to play offense, where I can take the ball," he said.

"I've always been a ball-carrier in rugby. It's kind of strange when you don't have the ball with you once in a while."

He'd like to see him a little lighter, but Oberembt doesn't reject the possibility of someday finding Tagitupou in his backfield. "He's probably could be a guy you could give the ball to. He's pretty quick."

Said Tagitupou, "I'd like to lose more weight and get to 250 and maybe make fullback. I talked to coach, and he said, 'We'll get you there.'"

Tagitupou added, "I'm 300 and trying to cut down. I'm trying to make 270 for the wrestling team."

Pacific hopes for title repeat in Division I women's volleyball

Pacific, winner of the 1985 Division I Women's Volleyball Championship, has taken the first major step on the road to defending its title.

The Tigers earned an automatic berth to the 1986 championship by winning the Pacific Coast Athletic Association tournament in Long Beach, California, defeating Hawaii, 15-11, 16-14, 3-15, 15-9, in the finals.

And considering that the PCAA is probably the toughest volleyball conference in the nation, with five of the country's top-10 teams as members, the victory should keep the Tigers atop the NCAA volleyball poll for the fourth week in a row.

This year's national championship begins December 4-6, with the first round played on the campuses of participating institutions. But what makes it doubly important for the Tigers is that the final four will be staged December 18 and 20 on Pacific's home court.

"The obvious question is, 'What do you do to try to repeat?'" Pacific coach John Dunning said at the start of the 1986 season. It seems he may have found that answer midway through this year's schedule.

"The UCLA NIVT (National Invitational Volleyball Tournament) was a turning point for us," Dunning said. "We lost two five-game matches (against Brigham Young and UCLA) in the same day. Since then, we have improved dramatically."

The Tigers now have won 19 in a row and are 34-3 overall.

"We have played at least 20 matches against top-10 teams this year," Dunning said. "If you can survive those matches, you've gone a long way in preparing for the pressure of the national championship."

Although most of the faces are the same on the Pacific team, Dunning did have to replace graduated all-Americans Therese Boyle and Julie Maginot. Standouts this season include 1985 first-team all-America Elaine Oden (340 kills in 1986), Mary Miller (300 kills) and Teri McGrath (260 kills).

Thirty-two teams will take part in the 1986 championship, and as history shows, the road to the national championship is not an easy one. Only one team has ever won back-to-back NCAA championships—Hawaii in 1982 and 1983.

Of the 32 teams selected, at least one team will be chosen from each of the four regions; fifteen of the participants will be winners of conferences that have been granted automatic qualification, and the remaining teams will be selected at large.

In this year's tournament, the top four-ranked teams will not be seeded on a national basis, as in the past. Teams will be assigned to tournament sites within their respective regions; teams will be seeded within regions. A team may be moved outside its region if it is necessary to balance the bracket numerically or if proximity to an opponent outside its region would result in an economic savings and a comparable matchup. The pairings will be decided Sunday, November 30.

At press-time, the tournament field can be sized up in the following way. (If ranked nationally, last week's NCAA ranking and record are noted in parentheses.)

Automatic qualification

Atlantic Coast Conference—Duke defeated North Carolina, 18-16, 15-13, 6-15, 15-13, in conference tourney; Atlantic 10 Conference—Penn State (14th, 34-3) defeated George Washington in the conference tournament, 15-3, 15-4, 15-5; Big East Conference—Pittsburgh won conference title by defeating Providence 15-6, 14-16, 15-2, 15-12 in tourney; Big Eight

Conference—Nebraska (7th, 25-5) defeated Oklahoma, 15-3, 15-11, 15-6 in conference tourney; Big Ten Conference—Illinois (12th [tie], 29-2) clinched the berth by going 16-0 in the regular season; Gateway Collegiate Athletic Conference—Northern Iowa defeated Southwest Missouri State in conference tourney, 11-15, 15-9, 11-15, 15-4, 15-9; High Country Athletic Conference—Brigham Young (2nd, 33-2) won in regular season, with 10-0 record; Mid-American Athletic Conference—Western Michigan (20th, 22-5) clinched the berth in regular season; Mountain West Conference—Idaho State, now 21-11, defeated Montana, 15-10, 15-12, 9-15, 15-12, in conference tourney; Pacific-10 Conference—UCLA (8th, 28-9) has at least clinched a tie in the conference with Stanford but could win the title outright with a victory over Southern California (0-17 in conference play) November 25; Pacific Coast Athletic Association—Pacific (1st, 34-3) defeated Hawaii (3rd, 27-6), 15-11, 16-14, 3-15, 15-9, in conference tourney; Southeastern Conference—Louisiana State defeated Georgia (16th, 30-6), 15-10, 12-15, 15-7, 15-9 for conference honors; Southland Conference—Texas-Arlington (19th, 25-9) defeated Lamar 15-7, 15-4, 15-8 in conference tourney; Southwest Athletic Conference—Texas (5th, 22-4) clinched the title in the regular season; West Coast Athletic Conference—Loyola Marymount won in the regular season, clinching the title with a 16-14, 5-15, 9-15, 15-12, 15-3 victory over U.S. International.

Regional and at-large selection

Teams being considered for regional and at-large bids include: Midwest—Iowa (26-5), Miami (Ohio) (25-6), Minnesota (19-10), Southwest Missouri State (25-6) and Southern Illinois (21-8); South—Georgia (16th, 30-6), Texas A&M (22-12), Kentucky (19-10), Southwest Texas State (26-7), Eastern Kentucky (24-10) and North Carolina; West—UCLA (8th, 28-9), Stanford (10th, 18-8), Arizona State (12th [tie], 20-6), Pepperdine (15th, 17-14), Oregon (17th, 19-11), Colorado State (18th, 25-7), Washington (20-11) and Arizona (13-11); Northwest—Hawaii (3rd, 27-6), San Jose State (4th, 26-4), San Diego State (6th, 35-7), UC Santa Barbara (9th, 23-10), Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo (11th, 21-13), Boise State (23-10), Long Beach State (14-16) and Montana (20-10).

Cal State Northridge hoping history won't repeat itself

For the last four years, Cal State Northridge has played in the finals of the Division II Women's Volleyball Championship. In all but one of those years, the Matadors have fallen to the opponent—UC Riverside in 1982 and Portland State in 1984 and 1985. Only in 1983 did Cal State Northridge come out on top with a 3-2 victory over Portland State.

The Matadors appear to be the favorite to make the championship finale again in 1986, and this year they are determined to turn the results around in their favor.

Cal State Northridge is 33-5 overall and ranked No. 1 in the country. The Matadors recently clinched their fourth straight California Collegiate Athletic Association title, going undefeated in league competition. The title has earned them an automatic berth to the championship, which begins December 5 with regional play. The semifinals and finals are scheduled for December 12 and 13 at Cal State Sacramento.

Of Cal State Northridge's five losses, four were to Division I opponents. The Matadors fell to conference foe UC Riverside in the finals of the Air Force tournament.

UC Riverside could be the Matadors' main nemesis. The Highlanders are ranked No. 2 nationally and are 24-7 overall. Cal State Sacramento, which Cal State Northridge did not meet in the regular season, is 23-7 and ranked No. 3.

No. 4-ranked Nebraska-Omaha assured itself of a spot in the national championship by winning the North Central Intercollegiate Athletic Conference title with a 15-7, 11-15, 15-8, 15-1 victory over North Dakota State in the conference tourney.

The other automatic berths belong to Regis (Colorado), ranked 8th (29-10) and winner of the Continental Divide Conference, and Florida Southern, ranked 20th (32-8) and winner of the Sunshine State Conference.

The remainder of the 16 teams will be decided by the Division II Women's Volleyball Committee during a conference call Tuesday, November 25. At least one team will be selected from each of the eight regions; and,

Northeast—New Haven (18th, 38-7) and Army (40-12); Atlantic—Navy (19th, 43-6), Gannon (38-6) and East Stroudsburg (23-8); South—Mississippi University for Women (9th, 35-3) and Tampa (33-6); South Central—Central Missouri State (5th, 32-3), Northern Colorado (12th, 37-12) and East Texas State (16th, 22-2); Great Lakes—Grand Valley State (6th, 38-6), Ferris State (10th, 30-5), Indiana/Purdue-Fort Wayne (14th, 28-4) and Wayne State (Michigan) (30-6); North Central—North Dakota State (7th, 39-10) and Minnesota-Duluth (13th, 45-18); Northwest—Cal State Sacramento (3rd, 23-7), Portland State (11th, 19-14) and Alaska-Anchorage (23-8); Southwest—UC Riverside (2nd, 24-7), Cal State Los Angeles (15th, 26-14) and Cal Poly-Pomona (17th, 16-15).

Division II women's volleyball

besides the four automatic conference winners, the others will be selected at large.

Teams under consideration by region, excluding those already selected by conference automatic selection, are as follows. (The latest NCAA national ranking and available record are in parentheses.)

Miami (Ohio) plans tests for drugs

The Miami University (Ohio) department of intercollegiate athletics and the athletics policy committee have decided to implement a random drug-testing policy.

"The health and success of our students in academics, athletics and in life are our most important concerns," states Miami President Paul G. Pearson. "We want to give our student-athletes an additional reason to resist any possible peer pressure in this regard."

All athletes and their parents or guardian have been notified in writing about the drug-testing program. The program will be consistent with Mid-American Athletic Conference and NCAA guidelines.

Arkansas State will leave Southland for new league

Arkansas State University will leave the Southland Conference and join the new American South Athletic Conference, university officials said November 22.

Eugene Smith, president of ASU, said at a news conference that details of the move will be completed by mid-January.

"We have enjoyed our affiliation with the Southland Conference for

Dick Kishpaugh cited by group

Dick Kishpaugh, a football historian and contributor to The NCAA News, has been named by the National Interscholastic Athletic Administrators Association to receive its distinguished service award.

Kishpaugh, who resides in Parchment, Michigan, is one of seven individuals who will be honored by the NIAAA December 15 in Nashville during the national conference of high school directors of athletics.

Kishpaugh has served as historian for the Michigan High School Athletic Association for the past four decades. He also served as historian and statistician for the Michigan Intercollegiate Athletic Association from 1955 to 1975. He is a member of the Football Writers Association of America and an honorary member of the Michigan High School Football Coaches Association.

the past 23 years and believe it's been good for ASU and that ASU has been good for the conference," Smith said.

"Now, we believe our interests and goals are different and that we must pursue greater ambitions with our total athletics program. We are excited to become affiliated with these other universities, and we anticipate a friendly, progressive and competitive alliance for many years," he said.

ASU will join four previously committed institutions in the ASAC: Louisiana Tech University, the University of New Orleans, the University of Southwestern Louisiana and Pan American University.

The new non-football league will compete in Division I and field championships in six men's sports and six women's sports. The men's sports will be basketball, baseball, golf, indoor track, outdoor track and cross country. The women's sports will be basketball, volleyball, tennis, indoor track, outdoor track and cross country.

ASU's football team temporarily will become a Division I-AA independent, Smith said.

In helping make the ASAC a reality, ASU will be associated with at least two other schools with SLC backgrounds, Louisiana Tech, which has announced its departure at the end of the current academic year, and Southwestern Louisiana, which left in 1982.

Basketball TV rights negotiations will continue

The NCAA committee handling television negotiations has concluded its separate negotiations with the CBS television network for the continuance of live rights to the Division I Men's Basketball Championship and other selected championships. No agreement was reached between the committee and CBS, which owns those rights through the 1987 championships.

The committee now will open negotiations with all three broadcast networks for a three- or four-year agreement commencing in 1988.

"CBS made an outstanding proposal," said Richard D. Schultz, committee chair and athletics director at the University of Virginia. "The committee believes, however, that this is an excellent opportunity to determine the actual value of the basketball tournament. We would like to explore the merit and feasibility of multiple-network coverage, although we recognize that exclusivity may be in the best interest of the tournament."

The committee will send detailed specifications to each of the networks, which then will be invited to make formal presentations in early December.

Mazda to sponsor Gator Bowl

A three-year agreement has been reached for Mazda Motors to sponsor the annual Gator Bowl, officials have announced.

Although officials refused to disclose the amount of the sponsorship, Gator Bowl President John Bell said the Mazda contribution, plus a $300,000 subsidy from the Jacksonville Tourist Development Council, will help replace the television revenue lost when ABC-TV dropped the game after last year's contest.

ABC-TV reportedly paid the Gator Bowl about $800,000 for last year's game, while the CBS contract is reportedly about $200,000, according to published reports.

The Gator Bowl will be able to pay Clemson and Stanford at least $800,000 for playing in the December 27 bowl game, said Bell. Last year, Oklahoma State and Florida State received $775,934 each.

While the $800,000 payout is a record for the Gator Bowl, it will drop it from fifth to eighth place in the bowls for the amount offered.

With the new corporate sponsor, Bell said, the Gator Bowl is ready to compete with the other 17 postseason bowl games.

"When appropriate, we will do what we can to ensure that the Gator Bowl remains one of college football's top events," said Jim Trado, a Mazda Motors senior vice-president.

Mazda intends to purchase about 25 percent of the advertising during the bowl telecast, said Trado, and CBS has indicated that it will recognize the game as the Mazda Gator Bowl.

The automaker also will provide the athletics department of each competing school the use of a car for one year and a $5,000 scholarship.

Broderick Cup finalists are announced

Two institutions boast two finalists each for the Broderick Cup, given annually to the country's top female athlete of the year.

Basketball player Kamie Ethridge and track and field's Juliet Cuthbert will represent the University of Texas, Austin, in final balloting for the award, while volleyball player Kim Oden and swimmer Jenna Johnson will carry Stanford University's colors.

The Longhorn and Cardinal student-athletes join six other top female athletes being considered. Each is the recipient of individual 1985-86 Broderick Awards, which are presented in each of 10 NCAA sports.

The Broderick Cup will be awarded in January. Last year's recipient was track star Jackie Joyner of the Uni-

Michelle Pond joins NCAA staff

Michelle A. Pond has joined the national office staff as a publications editor. She replaces Richard M. Campbell, who recently joined the Association's communications department as assistant statistics coordinator.

A 1976 graduate of Syracuse University, Pond served in the U.S. Marine Corps from 1971 to 1973 and was a sportswriter for the Tonawanda (New York) News from 1976 to 1977.

She then served as sports information director at Canisius College from 1977 to 1980, when she became assistant SID at Syracuse. While at her alma mater, Pond served as press steward for the 1983 NCAA Division I Men's Basketball East regional, media coordinator for the 1984 and 1985 NCAA Division I Men's and Women's Indoor Track Championships, and assistant venue press chief in charge of formal interviews for rowing and canoeing during the 1984 Olympics.

Also among the finalists are Suzie Tuffey, cross country, North Carolina State University; Megan Donnelly, field hockey, University of Massachusetts, Amherst; Penney Hauschild, gymnastics, University of Alabama, Tuscaloosa; Gretchen Rush, tennis, Trinity University (Texas); Susan LeFebvre, softball, California State University, Fullerton, and Page Dunlap, golf, University of Florida.

Big Ten coaches at odds on postseason tournament

By Joe Mooshil

If the Big Ten Conference is serious about going to a postseason basketball tournament, it is moving very slowly.

The Big Ten and the Ivy League are the only two Division I men's conferences without postseason tournaments held before the NCAA playoffs.

At their annual preseason news conference, Big Ten coaches said the tournament would be desirable only with a reduction in the current 18-game schedule, in which every team plays every other team home and away.

Michigan State coach Jud Heathcote brought up the possibility of splitting the conference into two divisions and playing teams in one's own division twice and teams out of one's division once before having a tournament.

"The coaches and athletics directors are not all in agreement," said Heathcote. "There is not a groundswell for a tournament. It's moving slowly. Maybe it's two, three years away."

Conference Commissioner Wayne Duke said, "We've studied it and talked about it. Some feel we have to cut away from the 18-game schedule that gives us a true champion."

"Conferences that have such tournaments feel it enhances their chances of landing more teams in the NCAA tournament, but, obviously, we've been successful in that respect without it," said Duke.

In each of the last two seasons, the Big Ten has sent six teams to the NCAA tournament.

Duke said a Big Ten tournament would need final approval from the presidents of member universities.

Arguments against such a move include concern about the length of the season, loss of class time and overemphasis of the sport.

"I have mixed feelings about a tournament," said Illinois' Lou Henson. "Our athletics director (Neale Stoner) favors it. Eventually, we prob-

Key elements in drug education discussed

The key elements of a successful drug-education program were listed recently by the NCAA Drug Education Committee during a meeting in Kansas City.

After studying model drug-education programs at several institutions and organizations, committee members agreed that the following elements are important in an effective program:

- The use of educational resources such as videotapes, brochures, posters and speakers.

Florida State's Loynd wins Golden Spikes

Former Florida State University pitcher Mike Loynd is the winner of the 1986 Golden Spikes Award, making him the first hurler ever to be so honored by the United States Baseball Federation.

Loynd, who now is with the Texas Rangers, is the ninth recipient of the award, which annually honors the outstanding amateur baseball player in America.

He was selected from among nine finalists. Panelists making the selection base their decision on such attributes as character, academic background, outside activities and overall contributions to amateur baseball.

During his senior season at Florida State, Loynd tied an NCAA record and broke a school record by winning 20 games. The consensus all-America pitcher also led the nation in strikeouts with 223 and compiled a 2.45 earned-run average, prompting the periodical Baseball America to name him pitcher of the year.

The Seminoles were runners-up to Arizona in the 1986 Division I Baseball Championship.

The 22-year-old Loynd compiled a 45-10 career record at Florida State, striking out 417 batters and posting a 3.43 earned-run average.

Loynd is the second Seminole player to win the award, following 1981 winner Mike Fuentes. Loynd's teammate, second baseman Luis Aliea, also was a finalist for the 1986 award.

Other finalists this year were Casey Close, University of Michigan; Scott Heman, University of South Florida; Jeff King, University of Arkansas, Fayetteville; Tom Howard, Ball State University; Rick Raether, University of Miami (Florida); Kerry Richardson, Lubbock Christian College, and Greg Swindell, University of Texas, Austin.

ably will go to it for financial reasons.

But there are those who feel financial gains might not accrue, since some sold-out home games would be eliminated by cutting back on the schedule.

"I'm not tournament oriented," said Gene Keady of Purdue. "It helps in two ways. To make more money and give the lower teams new life. But we make money anyway. I play to win the championship."

Bill Foster, Northwestern's new coach, and Steve Yoder of Wisconsin were among those who strongly favored a tournament.

"I lean toward a tournament but only if we do not have 18 games," said Foster. "It would be a blockbuster for the fans and for national publicity."

Yoder agreed, saying, "I'm all for it. We need it badly. But it would be crazy to play 18 games and then have a tournament."

Gary Williams, the new coach at Ohio State, said, "I like the idea. The players like it. It's a players' tournament. It would be good preparation for the NCAA tournament."

Bill Frieder of Michigan, the defending champion, also suggested breaking the conference into two divisions.

"I favor it only if we cut the schedule to 14, 12, 10, eight games," said Frieder. "We ought to go to two divisions and 13 games."

Two other new coaches, Tom Davis of Iowa and Clem Haskins of Minnesota, took a wait-and-see attitude on the question.

"Let's see what our strengths are," said Davis.

Schedule of meetings during 81st Convention

The meetings of the NCAA and those of several conferences and affiliated organizations will be conducted at the Town and Country Hotel, San Diego, California, in early January 1987. The American Football Coaches Association will conduct its annual meeting January 5-8 and the American Baseball Coaches Association will meet January 9-12. Both of these organizations will be headquartered at the Sheraton Harbor Island Hotel in San Diego, rather than at the Town and Country. The College Athletic Business Managers Association will meet January 4-7 at the Vacation Village. The National Association of Academic Advisers for Athletics will meet January 4-6 at the Hanalei Hotel.

The meetings of the following organizations are listed in this composite schedule:

see who is taking the shots—the winning teams or the losing teams.”

“When we used the three-point goal, at least one player from each of our teams hit 40 percent of her attempts or better,” McDonald said. “Our team enjoyed a lot of success with it. I believe that when people get used to it, they will start using it more often and in different parts of the game. One strategy I saw teams use that seemed to be effective was getting the ball to a good outside shooter for a three-pointer when the shot clock ran down.”

“We’re hoping to use the three-pointer in every game,” said Laurie Turner, first-year head coach at Idaho, which finished third last season in Division I shooting percentage. “This team is a lot different than last year’s... all five starters are gone.”

“We have seven people returning with only limited playing time, but we have the potential to be a good outside-shooting team. Last year, Idaho played an inside game,” Turner said,

“and this year, we will play more of an outside game. We probably will try a few three-pointers every game.”

Jody Conradt, head coach at defending Division I champion Texas, said the play could help some of her younger players. “It may allow some of mine to play sooner. If they score twice (two three-pointers) and their opponents have to score three times (two-point goals) to even things up, I think that could take the pressure off some of the young kids and any defensive deficiencies they might have.

“If I have anybody who becomes proficient from three-point range, I will use them,” Conradt continued. “I think the play is exciting. And I can’t think of anything more discouraging to a defensive team than putting them in three (points) at a time.”

“And I know our players will want to try it. If the mountain is there, young people certainly are going to try and climb it.”

“We recently scrimmaged a Division I team,” recalled Stevens, “and one of our players hit a long-range bomb from deep in the corner. Everyone on the bench stood up and yelled ‘three!’”

“The three-pointer will add interest to the game for the fans, and it’s fun for the players... and that’s why we’re in this game.”

Drug programs lack follow-up, according to Michigan study

Few drug-education programs in elementary schools, high schools and colleges follow up on students to see if they have changed their attitudes or behavior, according to a researcher at the University of Michigan's Center for Research on Learning and Thinking.

The researcher, Robert Bangert-Downs, studied 126 alcohol and drug-education programs and discovered that only 14 tried to measure changes in behavior, and just seven of these programs showed drug use had been cut. In four others, drug use actually increased. One showed mixed results, and the two other programs showed no increase or decrease.

more prevalent, Bangert-Downs found. Among the programs he examined, 18 looked for attitudinal differences after programs were completed, and 15 reported that students had a healthier outlook toward drug use. Especially effective, Bangert-Downs said, were four alcohol-abuse programs at colleges that used peer counseling. Least effective were two programs restricted to “expert lecturers,” the Chicago Tribune reported.

The programs seem to do a better job of providing information than in changing attitudes or behavior, Bangert-Downs said. Therefore, “experts had better start asking hard questions, doing thorough evaluations and setting up programs they know will actually change behavior,” he said.

Perimeter shooters regard NCAA three-point rule as a gift

By Tim Liotta

UCLA's Reggie Miller breaks into a sly smile when he's asked about the NCAA's decision to implement a three-point field goal this season.

It is a look usually associated with a burglar with big plans for a big score.

And it is being worn by jump shooters all across the country now that shots made beyond a line 19 feet, nine inches from the basket are worth three points in college basketball rather than two.

"At first, I was surprised; but when I found out the line was only 19-9, I almost threw a party for my family," Miller said at a recent Pacific-10 Conference basketball media day. "It was definitely party time at the Miller house. You know, streamers, balloons, chips-and-dip, the whole works.

"I said, 'Thank you.' You're not going to give a gift like that back."

Indiana's Steve Alford also is eager to get his shots in from beyond the three-point line.

"I shoot the majority of my shots outside that line, coming off screens," Alford said. "I haven't had to change anything. It just seems now that my jump shots are worth three points instead of two. To a shooter, you've got to love that."

Miller and Alford are two of the nation's best perimeter shooters, each having led his team in scoring while shooting mostly from the outside. Miller averaged 25.9 points per game for the Bruins last year, while Alford

'I haven't had to change anything. It just seems now that my jump shots are worth three points instead of two'

—Indiana's Steve Alford

averaged 22.5 for the Hoosiers.

How good is Miller from long range?

UCLA coach Walt Hazzard tells a story of a shooting drill at a recent Bruins' practice during which Miller made 19 straight from beyond the three-point line.

"And only one hit the rim," the coach declared.

Marc Dellins, UCLA's sports information director, went through the shooting charts from 27 of the Bruins' 29 games last year (two weren't available), and he estimates Miller made 80 shots from beyond the three-point line.

Miller, whose shooting range appears to be limited only by the dimensions of a basketball court, said he expected the three-point line to be farther from the basket.

"I figured it would be 21, 22 feet. At 19-9, that's almost an underhand shot," he said.

Alford agrees, saying, "Generally speaking, I think it's too close; but I would rather have it there than where it was four years ago, simply because I don't have to change anything."

Four years ago, the Big Ten Conference experimented with a three-point line that was measured at more than 21 feet from the basket, but it dropped the idea after one season. A Big Ten representative said, however, that the line this year is not much different than the 1983 placement. It is just measured from a different point.

Even if the three-point line was placed farther out, it wouldn't bother Miller.

"I'll shoot from 30 feet, but I usually don't want to try from outside that," he said.

Cracked Hazzard: "Thirty feet! That's obscene! I can't see the basket from 30 feet."

Although he jokes about his player's long-range shot selection, Hazzard has put no limits on Miller's shooting range.

"He's had a lot of faith in me during my career," Miller said. "He's given me the green light. If you shoot 55-60 percent from 22 feet, what can you say? That's a good percentage for centers."

Like Alford, Miller expects to find himself stationed beyond the three-point line more often than not.

"On offense, I'm going to set up outside the three-point line, so that should help us inside," Miller said. "And if somebody gets hot inside and they start to sag and the ball comes back out to me, it's money."

Arizona coach Lute Olson figures it will take players a while to adjust to playing with the three-point rule.

"I think it's a player's and fan's delight, but a coach's nightmare," he said. "I've got guys on my team who think they can shoot them, and I think they shouldn't be. It will create bad shot selection until the players get used to it."

Placing the three-point line farther from the basket would further limit the number of players able to make the shot.

"We should get the college line out to where it takes a good shooter to hit it," Olson said. "I like it, but it's too close."

Indiana coach Bobby Knight disagrees with the three-point basket, even though he'll happily let Alford exploit the rule.

"A tough shot is taking the ball to the basket against the center and getting it in the basket. I'd rather see three points for something like that," Knight said. "I didn't make the rule. All the guys who have to play against Alford made the rule."

"Some individuals, some coaches don't enjoy the rule simply because this rule favors teams that have shooters at the present date, and they haven't been able to recruit shooters," Alford said. "So it has its pros and cons. But from a shooter's perspective, I love the rule."

Liotta writes for the Associated Press.

ATHLETIC DIRECTOR University of Houston

The President of the University of Houston has appointed a committee to conduct a national search for an Athletic Director. The Committee invites applications and nominations for the position.

The Athletic Director reports to the President. He or she is responsible for administering personnel, budget and physical facilities required in a major university athletic program with 15 intercollegiate teams competing in the Southwest Conference and national competition. Proven administrative and management talents are required, as the Athletic Director must supervise and maintain a competitive sports program while dealing with a wide variety of competing claims for attention and response. An ability to relate well to the university community, including faculty and student non-athletes, the public and media is essential. Included in the responsibilities of the position is the capacity to plan and direct fund-raising and deal effectively with the many supporters of the intercollegiate athletic program.

Commitment to compliance with all NCAA and University requirements and dedication to full academic development of student-athletes are expected. The University will fully support the Athletic Director who can meet these requirements and implement a plan that will achieve these objectives.

The Search Committee will begin reviewing nominees and applicants in early December 1986, and will appreciate applications and nominations, with accompanying resumes, by December 7, 1986.

The University of Houston is a major research university in a dynamic urban area. With an enrollment of more than 31,000 students, it is the largest campus of the University of Houston System. The 525-acre campus is part of the state higher education system and offers innovative educational and research opportunities through its 13 colleges and two off-campus institutes.

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

National Collegiate Athletic Association

The National Collegiate Athletic Association invites applications and nominations for the position of executive director, the chief operating and administrative officer of the Association. The individual selected will succeed Walter Byers, the current executive director, on his retirement at a date to be set, not later than the summer of 1988. In order to provide an appropriate period of transition, the date for appointment as executive director-elect will be established by mutual agreement, perhaps as early as the summer of 1987.

The NCAA, founded in 1906, is a voluntary, national membership association of nearly 800 accredited, four-year, degree-granting institutions as active members, and 200 other institutions, conferences and affiliated organizations in other classes of membership. The NCAA provides a national governance structure for intercollegiate athletics and is the organization through which member colleges and universities act on and regulate athletics matters at the national level. The basic purpose of the Association is to maintain intercollegiate athletics as an integral part of the program of higher education. The organization's national office is located in Mission, Kansas, a suburb of Kansas City, Missouri.

Responsibilities:

- To provide creative and dynamic leadership in maintaining intercollegiate athletics as an integral part of higher education so that students may have opportunities to compete in amateur sports in the proper educational context.
- To articulate, in appropriate forums of constituency groups and to the general public, the key issues of intercollegiate athletics and the role and activities of the NCAA in addressing these issues.
- To provide periodic reports and analyses on subjects of interest and concern to the membership, and to recommend to the Association's Presidents Commission, Council and Executive Committee courses of action designed to achieve the Association's objectives.
- To employ and supervise the national office staff, currently approximately 125 people organized into seven departments: administration, business, championships, communications, compliance/enforcement, legislative services and publishing.
- To oversee the activities of the national office staff in implementing the decisions made by the membership at the annual Convention and, in the interim between Conventions, the directives of the Council, Executive Committee and Presidents Commission.
- To direct and supervise the preparation of the Association's annual operating budget and the management of the Association's financial affairs.

Qualifications:

- Evidence of an understanding of and appreciation for the values and purposes of higher education and the role of intercollegiate athletics as an integral part thereof.
- A record of responsible, high level administrative experience in intercollegiate athletics, higher education, association management or a comparable, related area.
- Demonstrated competence in program and budget planning, management and evaluation.
- Demonstrated interpersonal skills necessary to relate effectively to members of the Presidents Commission, Council and Executive Committee, to other leaders in higher education and athletics, and to the public at large.
- Evidence of well-developed political instincts and skills necessary to achieve consensus in, and to manage an organization with, diverse constituencies.
- Demonstrated communication skills, including not only personal written and oral communication abilities, but also the talent to promote development of similar skills in those areas by members of the national office staff.
- Evidence of high standards of personal and professional integrity.
- Familiarity with the history, contributions and problems of intercollegiate athletics and with the history, accomplishments, purposes, services and procedures of the NCAA is desirable but not mandatory.

Those expressing an interest in the position should include a current resume and a letter of application with the names, addresses and telephone numbers of three references. Applications or nominations must be received by January 20, 1987.

Nominations and expressions of interest should be sent to:

NCAA-sponsored clinic to instruct young volleyball players

The Division I Women's Volleyball Championship offers the occasion for the next in a series of clinics sponsored by the NCAA's Youth Education through Sports Program.

Several hundred youngsters in the Stockton, California, area will receive instruction in volleyball from some of the nation's top collegiate coaches during the free clinic December 20. It begins with registration at noon in Spanos Center at the University of the Pacific, site of that night's Division I title match in women's volleyball.

The clinic is for boys and girls in grades six through 12.

In addition to receiving on-the-court instruction from the coaches, participating youngsters also will attend sessions on such nonathletic concerns as preparing for college and guarding against substance abuse.

Among the clinicians is coach Laurel Kessel of the University of New Mexico, a former all-America player who welcomes what she said is a fairly rare opportunity to work with junior high and high school students.

"I did work with some 9- through 12-year-olds during a period of time when I was in Italy. I think it's fun," she said. "I especially enjoy working with the younger kids, because they haven't developed many bad habits. They're kind of a kick."

Although the opportunity to work with youngsters provides the incentive for Kessel to participate, the scheduling of the clinic in conjunction with the championship makes her appearance there convenient. In fact, most of the participating coaches are able to lend a hand because they will be on hand for the tournament.

"Since we have all these coaches together, it's a good time to try to do something that is useful for the public," she said. "Something like this promotes the sport."

Each of the coaches will discuss various phases of the sport. For example, Kessel will do a session on setting up offensive plays. She hopes to be able to let participants actually try out a few basic plays.

Also scheduled to appear at the clinic is featured speaker Terry Liskovich, coach of the U.S. women's volleyball team. Joining Kessel as clinicians will be Kathy DeBoer of the University of Kentucky; Mike English, University of Wyoming; Elaine Michaelis, Brigham Young University; Russell Rose, Pennsylvania State University; Jim Stone, Ohio State University; Mike Haley, University of Texas, Austin, and Jerry Angle, Northwestern University.

In addition, national women's team member Jayne McHugh, a former Pacific standout, will present a talk on the relationship between athletics and academics. McHugh was a recipient of an NCAA postgraduate scholarship.

Advance registration for the clinic is encouraged. Further information about registration is available from Carla Konet, Athletics Department, University of the Pacific, Stockton, California 95211; telephone 209/946-2249.

Registration on the day of the clinic will be at the northwest entrance of Spanos Center. Parents also are welcome to attend the clinic.

Tennessee basketball arena to be ready next November

The University of Tennessee, Knoxville, basketball arena, which is more than two years behind schedule, will be finished by November 1987, officials said.

University Vice-President Charles E. Smith said safety complaints raised by the original contractor have earned the arena the distinction of being the most evaluated construction project in the college's history.

Smith said the safety checks have proven the original contractor's concerns were baseless and the structure is safe.

The 25,000-seat arena will become the largest on-campus basketball facility, surpassing the University of Kentucky's 23,500-seat Rupp Arena, Volunteer officials say.

The current contractor, Ray Bell Construction Co., has 18 weeks of uninterrupted progress on the building and has installed more than half of the roof, a construction phase that was stalled for more than one year, the Associated Press reported.

Smith said the $25 million project is expected to run at least $7 million over budget and that the bonding company that guaranteed the work of the original contractor, B. B. Andersen of Topeka, Kansas, would be liable.

Delays in construction already have cost the university two chances to host the Southeastern Conference basketball tourney, which last year was moved to Rupp Arena and this year will be held in Atlanta.

The Vols' new arena is being built next to the Tennessee River and Neyland Stadium, the second largest college football stadium in the nation. At present, the Vols play basketball at the 12,700-seat Stokely Athletics Center.

Grand jury indicts Kirk

Former Memphis State University basketball coach Dana Kirk was indicted November 20 by a Federal grand jury on charges of obstruction of justice, mail fraud, income tax evasion and filing false tax returns.

Kirk, 51, was at Memphis State for seven seasons and turned a losing program into a top-20 contender. He took the Tigers to the past five NCAA Division I Men's Basketball Championships.

Kirk was charged in the 11-count indictment with receiving a $10,000 personal payment for pretournament interviews with the news media prior to the Winston Tire Classic basketball tournament in Los Angeles in 1983.

"He did receive a payment that his employer was not aware of," said U.S. Attorney Hickman Ewing at a news conference.

Ewing alleged that payment constituted mail fraud, the Associated Press reported.

Kirk also was accused of soliciting $2,000 for having Memphis State participate in the 1982 Sugar Bowl Classic.

"The negotiations for Memphis State's participation in the 1982 Sugar Bowl tournament were terminated due to Kirk's demands for a personal payment of $2,000," said the indictment.

The charges against Kirk were issued by a grand jury that has been investigating allegations of sports gambling for the past 1½ years in the mid-South, but Ewing said Kirk was not charged with any illegal gambling activities.

Kirk was released as head coach in September. University officials gave no reason for the firing.

Last month, Kirk agreed to a contract settlement of $170,833, said Mike Finn, a spokesman for the Memphis State athletics department.

Kirk could face a maximum of 62 years in prison and fines totaling $912,000 if convicted on all charges, the U.S. attorney's office said.
