Jeff Kostoff, Stanford senior, helped the Cardinal to its third straight NCAA Division I Men's Swimming and Diving Championships team title in competition at Austin, Texas, by placing first in the 1,650-yard freestyle and 400-yard individual

ommission adds new dimension to special (onvention

The sixth special NCAA Convention this June in Dallas is taking on a new look as a result of actions by the NCAA Presidents Commission in its April 1-2 meeting.

The Commission voted to expand the scope of the June 29-30 Convention to encompass a three-pronged approach:

• Specific legislation regarding the costs of intercollegiate athletics programs and maintenance of a proper balance between athletics programs and other institutional programs, as announced originally.

The initiation of a national debate or dialogue on the compatibility of intercollegiate athletics with the aims and values of colleges and universities.

• Authorization of a series of farreaching studies regarding the effects of participation in intercollegiate sports on both the student-athlete and the collegiate institution.

Only the first of those was included in the original call for the special Convention, distributed during the annual Convention in January. And the Commission affirmed April 2 that the only legislation that will be admissible for the June Convention is that relating to costs and "proper balance."

National debate

The concept of an extensive national debate or dialogue was presented to the Commission in a white paper prepared by University of California, Berkeley, Chancellor Ira Michael Heyman. Such a white paper was among the recommendations to the Commission from an American Council on Education committee last

After review by the Commission, the white paper currently is being revised for subsequent approval by the Commission and distribution to the NCAA membership prior to the special Convention.

The Commission's intention is to launch the national debate at the June Convention in Dallas by inviting "eminent representatives of American athletics" to present their views. That probably will involve two key speakers, with their presentations to be followed by comments from respondents such as members of the Commission, members of the NCAA Council, faculty athletics representatives and directors of athletics.

Convention delegates will be invited to submit questions to the speakers or the respondents, and all of the discussion will be included in the printed proceedings of the Convention. Forums

The Commission also will sponsor a resolution at the June Convention directing the NCAA to stage, on behalf of the Commission, additional See Commission, page 10

Tournament participants to share in $24.8 million

More than 87 percent of Division I basketball-playing institutions will share in the proceeds from the 1987 Division I Men's Basketball Championship, according to Association Controller Louis J. Spry.

Based on projections Spry made last July, which are outlined in the accompanying table, 253 of the 290 Division I members will receive a share of the tournament's receipts.

A conference-by-conference breakdown shows that the Big East, with five teams in the 1987 play-offs, will get the largest amount --- in excess of $3.6 million

Only the Big South, Gulf Star and Metropolitan Conferences and 17 independents are not represented in the distribution.

The 64-team field included 22.1 percent of Division I members, which is a participation ratio of 1 to 4.5.

Projected Distribution of Net Receipts

U.S. funds available for antidrug plans

Federal funds totaling more than $7.7 million have been made available under the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1986 for institutions of higher education to develop, implement, operate and improve drug-abuse education and prevention programs for students, according to the legal firm of Squire, Sanders and Dempsey, the Association's counsel in Washington, D.C

Applications for grants for the funds must be completed and for warded to the appropriate Federal agency by May 21, 1987, according to a notice published in the March 23, 1987, edition of the Federal Register. The Department of Education is coordinating the grant program. Applications for grants ranging from $5,000 to $125,000 (per year for up to two years) will be accepted by the Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education (FIPSE). Requests for applications or additional information on the program should be made to Dr. Ronald Bucknam, Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education, 7th and D Streets, SW, Room 3100, ROB-3, Washington, DC 20202 (telephone 202/245-8091 or 8100).

June Convention issues highlight Council agenda

Preparation for the Association's sixth special Convention will be a major item of business for the NCAA Council during its spring meeting April 13-15 at the Hyatt Regency Hotel in Kansas City, Missouri.

Chancellor John B. Slaughter of the University of Maryland, College Park, chair of the NCAA Presidents Commission, will appear before the Council during first day of the meeting to inform the Council of the Commission's April 1-2 actions regarding the special Convention (see story above).

In addition, the Council will receive businesss and to eliminate repetition in discussions of matters in the full Council sessions and the separate meetings of the division steering committees. One change is that all meeting materials now are sent to the Council in advance of the meeting, rather than having them receive some upon arrival at the meeting site.

Committees reporting at this meeting will include Academic Require-See June Convention, page 11

Governing boards should be brought into athletics reform

Paul Hardin, president

Drew University The New York Times

'It isn't as comfortable to challenge our bosses as it is to challenge boosters or our subordinates, but let us (NCAA Presidents Commission), before that special NCAA Convention next June, state clearly that governing boards have the first and clearest responsibility to reestablish the integrity of intercollegiate athletics.

"Let us state further that they can do that only if they ensure that our athletics programs will be operated from now on just as our libraries and academic departments are-by the presidents or chancellors pursuant to broad board policies and in cooperation with other administrative officers and our faculties.

"If we do not speak collectively and soon to this issue of board responsibility, we shall forfeit the only silver lining in the SMU cloud: dramatically induced public awareness that governing boards are key players in the current chaos. Individual presidents cannot be asked to discipline their own boards, but our Commission has a new and unprecedented opportunity to speak out.

"In fact, let's do more than speak out. Let's propose legislation. Board heads should sign statements of compliance with NCAA rules just as presidents now do. And one of those rules should be that presidents must have complete operational control over athletics.'

"What we (NCAA membership) are doing (with drug testing of student-athletes) is necessary, expedient and will prove to be a detriment to drug use in the athletics community.

Hugh Pratt, student director, Volunteers for Youth University of Missouri, Columbia

"Most student-athletes are exceptionally visible. They are fascinating people. Sports is an exciting aspect of life. We've got a lot of girls and some guys (in the VFY program) in junior high who don't really have an interest in sports. But when they see this big, powerful athlete come in, these kids think, 'You mean this athlete likes me?' When they realize that these power figures do take an interest in them, it really helps raise their self-esteem.

"Kids are unsure about a lot of things. They can't depend on a lot of things. We want to give them a good foundation, strength, stability and direction, which hopefully are qualities that these student-athletes possess. By example, we can and we do help these kids."

"I'm really flabbergasted by the results (of NCAA drug testing during the men's basketball championship). I thought with all the drug problems in our society, there would be at least one player who would turn up positive. Maybe this shows that the (antidrug) message is working."

"The NCAA (Division I Men's) Basketball Championship is the greatest painting on our athletics wall. No other annual sporting mural so effectively covers the highs and lows and emotion of competition. And, even more important, no other such endeavor is more consistent in its excellence. The tournament delivers. Always.

"I have never seen a bad one. The Super Bowl, as sport, pales next to it. As art, the World Series can come close, but the consistency of the brushwork isn't there. Only major championship fights, which don't come along that often, can match the tournament for atmosphere, and a fight is a one-night stand. The tournament is three weeks of Russian roulette.

"The tournament is indestructible. Nothing they do to it can ruin it. They said expansion would kill it. Sixty-four teams were too many, they said. Bah. This thing is better now than it's ever been."

"When they first started playing (men's college basketball) in domes, I was very much opposed. Yet, the quality of basketball I've seen in domes in places like Syracuse and Indianapolis and the (NCAA) finals in Houston has not suffered.

"I don't favor the (Division I-A football) championship playoff format at all. It would put even more pressure on coaches and players and would be blown up like the Super Bowl.

"When we won the national championship, our coaches and players had enough demands on their time. A play-off would have taken too much away from the athletes' classroom time.

"Such a tournament would, additionally, diminish the impact of the polls during the season. Look how the interest in college basketball's top 20 has dropped off. The postseason tournament has made the polls a joke.

"I think the polls stimulate interest in college football and keep people absorbed in the matter of who should be No. 1.

"In college basketball, it doesn't seem to matter anymore. I often wonder if the winner (of the national championship) really is the best team. In college football, the final No. 1 status reflects the champion for the whole season, not just the team that got hot the last month (of the season)."

Members should incorporate NCAA regulations in contracts

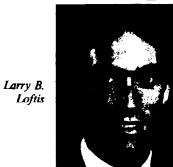

By Larry B. Loftis

Copyright 1987. All rights reserved. Violations of NCAA regulations have reached epidemic proportions in recent years. There currently are about two dozen universities on NCAA probation, and other schools have just ended their probation periods.

This epidemic certainly has not been totally due to intentional misconduct.

Most violations perhaps occur because of either a lack of knowledge of NCAA regulations, a misinterpretation of the regulations or a failure to implement them.

To further NCAA regulatory compliance, schools should incorporate NCAA regulations into their sports contracts. Further yet, schools should keep in mind the NCAA "mind set" in all official dealings, through contracts and otherwise. Many schools employ a single "inhouse" attorney, who often is busy with school litigation, tax matters, employee benefits and other areas, with little or no time left for studying NCAA regulations. Thus, the athletics director or head coach often is responsible for such compliance. However, athletics directors and coaches generally do not write school contracts (especially their own employment contracts). As a result, many NCAA regulations fail to appear in school contracts where needed to protect the school and enhance compliance.

contractually to fully cooperate with any investigations by the NCAA, the administration or an independent compliance auditor?

Further still, require coaches to make a written report of any known or suspected NCAA violations to the athletics director. This appears to be the sort of good-faith effort the NCAA is longing for.

Alumni contracts: School contracts with alumni who make donations or contributions to athletics departments should be scrutinized carefully. Was the award of the contract fair? Were bids taken on the project? Did this alumnus have an unfair advantage? Does this alumnus (or any other, for that matter) provide gratis services for student-athletes?

For example, Section 17 prohibits the advertising of - whether by way of television, radio or game program—alcoholic beverages, cigarettes and other tobacco, professional sports organizations, and advertisements featuring active professional athletes from the sport for which the telecast, broadcast or game program is produced. Section 17 even requires that schools advise potential sponsors of the section's advertising limitations prior to contracting with such spon-SOT.

area. School attorneys would be wise to keep abreast of NCAA positions and recent court decisions.

NCAA regulatory compliance is a problem that requires education of coaches, alumni, student-athletes, athletics directors and, yes, even school attorneys. School sports contracts and other legal areas should be handled by someone with thorough knowledge of legal criteria and NCAA regulations and policies. Schools either should educate their attorney(s) on NCAA regulations or hire independent counsel to handle all areas touched by the long arm of the NCAA.

These measures may seem a bit draconian, but the NCAA, as SMU and other schools well know, takes its Below are some, though certainly not all, of the legal areas affected by NCAA regulations.

NCAA Bylaw 7-3 states that Divisions II and III schools cannot provide coaches extra compensation or remuneration because of the number of games the coach's team wins or because the team goes to a bowl game, tournament or championship.

Schools should go even beyond letter-of-the-law implementation of NCAA regulations and import an NCAA compliance "attitude."

For example, the University of South Carolina's recent probation sanctions included a requirement that coaches participate in at least two NCAA rules workshops per academic year. Why not require coaches, by contract, to attend such workshops? Also, in light of leniency often granted violating schools for full cooperation during NCAA compliance investigations, why not bind coaches the position the U.S. government sometimes has encountered with certain contractors (i.e., buying minor items, such as a wrench, for grossly excessive prices). Any explicit or implicit agreement awarding a contributing alumnus a school contract or some other favor surely would test the limits of Article 3, Section 6 (regarding Principles of Ethical Conduct) of the NCAA constitution.

TV contracts: School contracts with television companies should include, where applicable, references to NCAA Bylaw 8-2 and Executive Regulation 1-17

Bylaw 8-2 states that all forms of "telecasting, cablecasting or otherwise televising of intercollegiate football games" shall be governed by various requirements. Executive Regulation 1, which deals with championship meets and tournaments, provides var-

Basketball needs full-time officials

To the Editor:

I do not agree with John Feinstein (Washington Post sports writer) that officiating is lousy (The NCAA News, March 18, 1987). At times, it is inconsistent; but overall, I think it is better -even though I feel that officiating has not made the strides that it could have made in the past 15 years.

The NCAA should be able to hire full-time officials. In many cases, these men and women have dedicated themselves, and, many times, at their own expense, to improve and succeed at this second job.

My feelings are similar to John's in one respect: Let's make them full-time and hold them more accountable. For years, I have felt that each coach should know going into a game what the official's record is regarding the home and visiting teams. For example, what is (the) percentage of visiting teams winning when they call.

Like John, I feel that officials should be accountable to the public. The media should be able to interview the officials after every game.

Only with continued emphasis on officiating will officials get better and better. This can be done with full-time officials.

Tighten the chin straps, you coaches

By Bob Hurt

Arizona Republic Coaches moaning over NCAA cutbacks in scholarship limits had best save their breath for some serious complaining.

The worst is yet to come.

Coaches are upset that incoming football grants were trimmed from 30 to 25 and basketball from 15 to 13 during the NCAA Convention at San Diego.

Fasten your chin straps, guys.

Limits could drop to 20 and 10 at a special NCAA Convention called by the 44-man Presidents Commission June 29-30 at Dallas.

That is a strong possibility. The part-time assistant coach in basketball was axed at the San Diego meeting. Look for general cutbacks in assistants in other sports at Dallas and reductions in schedules.

Possible, although not likely, are moves to eliminate spring football and freshman eligibility.

What we have here is a strange specter-the athletics directors in a power struggle with their bosses, the college presidents and chancellors.

The cost-cutting efforts by the Presidents Commission are a belated reaction to double-digit inflation and the expense of expanded women's programs. A "soft" TV market has added to the problem.

Are the presidents trying to save money or to emphasize deemphasis? Maybe it's a bit of both. They would like to shorten the tail that wags the dog.

Removing freshman eligibility will increase costs. So will schedule reductions. A couple of extra boxes of soap can get a team through spring training. Equipment and players are in place

It is possible the overall football limit of 95 grants will be trimmed. Coaches will argue that such a cut would dilute the product, making it difficult to compete for the TV and turnstile buck with pros.

Are referees running afoul of schedule?

By Bill Millsaps

Richmond Times-Dispatch

There seems to have been more than the normal quota of basketball officiating controversies this season, and James Madison University coach John Thurston thinks he knows why.

"It's not that the officials I've seen are cheaters or incompetents," said Thurston. "It's that some of them are tired, just plain tired."

"I think that's a vital statement," said Colonial Athletic Association supervisor of officials Dan Wooldridge. "It's something that guys in my position have been concerned about for years."

Thurston said that the fatigue manifests itself in an official's inability to see, cover and call a play in February that he probably would have managed to make with ease in December.

Virginia Commonwealth University coach Mike Pollio said he's seen evidence of officials' fatigue in other areas as well.

"This year, I've seen other coaches get hit with technical fouls for saying things to officials I thought were pretty mild," said Pollio. "They're so tired, they get irritated easier, and sometimes the smallest thing will set them off."

The problem is a combination of too many games and too much travel for a large number of the better officials in area conferences, including the Atlantic Coast, Sun Belt and CAA.

"Some of these guys have to be working 20 games a month," said Pollio. "You see a guy two nights in a row doing games on television, then you see him the next night at your game, then you see him the night after that working another TV game."

Two hours of running up and down the floor is only part of the picture. "Most of these guys work regular jobs, too," said Thurston. "So they do a game, get in their car, drive home, get to bed at 2 a.m., get up at 7, go to work, then leave at 2:30 to do another game that night. You do that night after night after night, and you're bound to get exhausted."

For veteran and highly regarded officials, the rewards obviously are worth any pain and fatigue. A topcaliber referee can, through fees and expenses, make nearly $20,000 during the winter calling college basketball games.

"I understand why they do it," said Thurston. "They do it for the same See Are referees, page 12

Sorry, guys, but that's hard to swallow when the pros survive with a 45-man squad.

Somehow, I hate to see the presidents down in the trenches. Chief executives provide direction but should, I think, leave the nuts and bolts to those who deal with such things daily.

The presidents were influential in creating tougher entrance requirements for athletics eligibility and insisting that athletes make satisfactory academic progress.

Crowd-conscious Big Eight drops TV pact

Big Eight Conference football fans may be seeing less of their teams on their television screens

Big Eight officials have decided to drop their weekly syndicated package with Raycom, an independent sports syndicator in Charlotte, North Carolina. for the 1987 season, and let each school "fend for itself."

Salary increases for faculty reach a 15-year high

College faculty received their biggest average pay increase in 15 years -5.9 percent — this academic year, according to a report that looked at salaries at 1,900 institutions.

Tenured professors will earn an average of $45,530, associate professors $27,920 and instructors $21,330, according to the 52,000-member American Association of University Professors.

The report said inflation and no salary increases for several years actually reduce the pay increase to 3.9 percent, and the increase still leaves faculty members with 10 percent less purchasing power than in 1970.

Included in the survey were twoyear community colleges and undergraduate and research institutions.

Top Arizona court upholds dismissal of Lindsey suit

The Arizona Supreme Court has let stand a lower court's decision that dismissed a lawsuit filed by former University of Arizona basketball coach Ben Lindsey.

Lindsey had sued university President Henry Koffler and athletics director Cedric Dempsey for allegedly inflicting emotional distress and interfering with his contract, after he was fired following the 1982-83 season, his first at the school.

A Pima County Superior Court dismissed that lawsuit, and that decision was upheld January 27 by the court of appeals in Tucson. The Supreme Court March 31 denied Lindsey's request for review of the case.

Lindsey was awarded $695,000 plus $177,312 in attorneys' fees in another lawsuit that claimed his firing was illegal because he had been given a verbal four-year contract.

In the lawsuit against Koffler and Dempsey, Lindsey claimed Dempsey used him as a "tool" to gain enough financial contributions to replace him with a "big-name" coach and that he knew the firing could ruin Lindsey's career. The court of appeals ruled, however, that there was no evidence of intent to ruin Lindsey's career.

In addition, Lindsey had claimed that Koffler knew of the university's obligation to him, but the court of appeals said Lindsey did not properly raise that issue before the county court.

ldcats had the worst record in school history that season at 4-24 overall and 1-17 in the Pacific-10 Conference games in a contract that expired at the end of the last season, the Associated Press reported.

Tim Allen, Big Eight service bureau director, said the decision to drop the Raycom football syndication package was made in early March.

The Raycom package had sparked the same complaints that have been heard in other conferences since the U.S. Supreme Court decision three years ago that freed schools to make their own television deals. Televised games frequently started almost two hours earlier than usual. Some officials also believe that televised games cut into attendance at other sites.

All eight schools share all television revenue, including the $5 million earned in all football television appearances last season.

Gary Hunter, assistant athletics director at the University of Kansas, said boosting attendance was a major consideration for athletics directors. Hunter said the athletics directors discussed the problem among themselves and with faculty representatives and decided that the money offered by Raycom, and the appearances and time slots requested, were not attractive enough to go with a new package.

"So we opted to go independently," Hunter said. "That's a gamble. What you're hoping is that your team starts to play well and starts to win. But if you're not on TV, it's got a chance to help your game."

Big Eight teams are hoping the conference can land more TV appearances through the College Football Association's package, which next year will be composed of games on CBS and ESPN.

Under that package, ESPN is going to open a new time slot at 4 p.m. Saturdays, followed by a prime-time game.

Trainers pay their own way in college athletics programs

By Dennis Pruss Head Athletics Trainer Texas Tech University

An estimated $25 billion is spent annually on recreational sports in the United States. A large portion of that total is spent on varsity athletics, in which approximately 4.2 million men and women participate every year.

When medical expenses related to sports injuries are added to the basic cost of participating in athletics, the resulting bill for sports is tremendous.

The risks to participants in sports are apparent. Generally, an athlete runs a 50 percent chance of sustaining an injury, and 10 percent of sportsrelated injuries are serious. The risk increases in a sport such as football, where the injury rate is higher and more serious injuries occur.

Many people, however, do not realize the economic factors that go along with the risks.

An athletics director or coach who wishes to convince school administrators of the need for an athletics trainer can start by pointing out the risks involved in sports participation. However, the economic concerns of an administrator who has to figure out how to pay for the athletics trainer also must be addressed.

Once the risk of sports participation has been demonstrated to an administrator, an athletics director or coach must clarify the role of and justify the need for an athletics trainer.

Usually, when all of the facts are gathered, it becomes clear that the costs and benefits of having an athletics trainer can be balanced. At that point, the athletics director and coach who want to provide the best care possible for athletes and the administrator with economic concerns all can be satisified, and athletes can have the care of an athletics trainer.

The trainer's role

A role-delineation study was conducted by the National Athletic Trainers Association to determine the function of an athletics trainer.

The first duty of an athletics trainer is injury prevention. Through prevention, there is less loss of participation time, less suffering and less economic cost. Injury prevention involves a knowledge of physical conditioning, how to apply protective devices and how to deal with environmental factors.

A second, but primary, role of an athletics trainer is recognition and evaluation of injuries. Proper recognition of an injury, followed by prompt medical attention or therapeutic treatments, can cut down the time needed for recovery. A knowledge of anatomy and physiology, as well as tests for strength and joint flexibility and sensory and motor tests, are needed for proper recognition of athletics injuries.

The third duty of a trainer is the management, treatment and disposition of injuries. Emergency care; proper transportation, including supportive devices, and referrals to physicians all are part of this area.

Rehabilitation of injuries is the fourth role—one that is related to ployed as full-time teachers with released time for athletics training, parttime teachers, administrators or even as school health officials. The result is that the expense of hiring an athletics trainer is reduced.

The need for trainers

The need for athletics trainers has been evident for years.

In 1973, the Athletics Care Act was introduced into the U.S. House of Representatives. The bill would have required all secondary schools and colleges to hire a certified athletics trainer. The feeling was that athletes should be afforded as much protection as possible.

Today, state legislatures have taken up where the Athletics Care Act left off. At this time, 18 states have licensure for athletics trainers. The states have exams to verify the skills and knowledge of the athletics trainers, as well as guidelines for their conduct. Included in these laws are provisions for high schools to employ trainers. The views of these states are backed up by several studies.

• A study in North Carolina indicated that trainers or teachers who took courses in the prevention and care of athletics injuries contributed to reduced injury and reinjury rates over a six-year period. When the study began in 1972, coaches were responsible for the care of athletes in the vast majority of situations. By 1978, the teacher/trainer was responsible for the care and prevention of athletes. The injury rate dropped from 50 percent in 1972 to 22 percent in 1978 and the reinjury rate also dropped significantly, from 71 to 11 percent.

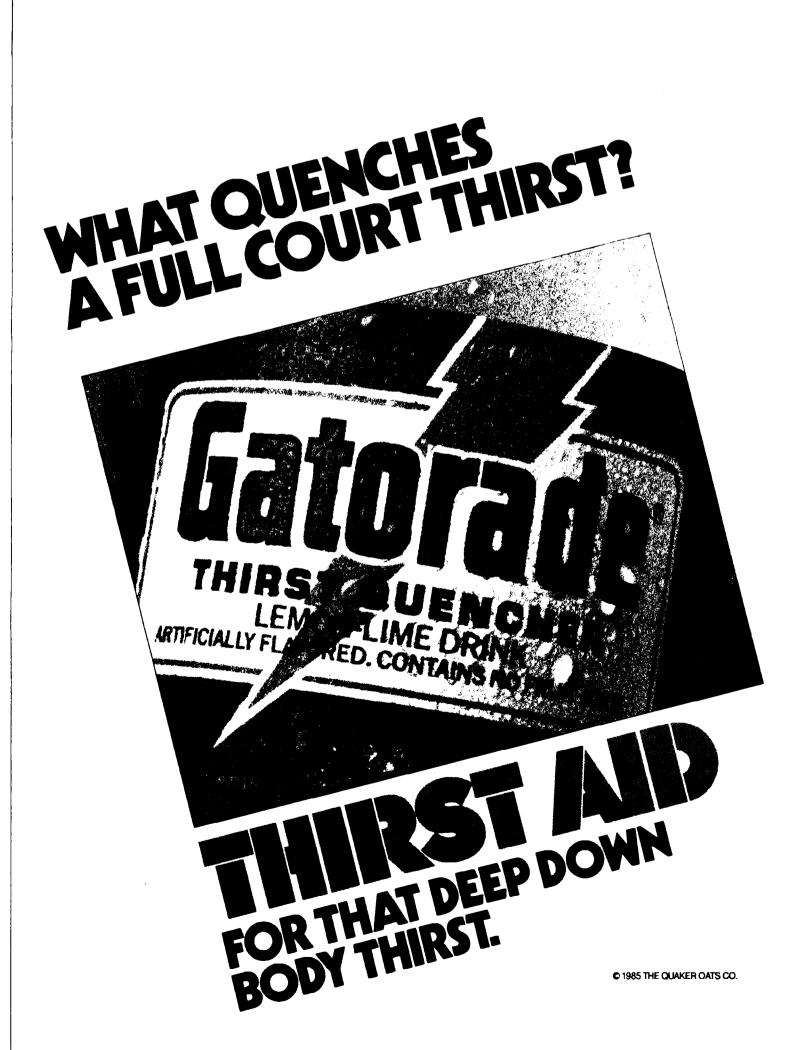

• According to statistics obtained from the National Athletic Injury/ Illness Reporting System during the 1970s, injury rates decreased even with an increased number of participants. Improved equipment and the presence of athletics trainers who introduced better conditioning methods and ways of preventing injuries were credited with the reduction. • Another study showed that over two years, the overall all-sport injury rate decreased by 10 percent when trainers were employed.

These studies show that a trainer can help reduce injuries. The North Carolina study indicates that a trainer also can cut down on the chances for reinjury by reconginzing injuries and properly protecting the athlete.

Reducing injuries, cutting down on reinjury and lessening recovery time are things that should be very important to parents. They may be important enough for booster clubs to provide financial assistance for hiring an athletics trainer.

An economic balance

As indicated earlier, there is risk involved in participating in sports and even a risk of serious injury. The need for an athletics trainer can be See Trainers, page 14 treatment of injuries. It means setting up goals for a return to activity and helping the athlete achieve those goals. The next duty of an athletics trainer is the organization and administration of an athletics training program. This involves record keeping, maintaining the budget, upkeep of the facility, purchasing supplies and supervising student trainers. Record keeping is especially important; it may keep coaches and a school out of a lawsuit.

The final aspect of a trainer's job is educating and counseling athletes. Besides educating the athlete about the functions of the body, the trainer can be a person who will listen to individual problems and give guidance.

In their jobs, athletics trainers not only prform the duties stated in the role-delineation study but also execute other duties. Trainers may be em-

Stanford men hold on and claim a third swimming victory

Stanford held its ground and claimed the team's third consecutive Division I men's swimming title, but not without a good fight from runnerup Southern Cal and third-place Florida. The Division I Men's Swimming and Diving Championships were held April 2-4 at the University of Texas Swim Center in Austin.

The meet marked the last collegiate performances of two outstanding swimmers—Pablo Morales of Stanford and Matt Biondi of California. Between them, the two accounted for six first-place finishes and four NCAA records.

With his three titles this year, Morales surpasses John Naber's record of 10 individual career titles. "It's very much a privilege to be mentioned in the same breath as Naber. I feel fortunate to surpass him," Morales said.

Biondi, who swept the sprint freestyle events for the second consecutive year, was named swimmer of the year by the College Swimming Coaches Association of America. Also, he was the key in earning the fourth-place Golden Bears the United States Olympic Committee award. "I'm happy about the award because it recognizes the sport as much as my individual accomplishments," he said. "That's what really feels best, when people come up to you and let you know they appreciate what you have done. That is what really counts."

Top swimmers for Southern Cal included Daniel Jorgensen, first in the 500-yard freestyle and second in the 1,650-yard freestyle; freestyler Thomas Fahrner, and breast stroker Steve Bentley.

Troy Dalbey was one of Florida's top finishers, turning in two second place performances in the freestyle events. The Gators finished just three points behind Southern Cal.

Complete results of survey of Division I CEOs

A total of 81.1 percent of the 291 presidents and chancellors of NCAA Division I member institutions participated in the NCAA Presidents Commission's survey regarding issues to be considered at the sixth special NCAA Convention this summer in Dallas.

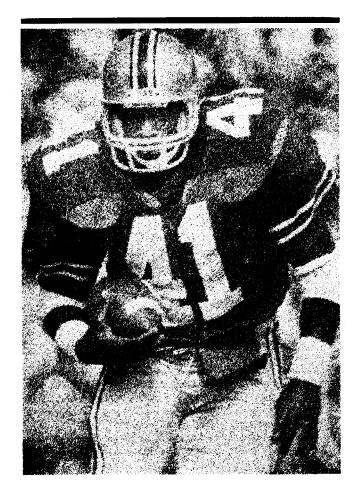

Through March 30, a total of 236 chief executive officers submitted completed surveys to the American Institutes for Research, Palo Alto, California, which designed and conducted the survey for the Commission.

Included were 83 percent of the Division I-A institutions (87 of 105), 77 percent of those in Division I-AA (67 of 87) and 83 percent of the Division I-AAA members (82 of 99).

The Presidents Commission reviewed the results in its April 1-2 meeting in Greenbelt, Maryland.

The complete survey results follow.

Among those issues-which are yet to be finalized — are such topics as freshman eligibility, financial aid limited to need, revenue sharing, championships competition, time demands on student-athletes and participation in football bowl games

Studies

Another resolution in June will ask the membership to authorize a series of studies - "of a magnitude and consequence heretofore not undertaken" on the effects of athletics participation on student-athletics and on colleges and universities.

Included would be a number of comparisons of the student-athletes' college experience to that of students in general, including those students with heavy involvements in other extracurricular activities. The studies also will attempt to compare studentathletes in revenue-producing sports with those in less emphasized sports, and it will deal with various recruitment activities.

Also to be studied would be graduation rates, student-athletes' opinions of their college experience, their status several years after college and the effect of athletics programs on the institution, including institutional morale, prestige and integrity.

The Commission believes the national debate will continue for 12 to 18 months, terminating in legislation-probably at the January 1989 NCAA Convention-to address appropriate issues resolved during the debate.

June legislation

To address the issues of cost and "proper balance," the Commission voted to sponsor the following proposals in Dallas in June:

Recruiting

• A resolution establishing a fourmonth recruiting period in each sport, consistent with the periods established for Divisions I and II football and basketball at the 1987 annual Convention. The specific legislation to implement these periods would be proposed by the Special Council Subcommittee to Review the Recruiting Process and sponsored by the Council for action at the January 1988 Convention.

• A resolution supporting the concept of further limitations on the total number of permissible paid visits that can be provided annually by an institution, with the actual legislation to be proposed by the Special Council Subcommittee to Review the Recruiting Process and sponsored by the Council for action at the January 1988 Convention.

 A resolution directing the Council to sponsor legislation for action at the 1988 Convention to reduce the "extra" recruiting opportunities attendant to high school all-star games and to institutional and/or private sports camps and clinics, with such legislation to be developed by the Special Council Subcommittee to Review the Recruiting Process.

Coaching staffs

 Amendments to Bylaw 7 to eliminate one of the nine full-time assistant coaches and one of the combination of six graduate assistant and volunteer coaches in Division I-A football. Amendments to Bylaw 7 to eliminate one of the seven full-time assistant coaches and one of the combination of six graduate assistant and volunteer coaches in Division I-AA football. A resolution directing the Council to conduct a study of the numbers of individuals involved in coaching in each sport in Division I (full-time, part-time, graduate assistant, volunteer), as well as the number of administrative support staff positions in the athletics departments in that division, with legislation to be presented at the January 1988 Convention to constrain those numbers if the study warrants such action.

propose additional legislation in the area of coaches' compensation. Financial aid

• Amendments to Bylaw 6-5-(c) to reduce the initial grant limitation in Division I-AA football from 30 to 25 and the overall limitation in Division I-AA football from 70 to 65. The Commission is proposing no reduction in Division I-A football.

• Amendments to Bylaw 6-5 and other related legislation to effect reductions in the permissible numbers of grants in certain other sports in Divisions I and II, as shown in the accompanying table.

in-depth study of the effects of freshman participation in Divisions I and II varsity-level sports, with the results of the study to be reported to the Council, Commission and membership by a specified date.

Practice seasons

• Amendment(s) to Bylaw 3-4 to eliminate spring football practice in Divisions I-AA and II and to limit spring practice in Division I-A to 20 sessions in 30 calendar days, with no more than 15 sessions involving contact.

• Resolution directing the Committee on Financial Aid and Amateurism to study the concept of limiting athletically related financial aid in some or all sports to tuition and fees, plus need, and to report its conclusions to the Commission, the Council and the membership

• Resolution directing the Council to conduct a study of the concept of tying the permissible number of grants-in-aid in each sport to the graduation rate of recruited athletes in that sport, with legislation to be proposed at the 1988 annual Convention if the study warrants such action. Academic performance

 Resolution directing the Council and the Commission to conduct an decisions to sponsor legislation in June as reported above, it voted to support in concept most of the proposals regarding playing and practice seasons developed by the Council Subcommittee to Review Playing Seasons and asked the Council to sponsor such legislation at the special Convention.

The Commission took specific actions to endorse the proposals for a maximum six-month season for practice and play in all sports; proposed reductions in contests or dates of competition in baseball, golf, tennis, track and volleyball, and the establishment of contests or competition dates limitations in Division III.

Instead of the subcommittee's approach to limiting the noncountable basketball playing opportunities, the Commission favors permitting institutions to play only 28 contests (prior to the NCAA tournament) each year, with the exception that once in four years, it would be permissible to exempt up to four contests (on a single, regular-season trip) in Alaska, Hawaii or Puerto Rico, or those contests on a foreign tour during a vacation period. The postseason conference tournament would continue to be counted as one game in the 28game limitation.

Other actions

The Commission accepted the advice of the Association's parliamentarian that the call for the special Convention does not permit submission of legislation that would increase any of the Association's current limitations with cost implications (e.g., proposals that would increase numbers of grants, coaches, contests and the like would be ruled out of order).

The Commission authorized its executive committee to approve final legislative proposals on behalf of the Commission prior to the April 30 deadline.

In actions not related to the special Convention, the Commission:

• Selected four of its members to represent the full Commission in the interviews and approval process for the selection of the next NCAA executive director.

• Placed on its fall agenda a review of the NCAA governance structure and procedures, emphasizing possible revision of the methods by which NCAA legislation is adopted and amended.

Man convicted after Final Four ticket-sale scheme

Thomas E. Gallagher faces up to 10 years in prison for accepting money for Final Four tickets he never had.

Gallagher advertised that he had tickets to last month's college basketball championship tournament for sale and got money orders for $440 delivered to a post office box. A Federal court jury, after an hour's deliberation April 5, found Gallagher guilty of two counts of mail fraud, each carrying a maximum penalty of five years in prison

Scholarship planned

The Kevin Collins Track Scholarship Fund has been established at the University of Texas, San Antonio, by Terry Collins, the wife of the wellknown San Antonio runner who was killed in a plane crash last year.

Terry Collins plans a $10,000 endowed-scholarship fund, and $4,200 was raised at the first annual Kevin Collins Memorial Run last November.

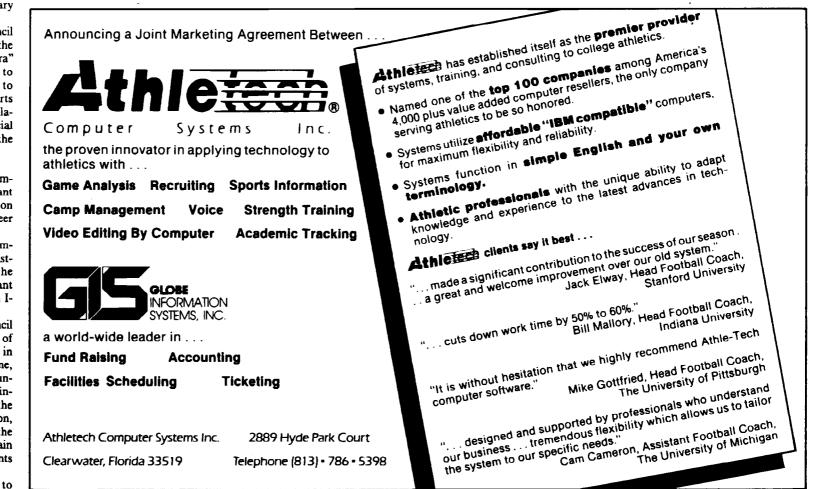

Committee Notice

Nominations for the following committee vacancy must be received by Fannie B. Vaughan, executive assistant, in the national office no later than April 30:

Competitive Safeguards and Medical Aspects of Sports: Replacement for Jeffrey O'Connell, professor of law, University of Virginia. O'Connell resigned from the committee. Appointee must represent the field of law.

Conference No. 5

March 19 and 23, 1987

Acting for the Council, the Legislation and Interpretations Committee:

1. Reviewed additional information concerning a previous interpretation approved by the Council (reference: Item No. 19 in the minutes of the Administrative Committee's December 18, 1986, conference) and confirmed that the provisions of Constitution 2-2-(a) and 3-6-(c) preclude a member institution from utilizing a "pro football fund-raiser" that involves selling tickets based on three-team combination scores during a particular profes-sional football season, with a "donation" to the athletics department entitling the donor to a certain number of chances to win a prize.

2. Determined that the provisions of revised Case No. 44 do not place a size restriction on the regular trademark or logo that is placed on an item being distributed or sold by an institution; confirmed that a television station is permitted to use a student-athlete's name or picture to advertise the station's season coverage of an institution's athletics team, provided the student-athlete does not promote the television station itself

3. Agreed that the waiver provisions of Bylaw 5-1-(m)-(8) would not be available to studentathletes at a member institution that has elected to reclassify a Division I intercollegiate sport to Division III; noted that under such circumstances, student-athletes in sports other than asketball and ic a waiver of the residence requirement per Bylaw 5-1-(m)-(14) provided the specified conditions are met; referred to the Division III Steering Committee further consideration of the issue of whether Bylaw 5-1-(m)-(8) should be amended to apply to the situation described. 4. Confirmed that a student-athlete would not be charged with a season of intercollegiate competition for participating on a member institution's club team regardless of the provisions of Case No. 291, provided the institution does not sponsor the sport on the varsity intercollegiate level: noted, however, that if the institution sponsors the sport on both the varsity intercollegiate and club levels, the provisions of Case No. 291 must be applied to the institutional club team to determine if a season of intercollegiate competition has been utilized by a student-athlete; agreed that the provisions of Case No. 291 should be applied in the same manner to athletics activities at nonmember collegiate institutions for purposes of determining whether a student-athlete has participated in a season of intercollegiate competition.

campus housing at the home, cottage, townhouse or private dwelling of a representative of the member institution's athletics interests, with the understanding that the member institution is required to document and ensure that the rental costs charged by the representative of the member institution's athletics interests and paid by the student-athlete are consistent with rental costs for similar housing in that locale

6. Agreed that the application of Bylaw 3-3-(k)-(3) permits, under the specified conditions, a charitable organization to utilize the athletics participation of student-athletes for the purpose of raising funds through activities similar to swim-a-thons, with the understanding that the money is contributed directly by the donors to the charitable organization, the student-athletes receive no compensation or prizes for their narticipation and the institution approves the participation of the student-athletes.

7. (Divisions I and II) Agreed that the provisions of Bylaws 1-2-(a)-(6)-(i) and 1-3-(a) prohibit a member institution from evaluating, as well as contacting, prospective student-athletes during the period beginning with the Thursday prior to the National Collegiate Division 1 Men's Basketball Championship game and ending at noon the Tuesday after the game.

8. (Division III) Determined that the application of Bylaw 11-3-(a)-(4)-(ii), relating to institutional awards of circumstance, would not encompass a guaranteed tuition scholarship that is made available through a donor of the institution with the understanding the sole criterion of the tuition scholarship is that it must be awarded to a member of the donor's family, inasmuch as the guaranteed tuition scholarship is not automatically available to all members of the student body in general and does not meet certain publicized, objective qualifications.

9. (Division III) Agreed that the provisions of Case Nos. 187 and 190 should preclude a member institution from publicizing its desire to attract student-athletes to its campus through newspaper and magazine advertisements; re ferred this issue to the Divisions I and II subcommittees for consideration.

10 (Division III) Concluded that a waiver of the one-year residence requirement per Bylaw 5-1-(n)-(2) would be applicable in a situation in which a student-athlete (who originally attended a four-year institution) transferred to a junior college and now wishes to compete at a Division III institution despite having competed in that sport at the original four-year institution, inasmuch as the student-athlete did not compete in that sport for a period of one year immediately prior to the date of the studentathlete's initial projected participation at the Division III institution review its January 1987 interpretation of Bylaw 5-1-(j) permitting prospective student-athletes who repeat an entire year of high school to utilize appropriate courses taken during that academic year to fulfill the core-course requirements, even if this extends the normal eight-semester limitation, noting that if this interpretation is affirmed, the Council is asked to consider eliminating the eight-semester limitation and permitting the use of any appropriate high school (or preparatory school) courses in determining the core-course reguirement.

13. (Division I) Affirmed that a prospective student-athlete whose regular collegiate enrollment is delayed for one or more years normally shall establish initial eligibility per Bylaw 5-1-(i) based on the requirements in effect at the time of the prospective student-athlete's high school graduation, including the use of the sliding scale, if any, in effect at that time; agreed that a prospective student-athlete also permitted the alternative of establishing initial eligibility based upon the requirements in effect at the time of initial enrollment at a Division 1 member institution, if the new standard is more favorable to the student's situation.

Houston cuts men's tennis team

The University of Houston athletics department plans to drop its men's tennis program at the end of the current season, athletics director Rudy Davalos said

"This was a difficult decision made with regret after discussions with members of the athletics advisory committee, the intercollegiate athletics council and key university administrators," Davalos said.

"In face of the current financial atmosphere not only at UH but across the city, state and region, this will give us the opportunity to avoid diluting the rest of our programs and allow us to remain dedicated and competitive in those sports," he said.

Houston' athletics department had an estimated $3 million revenue shortfall before this school year. An estimated $1 million more is expected after this year, when the Cougars drew only 67,000 fans for five home football games.

Davalos called eliminating coach Terry Neudecker's tennis budget of an estimated $100,000 "just one step, and we don't feel pleasure in doing it. We're not going to have enough revenue to match our expenditures, but I don't have a figure on that yet.

"Other than doing everything we can to increase revenue, that's the next step we can take. We'll put as many financially sound techniques in place as we can in promotion and marketing," he said.

Legislative Assistance 1987 Column No. 15

Procedures for amending NCAA legislation

Amendments to the NCAA constitution, bylaws or other NCAA legislation may be submitted by six or more active members in accordance with the provisions of NCAA Constitution 7-1 and Bylaw 13-1. For consideration at the sixth special NCAA Convention, amendments must be submitted either by written or wired transmission received at the NCAA national office (as distinguished from the post office or a fast-mail delivery center, for example) by April 30, 1987, or by certified or registered mail postmarked not later than April 23, 1987.

Any six active members may propose amendments to the constitution and to the "common" bylaws (Bylaws 9, 10, 12 and 13). In proposing amendments to the "divided" bylaws (Bylaws 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 11), the six or more sponsoring members must be members of the division (or subdivision) to which the amendment is to be offered. The amendment must be submitted in the name of the institution by the chief executive officer or the chief executive officer's designated representative. (NOTE: The chief executive officer must provide written notification to the NCAA national office of any other individual designated to indicate sponsors must indicate in submitting the amendment the division(s) for which it is intended. The Council has determined that only the first six sponsors, from whom verification is received at the national office, will be listed in the Official Notice of the Convention.

In addition, the following procedures should be observed:

1. The form, or a copy or facsimile thereof, provided to the chief executive officers of NCAA member institutions in an April 3, 1987, NCAA memorandum, should be used. One separate form or copy should be used for each amendment submitted. Additional forms may be obtained by contacting the NCAA legislative services department.

2. Please indicate the specific article, section, paragraph or subparagraph to be amended, based upon the 1987-88 NCAA Manual.

3. If the amendment is to be applicable only to a certain division, please indicate the division.

4. Proposed changes in the present language of the legislation should be indicated by underlining the wording to be added and typing hyphens through the wording to be deleted.

5. A clear and concise intent should be provided, stating what the proposed amendment is designed to accomplish. The intent is not to be used to argue the merits of the proposal.

6. The desired effective date should be stated: Immediately, or August 1 following the Convention, or a later specified date. The legislative proposals in the Official Notice or Convention Program from recent NCAA Conventions will provide members with examples of the desired format.

In the interest of being of assistance, the NCAA staff may edit legislative proposals and will communicate with legislative sponsors as may be needed. Any questions regarding legislative procedures should be referred to the legislative coordinator (William B. Hunt) at the NCAA national office.

Financial aid for summer school

Under the provisions of Constitution 3-4-(b)-(1), financial aid may not be provided to a student-athlete while attending a summer school or summer term unless the student-athlete has been in residence a minimum of one term during the regular academic year, or the student is attending a summer orientation program for which participation is required of both athletes and nonathletes and financial aid is administered on the same basis for all participants in the program.

Financial aid awarded to an eligible student-athlete under Constitution 3-4-(b)-(1) for summer school attendance is considered a separate award and would not be countable toward the maximum financial aid awards limitations set forth in Bylaw 6-5. The amount of aid an individual student may receive is limited by Constitution 3-1-(g)-(1) to tuition and fees, room and board, and required course-related books for the summer term.

Bylaw 6-1-(b)-(1) permits a student-athlete to receive legitimate summer employment earnings without total-dollar restrictions, even if the studentathlete is attending summer school as a recipient of institutional financial assistance.

In addition, financial aid for summer school expenses may be used only to attend the awarding institution's summer school. As discussed in Case No. 129 (page 337, 1987-88 NCAA Manual), it would not be permissible for the parent institution in which the student-athlete is enrolled to pay the student-athlete's summer session expenses incurred in attending the institution's branch campus.

This material was provided by the NCAA legislative services department as an aid to member institutions. If an institution has a question it would like to have answered in this column, the question should be directed to William B. Hunt, assistant executive director, at the NCAA national office.

CEO panel named by CFA to examine athletics issues

Houston newspaper reports

College basketball coaches consider union, share of tournament revenue

Houston Chronicle

Efforts by college basketball coaches to unionize would include an attempt to set up a pension fund with a share of television receipts from the NCAA Division I Men's Basketball Championship, sources told the Chronicle.

"The main thing is the pension and protection against losing jobs," a source close to the National Association of Basketball Coaches said. "They're looking for protection."

The NABC board of directors is exploring the possibility of unionizing and, as a first step in that process, met with Larry Fleischer, executive director of the NBA Players Association, during its recent New Orleans meeting. Fleischer was invited back to the group's summer meeting in Hot Springs, Virginia, in July, sources said.

Fleischer, who was not available for comment, suggested that the coaches might be able to get a share of the television revenues, according to sources.

The NABC also is concerned about representation in the NCAA political process. The NABC board is especially upset about votes at the most recent NCAA Convention that reduced total basketball scholarships from 15 to 13 per school and eliminated part-time coaches. Richard "Digger" Phelps, coach at the University of Notre Dame, said that a union isn't necessary to give the basketball coaches a better voice in NCAA politics but that pensions are the primary reason for seeking a union.

"These coaches are not of the school of John Wooden and Hank Iba, who coached a long time and retired with nothing," one coach said. "It's a brandnew world. They want a piece of the pie.

"The NCAA gives interest-free loans to its employees. Why can't the coaches get something? They provide the interest-free loans. When you get down to it, it's the kids who provide everything, and they get nothing."

Tulane men's basketball revival studied

Tulane University's board of administrators is scheduled to meet April 16 to consider a recommendation from the group's athletics committee that, if approved, could lead to the eventual resumption of men's basketball as a varsity intercollegiate sport at the school.

Tulane's program was suspended by university President Eamon M. Kelly almost two years ago amid allegations of point-shaving by, and provision of extra benefits to, members of the Green Wave men's basketball squad.

Former Tulane standout John "Hot Rod" Williams later was acquitted of sports-bribery charges, but the program has remained suspended.

According to an Associated Press report of a story published in the New Orleans Times-Picayune, Kelly later reason coaches make 100 speeches per year. They want to make money for themselves and their families, to put a wing on the house, to pay for the kids' college educations, to buy a boat. The thing is, most of them aren't as good (in late season), aren't as sharp, as they were in December.

"You can take a look at our videotapes. We're a fast-breaking team; and in December, the official is beating our break down the floor so he can see if that contact in the lane is a block or a charge, and he makes the right call a huge percentage of the time.

"I show you videotapes from our February games; and most of the time, the official responsible for covering the break is trailing the play badly. They may or may not see the contact, and they guess. Sometimes, they guess right; sometimes, wrong. I hate to yell at grown men to get them to run up and down the floor when they really aren't capable of it physically. I feel sorry for them, but I feel sorry for me, too." appointed what was called the Select Committee on Intercollegiate Athletics to study the entire Green Wave program, and the group produced last year a report that included 28 recommendations—including one that left basketball's fate in Kelly's hands.

Last June, the board of administrators' athletics committee, at the parent group's direction, began development of a five-year plan that would make Tulane's sports program nationally competitive.

After commissioning a study of the program by a panel of four national experts in college sports administration, the athletics committee has formulated recommendations for the board's consideration — among them the potential reinstatement of men's basketball. Another proposal the board will consider would establish a $25 million fund-raising project.

If approved, the proposal to reinstate basketball would have Kelly appoint another committee — this one to consider how and when basketball would be brought back.

However, the wire service reported that even board approval might not assure the sport's revival.

Apparently, the board has the option of approving the return of Division I basketball and ordering implementation of a specific timetable or of approving the sport's return on a nonspecific timetable.

The latter, according to sources mentioned in the newspaper story, could delay the return of Tulane basketball for years.

ACC does not allow its referees to work a conference game less than 24 hours after a nonconference game. The Southeastern Conference does not assign any of its officials to conference games on consecutive nights.

Newly formed leagues such as the CAA and the Sun Belt do not issue such restrictions because they want to attract as many top officials as they can.

"If we place those kinds of limitations on our officials," said Wooldridge, "it might force a John Moreau or a Paul Housman or a John Clougherty to make a choice, and maybe we'd lose a real good official we would not want to lose."

According to Thurston, there is a solution; and part of it involves taking the risk of making greater use of younger, less-experienced officials. "I would hate to think there are only 20 or 25 guys who can do this," said Thurston. "I would work the top veteran officials less and pay them more to make up for it."

That sounds reasonable to Wooldridge, but he suggested that another tactic might get quicker results. "If the NCAA came out with a set of guidelines," said Wooldridge, "and strongly 'suggested' to officials that they work no more than three or four games in a week, or something like 50 games in a year, I think you'd find that most of them would fall right in line."

Then would we see fresher officials and fewer controversies in late season? "We can always hope," said Wooldridge.

ADMINISTRATORS OF NCAA SPONSORED

Six members have been named to the College Football Association's chief executive officers committee, which will examine athletics issues for that organization's membership.

Named to committee are Philip E. Austin, president, Colorado State University; Marshall M. Criser, president, University of Florida; William H. Cunningham, president, University of Texas, Austin; Thomas K. Hearn, president, Wake Forest University; Frank E. Horton, president, University of Oklahoma, and Joseph E. Steger, president, University of Cincinnati.

The committee was appointed by Martin A. Massengale, chancellor of the University of Nebraska, Lincoln, and chair of the CFA board of directors.

Massengale said, "We believe that chief executive officers can assist with the further development of the CFA as an organization and also provide a sounding board for the faculty, directors (of athletics) and coaches in formulating proposals designed to improve the sport of football and college athletics in general."

Among the suggested topics for the CEO group's attention are an examination of the effects of higher academic standards for freshman athletics eligibility at NCAA Division I institutions and suggestions for improvement in the area of academics, a more federated concept within the NCAA, the impact of major football programs on their institutions, and an analysis of proposals concerning intercollegiate athletics by the American Council on Education and the NCAA Presidents Commission. As Wooldridge said, this is not a new problem. "It was a lot worse than this back before coaches could see so many games on television," said Wooldridge, who retired from active officiating after the 1986 season. "Lord knows how many games Ralph Stout and Lou Bello used to work every season. I know Stout did 97 one year. Back in the late '70s, I worked 86 games one year."

Wooldridge said he would object strongly if any of his current officiating staff tried to break his record, but he said the CAA has no hard and fast rule as to how many games its officials may work in a month, or in a season.

Other conferences do have limitations, however. The Big Eight does not permit its staff to work more than four games a week. Unless specific permission is granted in advance, the ideal persons to decide whether a graduate assistant coach is needed in croquet. Presidents approve budgets: ADs decide how to meet them. Isn't that how the system normally works?

My concern is that the philosophical rift between ADs and presidents could widen into a split of the NCAA.

The College Football Association, composed of most major football schools outside the Big Ten and Pac-10, claims to be devoted to lobbying. However, it exists as an obvious alternative to the NCAA.

The CFA's power has eroded but could be restored by internal bickering within the NCAA.

Could a rift cause the CFA to split from the NCAA?

The question was taken to Chuck Neinas, executive director of the CFA, who said, "You're not the first to ask that but I don't envision that occurring, but....

Ah, yes, but, wait and see if the emphasis is on deemphasis.

Neinas cautions that it is a "misconception" to assume UCLA's Charles Young and California's Ira Michael Heyman, most vocal of the chiefs, speak for all presidents. There is a divergence of opinion, he said.

Neinas continued, "Disturbing to some is that the concentration on economic savings has been directed toward revenue-producing sports. That would seem to be a bit of a false economy.

"You have to go beyond the facade of cost-saving to determine if there really is a desire to deemphasize."

Discontent? Not yet. Seeds are there. Let's hope they don't sprout.

But the final factor that usually will convince administrators to hire an athletics trainer is the one of economic balance.

A lot of money is spent on sports participation, but even more is spent on medical bills, court costs and liability insurance due to sports injuries.

Schools at all levels have to decide how to provide medical insurance coverage for their athletes. A school can decide either to provide the coverage itself or allow parents to provide the coverage.

The cost of insurance premiums to a school should be encouragement enough for hiring an athletics trainer. Premiums are based on injury rates; at times, insurance companies will charge a lower rate for schools that have an athletics trainer.

On the other hand, many major medical carriers that sell policies to families specifically exclude interscholastic athletics injuries from their coverage. This produces a potentially dangerous situation if the school does not cover the athlete. A lawsuit could result from nonpayment of medical

Whether the parent or the school provides medical insurance, both should be pleased by contributions a trainer can make to reducing injuries, thus lowering initial medical costs.

Another economic factor to be considered is legal liability.

Cym Lowell, a lawyer who specializes in sports litigation and author of a casebook in sports law, says schools must provide "reasonable medical services" during practices and games. If a school only has a physician in attendance at games, it may be leaving itself open in practice sessions for litigation. Courts already have found coaches liable for failing to have and use adequate first-aid training, and at least one court defined "reasonable medical assistance" as providing not only reasonable facilities and equipment, but also persons with the necessary degree of skill and experience.

It is easy to see that courts are trying to get across the need for athletics trainers to provide reasonable coverage.

A school may try to get around legal liability by using release forms or using governmental immunity. Both of these tactics have been found invalid.

The bottom line on lawsuits is the money involved. Since 1972, $37.2 million has been awarded by juries to athletes. Of that amount, $30.1 million has been awarded since 1983. In 1983 alone, juries decided in favor of the athlete in 11 of 23 cases.

In summing up, Richard Redfearn probably stated it best when he argued for the need for an athletics trainer. Although he was referring specifically to the need in high schools, his comments are relevant for athletes at all levels:

"There is no other person who can unify a health care program for the athlete with greater dispatch that the properly trained and accredited athletics trainer. With the conspicuous absence of the physician and the evident variations of training experience and capabilities demonstrated by coaches, there is an absolute need for a qualified person to administer the various training programs, assist with physical examinations, provide qualified emergency care capabilities, monitor safety standards in equipment and training techniques, and administer a comprehensive rehabilitation program"

Hiring an athletics trainer should not be an economic problem after all the financial justifications are considered.

Fiesta Bowl has record pay-out

The Fiesta Bowl game in January between Penn State and Miami (Florida) for college football's 1986 mythical national championship set records for net pay-outs to the two teams, plus economic impact and television viewership by households, bowl officials told the Associated Press.

The two schools received $2.4 million each—a bowl record for net payments, said John Junker, the Fiesta Bowl's associate executive director.

The game also set a record in terms of economic impact for Arizona with an estimated $75 million.

He added that 21,940,000 households per minute were tuned into the game, giving the Fiesta Bowl the record for TV viewership by households for a college sporting event.

The game, however, ranked third in total viewership behind the 1978 and 1986 Rose Bowls.

Texas bill would allow schools to sue boosters for violations

A Texas Senate committee has approved a bill that would allow schools and conferences to sue boosters who violate NCAA rules. The boosters could be sued for up to $10,000 per violation.

Sen. John Montford, the sponsor, reminded his colleagues that four of the nine Southwest Athletic Conference schools are on probation for violating NCAA recruiting rules and three others are under investigation.

"It has become obvious that the NCAA rules cannot handle the problem associated with alleged irregularities in intercollegiate athletics recruitment. To compound that problem, the NCAA rules will not reach a booster or an alumnus situation where that person is outside any type of sanction or purview of the NCAA rules," said Montford, D-Lubbock.

He described his bill as a "meaningful deterrent against this type of conduct."

"The institution is particularly vulnerable since it, along with the players, normally is the subject of the sanctions; and yet, it virtually has no recourse against boosters who engage in this type of conduct," Montford said.

The bill does not provide for criminal sanctions, but "it does provide significant, meaningful civil penalties

Weight classes in high school wrestling altered

In an effort to have more classes in the middle weights, the wrestling rules committee of the National Federation of State High School Associations has adopted new weight classes, effective with the 1988-89 season.

The rules committee increased the number of weight classes from 12 to 13 and made the first change in high school weight classifications since the 1970-71 season.

The new weight classes, which will be optional by state adoption for the 1987-88 season, are: 103, 112, 119, 125, 130, 135, 140, 145, 152, 160, 171, 189 and 275.

"The changes were made after a great deal of research on the actual weights of high school wrestlers," said Fritz McGinness, editor of the National Federation wrestling rules and assistant director of the National Federation. "People were interested in having more weights in the middle and dropping the lowest (98 pounds) class, and that's exactly what our survey revealed."

With the increase from 12 to 13 classes, the rules committee deleted the option that states previously had to add or drop weight classes. Beginning with the 1988-89 season, all wrestling competition shall be conducted in 13 weight classes.

Women's basketball replaced by soccer

The women's basketball program at the University of Tulsa has been dropped and replaced with a women s soccer program, athletics director John Benn announced. "For women's basketball, the NCAA [championships selection] requirements, which go into effect for the 1987-88 season, require a Division I school to play a minimum of 21 Division I teams during the season," Benn said. "Since the NCAA took over governance of women's athletics from the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women in 1982, we have averaged about half that amount and simply cannot afford to meet these new regulations." Benn said Tulsa will institute a women's soccer program immediately and will play an 11- to 14-game schedule in the fall. Tulsa has a club team in women's soccer. Bruce Palmbaum will coach the women's team.

in the event a violation occurs," he said.

Montford said if a regional athletics association, such as the SWC, sues and wins, the damages "will be distributed among the various (SWC) member schools."

The bill does not reach players or coaches, Montford said. He added that he felt current sanctions by the NCAA "are arguably adequate in that regard."

Sen. Gene Green, D-Houston, asked if Montford had considered allowing others, such as ex-students associations, to sue boosters and alumni who violate NCAA rules.

"I have no personal objection to that. I would hate to just throw it open to anybody without some reasonable connection to the university," Montford said.

The bill was sent to the Senate on a 4-0 vote of the Senate Jurisprudence Committee.

Women's play-off paid attendance a record 15,514

The official paid attendance for the NCAA Division I Women's Basketball Championship semifinals in Austin, Texas, March 28, was a record 15,514, according to University of Texas, Austin, women's athletics officials.

The University of Iowa, which drew 14,821 in paid attendance for a game with Ohio State University February 3, 1985, held the previous record.

The NCAA semifinals matched California State University, Long Beach, and the University of Tennessee, Knoxville, and Louisiana Tech University and the host team, Texas.

Texas' 1986-87 home-game average attendance of 6,639 set the NCAA single-season record for women's basketball.

CFA committee of coaches opposes cuts in staff, grants

The football coaches committee of the College Football Association has unanimously supported retention of the current grant-in-aid limit of 95 and is opposed to any attempt to reduce coaching staffs, according to CFA Sidelines, a publication of that association.

The coaches committee said that while it is understandable that freshmen be excluded from varsity football, it would be difficult to adopt such a policy under current conditions.

If freshmen should be ruled ineligible for varsity competition, the coaches committee said it would favor granting four years of eligibility to student-athletes beyond the freshman year.

The committee concluded that while spring football is a necessity, a reduction of one week is feasible. The committee said it would be possible to conduct 20 days of practice within a 30-day calendar period, with a maximum of 15 practice days in pads.

Concerning recruiting, the coaches committee suggested that the head coach be limited to one visit per prospect in one calendar day, with visits at the prospect's home and school allowed.

The coaches said that the overall grant limit in football had dropped over the years from an unlimited number to 105, and then to 95. It was stated that programs in the early stages of development would be damaged if grant limits are reduced to 90.

Coaches say their staffs already have been reduced, and they contend that the current volunteer coach does not provide any recruiting advantage to a school.

These same topics will be discussed further at the CFA's annual meeting May 29-31 in Dallas.
