NCAA self-study guide passes test with members

By Timothy J. Lilley
Managing Editor, The NCAA News

Forget about finals.

If comments gathered in interviews conducted by The NCAA News are any indication, the Association's year-old Institutional Self-Study Guide (ISSG) may contain the most important set of multiple-choice questions in college athletics today.

"For our first attempt (at an in-depth study of the school's intercollegiate athletics program), the NCAA provided a pretty good tool," said O. Kenneth Karr Jr., director of athletics at East Carolina University. Administrators at Bloomsburg University of Pennsylvania and Ohio University offered similar thoughts as they commented on use of the guide, which was mandated by action of the membership at the June 1985 special NCAA Convention.

Following is a look at the ISSG and the ways the three institutions have implemented it to gain a clearer picture of their athletics programs.

The guide

During the June 1985 special NCAA Convention, delegates voted to amend Constitution 4-2(b) to provide for institutional review of intercollegiate athletics programs on a regular basis. The legislation stipulates that, as an obligation of Association membership, institutions agree:

"To conduct a comprehensive self-study and evaluation of their intercollegiate athletics programs at least once every five years in a form prescribed by the NCAA Council. Subjects covered by the self-study shall include institutional purpose and athletics philosophy, the authority of the chief executive officer in personnel and financial affairs, athletics organization and administration, finances, personnel, sports programs, recruiting policies, services for student-athletes, and student-athlete profiles. The report of the self-study and supporting documentation shall be available for examination upon request by an authorized representative of the NCAA."

By the time this legislation took effect (August 1, 1986), the self-study instrument had been prepared for the membership by the American Institutes for Research in Palo Alto, California, with help from the Special NCAA Self-Study Advisory Committee. According to the preface of the ISSG user guide, "it was the general feeling of the committee that the ISSG represents a useful tool for all member institutions, regardless of NCAA division or divisions in which they compete."

Members of the special committee included current Association secretary-treasurer Thomas G. Frericks, athletics director at the University of Dayton, who served as chair; Francis W. Bonner, faculty athletics representative at Furman University; Rocco J. Carzo, athletics director at Tufts University; John G. "Jake" Crout-hamel, Syracuse University athletics director; Christine H. B. Grant, University of Iowa women's athletics director; Douglas S. Hobbs, faculty athletics representative at the University of California, Los Angeles, and James Sefton, California State University, Northridge, faculty athletics representative.

The guide comprises more than 100 yes/no/not-applicable questions covering nine areas:

1. Institutional purpose and athletics philosophy;
2. The authority of the CEO in personnel and financial affairs;
3. Athletics program organization and administration;
4. Athletics program finances;

5. Employment of athletics program personnel;

6. The sports program;
7. Recruiting, admissions and eligibility;
8. Services for student-athletes;
9. Student-athlete profiles.

Each "no" answer indicates a potential problem in the athletics program being reviewed, and each question was assigned an "importance rating" (i.e., grave, very serious, serious, minor) that indicates the magnitude of the potential problem revealed by the negative response.

One or more of three specific purposes are to be addressed in completing the self-study exercise, according to the user information:

- To sensitize top administrators of NCAA member institutions to major types of problems that commonly occur in intercollegiate athletics programs;

- To identify specific areas in the program being reviewed that may

Any format for I-A championship would hurt bowls, Brock contends

A play-off for the NCAA Division I-A football championship would damage a traditional holiday bowl period that has been good for college football, the executive director of the Cotton Bowl said May 18 in Austin, Texas.

"Championship play-offs would relegate all bowls to minor status," Jim Brock told the Texas Associated Press Sports Editors convention. "There will be fewer games and lower pay-outs. Under any play-off formula, it's going to hurt the bowl games."

Brock said that bowl games through this year have paid out $415 million to 78 Division I members in 18 bowl games, with two-thirds of the disbursements coming in the last 10 years.

"We're just concerned that something is going to be destroyed that has been very good for college football,"

Brock said.

Brock said the Cotton Bowl has paid out $60 million in 52 years, and $33 million of that total has gone to the Southwest Athletic Conference, which sends its champion to the New Year's Day game.

Brock said he personally opposed a national championship play-off but would go along with such a plan if it were in the best interests of football.

"I realize that the bowls will survive if we do have some kind of a play-off system," Brock said. "If it turns out that's what's best for the game, then we'll go with it."

He said disadvantages he sees in a play-off system include lack of attendance at preliminary games, bowls relegated to routine games and a loss of corporate sponsorships.

"If fans can go to only one play-off game, they've got to decide if they'll watch their team in the first play-off game or gamble they'll make it to the championship game," Brock said.

Brock said a series of play-off games would diminish the excitement of the bowl games.

"It's more than money," Brock said. "The bowl games attract students of the participating schools. They are a part of America at its best. They are fan events."

Brock said a position paper from the bowls would be released soon, detailing how bowl officials feel about the play-off proposals.

"I'm concerned about where we're headed," Brock said. "Right now, we don't think it is good for college football. If someone could come up with a suitable formula, we'd go for it."

Brock said if he had to choose a

Suggestions for speakers or discussion topics for the Faculty Athletics Representatives Forum June 28 in Dallas still are being accepted, according to John A. Hogan, chair of the event.

The forum will be held from 1 to 3 p.m. Sunday, June 28, in Governors Hall at the Loews Anatole Hotel prior to the special NCAA Convention.

Suggestions can be sent to Hogan at the Colorado School of Mines, Golden, Colorado. His telephone number is 303/273-3758.

Swim programs could use a lifeguard, not an anchor

By Phill Hansel
Swimming World

Like it or not, the collegiate swimming program is changing. Recent data released by the NCAA included the following information about NCAA Divisions I, II and III swimming participation for the past two years. Keep in mind that these figures reflect changes from the 1984-85 season to the 1985-86 season.

For men, there was decline of six institutions offering swimming programs. The number dropped from 381 to 375. The number of participants dropped from 8,575 to 8,175, a loss of 400 collegiate swimmers. Average squad size dropped from 22.51 to 21.80.

For women, the picture is a bit better in that the numbers were on the plus side. Sixteen new women's teams were added the past year. This is a significant gain. The numbers rose from 374 schools to 390, with a plus change in number of participants from 7,647 to 7,874, a gain of 227.

Average squad size, however, declined a little from 20.45 to 20.19.

A general trend for the past five years shows that the number of men's sports sponsored by NCAA institutions has shown a slight decline, while women's sports have shown a significant gain.

These facts certainly are interesting, but do not constitute a crisis in themselves. What they do show, however, is that we are in a very changing situation and that programs are being dropped as well as being added.

It also should be pointed out that even though one could interpret the data to mean we now have 10 more teams than we had before, this gain is partly because we also have more member institutions than we had a year ago and all of our gain was in women's swimming. We must interpret any drop in participation as a crisis.

The real reason for the crisis is lack of adequate money to run most of the athletics departments in the NCAA. We have this negative classification of NCAA sports as "revenue producing" or "nonrevenue producing."

Swimming is classified as a non-revenue sport. Except for a few rules that make it mandatory for universities in the various divisions to participate in a required number of sports and for these institutions to have women's sports, all nonrevenue sports would be in jeopardy.

These rules were made by NCAA member institutions and can be changed whenever they wish. Negative changes could be a real crisis for all nonrevenue sports.

The usual two revenue-producing sports, of course, are football and basketball. I suspect that in far too many institutions, they are not generating enough income to make a profit. But the bottom line is that two sports are being saddled with bringing in enough alumni interest and money to pay for the entire program.

It wasn't always this way, but with the megabuck payoffs from television, most administrators feel that the athletics department should be self-supporting. One has to wonder how collegiate athletics programs survived depression years and how these programs flourished and improved before television revenue.

The truth is that in years past, athletics was an integral part of each institution, and, as such, was supported financially and in many other ways by these institutions.

Universities must take control of athletics again—control admissions, control academic expectations, control the alumni, control staff size and control length of training season. This also would mean that universities must control spending by the athletics departments.

Athletics should be a character-building experience, an opportunity to learn and practice good sportsmanship and fair play. Honesty and integrity should be the basis for every athletics program. Universities must insist on this and be responsible for disciplinary measures when needed. Collegiate athletics must get back to all of the virtues and true, quality values of sports participation, both for individual athletes and the institutions they represent.

The amount of revenue generated by a sport should not be the reason for having it. In fact, it seems that the greater the potential for big revenue, the greater the potential for cheating and dishonesty.

The NCAA Presidents Commission is working on recommendations for rule changes that might be cost-cutting. It is looking mainly at four areas: staff size, recruiting, scholarships and length of training season. The committee is looking at these rule changes for all sports, and it is proper that these areas be investigated.

I believe swimming can live with whatever changes are made in recruiting, fewer paid visits allowed, etc. There's no problem if we all have the same rules.

Staff size for the most part would not be a problem. Most swimming teams have a head coach, a diving coach and, perhaps, one assistant. No problem here.

The areas of greatest concern for us in swimming are in scholarships and length of training season.

One recommendation is that we

Something to keep in mind while college costs go up

Chicago Tribune
Excerpted from an editorial

The faith college administrations have that students and parents can go on swallowing annual increases in tuition two or three times higher than the rate of inflation is astonishing—and naive.

So far, the colleges' big gamble has paid off for them. Applications are up at most of the highly selective, prestigious, expensive schools. Hundreds of thousands of students are still willing to take on a burden of college debts that some administrators blithely compare with a long-term home mortgage.

As the colleges realize, the nation still is so sold on the value of a college education that few questions are raised about whether such steep increases are justified and whether more efficiency and economy might be possible on campus. The fact that state and Federal governments act as third-party payers for a substantial part of college bills also minimizes pressures on colleges to hold costs down; this year, the Federal government is kicking in $15.1 billion for student financial aid.

But signs of trouble are already visible. The percentage of minority students in colleges is declining, in part because they no longer can afford the steep price and are wary of taking out loans.

Colleges also are netting diminishing returns from their tuition boosts. As tuition goes up, colleges must spend more money to recruit students and to give more financial aid to the increasing number of students who can't afford the new prices. Colleges now provide $4.1 billion in financial help compared with $2.1 billion in 1980; much of it comes from the tuition of those who are paying full fare.

It's no longer as easy as it used to be to count on Federal money for student financial aid to soften the immediate impact of tuition jumps on families.

Perhaps there is a cautionary tale for colleges in what has happened to health care in recent years. Steeply rising prices increased opposition to the cost-shifting that enabled hospitals to charge paying patients enough to underwrite free care for the poor and put pressure on government to pay the bills of those who could not. But the more financially involved the government became, the greater the temptations to exert control, as hospitals and doctors have learned.

The specter of the Federal government telling colleges how much they can charge for English 101 and whether they can offer a major in computer science has a precedent, of sorts, in government price controls such as the Medicare reimbursement rules. The parallel isn't exact, of course, but it is one more reason college administrators should realize the urgency of holding costs down.

Officials in disagreement on New Mexico drug plans

University of New Mexico athletics director John Koenig says he supports a drug-testing policy that would include all athletes, coaches and administrators at the school.

Koenig, a former assistant athletics director at the University of Illinois, Champaign, said such a policy is used at the Big Ten Conference school, and he will confer with university attorneys to determine if it can be implemented at New Mexico.

However, women's athletics director Linda K. Estes said she opposes the drug-testing policy supported by Koenig on grounds it would violate the athletes' right to privacy.

"I'm philosophically opposed to drug testing," Estes said. "I object to singling out athletes. I wouldn't object if the school also tested law students or business students. But the only ones they're talking about testing are athletes." Koenig said he would push to get such a policy established. "Our athletes perform before the public," he said. "They live in a fishbowl. The public has a right to expect them to be free of drugs."

"I'm in favor of drug testing. Even the coaches and administrators were tested at Illinois, and I'm in favor of that here." Koenig took over as Lobo athletics director a few weeks ago.

"The average fan has no idea what a John Gutekunst (head football coach) goes through, a Clem Haskins (head men's basketball coach) or, before that, Jim Dutcher. There is tremendous pressure to win.

"The pressure causes you to recruit all over the country. Sometimes, you bring in marginal student-athletes. Right now, all you need at some schools is a C average, a warm body; and if you slam dunk, you can get in immediately and compete.

"We put our coaches in a position of competition with other schools. Say we turn someone down because we're afraid he might be a risk, academically or socially, and another school signs him. If he creams us on the basketball court, the fans are screaming, 'Fire the coach.'

"Now, if we sign that young man, it is our job to do a fantastic job with him academically and socially as well as athletically.

"Reducing pressure is not the end-all. You could give somebody all the money in the world, and some people would still violate the rules. But reducing the pressure on sports to win is imperative. We need funding and support for coaches.

"The change has to start with recognizing that men's and women's athletics has a right to exist as part of the mission of the University of Minnesota—as education, as public service. And that the athletics program should be funded like any other department of the university."

"I think the Presidents Commission has found out just how tough it will be to change the face of collegiate sports. They have simply made cuts (in the form of proposals to the June special NCAA Convention) in those sports that are invisible to most people.

"Iowa won the national championship in field hockey, but the loss of one scholarship simply will make it tougher for us to compete on that level, because it is not a popular sport here.

"If they (members of the Presidents Commission) are interested in going after the flagrant difficulties, they should go after the sports that are having them.

"I think the presidents have good intentions, but I wonder why they are so worried about the minor sports when the problems are elsewhere."

Slaughter hopes for continuing forum on athletics issues

The special NCAA Convention in June will be used primarily as a starting point for a national forum on resolving problems in intercollegiate athletics—a forum that must be “ongoing and provide an opportunity for expression of the wide range of opinions and points of view regarding various issues,” according to John B. Slaughter, chair of the NCAA Presidents Commission and chancellor at the University of Maryland, College Park.

A Hartford Courant columnist describes the situation as follows:

“College athletics are entering a period of national debate designed to strike the proper balance between academics and athletics,” writes Ken Davis.

In a copyrighted story by Davis in the Courant, Slaughter gave examples of issues that could be addressed in this period of dialogue:

- Comparison of the difference in the college experience between athletes competing on “major” sports teams and those who play sports that do not receive extensive support or interest.

- Comparison of the difference in experience of student-athletes and nonathletes.

- Compilation of information from student-athletes at various levels of competition regarding their personal experience with the balancing of academics and athletics.

“Although the brakes are definitely being applied to the reformers’ zeal, the Dallas Convention still will feel the Commission’s push,” writes columnist Doug Bedell in The Dallas Morning News.

However, Commission leaders still plan to introduce some significant legislation, including proposals to reduce grants-in-aid and shorten practice and playing seasons in sports other than Division I football and basketball.

“But for now,” Bedell writes, “it seems the rapid-fire reforms that have marked the past two years of the Presidents Commission’s activity will give way to less agitated discussions of mutual problems.”

“It’s easy to do things that are designed to play to the crowd, but that’s not our desire,” Slaughter told the Dallas columnist.

“Our desire is to do some things that will produce meaningful reform in intercollegiate athletics and restructure it, where necessary.”

According to Bedell, there is widespread suspicion that the Commission’s reform attempts often are too simplistic:

“For example, Slaughter and other Commission leaders long have emphasized the need for freshmen to be given an athletics-free first year in order to adjust to college life.

“Yet, those like (Theodore) Hesburgh (University of Notre Dame

president) say they don’t believe their institutions create problems for incoming freshman athletes.”

“I just haven’t seen a bad effect,” Hesburgh told Bedell.

Bedell also quotes Lauro Cavasos, president of Texas Tech University, who said: “I still really believe that with Proposition 48 in place, you are already working on that problem.... And I think most of us adjust pretty well to most anything within 48 hours. Even a 17-year-old kid.”

“Presidents also have begun to hear grumbings of their athletics directors and coaches over cutbacks in scholarships already passed by the NCAA membership,” Bedell writes.

“I say we’re moving in opposite directions,” said Jud Heathcote, men’s basketball coach at Michigan State University. “The presidents are pushing for freshman ineligibility but are cutting scholarships. I don’t think you can have both.”

“A survey of Division I CEOs by the Presidents Commission shows that 73 percent of the Division I presidents are in favor of an in-depth little feeling for him or his family.

“One of these days, we are going to come up with an answer in college athletics to eliminate the problem of unscrupulous agents.

“Although everything is a two-way street, it certainly troubles me that people would take advantage of a 19- or 20-year-old college senior with a bright future (by persuading the athlete to sign with a sports agent before his college athletics eligibility is completed).”

“I was five months pregnant at the time (of her first meeting with the league’s football coaches). My husband told me there’s no way a bunch of football coaches aren’t going to know a pregnant woman’s in the room. He was right.

“It was a natural evolution for me (after heading a conference for women’s sports only). I was hired only for women’s sports. I’d already gained a lot of experience before men came aboard. Football sort of rode piggyback, and the timing was perfect.

“The football coaches have been as easy to work with as any group I’ve met. They know the benefit of being in a league and how to work together to get things done. That’s not always true of the women’s coaches.”

“One of the reasons that school desegregation hasn’t worked any better than it has is because it was a radical form of surgery that attempted to do one thing in the schools without doing anything in the communities underlying the schools, so that black and white parents never were in any more contact than they were before. There was very little of the kind of community support surrounding school desegregation that is necessary for it to work in the long run.”

“I want to have the best total athletics program possible. But not at the expense of the student-athlete. I have one philosophy: Winning is the most important thing in life, no matter what you do. But there is a sidebar to that: (Winning) is important, but not at the expense of the student-athletes’ institutions.”

Maryland adjusts drug-testing policy

The University of Maryland, College Park, has unveiled a $300,000 antidrug initiative, featuring such reforms as stiffer punishments for drug users, more drug counseling and education, and reduced random testing of athletes.

“Under the new policy, fewer than half the school’s 400 intercollegiate athletes will be subject to random drug tests,” Chancellor John B. Slaughter said. Currently, all student-athletes must submit to three surprise tests each year.

The initiative implements some expensive recommendations of a task force appointed by Slaughter. The university didn’t say where the funding would be found.

Slaughter said the new policy “puts us in a better position to assist our students and gives them a set of clear ideas regarding discipline that can occur” if they use illegal drugs.

Slaughter rejected such task-force recommendations as the use of undercover surveillance in dormitories and decided not to require drug tests of students and employees suspected of using illegal substances on campus. He also decided against expanding random drug testing and the creation of a campus center to be a research hub into illegal drugs and education for elementary, high school and college students.

Under the new policy, students caught using or possessing drugs even for the first time will face “a very high probability” of being suspended from campus or placed on probation, Slaughter said.

He broke from task-force recommendations in deciding against making the penalties automatic. Instead, the campus’ disciplinary board will be free to hand out lesser punishment limit the training season for all sports. In swimming’s case, a starting date would be assigned in the fall for practice and, perhaps, a date after NCAA championships when practice must stop. I presume the reasons for this would be to allow the athletes more time for academics and, perhaps, to save money.

Academically, swimmers normally are in the highest ranges of all sports, and, in fact, many top teams maintain above a 3,000 grade-point average as a group. There certainly is no additional cost to getting in the water in September or carrying on the training season into April and May.

Swimming is a year-round sport, and many of our top athletes choose to represent our country on Olympic and international levels. It is imperative that these athletes be allowed to stay in a training program throughout the full collegiate year.

Another recommendation is to cut the number of scholarships available across the board for all sports.

If this must be a consideration, one first should establish equity of scholarship availability at present. Currently, swimming and diving offer the fewest grants-in-aid (per participant) of all sports recognized by the NCAA.

When NCAA scholarship limits are compared with the number of people on a team or the number of events in nationals, swimming is at the absolute bottom. In figuring a percentage of scholarships to fund a team, we are at 61 percent for men and 78 percent for women.

If a cut is to be made, many sports already have more scholarships than the number of athletes needed to participate, whereas swimming does not. It takes 18 swimmers to compete adequately in a dual meet or at the conference or national level.

No matter how it’s figured, men’s swimming with 11 available scholarships cannot cover all the events, and women’s swimming with 14 also is short. It would be wrong to reduce these numbers under the assumption that all sports are being treated alike. Swimming already is short.

The only way I know to handle a crisis is to face it. We in swimming need to talk, write and communicate the values of our sport. We need to promote our sport and create excitement and interest at every possible level.

We can but hope that the NCAA in its wisdom will recognize that our sport is a valuable educational experience for our athletes and the institutions involved.

We must contribute to the institutions that support us by not only being great athletes but by being great students and great citizens and alumni. Let the administrators at your institutions know that you care and appreciate the swimming program.

Hernell “Jeep” Jackson has prompted New Mexico officials to examine the school’s drug-testing policies, the Associated Press reported.

The El Paso County medical examiner’s office reported May 14 that a cocaine byproduct was found in a urine sample taken from Jackson’s body.

Currently, only New Mexico football, basketball and baseball players are required to undergo testing.

“Three years ago, when we had started testing for drugs, we had positive tests in football, basketball and baseball,” said L. F. Diehm, New Mexico athletics trainer. “Last year, we didn’t have one positive result in any sport,” he said.

Estes said the Jackson case substantiates the argument that drug testing does not work as a preventive measure. Noting that UTEP has a drug-testing policy, Estes said, “What good did drug testing do Jackson? If people want to get around them, they can.”

The university never has adopted a formal drug-testing program because the school’s lawyers have had trouble drafting such a policy.

A number of universities have adopted some form of drug testing for their athletes. Other schools have held back, citing possible legal difficulties.

The situation at New Mexico is one of the few publicized instances in which top athletics officials within the same university are in total disagreement over drug testing.

“Sometimes, we as coaches get to thinking we are responsible for everything that happens—this is far from true. Players fluctuate in confidence, physical fitness and in shooting ability, regardless of what we may try. Basketball is a game of so many variables that it can never be totally predicted....

“I decided that in coaching, the only person whom you can truly satisfy is yourself. And it’s nice to look back and say, ‘I tried hard, but things did not go as planned. Yet, the fun was in the challenge more than the final result—win or lose. It was the struggle to do a good job—the daily association with players who also were struggling—the support of family and friends—and even the negative concern of those who didn’t back me fully, for they spur me on to a greater effort. If I fail to win, it’s not because I didn’t try. If I win, it’s because I worked hard and had the breaks, too, at certain times.’

“We just have to accept all of life as a struggle of sorts and not be too disappointed when honors or acclaim pass us by.

“What does it mean to win? Praise, perhaps, a new watch, memories of euphoric times. What does it mean to lose if you do so honorably?”

“Maybe it can mean more than even winning if we can live with ourselves and say, ‘I played by the rules. I taught my players to play hard and never quit. I have memories of tough defeats and sad faces with maybe a tear running down a cheek. But I love the game and loved my players despite all their shortcomings....”

Grand jury may probe agents' deals

A Federal grand jury in Chicago plans to investigate the dealings of two controversial New York sports agents, Norby Walters and Lloyd Bloom, a published report said May 14.

The report in the Atlanta Constitution and the Atlanta Journal said several athletes and athletics directors already have been subpoenaed to testify.

Walters acknowledged in March that he signed representation contracts with numerous college football and basketball players who had collegiate eligibility remaining—which would be violation of NCAA rules. He also said he had given athletes cash as an inducement to sign postdated contracts, the Associated Press reported.

Walters has since filed at least five breach-of-contract suits against players who later signed other agents to represent them in negotiations with professional teams.

The newspapers said the FBI has been investigating allegations that Walters and Bloom threatened players who reneged on contracts with them.

The agents' New York office said they were not available for comment on the matter.

Two collegiate athletics directors, Ohio State's Richard M. Bay and Edward E. Bozik of Pittsburgh, acknowledged that they have been subpoenaed to testify before the grand jury investigating the case.

Bozik predicted that the grand-jury investigation will reveal most, if not all, the names of athletes who signed early with Walters and Bloom.

"I understand a lot of athletes have been subpoenaed," he said. "It's one thing for a kid to say 'no' when a coach or athletics director asks about his signing with an agent. It's another thing when you testify before a grand jury. You tell a lie, and you can go to jail."

Recently, dealings with Walters cost one star athlete his senior year of college basketball. Alabama's Derrick McKey, the Southeastern Conference player of the year, was ruled ineligible because he entered into dealings with Walters. He since has announced his intention to turn pro.

FBI to receive Iowa report on investigation of agents

The FBI is interested in a University of Iowa report on the dealings of sports agent Norby Walters and has talked to Hawkeye football coach Hayden Fry and others at the university, officials said.

"They called me and said they wanted a copy of the report," said David Vernon, a law professor at Iowa.

Vernon served on a three-member committee appointed to investigate allegations that Walters had made payments to running back Ronnie Harmon while Harmon was still playing at Iowa.

Vernon said he had met twice recently with FBI agents to discuss the report.

"I told them I would give one to them, and they will be down to pick one up," he said.

Vernon said agents also had interviewed Fry and other school officials.

Fry has said he was unaware of any payments to players.

Dorsey D. Ellis, university vice-president of administration and finance, said the U.S. attorney's office intends to subpoena various records from the committee's report about Walters' dealings with Iowa players.

The probe began after reports surfaced May 13 that Harmon had under extenuating circumstances, he said.

Second-time offenses of selling or using drugs will bring about expulsion, he said.

Currently, drug users, particularly first offenders, sometimes are ordered to perform community service or to make a financial contribution to an approved charity, said Gary M. Pavela, director of the campus' judicial system.

In the new policy, Slaughter agreed to abandon urinalysis of all intercollegiate athletes, opting instead to test only those athletes who play sports that subject them to health hazards and to unusual emotional pressure.

According to former Maryland associate athletics director Randy Hoffman, who worked on the new drug policy prior to taking the athletics director's job at San Jose State University, the policy would be aimed at men's basketball, men's football, lacrosse and women's basketball.

He said the remainder of the university's athletes, in most cases, would not be affected by the programs governing health hazards.

Drug tests also may be required as part of the punishment of students caught using illegal substances.

The initiative also includes the hiring of three full-time employees for drug counseling and education, bolstering the university police force by five officers, establishing a drug-tip hot line to campus police, and establishing drug-orientation programs for dorm supervisors and for new students.

In addition, the university will provide comprehensive reports summarizing the number of students caught using drugs and the punishment they receive, the Associated Press reported.

study of the freshman issue," Bedell continues. "Yet only 68 percent of them said they would oppose freshman ineligibility for varsity sports if forced to vote.

"Commission questions such as elimination of spring football and the paring of football and basketball seasons were also not well-received by Division I presidents. In fact, 95 percent opposed any reduction in the number of football games and 71 percent were reticent to decrease the number of regular-season basketball games.

"Commission members had hoped that the NCAA rank-and-file would see benefits for student-athletes in such measures. They have contended these steps and others are necessary to bring athletics and academics into balance.

"But the propositions actually have bred some distrust within NCAA ranks, according to the Rev. Edmund P. Joyce, Notre Dame's executive vice-president who is responsible for the daily supervision of athletics.

"Most of the presidents making these proposals are from small schools that are not in big-time athletics," said Joyce. "Some just can't make it. And they'd like to bring the big boys down to their level of mediocrity. They want to do all these things that might emasculate college football at the big-time level. And I just wouldn't want to see that."

NCAA President Wilford S. Bailey, faculty athletics representative at Auburn University, told Hartford columnist Davis that the Commission was not pushing ahead with more controversial reforms because they "have been receiving more information than they previously had had.

"A number of these issues (freshman ineligibility, lengths of major sports seasons, reductions in staff size, and athletics grants in basketball and football) are very complex," Bailey told the Courant.

"In the long run, there's no question some steps need to be taken. Premature action might turn out unwise and accomplish relatively little in cost containment, which was the principle on which the special Convention was first considered.

"There was a period," Bailey told the Courant, "when the deserved attention (to athletics) was not given by the presidents. No one will argue with that. By the same token, many of the athletics directors were not, as a group, as firmly in control and as aggressively in control of their programs—financially and academically—as they should have been.

"Now they are, in effect, reasserting their responsibilities. These are more parallel than in conflict."

Legislative Assistance

1987 Column No. 21

Bylaw 11-4-(b)—minimum contest requirements

Member institutions are reminded when making up their playing schedules that each institution's individual teams must engage in a minimum number of intercollegiate contests against four-year, degree-granting collegiate institutions in order to meet membership criteria related to the conduct of varsity intercollegiate athletics programs. Further, contests against a collegiate institution's club team may not be counted toward meeting these minimum requirements. Although these requirements would not preclude a member institution from scheduling club teams, the minimum standard in each sport must be met with contests against varsity intercollegiate teams.

Expenses for summer athletics competition

As set forth in NCAA Constitution 3-1-(g)-(2)-(iii), it is not permissible for a member institution to provide expenses for a student-athlete competing in an event that occurs when the student-athlete is not regularly enrolled in a full-time program of studies during the regular academic year, or not eligible to represent the institution. It should be noted, however, that expenses may be paid for a student-athlete to compete in regularly scheduled intercollegiate events and established national championships occurring between terms and during the summer months, provided the student-athlete is representing his or her institution and was eligible for intercollegiate competition the preceding term. Further, as indicated in NCAA Case No. 7 (page 303, 1987-88 NCAA Manual), it is not permissible for a sponsor, other than an individual upon whom the student is naturally or legally dependent or the nonprofessional organization that is sponsoring the competition in question, to provide expenses for a student to participate in athletics competition.

As set forth in Constitution 3-1-(h)-(3), it is permissible for a member institution to provide a student-athlete actual and necessary expenses for participation in Olympic, Pan American and World University Games qualifying competition that occurs any time during the calendar year.

Legislation and Interpretations Committee minutes correction

Due to an editor's error, the NCAA Legislation and Interpretations Committee minutes (Conference No. 7, Item No. 9) printed in the May 13, 1987, issue of The NCAA News should be corrected to clarify that the provisions of 1987 Convention Proposal No. 47, amending NCAA Bylaw 1-2-(b), would not preclude an athletics representative from viewing a prospective student-athlete's athletics contest on his or her own initiative, with the understanding that the athletics representative may not contact the prospective student-athlete. The committee also agreed that an athletics representative is prohibited from contacting the prospective student-athlete's coach, principal or counselor in an attempt to evaluate the prospect, as well as from visiting the prospect's educational institution to pick up film or transcripts pertaining to an evaluation of the prospect's academic eligibility or athletic ability.

This material was provided by the NCAA legislative services department as an aid to member institutions. If an institution has a question it would like to have answered in this column, the question should be directed to William B. Hunt, assistant executive director, at the NCAA national office.

Curb on rough play noted by Men's Ice Hockey Committee

Last year at this time, the Men's Ice Hockey Committee was frustrated with the state of collegiate ice hockey. Members expressed "extreme dissatisfaction" with the way the game was being played, noting that finesse aspects like skating and passing were taking a back seat to violent acts such as stick-checking and slashing.

The committee made its feelings clear to everyone involved with the game, including players, coaches, athletics directors and officials. The message: either work together to rid the collegiate game of violence or risk never seeing the game as it was meant to be played.

Evidently, that message was heard by just about everyone associated with collegiate hockey. The committee expressed plaudits for all who rallied to curb violence in the game over the past year.

"The positive response by the coaches has been very supportive in attempts to reduce violence in collegiate ice hockey," said John B. Simpson of Boston University, committee chair. "We will continue to adopt this philosophy, as the 1987-88 emphasis will be on the reduction of the number of stick penalties as they relate to interference, slashing, hooking and holding, and stick-checking.

"We are happy with the progress that has been made in the last year, but by no means are we through striving for a violence-free game. We still have a ways to go."

A number of rules were revised or added at the committee meeting May 11 to 14 in San Diego, but no major rules changes were adopted.

Probably the most controversial proposal considered at the meeting involved Rule 4-2-c. Since last year, the rule has stated that when a team scores a goal against an opponent with one or more players serving minor or bench minor penalties, the "short-handed" team shall be permitted immediately to place a substitute for the first penalized player on the ice, but the penalized player must remain in the penalty box until the first stoppage of play after the full two minutes of his penalty have elapsed.

John B. Simpson

A number of coaches proposed changing the rule to allow the player who committed the penalty to return to the game following a goal, but the committee agreed to retain the current rule for at least another year. A change may be considered next year, after

Panel wants SMU to stay in I-A, but recommends several reforms

A committee studying the role of athletics at Southern Methodist University has recommended that the school remain in the Southwest Athletic Conference but urged further reforms to prevent any repeat of the scandal that will keep SMU from playing football for the next two seasons.

The Committee on Intercollegiate Athletics' recommendations include major revisions in SMU's admissions policies for athletes, a requirement that student-athletes live in campus housing and a possible return of football to Ownby Stadium on campus.

Proposed reforms cannot completely prevent athletes from being given money improperly, but they will tighten controls, SMU's interim President William Stallcup said at a news conference after the report was released.

"What we're talking about is strong internal control as opposed to control over the outside. We want the dog to start wagging the tail," Stallcup said.

He said the athletics director and students would be held accountable for any infractions. Athletes who took money would be discharged, Stallcup said.

Committee members said the goal of the reforms is to restore integrity to SMU, the Associated Press reported.

"We think the integration of athletics into the academic life of SMU is important, but what is more important is academic integrity," said Eugene Bonelli, who chaired the committee.

Bonelli and Stallcup said that winning no longer will be paramount at SMU.

"We desire to continue the best possible athletics program," Bonelli said. "But that does not necessarily mean winning. It is only one goal and should not be allowed to dictate all standards and procedures."

The committee voted 7-3 to recommend continued participation in Division I-A athletics. Some faculty members had said that the school should consider moving to another division in an attempt to downplay athletics.

SMU student-body president Trevor Pearlman said he agreed with the decision to remain in Division I-A and said a student-senate survey showed that most students favor remaining in what is considered the intercollegiate major leagues.

"Before we consider dropping to a lower division, we should try to play football in Division I-A free from cheating and free from any external influences," Pearlman said. "If you hurt your hand, the first remedy is not amputation."

The NCAA in February banned football at SMU for the 1987 season because of improper payments to athletes by boosters, a violation of NCAA rules. The university subsequently dropped football for the 1988 season.

"Sports agents, misguided boosters and others must become convinced that the university will take appropriate legal action against them should they interfere with the conduct of the athletics program," the report said.

It also calls for establishing a university athletics council to advise the president and an athletics compliance officer to monitor SMU's adherence to NCAA and conference regulations and to conduct investigations.

NCAA investigators said an SMU booster slush fund paid $61,000 to 13 players after the school was placed on its sixth probation in August 1985.

The SMU Board of Governors announced plans to form the university committee to study the role of athletics last November 25. It came after media reports that SMU players were receiving payments while the school was on probation.

As the scandal mushroomed, the SMU Board of Trustees decided in March to abolish the board of governors after Gov. Bill Clements revealed that he and several other board members learned of payments to SMU players in 1984 and decided to continue them. Clements resigned as chair of the board of governors before taking office in January.

The 10-member university committee addressed several issues, including: the relationship of intercollegiate athletics to institutional goals and priorities, liabilities as well as benefits of the athletics program, level of athletics affiliation and participation of SMU sports programs, the organization and funding of the athletics department and admissions policies for student-athletes, the relationship of the athletics department and the school's central administration.

It recently was revealed that a former SMU student spread bogus rumors of organized prostitution and academic cheating within the university's athletics department as part of a disinformation campaign, the Dallas Times Herald reported.

Former student Kevin Lerner said it was hoped that once those rumors were found to be groundless, the press would be more inclined to believe the other charges against SMU's athletics program were untrue.

coaches have an opportunity to discuss the rule at their next convention.

Other rules changes, deletions and administrative items approved for 1987-88:

- The "points of emphasis" section of the rules book will focus on the committee's continuing efforts to reduce excessive roughness in collegiate hockey.

- Rule 2-3-b was revised to stipulate that a list of names and numbers of all eligible players and goalkeepers be made available to the referee or official scorer immediately following the pregame warm-up. A violation shall result in a bench minor penalty. Also, Rule 2-3-c was added, prohibiting changes or additions to the player-eligibility list. Any violation of this section, either deliberate or unintentional, will result in a bench minor penalty. If, after the completion of the game, it is determined by the proper administrative authorities that a violation was deliberate, the game shall be forfeited.

- Rule 3-1, pertaining to the hockey stick, was revised to state that sticks shall be made of wood or other materials approved by the committee and must have no projections.

Said Simpson, "With the introduction of so many new hockey sticks, the committee will defer to the Committee on Competitive Safeguards and Medical Aspects of Sports and HECC to develop a safety standard."

- Rule 3-7 was added, limiting each team to one request per stoppage of play to measure or check any equipment covered by Rule 3.

- Rule 4-4-a-6 was revised to read:

"A player throws a puck or any equipment, including a stick or portion of a stick, among the spectators."

- Rule 4-6-i was changed so that if an offense for which a penalty shot is awarded is one that normally would incur a minor penalty, the offending team shall not be short-handed as a result. However, the offending player must serve the full two minutes of the penalty regardless of whether a goal is scored on the penalty shot.

If a goal is scored on the penalty shot, a further penalty will be assessed against the offending player if the offense for which the penalty shot was awarded was such as to incur a major, disqualification or misconduct penalty. In that case, the penalty prescribed by the rules for the particular offense shall be imposed.

- A new Note 2 was drafted for Rule 6-23-b to prohibit spectators from using artificial-noise makers, air horns or electronic amplifiers during the course of a game. After a warning, a bench minor penalty may be assessed against the offending fans' team.

"The committee has recognized the increasing trend of artificial-noise-maker use by spectators during the course of a game and its effects on the game due to the fact that players cannot hear," said Simpson. "It has been an increasing problem because there have been instances where artificial noise during a game has created a safety problem where the official's whistle could not be heard over the noise."

- Rule 6-29-a was revised to state that, in the event of a delayed offside call, the linesman shall drop his arm and play will continue if players on the offending team clear the zone.

- Rule 6-42-a was revised to specify that officials may assess a delay-of-game penalty against a team not adhering to the 12-minute rest intermission, unless there are extenuating circumstances.

- The Note following 6-43-c was revised to state that unless there are extenuating circumstances, the ice will be resurfaced prior to overtime. The normal intermission shall be in effect.

The policy of resurfacing the ice for overtime play "was brought up again to ensure safety for all participants," said Simpson.

- Rule 6-43-d was added to state that all tournament games will be played under the discretion of the tournament committee.

- Rule 6-43-e was added to incorporate officially the use of total goals scored and minigames as options for breaking tied games.

During the meeting, the committee also heard site proposals for the 1989 and 1990 championships from the cities of Detroit, Michigan; Lake Placid, New York, and St. Paul, Minnesota. Sites for the championships will be announced in the near future.

"The increased popularity of collegiate ice hockey is evident by the continued growth, crowd support and the number of schools that have added men's ice hockey to their collegiate athletics programs," Simpson said. "We look forward to the continued input by the coaches to help guide us in future deliberations."

Penn State halts Temple for women's lacrosse title

Penn State handed Temple its only defeat of the season, 7-6, to win the National Collegiate Women's Lacrosse Championship at Maryland May 16.

The Lady Lions scored three goals in the last two minutes and 45 seconds of the first half to hold a 4-1 lead at halftime. Beth Stokes had two of the three goals.

Down 7-4 nine minutes and 21 seconds into the second half, Temple mounted a rally with three straight goals. Deb Minzola's score at 18:36 cut the Penn State lead to one, 7-6, but the Lady Lions controlled the tempo for the remainder of the game.

"When Temple got three goals, I thought it would be just like them to come back," Penn State coach Sue Scheetz said. "They never say die. They had a great season."

"Part of our game plan was not to let Penn State get too far ahead because they run a fantastic stall, as we saw in the closing minutes," Temple coach Tina Sloan Green said. "Still, I'm proud of my team for not giving up, and I thought we could pull it out if we scored the game-tying goal. I guess we just did not capitalize on our opportunities and Penn State did."

The win gave Penn State its first lacrosse title and made the Lady Lions' final record 17-2. Temple ended the season at 16-1.

Trenton State moves back on top with Division III lacrosse victory

Trenton State needed overtime to post an 8-7 victory over Ursinus and capture the Division III Women's Lacrosse Championship at Maryland May 16.

The title is the 12th Division III championship in five sports for the Lions in the past nine years and their second women's lacrosse title in three years.

Ursinus held a 3-1 lead in the first half when Peggy Engelbert scored two straight goals to knot the score at three. Margie Flynn's goal at 24:07 gave Trenton State a 5-4 lead at half time.

Trenton State went up 6-4 before Ursinus staged a comeback. The Bears tallied three straight goals to take a 7-6 lead at the 20:49 mark. Engelbert scored the tying goal at 21:05. Flynn scored the game winner from 30 feet out 51 seconds into the first overtime period.

"Our whole game plan hinged on beating their zone downfield and then exercising patience on attack," Trenton State coach Sharon Goldbrenner said. "Actually, we could have performed better in both areas. Credit the defense for not only containing a team that was on a roll offensively but that also had a hand in some key scores."

"Our players have no reason to hang their heads," Ursinus coach Betsy Meng Ramsey said. "We played a team that beat us by four goals in the regular season (8-4), and we gave them a tougher game than they probably expected."

Trenton State and Ursinus have been the finalists in all three Division III Women's Lacrosse Championships.

Lady Gator golfers hope winding road leads to third crown

The road to an unprecedented third consecutive NCAA Women's Golf Championships team title has been liberally sprinkled with detours for Florida's women's golf team this season.

The Lady Gators, preseason favorites for the sixth annual championships team title, were sidetracked last February when Lisa Nedoba was seriously injured in an automobile accident. Nedoba, who tied for 12th at last year's championships, has recuperated quicker than doctors first thought possible; however, the sophomore will attend the May 27-30 championships at New Mexico as a spectator.

Page Dunlap, the defending individual champion, also has been taking the recovery route. Florida's first NCAA titlist has spent the season trying to bounce back from an early season wrist injury and a back injury she suffered in March while adjusting her swing to compensate for the painful wrist.

"We're really pretty beat up," coach

Mimi Ryan said. "It's been tough without Lisa, and Page has only played in about half of our tournaments.

"But we're getting ourselves together and working hard. Right now, we're just worried about playing the golf course and trying not to get all hung up on defending the title. We're just going to go out and do our thing and let the chips fall where they may."

The last two times Karen Davies did her thing for Florida on this year's championships course—the 6,153-yard, par-73 South University Golf Course—she carded first-place finishes at New Mexico's Dick McGuire Invitational.

If Davies again masters the championships course, which features desert brush for rough, and if Cheryl Morley plays a steady round, the Lady Gators' road trip could end in success. Davies, who leads the team with a 74.6-stroke average, tied for seventh at last year's championships and has won three tournaments en route to all-Southeastern Conference honors for the third consecutive year. Morley, who also made the all-conference team, has consistently played well and enters the championships with a 75-stroke average.

Lori Wilkes, a transfer from Georgia, has filled in admirably during Nedoba's recovery but lacks championships experience, as does Ryan's No. 5 golfer, freshman Lisa Hackney, who possesses an outstanding short game but may have trouble on what is considered to be a lengthy course for women.

That long course may work to New Mexico's advantage. Under windy conditions on the championships course, the Lobos captured the McGuire Invitational team title against a strong field.

After struggling early in the spring season, New Mexico has steadily improved and appears to have a squad well-suited for the long course. The Lobos, recent winners of the High Country Conference team title, are led by Caroline Keggi, a top contender for individual honors who carries a 75.6-stroke average. Keggi tied for second at last year's championships. The Lobos also have talent in their Nos. 2-5 spots with Tara Fleming, Susan Wineinger, Wendy Werling and Michelle Wooding, all of whom are capable of shooting in the mid-70s. Wineinger, a long hitter who captured the conference individual title after leading all three rounds, should find the long par fives to her liking.

Arizona State also fared well on the championships course at the McGuire Invitational. The Lady Sun Devils finished two strokes behind New Mexico and should make a strong bid for the team title.

Pacific-10 and 1985 championships winner Danielle Ammaccapane has had another fine season with a team-leading 75.9-stroke average. Ammaccapane also won individual honors at the Nancy Lopez Invitational. The Lady Sun Devils, team champions at the Trojan-Bruin classic and the Arizona Invitational, have good depth with Pam Wright (76.0), Pearl Sinn (76.4) and Amy Fruhwurth (76.9) teeing off from the Nos. 2-4 positions. The fifth spot will be determined by a 36-hole play-off between Missy Farr (77.5) and Dina Ammaccapane (78).

Miami (Florida), runner-up at last year's championships, is considered by many to be the team to beat.

The Hurricanes have carded 300 or under 11 times this year to set a school record. Tracy Kerdyk, a top contender for the individual title, also set a school record with five tournament victories. Miami's formidable lineup also features individual contenders Joye McAvoy (76.2) and Mitchell Michanowicz (76.2).

Other teams in contention for the title include San Jose State, Furman, Oklahoma State and Southern California.

Hobart captures eighth consecutive lacrosse championship

Hobart remained the only team ever to win the Division III Men's Lacrosse Championship with a 9-5 victory over Ohio Wesleyan in Geneva, New York, May 16.

The title was the eighth straight for the Statesmen and their coach, Dave Urick. The win gave Urick the record for consecutive titles in a team sport. He had been tied with UCLA's John Wooden at seven.

"I know it's hard to believe, but I'm more happy to win the 1987 championship (than to get the coaching record)," Urick said. "This is for the players."

The first period ended with the score tied at one as both goalies turned in championship performances. Ohio Wesleyan's Dan O'Neil made seven stops in the period, and Hobart's Shawn Trell countered with eight saves.

The Statesmen scored four times in the second period to take a 5-3 lead into half time. Malcolm Anderson had two of the four goals.

Rick Graham scored what proved to be the decisive goal 1:17 into the third period, giving Hobart a 6-3 lead. Ohio Wesleyan got back to within one after goals by Toby Boucher and Michael James, but Graham scored the last goal of the period to give the Statesmen a two-goal cushion. Hobart tallied twice in the fourth period and shut out the Battling Bishops.

"When it gets down to the big games, you aren't going to be successful without good defense," Urick said. "Ohio Wesleyan had many chances to take the ball in and score, but the defense was always there to stop them."

Hobart finished with a 10-4 record. Ohio Wesleyan ended the year 14-3.

Cal State Northridge reclaims Division II softball crown

Cal State Northridge shut out Florida Southern behind the flawless pitching of Debbie Dickman and won the school's fourth Division II softball title May 15-17 at Quincy College.

The Matadors won three consecutive titles beginning in 1983, but bowed out to Stephen F. Austin State in 1986.

The tournament's sixth game was scoreless until the Matadors came to bat in the bottom of the fifth inning. Kim Bernstein hit to deep right center and got on board on an error by Florida Southern right fielder Pam Sheffer.

Bernstein advanced to third on a wild pitch by Dori Stankewitz and scored on a bunt by catcher Regina Lyons.

A line-drive single to right center by Barbara Flynn advanced Lyons to third, and Flynn moved to second on the attempted putout at third.

Shortstop Lori Shelly reached first on a line drive. An error by Florida Southern shortstop Colleen DeGroot allowed two runs to score as a throw to home sailed over catcher Theresa Taylor's head.

A bunt single by Barbara Jordan and a two-out hit by Beth Onestinghel loaded the bases. Kelly Winn's line drive off Stankewitz brought in Shelly from third.

Debbie Dickman, who finished the season 24-3, retired the final 17 batters she faced and was named to the all-tournament team. Also named were teammates Jordan, Onestinghel, Winn, Shelly and Priscilla Rouse.

Other all-tournament selections included Beth Greig and Stankewitz, Florida Southern; Kim Schmidt, Sacred Heart, and Patty Otremba,

Trenton State earns Division III softball title

Trenton State has been chasing the Division III women's softball title since its previous first-place performance in 1983. After second-place finishes in 1984 and 1985, the Lions again claimed the title with a 1-0 victory over Wisconsin-Whitewater.

Defending champion and tournament host Eastern Connecticut State was eliminated by Wisconsin-Whitewater in the ninth game of the double-elimination tournament held May 16-19.

Trenton State's Tina Laganella led off the sixth inning of the final game with a single and advanced to second on a sacrifice by Tracy Warren. A single by Jeannine Gilsdorf sent Laganella to third.

She scored the game's only run on a double to left field by Pam McCreesh.

Named to the all-tournament team were Donna O'Connell, Laganella, Gilsdorf, Diane Kleug and Jill Marghella, Trenton State; Terri Roemer, Shelly Stanicek, Jolie Kreuser and Becky Hilgendorf, Wisconsin-Whitewater; Mariann Shumbo and Andrea

Chapman keeps Division II men's tennis title in California

In the end, Chapman did not even need to play doubles to reclaim its team title in Division II men's tennis.

The Panthers, champions in 1985 and runners-up last season, captured five singles matches to win the final against Hampton.

The victory kept the division trophy in California for another season. Except for Southern Illinois-Edwardsville's string of titles from 1978 through 1984, the championship has been won or shared by a California team every year since 1966.

Cal State Hayward won the three-place match over Rollins, 5-4.

When Chapman did get around to playing doubles, Paul Wekesa and Barry Hancock won the individual title. The unseeded tandem won a 7-5, 3-6, 7-6 match over Robert Green and Barry Pelts of Rollins in the semifinals before defeating Steve Enriquez and Ken Olivier of East Texas State for the championship.

Pat Emmet of Rollins, eliminated by eventual champion Neil Smith of Stephen F. Austin in a close semifinal match last season, prevailed this year to take the singles title. Second-seeded Young Min Kwon of Millersville provided tough competition in the finals.

Courtney Allen, UC Davis on top in Division III women's tennis play

The Division III Women's Tennis Championships will be a different tournament next year without Courtney Allen.

The Principia senior won her third individual titles in both singles and doubles at this year's championships, held May 12-16 at Kalamazoo. Allen has not missed reaching the division finals in either singles or doubles during her collegiate career.

Allen's latest triumphs came four days after UC San Diego reclaimed the team crown it last won in 1985. Liz LaPlante's Tritons won five singles matches in defeating Occidental, 6-3, in the finals.

Occidental was runner-up to Trenton State by the same score last spring.

Mary Washington defeated Kenyon in the third-place match. Kenyon had defeated top-seeded Trenton State in the opening round.

In winning the singles title over Joli Harvanik of Trenton State, Allen avenged her only loss in championship singles play. After winning as a freshman and sophomore, she was topped last year in a close title match with Trenton State's Debbie Daniel.

Allen also successfully defended her doubles crown with teammate Sue Godfrey. The Principia tandem defeated Sue Hulse and Kristine Carter of Occidental in the finals.

As a freshman, Allen teamed with Suzy Verheul to win her first doubles title.

Allen was not taken to a third set in either singles or doubles play.

Kalamazoo men repeat in Division III tennis

Only the setting was different in the Division III Men's Tennis Championships, as Kalamazoo defeated Washington and Lee, 6-3, in the team-championship final for the second straight season.

This year's tournament was May 11-17 at Salisbury State.

Kalamazoo senior Alex Palladino came close to capturing his third championship of the week. After helping lead the Hornets to the team title, Palladino teamed with Jim Burda to successfully defend their doubles crown and came within a set of claiming the singles championship as well.

Principia's Toby Clark came from behind to defeat Palladino, 2-6, 6-3, 6-4, and reclaim the singles title he first captured in 1985.

Coach George Acker's Hornets had an easy time winning their second straight team championship. Kalamazoo defeated Swarthmore, 9-0, and Washington (Maryland), 7-2, before taking five of six singles matches against Washington and Lee in the final.

Washington (Maryland) won a hard-fought 5-4 match over UC Santa Cruz for third place.

Palladino and Burda had to win tie-breakers in three matches to claim their second doubles title. The pair won in the final against Frank Hinman and Paul Scholtz of Claremont-Mudd-Scripps, 7-6, 2-6, 6-2.

Clark, who was upset in the round of 16 last spring, was not challenged until the final match this season. Palladino captured the first set before Clark bounced back to win two straight.

The victory gave Principia two national singles champions. The Panthers' Courtney Allen won the title in Division III women's play at Kalamazoo a day earlier.

Softball pitchers adjust to extra three feet to plate

The NCAA rule that moved the pitcher's mound three feet farther from home plate this season probably won't affect run production in the Division I Women's Softball Championship, participating coaches said.

The eight-team, double-elimination series begins May 20 in Omaha.

The distance from the pitcher's mound to home plate was increased from 40 to 43 feet this season after coaches complained that softball had become too much of a pitcher's game.

"As far as the top 10 or 12 teams in the nation are concerned, I don't think the rule has made much of a difference," said Ron Wolforth, interim coach for third-ranked Nebraska. "I think the top pitchers have been just as good as in the past."

"I don't know that the rule has made it tougher on pitchers," coach Margie Wright of Fresno State said.

"I think defenses have to be stronger because the ball is put in play more often. I think our pitchers have adjusted pretty well."

Wolforth said he understands why the mound was moved back.

"The effort to get more balls in play is good," he said. "I think a lot of coaches were concerned they were losing an audience."

"My personal opinion is that whether the score is 1-0 or 8-7, the game still is exciting. You will see good, tough-pitched games in Omaha. The rule has given the potential for more offense. But on the top level of softball, we haven't seen that much so far."

represent potential problems, and

• To guide actions that might prevent or minimize the severity of those problems.

As noted in the following institutional cases, the ISSG appears to be proving especially noteworthy in the areas of identifying potential problems and ascertaining steps to eliminate them.

Bloomsburg

"I believe the educative role of the self-study guide is one of its most important aspects," said Jack Mulka, dean of student development at Bloomsburg, a perennial Division II power in several sports. "There are so many rules and regulations, it is virtually impossible to be aware of every single thing."

After receiving the ISSG from the national office in May 1986, Mulka spearheaded the formation of a committee comprising representatives of the university's alumni, athletics administration, faculty, administration, academic affairs staff and athletics boosters organization.

"We put (the ISSG) to work for us," Mulka explained. "We went through that guide section by section." While working on the review, the committee noted that, although an institutional policy for the conduct of intercollegiate athletics had been formulated and approved by university officials, it never had been presented to the school's board of trustees.

"I presented the policy to the board, and they took a personal interest in it," Mulka recalled. "They wanted to know what they could and could not do (to assist the athletics program) under NCAA legislation." He also said that Tom Calder, Bloomsburg's assistant director of development and a former member of the NCAA legislative services staff, has published guidelines for alumni involvement in the athletics program in a newsletter that goes to members of the Bloomsburg Husky Club.

"I am beginning my sixth year of involvement with intercollegiate athletics, and (the ISSG) is one of the best efforts to come out of the NCAA office in that time," Mulka offered. "It's positive... a good leadership effort."

"We don't plan to complete the self-study and simply file the results," he continued. "We hope to bring it out every summer and review the areas it covers. We want to (run the athletics program) right."

East Carolina

"We were in the process of attempting to reorganize and restructure our department," recalled Karr. "We also were about to experience a change in CEOs. We felt it would behoove us to go through the self-study with our chancellor prior to his retirement."

"We believed doing this would put us in a position to give the incoming chancellor an idea of where the program stands," Karr continued.

Although he noted that the reorganization process itself led to "some pretty in-depth digging," use of the ISSG kept him and others who worked on the program from passing over some areas lightly.

"Using the guide caused us to look into some areas deeper than we might have. Without it, we might have looked at some aspects of our program more superficially."

The result?

"We felt the guide was extremely helpful in our work," he noted. "We plan to look at it on an annual basis. I believe it will help us determine whether we're still 'up to snuff' in certain areas and whether we have made progress in improving areas that we initially identified as needing work."

Kenneth Karr Jr.

Ohio

"We believe in the NCAA, accept its rules and regulations, and believe that we behave as an athletics department in a way that supports our membership in the organization," said Ohio University Provost James Bruning.

At the same time, Bruning noted that use of the ISSG helped administrators develop the first comprehensive statement of policies for athletics in the school's history. "Completion of the self-study forced us to put in writing the policies that either had been taken for granted or followed as a matter of routine by our administrators," he noted.

Like Mulka at Bloomsburg, Bruning noted a positive response from his school's trustees when they received the final document. "We took the policy statement to the board last fall," he recalled, "and they were very enthusiastic."

Bruning forwarded a copy of the completed document to the Association's compliance and enforcement department. It includes a general mission statement; delineation of responsibilities and authority for the CEO and athletics administrators; guidelines for the hiring of athletics administrators, coaches and other staff members; criteria for evaluation of performance of staff members; guidelines for recruiting and student-athlete admission and eligibility; guidelines for monitoring institutional compliance with NCAA and Mid-American Athletic Conference rules, and a statement outlining the role of student-athletes as members of the university community.

"In sum," Bruning wrote in a letter to the compliance and enforcement department, "the attached document is intended to serve as a description of current policy and also as a written statement for guidance to future self-study."

Staff help

As indicated earlier, NCAA legislation now mandates completion of the institutional self-study at least once every five years as a condition of Association membership. According to the Association's director of compliance services, the national office staff is prepared to help.

"We're excited that the ISSG is proving to be such a worthwhile tool," said John H. Leavens. "And I want to emphasize that those of us in the compliance department do not believe our work is finished now that the self-study document has been developed and distributed."

Leavens said the compliance staff can provide a full range of services, including on-campus assistance in analyzing an institution's athletics programs. "Helping individuals make their way through the self-study process is an integral part of the package," he noted.

"We have been contacted by administrators who believe it makes sense for individuals attuned to athletics issues and expert in the use of the ISSG to come in and help take stock of a program from the standpoint of rules compliance," Leavens continued.

"Our relationship with the institution is completely confidential, as it would be if the work were being done by an outside firm. But unlike private consultants, the service provided by NCAA staff members is free."

Individuals interested in receiving more information on the ISSG or on the self-study program should contact Leavens at the national office.

85 percent of Division I involved in drug testing

A total of 85 percent of Division I member institutions now offer or are actively planning a drug and alcohol educational program for their student-athletes, according to an NCAA survey.

The survey, presented to the Drug Education Committee at its May 13-14 meeting in Kansas City, shows 60 percent of Division I members currently operating such a program and another 25 percent with definite plans to do so.

Overall, 64 percent of member institutions are operating or planning educational programs, compared to 33 percent only a year ago.

In addition, 45 percent have planned or are planning a similar program for coaches and other athletics staff members, approximately twice as many as in 1986.

A similar jump has occurred in drug-testing programs, with 70 percent of Division I institutions testing their student-athletes or actively planning to do so. Last year's figure was 40 percent.

Among the entire membership, 40 percent are conducting or planning drug tests. Only 26 percent reported doing so a year ago.

There was also an increase in the number of member institutions utilizing commercial laboratories for their testing, from 45 to 65 percent overall.

Some 42 percent of the membership also offer a plan for treating and rehabilitating student-athletes found to have substance-dependency problems, with another 21 percent actively planning such programs. A total of 38 percent were operating or planning that type of program last year.

Again, the figures were higher in Division I, with 79 percent of the members surveyed offering or planning a treatment and rehabilitation program.

play-off system, he'd start with a one-game play-off, based on top rankings of wire-service polls.

"The most popular theory would be to play it the week before the Super Bowl," Brock said. "But right now, you can't convince me it's not going to have an impact on the bowl games."

The NCAA and the College Football Association have committees studying the feasibility of a championship in Division I-A.

Championships format changes sought

The NCAA Men's Gymnastics Committee voted to recommend changes in the championships format during a May 11-14 meeting in Orlando, Florida.

The committee will recommend to the Executive Committee that the 1988 championships format include team and individual preliminaries Thursday, team finals Friday, all-around compulsories Saturday afternoon, and individual finals Saturday night.

Contingent upon approval of the new format, the committee also is recommending that only the top 24 competitors advance to the all-around compulsories and that selections for the all-around competition be made on the same basis as individual selection to the championships.

The committee also voted to recommend research into a regional championships format for qualification to the 1989 championships. This includes a survey of athletics directors and sources of possible financial support.

Another restructuring recommendation deals with vaulting. Only performers attempting to qualify for the finals will perform two vaults in the preliminaries.

An increase in the score differential and a change in criteria for those teams seeking reconsideration for selection to the championships also are recommended. The score differential would increase from .50 to 1.00. The criteria would include head-to-head end-of-season competition, head-to-head dual competition, late-season performance and team record in light of strength of schedule. For individual selections, the committee recommends that the number from each region be decreased from five to four and that the number of at-large bids be increased from four to eight.

In other actions, the committee recommends that the National Gymnastics Judges Association review the 24 judges recommended by the regional technical directors and reduce the field to a list of 18 officials (not in rank order) submitted to the Men's Gymnastics Committee to aid in its selection of judges for the championships. The committee also recommends that 12 judges be used for the all-around compulsory session.

The committee recommends that the National Association of Collegiate Gymnastics Coaches score-reporting system be used as the ranking system for the NCAA men's gymnastics polls. The committee also suggests the institution of a number of forms that will aid in the running of regular-season and championships meets.

For the first time, both the coaches and judges associations sent representatives to the committee meeting. Mark Pflughoeft represented the coaches association, and Mike Milder represented the judges association.

The committee also recommends regulations that will adjust the standards regarding apparatus height to those of the International Gymnastics Federation (FIG).

Nissen equipment will be used at the 1988 championships, but both Nissen and American Athletic will supply boards for the vaulting event.

Duke program offers no benefits to donors

Some Duke University athletics-scholarship donors apparently believe that it truly is better to give than to receive.

Participants in the recently created Cameron-Wade Fund will give annually the financial equivalent of a full-tuition scholarship, and they will receive nothing (e.g., special seating privileges, parking spaces, etc.) in return.

"Our intention is to put together a constituency of individuals or corporations who will generously support the true intent of intercollegiate athletics," said Tom Butters, the school's athletics director. "Each of our 11 initial members obviously has a strong belief in Duke University's conviction that academic and athletics excellence is not only possible but can thrive at the college level."

Butters noted that the fund was named for Eddie Cameron and the late Wallace Wade, both of whom coached football and served as athletics director at the school. Cameron also coached the Blue Devil basketball team.

"We received nearly 100 percent favorable response from the people contacted," said Butters in announcing the first group of 11 contributors. "It is now our goal to extend that membership to 65 people or corporations over the next three years."

"Their support of the fund on a continuing basis will enable us to offer young students the opportunity to fully experience the significant benefits of Division I intercollegiate athletics competition at a great academic institution."

Under the fund's guidelines, the first $100,000 given annually will be added to an endowment fund that, it is hoped, ultimately will provide a permanent source of funds for the program.

Duke currently awards the equivalent of 176 full athletics scholarships each year at a cost of $2.5 million. In addition to the Cameron-Wade Fund, scholarships are financed through contributions to the Iron Dukes organization and yearly income from its endowed scholarship program.

"To our knowledge," Butters added, "there is no other program like (Cameron-Wade) in the country, and to me it seems more important than ever to allow such a membership to be formed and to be recognized."

Administrative Committee minutes

Conference No. 8 May 14, 1987

I. Acting for the Council, the Administrative Committee:

a. Clarified the roles of several NCAA committees operating in the academic area, as follows:

(1) The Council Subcommittee to Review Academic Standards should address the broad issues of academics and athletics and should be both proactive and reactive in regard to reports and recommendations of the other committees.

(2) The Academic Requirements Committee should continue to advise on specific operating principles regarding academic legislation and its day-to-day applications. It was noted that the appointment of Council members to this expanded committee should improve its communications with the Council.

(3) The members of the former Special Committee on Foreign Student Records, which has been dissolved, now serve as consultants to the Academic Requirements Committee and deal specifically with NCAA academic requirements as they relate to international students.

(4) The Research Committee buttresses the work of the other committees via its role in conducting research regarding academic matters.

b. Approved the following staff recommendations regarding increased monitoring of membership requirements, as requested by the Council in its January meeting: Each Division I and II member conference will be asked to monitor the sports sponsorship minimum requirements for its member institutions and report to the national office any case of an institution failing to meet those requirements. The national office staff will monitor the Divisions I and II institutions that do not belong to a conference and will select approximately 100 Division III members at random annually (from among those Division III institutions sponsoring fewer than six sports for men and/or six for women) for similar monitoring. A memorandum will be sent to member conferences regarding this procedure.

Each student-athlete must obtain written permission from his or her institution's director of athletics (or the director's official representative) to participate in an approved league. will jeopardize eligibility for intercollegiate basketball competition under Constitution 3-9-(b).

Per Constitution 3-9-(b)-(1)-(i), no team in an approved league shall include on its roster more than one player with intercollegiate eligibility remaining in the sport of basketball from any one college, university or junior college. This provision would not be applicable to prospective student-athletes.

The student-athletes affected by this legislation are those with intercollegiate eligibility remaining in basketball who have been candidates for an NCAA institution's intercollegiate basketball team or who were recruited by a member institution in part for their basketball ability and subsequently enrolled at the institution.

Once this legislation becomes applicable to the student-athlete, it remains applicable until the individual's intercollegiate basketball eligibility is exhausted.

Any questions concerning the application process or the requirements for NCAA approval of summer basketball leagues should be referred to John R. Gerdy, legislative assistant, at the NCAA national office.

Program topics will include career counseling for the student-athlete, orientation and the freshman-year experience, meeting the needs of female and minority athletes, drug-education and testing programs, the role of the chief student affairs officer in athletics, and working with the

Gymnastics cut

Clarion University of Pennsylvania has abandoned its gymnastics program for lack of interest, President Thomas Bond told faculty and students in a recent letter.

The athletics director and a faculty senate subcommittee recommended discontinuing the program after the 1985-86 season, but it was retained for the following academic year in hopes that attendance at the events would improve, Bond said.

Interest continued to lag, and when the sport's season ended in April, Clarion had only eight women on the team. The university did not have a men's team.

Funds allocated to gymnastics will be diverted to other women's sports.

Bill seeks dismissal of school employees linked to infractions

Any Louisiana university employee who deliberately commits major NCAA infractions that result in sanctions must be fired under a bill approved May 13 by the Louisiana House Education Committee.

Ade L. Sponberg

Sponberg named AD at Wisconsin

Ade L. Sponberg, a member of the NCAA Council and former Division II vice-president, has been named director of athletics at the University of Wisconsin, Madison. He replaces Elroy L. Hirsch, who is stepping down after 18 years.

Sponberg has served on nine Association committees in the past 10 years, in addition to service as a member of the Council and Administrative Committee (the latter in his role as Division II vice-president). He will leave the Council when he moves to Wisconsin July 1, however, since his appointment is based on division representation.

A 1958 graduate of Gustavus Adolphus College in physical education, the 50-year-old Sponberg received a master's degree in physical education from Mankato State University in 1963. He earned a doctorate in physical education and athletics administration from the University of Michigan in 1968.

Sponberg served as athletics director at Augustana College (South Dakota) from 1968 to 1973 before moving to North Dakota State University, where he has been athletics director for the past 14 years. He also holds the rank of professor and chairs the school's division of health, physical education, recreation and athletics.

Bison teams have been very successful during Sponberg's tenure at the Fargo, North Dakota, school. From 1981-82 through 1984-85, North Dakota State was the all-sports champion of the North Central Intercollegiate Athletic Conference, and the football team won NCAA Division II titles in 1983, 1985 and 1986.

Sponberg accepted a five-year contract at Wisconsin.

The measure also would prohibit a Louisiana university from hiring anyone who had committed a major offense that resulted in sanctions against out-of-state universities, the Associated Press reported.

"It's becoming a problem nationwide, also for Louisiana, and employees ought to know if they are going to deliberately do this, their jobs are at stake," said Rep. Jimmy D. Long, D-Natchitoches.

"It's time we crack down and tighten the noose on these people who are involved in buying cars for athletes and getting jobs for their families," added Long, who is committee chair.

No Louisiana school has been accused by the NCAA of anything nearly so serious since the University of Southwestern Louisiana had its basketball program suspended for two seasons a dozen years ago for paying athletes.

Tulane University, a private institution, voluntarily abandoned its men's basketball program during a sports-bribery case and allegations that star center John "Hot Rod" Williams got $10,000 to sign a professional contract early.

Northeast Louisiana University was sanctioned for recruiting violations in its women's basketball program, and Louisiana State University received light sanctions in football and basketball because of irregularities.

Initially, the bill would have called for dismissal for any infraction that resulted in a sanction against a university, but Rep. Alphonse Jackson, D-Shreveport, said that was going too far.

Jackson had support from Marino H. Casem, athletics director and head football coach of Southern University, Baton Rouge.

Marino H. Casem

"We ought not do this if a coach buys a meal for a hungry kid or buys bus fare for him to go home to see his parents," said Jackson.

Long agreed that "I'm not after that kind of thing. I'm talking about serious matters."

The Jackson amendment was approved without dissent.

Rep. Leon Borne, D-Thibodaux, a professor at Nicholls State University, tried unsuccessfully to amend the bill to require only that a university consider firing someone whose violations resulted in sanctions.

"They can do that now," said Rep. Dale Sittig, D-Eunice.

"The bill won't be doing anything," agreed Long.

Borne said he felt that such a law "goes too far," but his amendment got no support.

Casem and Southern Chancellor Wesley C. McClure also asked that the law not be effective for violations occurring before October 1.

"We want this in the event some person may have committed a violation, say, on July 1, 1985," said McClure.

The committee approved that amendment and sent the bill to the House floor without opposition.
