Six respondents selected for special Convention program

Six persons have been selected by the NCAA Presidents Commission to respond to remarks by the four major speakers in the NCAA special Convention session that will initiate the Commission's national forum on the proper role of college athletics within higher education.

The six include two university presidents, a faculty athletics representative, an athletics director, a woman athletics administrator and a head football coach. They were announced this week by Commission Chair John B. Slaughter.

The respondents:

- Raymond Burse, president of Kentucky State University.

- Eugene F. Corrigan, director of athletics at the University of Notre Dame.

- Kenneth H. Keller, president, University of Minnesota, Twin Cities.

- Donna A. Lopiano, director of women's athletics, University of Texas, Austin.

- G. E. "Bo" Schembechler, head football coach, University of Michigan.

- D. Alan Williams, faculty athletics representative, University of Virginia.

Those six will respond to remarks made by the forum's four primary speakers, announced last week: Anthony F. Ceddia, president, Shippensburg University of Pennsylvania; Ira Michael Heyman, chancellor, University of California, Berkeley; Frank E. Horton, president, University of Oklahoma, and Richard Warch, president, Lawrence University.

The forum is scheduled to begin at 2 p.m. Monday, June 29, during the Association's special Convention at Loews Anatole Hotel in Dallas.

The six respondents:

Burse, a former member of the Presidents Commission, has been president of Kentucky State University since 1982 and has been a member of the NCAA Council since 1985.

He earned a bachelor's degree at Centre College, where he lettered in football and track. He was awarded a

Commission outlines plans for national athletics forum

An NCAA Presidents Commission policy paper entitled "Intercollegiate Athletics—Agenda for Reform" has been mailed to all NCAA members and provides information on the Commission's plans for its 18-month national forum on the proper role of intercollegiate athletics within higher education.

The document was mailed this week to the chief executive officer, faculty athletics representative, director of athletics and primary woman athletics administrator at each active member institution, as well as to all member conferences and affiliated members.

In a memorandum accompanying the paper, Commission Chair John B. Slaughter reported that the document was developed under the leadership of the Commission's Ad Hoc Committee on Institutional Responsibility, chaired by Chancellor Ira Michael Heyman of the University of California, Berkeley.

Slaughter said the policy statement "affords the NCAA membership a clear point of departure for its participation in the national forum."

The full text of the policy paper follows:

Intercollegiate athletics—agenda for reform

Background
The Presidents Commission of the NCAA, in addressing change of intercollegiate athletics, has guided its work by asking three direct questions: How can we maintain integrity in intercollegiate athletics? How can we contain the costs of athletics programs and maintain a balance between athletics programs and other institutional programs? What is the proper role of intercollegiate athletics in American higher education? These questions, which are most often asked of Division I football and basketball programs, cut across all divisions and all sports.

In 1984, when the Presidents Commission was established, we posed the first question: How can we ensure that intercollegiate athletics programs are conducted with integrity? As a partial answer, we pressed for rapid implementation of legislation specifying the minimum academic qualifications a student-athlete must obtain and maintain to participate in intercollegiate athletics. We also called a special Convention in 1985 where delegates passed NCAA legislation increasing penalties for institutions

Tucker will represent SWC on Commission

William E. Tucker, chancellor of Texas Christian University, has been appointed by the Southwest Athletic Conference to serve as its representative on the NCAA Presidents Commission.

He replaces Richard L. Van Horn, president of the University of Houston, who has served for the past two years. The Southwest Conference changes its representative on the Commission at two-year intervals.

Tucker has been chancellor at TCU since 1979, where he also served on the faculty from 1966 to 1976, first as assistant dean and associate professor of church history at the institution's Brite Divinity School from 1966 to 1969 and then as associate dean and professor until 1971 and dean and professor until 1976.

He was named president of Bethany

Athletics isn't everything, but it can call the plays

United Press International

The distasteful events at Southern Methodist University during the past months have evolved into one of the most significant showdowns in the history of college athletics, but at last the battlefield has grown quiet and the results have become reasonably clear.

While the NCAA may have the power to cripple SMU's athletics program, the school itself does not dare kill it.

Athletics still may die at SMU from a general lack of nutrition, but those who have the power to turn the school into a haven for pure academics have gone on record as being afraid to do so.

To destroy athletics, a committee studying the situation admitted earlier this month, "may adversely affect the health of the university and all its undertakings."

That single phrase, buried in a 32-page report by the University Committee on Intercollegiate Athletics, speaks volumes.

It strikes to the heart of the role—rightly or wrongly—that athletics now plays on campus after campus across the United States.

Academicians have long since realized and disliked the fact that football and basketball bring their schools far more attention than do the chemistry or psychology department. And even when athletics leaves a blot on the school's record, that blot is tolerated rather than removing its origin.

SMU has become the extreme example of that theory being put into practice.

The SMU scandal has grown so many tentacles that its beginnings are now obscure.

The continued payments to football players led to a one-year suspension of the program, which led, in turn, to a voluntary cancellation of the 1988 season.

Texas' governor admitted he failed to stop the payments when he had the opportunity to do so, bringing an outcry from the school he had injured but very little noise from the millions who elected him.

Things grew so complicated that a report claiming SMU athletes were awarded sexual favors from a group of sorority girls was greeted by a "so what" attitude—as was the later revelation that it was all a hoax.

Through it all, a 10-member group looked into the role of athletics at SMU and finally recommended little more than a tightening of academic standards for athletes. And academics, as has been obvious from the start, was not the problem.

The committee's chief role was to decide whether SMU should remain a member of the NCAA's Division I or drop down to Division III.

Three members of the group strongly urged the Division III route. They listed Division I liabilities involving institutional integrity, finances and academics.

But the other seven committee members countered with their fears that if football went, the school might follow.

"An objection to the Division III model," the committee said in its final report, "concerns SMU's institutional identity and the implications of major alteration in that identity."

"There is little question that a major component of this university's identity is its longstanding activity in major-college sports. Considerations on this topic are admittedly imprecise and uninformed by reliable evidence, but testimony suggests that concern about changes in the university's identity is warranted and that this issue should

It seems like the headlines have literally jumped out at you over the past year about athletes and drug abuse. What can be done to stop this drug use and abuse problem that seems to be sweeping our country?

The whole thing seems rather overwhelming at times.

Rod "Bird" Johnson, a rather remarkable student-athlete at Abilene Christian University, also is a rather amazing young man. He, too, was getting tired of reading all the stories about athletes using drugs, and he decided it was time to do something about it.

Tale of success for 'Dogs is wag named coach Magill

By Jim Minter

The Atlanta Journal and Constitution

Intercollegiate athletics made the front page again the other day, and not in a pleasant way. Some athletes allegedly have taken money from their "agents," which is against the rules but not a crime. Offenders may be nailed for income-tax evasion, like Al Capone.

College sport, fueled by television dollars and the "me generation" that has allowed greed to flourish and traditional values to shrink, has developed rotten spots. A lot is wrong, and has been for a long time.

Everything's not wrong. Those who would impale the whole of intercollegiate athletics—media cynics and academic snobs—should have paid attention in Athens recently when the University of Georgia men's tennis team won its second national championship in three years, something experts said couldn't happen.

There were no television timeouts, and the press box didn't appear especially crowded, which was a bit of a puzzle. The NCAA isn't Wimbledon, but the expense of travel to Athens is minimal. Never mind. It's nice to enjoy a campus sports event not polluted by trappings of a Super Bowl.

The university tennis team wins mostly because it is coached by Daniel Hamilton Magill, who also is an institution. There are lessons beyond the winning of another championship. Magill is a coach out of mythology, the kind we thought all were in more innocent "Intercollegiate athletics is at a crossroads.

"We have to clean ourselves up and maintain proper academic credibility and standards of integrity that are acceptable.

"If we don't, we run the risk of far greater commercialization, to the point that colleges will operate as professional sports programs. I personally find that completely unacceptable."

"Athletes have never thought they could get into much trouble taking money, but this could change all of that if one or two kids get convicted (of fraud or tax evasion).

"The NCAA has just too many nit-picking rules, and the NCAA is too much in control of athletics.

"For example, a coach can't even give a player a ride home after practice, or a player can't even go to dinner at the coach's house. It's little things like that.

"One thing is the current situation with tickets. Right now, we're only allowed to give our complimentary tickets to family members or relatives. So, if I have friends who live in the area, I can't give them my tickets.

"In my case, my folks live in Kansas, so if they don't come for every game, my tickets go unused.

"The way they regulated it before—by not giving out any 'hard' tickets and having you go through a players' comp gate—was good because it kept away the scalpers. This 'relatives-only' rule is terrible."

Bob Verdi, columnist

"It's a rare day now when some story doesn't break somewhere confirming the prevailing sleaze that exists in intercollegiate athletics.

"The latest trend is amateurs accepting $54,000 meal money from agents-to-be. But once an Inspector Clouseau, always an Inspector Clouseau. When it's time to grab hold of a problem, NCAA types invariably suck their thumbs, 10 to each gumshoe.

Gautt proved that talent, while necessary, is not the ultimate

By Carol J. Burr

When the University of Oklahoma's Centennial Commission gathered in the student union this spring, in attendance were a number of superstars—those whose undergraduate triumphs still linger in the minds of their admirers and whose postgraduate accomplishments shine with a little extra glitter. One of the most sought-after introductions was to the associate commissioner of the Big Eight Conference.

A handsome, soft-spoken man in his late 40s, he moved through the crowd of distinguished alumni with the tell-tale grace of the former athlete to whom the intervening years have been kind.

"I've always wanted to meet Prentice Gautt," one of his fellow centennial commissioners remarked. "But I'd pictured him as being so much bigger."

To those who watched his gridiron heroics on Owen Field in the 1950s and thereafter followed his professional career with the St. Louis Cardinals, Prentice Gautt was a very big man indeed.

Strangely, his name does not appear in Sooner record books, although he was a two-time selection as an all-conference back, once as academic all-America. Bigger, faster, more talented players have rewritten the lists many times since then. But no one who has ever worn OU red has surpassed the dignity, integrity and strength of character that an 18-year-old from the ghetto of Oklahoma City brought to the greatest challenge of his life.

Prentice Gautt was the first Black to play football at the University of Oklahoma.

The color barrier at OU had been lowered for graduate students in 1948, eight years before an excited yet fearful Gautt stepped out of a car at the main entrance to the campus, ready to register for classes. A small group of Blacks had attended nonsegregated classes since 1950, but the last restrictions on undergraduate enrollment had been removed only the year before, May 15, 1955. Very few black undergraduates lived on campus. In the dormitories, they roomed together, two to a house.

In the athletics dorm, Gautt would room alone.

Gautt had support, both moral and financial. A group of black doctors and pharmacists in Oklahoma City had funded a four-year scholarship for a scholar-athlete who could make the grade at OU. Gautt was their choice. He was also Sooner coach Bud Wilkinson's choice.

Very quietly, in October of Gautt's freshman year, Wilkinson returned

Looking back, Gautt realizes that with the talent OU was recruiting each year, (coach Bud) Wilkinson didn't need him and the controversy that accompanied his addition to the team the private money and put Gautt on a regular athletics scholarship.

Looking back, Gautt realizes that with the talent OU was recruiting each year, Wilkinson didn't need him and the controversy that accompanied his addition to the team.

"When I walked into Bud's office," Gautt explains, "I saw a secure person who felt pretty good about who and what he was. He could say to me,

'You can be a part of my program. Regardless of what other people think of feel or do, I want you to be a part of my program.' So, because he was secure, whenever I was around him, I felt secure; I felt comfortable."

Others were not so willing to set aside their prejudices and accept Prentice Gautt as a person. Freshmen were not eligible for varsity competition in the '50s, and some members of the freshman team objected to playing with a Black; one even left OU. After a freshman game in Tulsa, Gautt was refused service in the restaurant where the team was scheduled to eat. His teammates abruptly left and found an eating establishment that also would serve Gautt.

Such expressions of support became increasingly important as Gautt struggled to make the team as a sophomore. The strain of transferring from an all-Black to an all-white environment was taking its toll.

President Emeritus George L. Cross recalls in "Presidents Can't Punt" that state law in Texas forbade housing Gautt with the team in the Worth Hotel in Fort Worth before the OU-Texas game.

Since Oklahoma had no such law, OU officials were surprised when Oklahoma City's Skirvin Hotel responded to some patron complaints by refusing to let Gautt stay there with the team on the nights before home games. The team transferred to the Biltmore for the remainder of Gautt's eligibility.

At first, Gautt was booked into a single room, but teammate Jackie Sandefer put an end to that. Gautt and Sandefer were road-trip roommates until the Texas halfback graduated the following year.

Although Wilkinson had never lost faith in Gautt's ability to be a major factor for the Sooners, many Sooner fans would have been pleased to see this highly touted black fullback fail. As a junior, Gautt quieted his critics. In a day when the good ones played both ways, he was a formidable line-backer on defense as well as the best fullback in the Big Eight for two years running.

Perhaps his most celebrated performance was in the 1959 Orange Bowl against Syracuse when he unleashed a 42-yard touchdown run on the second play of the game. He was the first black player to score in the Miami classic. George Cross quotes Miami Herald sportswriter Jack Bell's account:

"The best player on the field was Oklahoma's Prentice Gautt, the mighty Negro fullback. His touchdown run that put the Sooners on top was his most spectacular effort. But he reeled off several other long gains and his defense play was the mostes'. As a linebacker, he was everywhere when needed."

In 1985, Gautt indeed was inducted into the Orange Bowl Hall of Fame. His 15.7 yards per carry—six carries for 94 yards—still stands as the Orange Bowl record.

Even as he was earning the respect and admiration of his teammates and OU fans for his athletic prowess, Gautt was acutely aware that his acceptance off the gridiron was limited and far from universal. His social life, for instance, was practically nonexistent.

Rule No. 1 for the young black man was never to talk to a white female.

Gautt still recalls his discomfort during his sophomore year at having to avoid being seen with a female classmate in a late-afternoon art course.

"When class was over, she would go back to the Quad (women's dormitories), and I'd go the same way to practice," he says.

Any other two students naturally would have walked together. One day they did, and Gautt was painfully aware of other people watching them, including his teammates. Thereafter, he employed any delaying tactic he could devise to keep from leaving class at the same time.

"I can remember slowly putting up my brushes one at a time" he shakes his head—"washing them and washing them and thinking 'Holy cow, we have to do all of this....'"

Gautt's social life—when there was time for one—required him to climb into his old car and go back to his Oklahoma City neighborhood.

Although most of his associates thought the young black student-athlete handled his difficult situation with a good deal of class, Gautt himself is more self-critical.

He recognizes that his personality, then and now, is not confrontational, not defiant. He wanted to be liked and to that end suppressed any trait he considered unlikable. He felt like only half a person.

"To this day," he admits, "whenever I talk about those experiences, I think that I really should have said something when this thing happened or that thing happened. But what would it have served? The only thing it would have served would be for me to vent my frustration, and more than likely I would have lost the opportunity to play at the university."

But Gautt is quick to emphasize that there are more positives than negatives in his memories of his collegiate days. He prefers to think of the professors, coaches and teammates who accepted and supported him and to forget the rest.

Football enabled Gautt to obtain what he wanted most—an education. He had been taught from childhood that classroom achievement was the only way to success.

In 1960, when Gautt received his bachelor's degree in education, he was drafted by the Cleveland Browns and after a year was traded to the St. Louis Cardinals, where he played for seven more.

After eight years, however, Gautt faced facts. "I was not that good. I happened to be in the right place at the right time; circumstances just fell together to keep me playing for eight years. But I realized, hey, this isn't going to last."

Dan Devine, the head football coach at the University of Missouri, Columbia, offered Gautt an assistantship with the opportunity to continue his schooling. He became one of only two black assistant coaches in times.

Generations of Georgia students, many of them nonathletes, have had their lives shaped by this remarkable man. There was a place in Athens called Harry's, which served cold draft beer and thick hamburger steaks. Magill held court almost nightly at Harry's, teaching history and a variety of other subjects not found in textbooks. He is one of the world's great entertainers, his strong suit being alliteration.

The football team's German place-kicker became the famous Bootin' Teuton, the fast running back from Savannah the Chatham Cheetah, who nearly eclipsed the Gliding Ghost from Goodwater and the Fitzgerald Phantom. Anyone who missed his drawling reference to Herschel Walker, the Goal-line Stalker, was cheated of one of life's good moments.

At one time, Magill laid claim to being the world's fastest two-fingered typist, and won the longest pingpong match on record, while bottling his own scuppernong wine and teaching about every kid in town the fine points of tennis. He has his views on negative press, especially as applied to the University of Georgia. "If the captain of our football team dropped dead," he once complained to me, "you know what your headline would be? It would be 'Georgia Captain Quits Football Team.'"

For years, he worked the athletics PR beat in the mornings and spent his afternoons sweeping courts and stringing racquets, making do on a shoestring. Nobody dreamed of championships, except maybe Magill. The NCAA tournament in Athens, and the world-class tennis facility made possible largely through donations by singer Kenny Rogers and his wife, Marianne, an Athens native, are Magill's creations.

He has won more matches than any college coach ever. His former players—senators, lawyers, businessmen and professional tennis players—remember playing for him as hard work but also the best part of their campus lives. No one ever failed to have fun, especially the coach.

We have thought of Magill as ageless, and he is. But the record says 66 years, which means he won his first championship at 64, when most men go fishing. It's nice to see him win again, under the old rules of fun and games, and nice to know college sports still can be all we thought it was, in an age of innocence.

Letter to the Editor

Football play-off would help bowls

To the Editor:

As a long-time fan of college football, I've been following the current talk of a national championship football play-off for Division I-A very closely. Frankly, I've grown tired of everything from NCAA field hockey to water polo having a true national champion while the major colleges and universities have to depend on the antique polls to determine who is No. 1 in football.

However, it took an article in the May 20, 1987, issue of The NCAA News to get my blood to the boiling point.

In the article ("Any format for I-A championship would hurt bowls, Brock contends"), the executive director of the Cotton Bowl, Jim Brock, says "Championship play-offs would relegate all bowls to minor status." He also says a series of play-off games would diminish the excitement of the bowl games. To which I say, "Hogwash!" If anything, a play-off system would INCREASE interest in the bowl games.

The current system allows football fans to watch only one bowl game at a time. Frankly, if the "national title" were on the line in the Orange Bowl at the same time a meaningless match-up was going on in the Sugar, most people would watch the Orange. But suppose the winner of the Orange was going to meet the winner of the Sugar in a national semifinal; fans of all four schools would be eager to do everything possible to follow both. They would want to know all about the team their favorite school will meet next.

Seriously, Mr. Brock, I haven't watched a Cotton Bowl game in I don't know how long because it's been a very long time since it "meant" anything.

Add the excitement of knowing the winner would qualify for the "final four," and I guarantee you I would have my remote-control box red hot. And if you're afraid of lower attendance, you're closing your eyes to reality. All you have to do is check attendance at NCAA Division I basketball preliminary games.

A I-A play-off hurt the bowl games? Hardly. It would do more to inject new life into the game and the bowls since the two-point PAT.

Sports help break up Monterrey youth gangs

By Cam Rossie

Special patrols cruise around Monterrey, Mexico, trying to turn an estimated 336 teen-age street gangs into basketball, volleyball or soccer teams.

"We want them to take their anger out on the ball," said Jose Angel Torres, a physical education teacher who was a police officer for seven years before taking on this task.

He is one of a team of 36 professionals working with the growing number of glue-sniffing street gangs in this sprawling industrial capital of the northern border state of Nuevo Leon.

The patrol group is made up of police officers, social workers, psychologists, criminologists and educators working with Carolina Rosete Perea, director of the nine-month-old Family Support Program.

Perea said the program has had some success.

"Some kids run after the ball in their first game while inhaling glue," she said. "Some throw it (the glue) away then and never pick it up again."

Jose Luis Gamez, head of the security police statistical division, said one person dies at the hands of gangs about every 10 days in this metropolitan area of 2.8 million people.

Violent confrontations between gangs occur every other day, he said.

Gamez said the 336 gangs police have identified have a total membership of 16,000 to 20,000. Most are boys 10 to 20 years old, although girls also have gangs.

areas—assaulting and sometimes killing people, breaking into homes and stores, and damaging schools.

Many have dropped out of school and work irregularly. They get together to smoke marijuana or sniff glue. Cocaine and heroin are too expensive so their use is limited, authorities said.

The state security police created the Family Support Program in hopes of getting adolescents involved in sports before they turn to serious crimes.

"In our program, the battle takes place on the playing field," said Perea.

Monterrey, the third-largest city in Mexico (after Mexico City and Guadalajara), has been hit hard by the country's economic crisis that began in 1982 but has become a magnet for the poor from other parts of the country.

"People are fleeing the poverty of the countryside to live in misery on the outskirts of the city," said Ramon Estrada, director of the Monterrey security police.

"This provokes unemployment and other economic concerns that bring the young to commit illicit acts or leave them with nothing to do."

Luis Trevino, deputy director of the state security police, said: "Children who have been abandoned by one or both parents or live with prostitutes or alcoholics who beat on each other, and their children are prime candidates for street gangs."

The professionals approach gangs on street corners or children wandering alone in poor areas and invite them to get a soccer, basketball or volleyball team together for state-sponsored tournaments.

The patrols have been stoned by some gangs, verbally abused by others or just ignored the first time they go to some areas.

The program now has involved nearly 5,000 gang members.

Social workers who do follow-up counseling with gang members have helped some return to school or find jobs, said Perea.

Gamez, in his office, pointed to the name "The Thrillers" on a roster of an upcoming soccer tournament.

"This was a street gang. Now it's a team," he said. "We have them controlled and we can't abandon them, ever."

Nancy L. Mitchell

Nancy Mitchell promoted by Association

Nancy L. Mitchell, a legislative assistant in the national office since December 1985, has been appointed a director of legislative services. She replaces L. Douglas Johnson, who is joining the athletics department at the University of Miami (Florida).

A 1979 graduate of the University of Kansas, Mitchell taught English at the secondary level and worked in private business before returning to Kansas to study law.

While in law school, she served as a student director for Douglas County (Kansas) legal aid and as a clerk for the Kansas Board of Regents' general counsel.

Mitchell earned a law degree from Kansas in 1985 and joined the legislative services staff in December of that year. Her assignments have included working with the Special NCAA Committee on Deregulation and Rules Simplification.

ACC designates scholarship to honor Bob James

The Atlantic Coast Conference has established a postgraduate scholarship in memory of Commissioner Robert C. James, who died May 11.

James served for more than 16 years as commissioner of the ACC, during which time the conference enjoyed some of its widest national acclaim and success.

John A. Fuzak, an assistant commissioner under James for the past seven years, has been named acting commissioner until a successor has been selected.

"We are accepting contributions for the Bob James Scholarship," Fuzak said, "and those contributions can be sent to the conference office. So many of Bob's friends have inquired about a scholarship in his memory, and we are delighted that the machinery has been put in motion to bring this about."

Contributions can be sent to the Bob James Scholarship Fund, Atlantic Coast Conference, P.O. Box 29169, Greensboro, 29429-1969.

Coach honored

A $25,000 scholarship honoring Ed Geisz, aquatics director and men's swimming coach at Villanova University, has been established by his former athletes and friends.

Geisz has been men's swimming coach at Villanova for 34 years, and his teams have a .624 percentage and a 276-166-4 record.

Geisz said that in all the years he has been recruiting swimmers and divers, he has never had an academic casualty and all of his recruits have graduated.

Legislative Assistance

1987 Column No. 23

Expenses for summer athletics competition

As set forth in NCAA Constitution 3-1-(g)-(2)-(iii), it is not permissible for a member institution to provide expenses for a student-athlete competing in an event that occurs when the student-athlete is not regularly enrolled in a full-time program of studies during the regular academic year or not eligible to represent the institution. As an exception, expenses may be paid for a student-athlete to compete only in regularly scheduled intercollegiate events and established national championships occurring between terms and during the summer months (provided that the student-athlete is representing his or her institution and was eligible for intercollegiate competition the preceding term) and in international competition approved by the NCAA Council. Further, as indicated in Case No. 7 (page 303, 1987-88 NCAA Manual), it is not permissible for a sponsor, other than an individual upon whom the student is naturally or legally dependent or the nonprofessional organization that is sponsoring the competition in question, to provide expenses for a student to participate in athletics competition.

As set forth in Constitution 3-1-(h)-(3), it is permissible for a member institution to provide a student-athlete actual and necessary expenses for participation in Olympic, Pan American and World University Games qualifying competition that occurs any time during the calendar year.

Bylaw 5-1-(d)-(3)—track and field

The Council has affirmed the NCAA Administrative Committee's interpretation that a student-athlete's eligibility under NCAA Bylaw 5-1-(d)-(3) [20-year-age rule] in the sport of track and field would be affected for purposes of indoor track, outdoor track and cross country if the student participates in organized track competition (in any of these three forms) during the time period specified in the regulation. In other words, participation in any of the three forms of track competition during the time period specified in Bylaw 5-1-(d)-(3) would result in the utilization of seasons of eligibility under this rule in all forms of track competition.

SEC might cut back on round-robin format

The annual Southeastern Conference spring meeting ended with administrators approving minor legislation and promising to study a proposal that urges adoption of a 14-game league schedule in men's basketball.

The basketball issue was not addressed by the presidents of the 10 conference schools, but SEC Commissioner Harvey W. Schiller reiterated his intention to review the matter in the next few months.

"We're going to look at every part of that," Schiller said of the proposal submitted by the league's basketball coaches.

"The ability to schedule it; how do you schedule it; how you do home-and-home, and what the effect would be in terms of attendance... television and other things," the commissioner added.

The recommendation to drop four games from the SEC's 18-game round-robin schedule was one of the more significant proposals to emerge during the meeting, the Associated Press reported.

The coaches support the idea, saying it would give their programs flexibility in scheduling and an opportunity to gain more visibility through intersectional and nationally televised games.

Schiller said the recommendation will be studied and that his office hopes to prepare a report that can be delivered to the league's athletics directors at a meeting this fall.

Any change, however, would have to be approved by the presidents.

"There's no question of when it can be changed," the commissioner said. "The presidents can change it at any time."

The most talked-about subject may have been sports agents and how to control their influence on college athletes with eligibility remaining.

"With a sense of frustration, I will tell you that we haven't come up with any firm changes to our rules," Schiller said. "The rules are specific. You don't have agents."

There also was discussion, but no action taken, on a proposal to eliminate athletically related financial aid for first-year athletes who are ineligible for competition because they don't meet minimum NCAA eligibility requirements.

Schools currently may admit "partial qualifiers and nonqualifiers," but athletes lose a season of eligibility if they receive athletics aid in the first year. Georgia, which does not admit them, sponsored the proposal.

Action taken by the presidents included raising the fee of football officials from $350 per game to $425. Women's basketball officials will receive $150 instead of $125 for non-conference games.

Approval also was given to a proposal that the SEC executive committee be given authority to determine the formula for distribution of television funds received from the conference football and basketball television packages.

The league retained its limit of 55 baseball games in the spring but dropped a restriction that no school may schedule more than 33 home games. The presidents also approved a recommendation to move the start of cross country practice from September 15 to September 1.

Among the other topics discussed was the possibility of playing the annual conference baseball tournament at a neutral site. The league is also considering keeping the women's basketball tournament at a neutral site, with Albany, Georgia, and Jackson, Mississippi, both in the running to host next year's event.

Committee Notices

Member institutions are invited to submit nominations to fill interim vacancies on NCAA committees. Nominations to fill the following vacancies must be received by Fannie B. Vaughan, executive assistant, in the NCAA office no later than June 22, 1987.

Men's Fencing Committee: Replacement for Edwin K. Hurst, Stanford University. Replacement to be effective September 1, 1987.

Women's Fencing Committee: Replacement for Edwin K. Hurst, Stanford University. Replacement to be effective September 1, 1987.

Field Hockey: Replacement for Jean D. Stettler, no longer at the College of William and Mary. Appointee must be from Division I. Replacement for Linda McDonald, no longer at Bentley College. McDonald was to have taken office September 1, 1987. Appointee must be from Division II.

in drug counseling.

"We had a meeting and learned how to talk to young people," said Johnson. "We try to put athletics with it. We're not much older than these kids. Education of drugs in this country is very poor. That's wrong. The 'Miami Vice' image of drugs is money, cars, rich, etc. That's not it."

With the help of Hare, a group of ACU athletes, including Johnson, wide receivers Arthur Culpepper and Sid Bloomer, women's basketball players Suzanne Johnson and Pat Bidwell, and others, has spoken to elementary schools, church groups, Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts.

"Steve Hare said he could get them as many speaking engagements as they had time for," said Bullington. "It has been an excellent program."

Johnson, a two-year starter for the Wildcats' basketball team and the defending Lone Star Conference champion in the triple jump, is trying to become ACU's first three-sport letterman in years. He went out for spring football this year for the first time.

Despite a schedule that has him playing football, participating in track and going to school this spring—right after finishing a long basketball season—Johnson takes time to speak to the young people.

"It's a great program," he said. "We try to tell the kids that college athletes who are successful are going through some of the same things that elementary and junior high athletes are going through. I wish someone had talked to me when I was that age."

Bullington has a file in his office filled with thank-you letters from youngsters after the ACU athletes have spoken to a class or organization.

One letter from Melissa, a student at Dyess Elementary School, reads, "Thank you for taking your time to talk to us about why you don't take drugs and what happens if you do. Now I know what to say when someone asks if I want drugs. 'No!'" that violate NCAA rules and instituting measures for prompt and fair enforcement of these rules. During the past year, we have seen the results of these actions.

In 1986, we posed the next critical question: How can we contain the costs of athletics programs and maintain a proper balance between intercollegiate athletics and other institutional programs? In order to frame answers, we decided at the January 1987 annual Convention to call for a special Convention to be held in Dallas in June 1987. Also in January, we adopted resolutions to guide reform in five areas of particular moment: recruitment of student-athletes, compensation of coaches, length of playing and practice seasons, size of coaching staffs, and financial aid.

The delegates to the 1987 annual Convention expressed strong support for the reform measures in these areas. The Convention passed legislation that reduced recruiting periods for high school athletes in football and basketball. The Convention adopted legislation aimed at ensuring that chief executive officers approve of all compensation arrangements involving coaches. Also, the Convention reduced the number of initial grant awards in Division I-A football and the total number of grants in Division I basketball.

Other measures on the reform agenda were deferred for consideration by the Presidents Commission and the NCAA Council. In preparation for the special Convention, we conducted a comprehensive study of salient issues by consulting with NCAA Council subcommittees and others. Also, we surveyed the views of Division I chief executive officers and used their responses in developing cost-containment and institutional-balance legislation for consideration by the 1987 special Convention.

1987 Special Convention

At Dallas, our first objective will be to perfect the specific legislation that will complete the set of restraints enunciated in our principles adopted at the San Diego Convention. We must ensure that a full set of regulations is put in place on each of the issues of recruiting, compensation of coaches, playing and practice seasons, coaching staffs, and financial aid.

At Dallas, we will also raise the third question that has guided our work: What is the proper role of intercollegiate athletics in American higher education? We know that this question raises broad questions about the scale and intensity of athletics programs. It also raises specific questions about such issues as freshman eligibility, need-based financial aid, the structure of the NCAA and revenue-sharing. We know that these are difficult questions and that people who care about intercollegiate athletics have sharply differing answers. We, ourselves, do not agree.

Call for a national dialogue

At Dallas, we will address these disagreements—not by proposing specific legislative measures, but by initiating a national dialogue. We know that these disagreements are presently too vast to be bridged by legislative proposals, no matter how finely crafted. They can only be resolved by examining and debating first principles and basic premises.

All members of the Presidents Commission agree that intercollegiate athletics plays an important part in higher education. We disagree sharply, however, on the emphasis that should be placed on athletics. Some presidents believe that "big-time" athletics programs subvert the educational mission of colleges and universities. Others believe that big-time athletics programs are necessary and beneficial for those institutions that sponsor them and for participating student-athletes.

Many presidents believe that athletics programs are greatly overemphasized. They believe that the cost, scale and intensity of programs are far in excess of what can be justified in an educational institution. They believe that some of the institutions that place an extreme emphasis on athletics continue to engage in questionable and sometimes corrupt practices. They believe that the pressure to cover the costs of large-scale programs, especially Division I men's football and basketball, puts into motion an escalating series of events that results in a constant temptation to misbehave in order to win, to generate profits for other sports, to maintain employment of coaches (some of whom are paid extraordinarily high salaries) and to pay for ever more lavish facilities.

These presidents realize that there are several institutions that run big-time programs honestly. They believe, however, that even these institutions too often subordinate academic values to athletics concerns. They believe that young recruits who have no prospect of succeeding as students are admitted simply because they are exceptional athletes and are awarded financial aid solely on the basis of their athletics prowess. They believe that athletes are often counseled to take courses and curricula that simply enable them to remain eligible and, in any event, are required to spend an inordinate amount of time practicing and competing. They believe that, throughout their college careers, these young men and women are encouraged to be athletes first and, if time permits, students second. The presidents who hold these views believe that big-time athletics programs are usually antithetical to balanced and responsible higher education.

Other presidents flatly disagree. They believe that big-time athletics provides valuable benefits to individual student-athletes, to their larger campus communities, and to the nation's colleges and universities. They believe that big-time athletics programs have contributed to the quality of American higher education by providing young people, including many from disadvantaged backgrounds, with the opportunity to attend college and develop as students and as athletes. They believe that student-athletes should enjoy the same financial aid opportunities as other specially talented students. They believe that—as with the student who chooses to devote a great deal of time to such activities as music, journalism or student government—the student-athlete's individual potential and human spirit can be liberated through the discipline of hard work and high achievement. They believe that the academic performance of athletes equals, if not exceeds, the performance of other students.

They believe that those problems that exist in intercollegiate athletics are not caused by the scale and intensity of programs, but by a small minority of corrupt individuals. They believe that students, faculty and alumni enjoy the sense of community evoked by athletics contests, that an institution's prestige is enhanced by big-time athletics, and that the nation's colleges and universities are unified by regional and national competition of the highest caliber.

We know that during the past three years, the Presidents Commission, the NCAA Council and member institutions have sponsored legislation that has led to significant reforms. We know, however, that further change, if it is to occur, cannot be accomplished without a fundamental examination of the disagreements that separate us.

Structure of the dialogue

We know that we can only resolve these disagreements by discussing them face-to-face, taking public positions and subjecting them to the scrutiny of our institutional communities. We enthusiastically call for this forum because, to date, NCAA member institutions have rarely had an opportunity to discuss and consider first principles and basic premises. It is our responsibility to provide the opportunity for all of us to speak our piece and then, having done so, to find a common ground on which everyone has a chance to determine an acceptable and honorable result.

It is also our responsibility to frame the issues of the forums sharply, with a clear view toward finding solutions. To that end, we have invited four eminent representatives of American higher education to initiate the dialogue by presenting their views on the place of intercollegiate athletics in our colleges and universities. These four speakers will be Anthony F. Ceddia, president of Shippensburg University of Pennsylvania (Division II); Ira Michael Heyman, chancellor of the University of California, Berkeley (Division I); Frank E. Horton, president of the University of Oklahoma (Division I), and Richard Warch, president of Lawrence University (Division III).

Their presentations will be followed by comments from a panel of respondents that will include an athletics director, a woman athletics administrator, a coach, a faculty athletics representative and other presidents. Delegates will have an opportunity to submit questions to the speakers or the respondents. A full transcript of the discussion will be provided to all delegates to the Convention.

National forums

We envision that the Dallas dialogue will give rise to questions that require further discussion and analysis. We therefore intend that the NCAA will stage, on behalf of the Presidents Commission, special national forums to discuss such critical questions as these:

- How can athletics contribute to the quality of student-athletes' lives? Should the educational experience of student-athletes be substantially comparable to that of their nonathlete peers?

- On what basis should athletics-related financial aid be awarded? Should it differ from financial aid awarded to other students?

- What practice and competition calendars and schedules will best serve student-athletes' educational and social experiences?

- Would limits on freshman eligibility enhance student-athletes' educational and social experiences?

- How can publicity, revenue and competitive success contribute to, rather than detract from, honor and honesty in athletics? Should ways be devised to control the commercialization of big-time sports?

- What competitive structures best serve both to promote diversity among institutions and to unify, rather than divide, institutions? Should the existing division structure be changed?

Studies of intercollegiate athletics

In order to ensure that the national forums on intercollegiate athletics are based on sound information, we will sponsor a series of comprehensive studies that will give solid, broad and persuasive evidence as to the effects of participation in intercollegiate sports on the student-athlete and on colleges and universities. These studies will address, among others, the following questions or issues:

- How do the experiences of college or university life of student-athletes compare with those of other students, in general, and with those of other students who devote a great deal of time to a particular extracurricular activity?

- How do the experiences of student-athletes differ depending upon whether one is a participant in big-time sports or in sports that are not given a heavy emphasis?

- How do the experiences of student-athletes compare with those of other students in terms of courses taken, classes attended, time spent on or off campus, tutoring received? How do they feel about and evaluate their experiences? Do they see themselves as beneficiaries of fine programs, or as exploited? How do they personally experience the balance between athletics and academics in their daily lives?

- How are student-athletes recruited? How do recruitment activities differ depending upon the intensity of the athletics program? What are the differences in test scores and grade-point averages between athletes and other students? How do recruited students personally experience the process of choice of college and university and the role of athletics recruitment in that process?

- What are the end results of college and university athletics programs? What are the graduation rates of various types of students and programs? How do student-athletes evaluate their college experiences as they come to an end? What do their lives look like three and four years after they leave college?

- What effects do intercollegiate athletics programs have on the life of the colleges and universities, as distinct from their effects on individual athletes? For example, do big-time sports increase alumni giving? Do they contribute to campus morale? Do they provide important ties to alumni?

- What effects do revenue-producing and revenue-sharing arrangements have on the structure and character of intercollegiate athletics? What impact do these arrangements have on student-athletes, on competitive schedules, on institutions?

- What are the links between intercollegiate athletics and professional sports? What effects do these links have on student-athletes and their colleges and universities?

We believe that the information and insight that will come from the Dallas dialogue, the national forums and the in-depth studies will help us all to think creatively and wisely about intercollegiate athletics.

We envision that this examination will proceed from June 1987 to January 1989. We will culminate this undertaking at the 1989 annual Convention by sponsoring legislation reflecting a fundamental reexamination of the first principles and the basic premises underlying intercollegiate athletics in America.

It is essential that as many people as possible participate in this process. We know all persons involved in intercollegiate athletics—students, coaches, athletics directors, conference officials, alumni, presidents and trustees—must act in concert. We must work together or what we create will not work at all. We believe that college sports should reflect important values of our society—and for those values to prevail, we must be sure that we are all playing by the same rules, for the same reasons, to the same ends.

Earlier in his career, he was on the faculty at Atlanta Christian College from 1959 to 1966 and served as chair of the religion department there from 1961 to 1966. He is an ordained minister in the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ).

Tucker attended East Carolina University and then earned his bachelor's degree at Atlantic Christian in 1953. He completed a bachelor of divinity degree at TCU in 1956 and earned his master's and doctorate at Yale University in 1958 and 1960, respectively.

Jones' putter leads San Jose women to golf championship

Anne Jones sank a pressure-packed, 15-foot putt on the last hole of play to lead San Jose State to a one-stroke victory over Furman for its first National Collegiate Women's Golf Championships team title, but she did not fare as well in her bid to win the individual title.

Jones, a sophomore who shot rounds of 72-74-72-71, tied Caroline Keggi of championships host New Mexico at three-under-par 289 for the lead after four rounds of play on the Lobos' par-73, 6,153-yard South University Golf Course.

Keggi, who tied for second at last year's championships, then won the individual title on the first hole of a sudden-death play-off to become New Mexico's first titlist.

In addition to Jones, the Spartans also received well-played tournaments from Dana Lofland and Julie Ralls, who finished in a tie for 17th and 21st, respectively. Lisa Ipkenanz rounded out the Spartans' scoring with a 301 to tie for 33rd place.

Miami (Florida) led the field entering the final round of the May 27-30 championships behind the play of Tracy Kerdyk and Joyce McAvoy, each of whom finished with a one-over-par 293 to tie for sixth. Furman, led by Dottie Pepper-Mochrie's fourth-place finish, was one stroke behind Miami (Florida) at 890, followed by San Jose State at 891 and two-time defending champion Florida at 894.

Miami self-destructed with a final-round 303, while San Jose State rallied with a final-round 296 to win the sixth annual championships team title.

Duke's Evelyn Orley set a championships record for the lowest total over 18 holes with her first-round 68.

Horn's 10th-inning homer lifts Indians to III baseball crown

Leroy Horn's two-run homer in the bottom of the 10th inning gave Montclair State a 13-12 victory over Wisconsin-Oshkosh and the 1987 Division III baseball championship.

Coach Kevin Cooney's Indians, third in the tournament a year ago, went through the field undefeated at the 1987 championship, held for the 12th year at Marietta College May 28-31.

But it was anything but easy for the Mid-Atlantic regional champions, who edged Eastern Connecticut State in the ninth inning in the first round and went to extra innings with UC San Diego to set up the drama of the final game.

Wisconsin-Oshkosh also took a suspenseful route, getting to the final game with a ninth-inning victory over North Carolina Wesleyan.

North Carolina Wesleyan, in turn, had advanced to that game with a steal of home against Eastern Connecticut State. Garry Ornsby's theft came with two outs and an 0-2 count in the bottom of the ninth.

In the deciding game, Montclair State held a 9-6 lead until Wisconsin-Oshkosh scored five times in the seventh. Montclair came back with a run in the bottom half of the inning and tied the game with a single run in the ninth.

After Wisconsin-Oshkosh took the lead once more in the 10th, Montclair State's Mike Wenrich led off with a single and Horn, a sophomore center fielder, ended the game with his timely shot.

Another Indian outfielder, John Deutsch, was named the tournament's most outstanding player. Deutsch hit two homers in the championship game.

Also outstanding for Cooney's team was sophomore reliever Wayne Masters, who came out of the bullpen

Troy State's Trojans win exciting Division II baseball final

Troy State made it exciting for the home fans before wrapping up a second straight Division II baseball title.

Tied with Tampa going into the ninth inning of the final game, the Trojans came up with two runs and then retired the Spartans in order in the bottom of the inning to win, 7-5, and keep the championship in Alabama.

The tournament was held May 22-26 in Montgomery.

Third baseman Steve Eaton's single up the middle with two outs drove in the deciding run.

The Trojans also needed a late rally to edge Wright State, 8-7, the previous day.

Troy State's 1986 championship had been far less dramatic, featuring 9-1 and 5-0 victories in the final two games.

Tampa twice took two-run leads, only to see the Trojans battle back before a partisan crowd. Troy State first baseman Jude Rinaldi smacked a three-run homer in the seventh inning to give his team a one-run lead, but the Spartans tied it in the eighth.

With the score 5-5 in the ninth, substitute catcher Marc Russo singled to center and pinch-runner Richard Pope was sacrificed to second. After a ground ball provided Tampa with the second out and Rinaldi was intentionally walked, Eaton delivered the hit that scored Pope.

"To tell you the truth, after I hit (the single), the first thing that went through my mind was, 'We need more runs,'" Eaton said. "I felt one run wouldn't be enough against a team as good as Tampa."

The Trojans got their insurance run when Rinaldi scored from second on an error, but it wasn't needed. Junior lefthander David Wuthrich struck out one Tampa hitter and got two more to ground out, saving the victory for James Wray.

"It's always special," said Troy State coach Chase Riddle, who saw his defending champions struggle early in the season. "Last year was the first one. This year we had a bunch of new kids, so it's special. We were shaky at times during the season. At times, I didn't think we were going to make it."

Rinaldi, who went 10-for-17 with two home runs and seven RBI, was named the championship's most outstanding player. He was joined on the all-tournament squad by teammates Mark Smartt, Lou Henry and Wray. Also named to the team were Dean Kelley and Jerry Krisiukenas of Tampa; Wayne LaPan, Rick Albers and Dan Bosway of Wright State, and Chip Duncan of Columbus.

Cowboy golf coach looking for new championships 'menu'

Oklahoma State golf coach Mike Holder may put his Cowboys on a diet if they fatten up on seconds again at this year's NCAA Division I Men's Golf Championships.

Holder does not have a portly golfer on his squad, but a regular menu of second-place finishes at four of the last five championships has left him searching for a different recipe.

At last year's event, Oklahoma State started the final round with an eight-stroke lead over the field but could not hold off a final-round, 10-under-par charge by Wake Forest and finished second, four strokes off the pace.

In 1985, the Cowboys placed second to Houston by three strokes. In 1984, Houston edged the Cowboys by one stroke. The Cowboys also placed second to Houston in 1982 before winning the team title in 1983, but Holder and his Cowboys have had their fill of seconds.

Oklahoma State could spice up its diet with its sixth team title if the Cowboys' regular-season play is any indication. Holder's squad had an outstanding year, winning eight tournaments, including the Chris Schenkel Invitational; Oak Tree Shootout; All-America Intercollegiate, and the May 28-30 Oak Tree Invitational, where the Cowboys, led by medalist Brian Watts, finished with a comfortable 14-stroke lead over Miami (Florida) for the team title.

In addition to Watts, who also won individual honors en route to leading the Cowboys to the Morris Williams Intercollegiate team title, Holder's talented lineup includes Tim Fleming (71.6), E. J. Pfister (72.3) and freshman standout Brian Montgomery (74.0).

But the No. 1-ranked Cowboys' biggest gun has been Michael Bradley, who has a team-leading 70.8-stroke average. Bradley started the season by winning the Golf World Palmetto Dunes Collegiate and the Buckeye Fall Classic and followed those victories up this spring with medalist honors at the Oak Tree Shootout and the Big Eight Conference championships.

Defending champion Wake Forest will be hard-pressed to pull off a repeat performance of last year's rally for the championships team title, but the Demon Deacons have an outside shot behind the play of Len Mattiace, who tied for 14th at last year's championships, and veteran Barry Fabyan (74.1).

Second-ranked Arizona, winner of the Pacific-10 Conference team title along with three regular-season tournament titles, also should be among the teams atop the leader board. The Wildcats, who also own seven second-place finishes, have potential medalists in Mike Springer (72.9) and Larry Silveira (73.2).

Other contenders for the June 10-13 championships hosted by Ohio State include Fresno State, Arizona State, Oklahoma, Brigham Young, UCLA, Georgia Tech and Florida State.

All-academic golfers named

Two golfers from Mankato State University, including repeat selection Vance Klingman, and six participants in the NCAA Division II Men's Golf Championships compose the Golf Coaches Association of America NCAA Division II academic all-America team.

Joining Klingman and his Mankato State teammate, Kurt Vegdahl, on the team are Chris Goodspeed of Abilene Christian University; David Hewett of Mercyhurst College; Jeff Leonard of the University of Tampa; Mark McCabe of Florida Atlantic University; Bill Rhodes of the University of Tennessee, Martin, and Matt Sharkey of Wright State University.

To be nominated, a player must have an overall grade-point average of 3.000 or higher (on a 4.000 scale) for his entire collegiate career, be a junior or senior academically and have a stroke average under 78 during the season nominated.

Team members, their institutions, grade-point averages, college major and stroke average are as follows:

Chris Goodspeed, Abilene Christian University, 3.720 in finance, 75.1 stroke average; David Hewett, Mercyhurst College, 3.950 in accounting and computer systems, 76.9; Jeff Leonard, Tampa, 3.660 in business management, 73.2; Mark McCabe, Florida Atlantic, 3.610 in finance, 76.6; Bill Rhodes, Tennessee-Martin, 3.280 in accounting, 76.5; Matt Sharkey, Wright State, 3.280 in physical education, 76.4; Kurt Vegdahl, Mankato State, 3.540 in mathematics, 76.5.

Fenner faces first-degree murder charge

A University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, football star, the Atlantic Coast Conference's leading rusher last season, was charged with first-degree murder June 2 in a shooting authorities said happened during a drug sales "turf war."

Derrick Fenner, a tailback and the league's single-game rushing record-holder, was ordered held without bond after turning himself over to Hyattsville city police.

Fenner, a 20-year-old sophomore with a history of academic troubles at Chapel Hill, was accompanied by a lawyer when he went to the police station and was served with the arrest warrant.

He appeared late in the afternoon before a Prince George's County District Court commissioner, who ordered him held without bond at the county detention center.

Fenner was allegedly among four youths wanted in a shooting that occurred May 23 in the courtyard of an apartment complex known as a drug-trafficking area, said Hyattsville Police Sgt. David Weir.

According to eyewitnesses, four youths walked into the courtyard brandishing weapons, announced they were taking over the drug trade there and opened fire.

Shots hit Marcellus Leach, 19, in the head and neck. He died the next day.

School officials said that Fenner was in Chapel Hill attending summer classes.

North Carolina head football Dick Crum said at a press conference that Hyattsville police called looking for Fenner, but Crum said he was not aware Fenner was wanted on a murder charge when he told Fenner that Maryland police had called for him.

Fenner was declared academically ineligible for the spring semester and had returned to UNC to attend summer school in hopes of regaining his eligibility.

Crum described the 220-pound tailback as a "bright student" who would never have lost his athletics eligibility if he had applied himself. He said Fenner was a "pretty intelligent youngster who had the ability to do about what he wanted to do."

Crum said Fenner's problems while he was enrolled at UNC were strictly academic and not behavioral.

"It's a tragedy for him and the other individuals involved in some way in this particular incident," said John D. Swofford, athletics director at North Carolina. "Certainly, we want to have some compassion for the young man. The important thing is that the truth come out about this particular matter."

"His football career anywhere becomes totally secondary," Swofford said.

since 1982, he previously was director of athletics at the University of Virginia for nine years and at Washington and Lee University for two years. He also has coached basketball, lacrosse and soccer at both Washington and Lee and Virginia, and he served for two years as assistant commissioner of the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Corrigan earned his bachelor's degree at Duke University.

Keller

Keller joined the University of Minnesota faculty in 1964 as an assistant professor of chemical engineering and became the university's president in March 1985. During that period, he served as head of the department of chemical engineering and materials science from 1978 to 1980 and as vice-president for academic affairs from 1980 until 1984, when he was named interim president.

He earned two bachelor's degrees at Columbia University, one in liberal arts and the other in chemical engineering, and then completed a master's degree and a Ph.D. in chemical engineering at Johns Hopkins University after serving as an officer in the U.S. Navy.

Lopiano

Director of women's athletics at the University of Texas, Austin, since 1975, Lopiano is a former president of the Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women. She currently serves on the Special NCAA Committee on Deregulation and Rules Simplification.

She earned her bachelor's degree at Southern Connecticut State University, where she participated in basketball, field hockey, softball and volleyball. An all-America softball player at age 16, she played that sport professionally and in 1984 was inducted into the Amateur Softball Association Hall of Fame.

She was assistant director of athletics at Brooklyn College from 1971 to 1975. She holds master's and doctoral degrees from the University of Southern California.

Schembechler

Schembechler is the dean of Big Ten Conference football coaches, having served as head coach at Michigan since 1969. One of the most successful football coaches in history, his Michigan teams have won better than 85 percent of the Big Ten games they have played and better than 75 percent of all games.

Fourteen of his Michigan teams have played in bowl games, and he never has had a losing season in 23 years of college coaching, including six years as head coach at Miami University (Ohio). His all-time coaching record is 207-56-7. He is a former president of the American Football Coaches Association.

Schembechler is a 1951 graduate of Miami of Ohio.

Williams

Williams, assistant professor of history and faculty chairman of athletics at the University of Virginia, has been the institution's faculty athletics representative since 1969. He has been a member of the NCAA Committee on Infractions since 1983 and will become chair of that committee September 1. He also served six years on the NCAA Long Range Planning Committee and chaired that group in 1983 and 1984.

Williams has been on the faculty at Virginia since 1957. He received his undergraduate degree from Westminster College (Pennsylvania) in 1952 and a master's degree from Northwestern University in 1954. He completed work on his doctorate at Northwestern in 1959.

Stanford's Fendick beats the pressure

By Joan Ryan
San Francisco Examiner

Twenty, 30 years from now, remember this story. Your grandchildren will be impressed. You can tell them about a young woman no taller than a sunflower who wore a baseball cap over her pony tail and who kicked the rear end of every college tennis player from San Francisco to Gainesville, Florida.

You can tell them Patty Fendick came from up around Sacramento way to play at Stanford in the year 1982 or thereabouts. She stayed on for four years and led her team to three national championships.

This young woman, you can tell the grandkids, was something to see. When she was a junior in college, she helped the school win the team title, then regrouped to win the NCAA singles championship a few days later.

Patty Fendick

This year, as a senior, she won every singles match she played—40 straight victories. Late in May, she again led Stanford to a national championship. And then, on the courts of UCLA, she capped the Fendick Era at Stanford by winning her second consecutive NCAA singles title.

No woman in the history of the NCAA had ever won back-to-back tennis titles. In fact, no woman had ever won two titles.

Granted, the NCAA records only go back to 1982, when the NCAA began holding championships for women. But even going back into the AJAW records, which began in the early 1970s, only one other woman has won consecutive national titles—Barbara Holquist of Southern Cal in 1976 and 1977.

The streak is another story. No asterisks there. Dig up any book you can find, and it won't show another woman going undefeated from the first match of the season through the championships.

Last year, USC's Caroline Kuhlman was undefeated through the regular season but lost in the championships. In 1982, Vicki Nelson of Rollins College did the same thing.

Adding in victories from the end of the 1986 season, Fendick's streak is 57 consecutive matches—a DiMaggio-sounding record that won't be broken any time soon.

"The burden of the streak got heavier and heavier as the season went on," said Stanford coach Frank Brennan. "But she's a real tough kid. You could see it in her eyes toward the end that she saw the finish line, that she was going to win one more to keep the streak alive."

Fendick said she didn't feel the pressure until the last four or five matches of the season, when reporters continually asked her about it. At the championship match—with the streak, the title and history on the line—the build-up came to a head.

"I can never imagine feeling that kind of pressure again," Fendick said. "Everything I did this year was to win the NCAAs. I wanted that second title so badly it was almost like I was obsessed."

Fendick had something to prove. Though undefeated, she was ranked 12th or 13th most of the season by the Intercollegiate Tennis Coaches Association because she didn't play in their sanctioned tournaments. Going into the championships, she was ranked No. 3.

Add to this brew of emotion the fact that the championship match was against Florida freshman Shaun Stafford. Stafford was victim No. 50 in Fendick's streak, and it is a match Fendick remembers very well. Stafford left her a colorful memento: an ugly, greenish-purple bruise the exact size of a tennis ball, displayed prominently on Fendick's left thigh.

Stafford is the No. 1 player for Florida, and Fendick the No. 1 for Stanford. They were pitted against each other during the semifinals of team competition.

During the match, Fendick dove for a ball near the net and managed to pop over a weak return. Stafford was at the net waiting to smash an easy overhead. Seeing she had no chance for a return, Fendick moved to one side and dropped her racket, allowing Stafford the whole court in which to place her smash. Instead, Stafford drilled it right back at Fendick then walked away without an apology.

"I was ready to kill her. I had a ball in my hand, and it took everything I had not to go over and hit it at her," said Fendick, who won the match, 6-

Patty Fendick—putting on a happy face

3, 6-3. "You can't believe this bruise. She's five feet away and hits a ball at me at 75 to 80 miles per hour."

When reporters asked Stafford about later, she explained she is "mean" on the court and definitely meant to hit Fendick.

"I couldn't believe she said that. It really fired me up," Fendick said. "After that, I was hoping I'd play her again."

She would a week later. Before Fendick walked on the court for the match, she drew a happy face on her bruise—discarding her original plan to draw a target.

"I try not to hold grudges," Fendick said. "She's young. I drew a happy face to send a message that she looked pretty silly doing and saying what she did."

Late in the match, Fendick had the opportunity for revenge. She had a short overhead, like the one Stafford drilled at her. Stafford was off-balance and helpless on the other side of the net, and Fendick smashed the ball in her direction but made sure she didn't hit her. Stafford, fully expecting a direct hit, hit the deck.

Fendick went on to beat Stafford, 6-2, 5-7, 6-2.

"When the match ended, Patty was jumping up and down; but after a few seconds, she had her hands on her knees and was really wobbly," Brennan said. "She had nothing left. When I got to the court, she threw her arms around me and cried. She just sobbed and sobbed. She was like a dishrag when it was all over."

Fendick last week still was in Southern California allowing herself a day to float back to earth. When she returned from the championships, she moved to a flat on Haight Street in San Francisco, which she's sharing with a Stanford pal. And there's the matter of two research papers and two finals that must be completed before her June 14 graduation.

Then it's off to Wimbledon and the first day of her career as a professional. She currently is ranked in the 70s on the women's tour. Fendick officially turned pro May 25 when she signed a contract with Advantage International management group.

"I haven't even thought about playing on the pro tour," she said. "All my energy has gone into winning the NCAAs."

Gautt

the Big Eight.

Nevertheless, he never felt like a token Black on Devine's staff. He went to Missouri in 1968, a time in which black athletes at major white institutions were drawing up lists of grievances and demanding changes. Gautt, the black coach, was never asked to intercede with black players to put out the fires of discontent.

"Dan Devine's staff made a concerted effort to listen to the players," Gautt says, "and Devine responded very positively. He took care of it."

Although he remained on the athletics staff for six years, four coaching and two counseling while completing his Ph.D., Gautt decided early that coaching was not for him.

Gautt chose counseling psychology, earning two degrees at Missouri. In 1975, he was appointed an assistant professor in the department of education, serving as coordinator, trainer and supervisor for a variety of counseling programs, primarily involving minorities and athletes.

"I saw myself in a lot of them," he admits. "I knew the importance of having somebody to talk to, somebody to say, 'Yeah, I care.'"

In 1979, Gautt was offered the assistant commissioner's job for the Big Eight Conference in Kansas City. He decided to go for a year to get the experience he needed in athletics administration but left the door open for a return to his Missouri job.

Now associate commissioner of the conference, Gautt's responsibilities lie currently in the areas of education, eligibility and enforcement. Gautt acknowledges that intercollegiate athletics has been tarnished by public disclosures of lax academic standards and widespread recruiting violations, and he welcomes recent NCAA moves to regain control of the "runaway train."

Gautt has taken a special interest in NCAA Bylaw 5-1-(j), which regulates the athletics eligibility requirements for students entering an NCAA institution and sets subsequent standards for satisfactory progress toward a degree.

Gautt is emphatic in his support of the core-curriculum requirements but admits that there are some legitimate concerns about standardized tests.

"I'm not sure that the standardized test is going to say that you're going to graduate from college, but I will say this: The core curriculum is highly correlated with one's ability to score higher on those tests. You have to have that rich academic background," Gautt says.

The message is loud and clear, Gautt emphasizes. "The student-athlete is going to have to take the responsibility for the illegal things they get involved with. And we're saying, 'Coach, you're going to stand responsible. We want to find out how you are spending your recruiting budget. We want an audit of all monies advanced through the athletics department.' The NCAA has put some tough penalties out there. We think that if they have knowledge of the rules, they won't violate them."

When Gautt talks about eligibility, recruiting, enforcement and penalties, his concern for the welfare of the student-athlete is obvious. He can only shake his head at the effect of high-pressure recruiting on an 18-year-old's equilibrium.

How can the high school superstar keep his head on straight? "Some of them don't," he says simply. "And then they get to the institution and find kids there who are just as good as they are, if not better. Then there has to be somebody around to help pick up the pieces. Otherwise the kid may finally decide, 'I'm not as good as I thought I was,' and somehow just give up, and that's really sad."

Gautt leaves the impression that he might be thinking of what might have been 30 years ago if a black kid from Oklahoma City had succumbed to his own feelings of inadequacy.

Not surprisingly, Gautt periodically is asked to return to the University of Oklahoma in the role of alumnus, to share his insight and experiences with young people to whom the '50s are days out of time. Most recently, he spoke at OU's Black Students Awards Banquet.

"I hope I can still relate," he says. "I talk about challenge—not just accepting challenge but your motivation in accepting it, how you accept it and what you do with it. Regardless of how far we've come, we still have a long way to go in terms of people relating to people."

"We're not talking about just Black to white and white to Black; we're talking about people relating, families, husbands and wives, kids and other kids. Underlying that is a message of love—what it really means to care for somebody."

"Of course I give them some of the historical perspective from my life coming to the University of Oklahoma," he continues, "some of the things I experienced, some of the past."

"I hope that we can take the past and use it as just that—the past. There is nothing we can do about it except to say, 'Hey, that's heritage.' We need to think about the future and enjoy today, because you can only make the best of this day—just do your best."

This spring, Gautt was one of five recipients of the distinguished service citation, the University of Oklahoma's highest honor.

Can pitcher prove his mettle in game that uses aluminum bats?

Finding pitching prospects the like of hard throwers Roger Clemens or Dwight Gooden isn't as easy as it once was, according to a veteran major-league coach and scout.

"The biggest impact on scouting pitchers has been the aluminum bat," St. Louis Cardinals scout Rob Kittle told the Associated Press.

Pitching scouts and coaches say the aluminum bats have taken away a fast-ball pitcher's ability to handcuff a batter with a hard, inside pitch. Now, more pitchers try to finesse their way past a batter.

"About 90 percent of (college) coaches now call the pitches from the dugout," said Kittle, who has been in baseball for 45 years as a player and manager in the minors and pitching coach for the Houston Astros and for the Cardinals when they won the 1982 World Series.

"They call more breaking balls than ever in history," Kittle said. "Coaches won't call fast balls. That's why we don't see the old mustard any more."

While the fast ball may be less emphasized in college and even junior league play, Kittle and several coaches say other factors are important in finding a pitching prospect.

"The keys are location and movement," Kittle said. "We, as scouts, look for velocity, size, mechanics, arm action and movement (of the ball). A boy might throw 90 miles per hour, but his ball is straight. We'll teach him movement."

Washington State coach Chuck "Bobo" Brayton said the first thing to look for in a pitcher is a good arm, but the list only begins there.

"Control also is important," he said. "You want someone who is in command—command of the game and command of his pitches. He needs good makeup. By that I mean makeup in three places... head... heart... stomach."

"Control of himself is real important," Brayton said. "You take a boy at the high school level and he might get upset if someone makes an error or blow up at an umpire's call."

"He's out stomping around. Well, you don't want him on the mound. If he has talent, make him an outfielder or something."

Former Southern Cal coach Rod Dedeaux, who won 10 NCAA championships, agreed with Brayton about a pitcher's head and heart.

He said pitching prospects for him also needed "great stuff, ability to change speeds and ability to make a pitcher's pitch."

Kittle said the trend of more pitchers today banking on breaking pitches instead of fast balls begins in Little League.

"These kids play Little League in big parks. They throw soft stuff. The hardest throwers today are from Latin America. When they are small, they are throwing hard in the sugar-cane fields."

"With the big parks we have today and the defenses, you gotta throw strikes," Kittle said. "You've got to get the ball over in the right spot."

Bill proposes a prison term for paying student-athletes

Paying a student-athlete to attend a university would be punishable by up to five years in prison under a bill approved by a Louisiana House committee.

Rep. Raymond Jetson, D-Baton Rouge, said the criminal penalty is needed in light of recent football recruiting scandals at Southern Methodist University and allegations that led to the suspension of Tulane University's basketball program.

Such scandals are ruining "the reputation of young kids and the universities," Jetson told the House Committee on Administration of Criminal Justice, which approved the bill without objection.

Jetson cited the case of John "Hot Rod" Williams, who said he was given a $10,000 cash bonus to attend Tulane University. Williams was later acquitted of a sports-bribery charge stemming from a point-shaving scandal at Tulane, which dropped its men's basketball program.

There are prison sentences for both the briber and the person accepting a bribe in gambling cases.

In recruiting cases, only the athlete and the school are penalized. The NCAA has no jurisdiction over alumni or other outsiders paying an athlete to attend or play at a school, but can declare an athlete ineligible or suspend a school's program.

Such recruiting practices are "turning universities into quasiprofessional sports academies," Jetson said.

Jetson's bill also calls for a fine of up to $10,000 for those who pay athletes to attend a college.

Bowl reports earliest sellout

Sunkist Fiesta Bowl officials June 1 announced their earliest sellout ever for the postseason collegiate football game.

Bruce Skinner, bowl executive director, said all publicly available tickets for the 17th edition of the bowl have been sold out.

Skinner said 21,600 tickets are reserved for participating teams and the sellout involves the remaining 48,940 seats in 70,540-seat Sun Devil Stadium on the campus of Arizona State University in Tempe.

This year's sellout date compares with October 30 of last year, when all tickets for this year's game between Miami (Florida) and Penn State were sold.

Before then, the bowl's earliest sellout was November 23, 1985, for the 1986 game between Michigan and Nebraska.

"The last two years, we have been very fortunate to have games with a great amount of interest, both locally and nationally," Skinner said. "I think people are starting to understand that we mostly likely will have a first-class match-up year in and year out because of our increased pay-out, which puts us at parity with the Cotton, Orange and Sugar Bowls."

Skinner said the bowl will pay a minimum of $2 million each to teams playing in the 1988 game. He said the Cotton, Orange and Sugar Bowls are in the same range, the Associated Press reported.

"Schools have always said they would like to come here to play, but money always was the bottom line," Skinner said. "Now that we can pay as much as the other bowls, we feel very confident about getting two of the nation's top-ranked teams every year."

Sports information assistant—NORM REILLY promoted from assistant to associate SID at Georgia, where he has been on the staff since 1982.

CONFERENCES

EDWIN MUTO, athletics director at Buffalo, will serve as president of the State University of New York Athletic Conference during the 1987-88 year. Elected to other conference posts were DOLORES BOGARD, assistant athletics director at Cortland State, president-elect; STEVE ERBER, assistant athletics director at Binghamton, chair of the men's division, and CAROL BLAZINA, women's athletics director at Oneonta State, chair of the women's division. RON BERTOVICH received a two-year contract extension as commissioner of the Atlantic 10 Conference. He recently completed his first year in the post. LINDA BRUNO promoted to assistant commissioner of the Big East Conference, where she will administer 15 of 16 league championships. She has been the conference's director of championships since 1983. Bruno previously has served on the staffs at Iona and Yale.

DEATHS

JERRY ADAIR, a multisport athlete at Oklahoma State who went on to be a star second baseman with the Baltimore Orioles, Kansas City's A's and Boston Red Sox during the 1960s, died May 31 in Tulsa, Oklahoma, following a bout with liver cancer. He was 50. Mississippi State football players WILLIE MONROE and HAL O. WILLIAMS, both 19, were killed May 30 when their car collided head-on with another car near West Point, Mississippi. ROBERT F. GIEGENGACK, who coached track at Yale from 1946 to 1975 and the U.S. Olympic team at Tokyo in 1964, died May 25 in New Haven, Connecticut. He was 80. He was regarded as a master at coaching middle-distance runners and developed most of Yale's 27 track and field Olympians, including marathoner Frank Shorter. Prior to serving as a Navy officer during World War II, Giegengack coached track for three years at Fordham. He competed in track as a student at Holy Cross. CARL J. ROESCH, who coached cross country and track at Canisius from 1948 to 1973, died May 4 in Buffalo, New York, at age 76. He founded the Canisius College Invitational Cross Country Meet, now known as the Carl Roesch Invitational, which is believed to be one of the oldest continuous in-season meets in the country. Roesch also was an assistant manager for the U.S. Olympic track team and an official at New York City's Millrose Games. NORMAN RYERSON, retired men's golf and wrestling coach at Central (Iowa), died April 29 in Pella, Iowa, after a lengthy illness. Ryerson coached golf at the school from 1974 until his retirement in 1986 and led his teams to five top-10 finishes in the Division III Men's Golf Championships, earning national coach-of-the-year honors in 1986. He also posted a 49-36-5 dual-meet mark as wrestling coach from 1972 to 1978.

CORRECTION

Due to an editor's error, a story that appeared in the May 27 issue of The NCAA News included an incomplete roster of current members of the Michigan Intercollegiate Athletic Association. Calvin College, a private, liberal arts institution in Grand Rapids, Michigan, has been a member of the MIAA since 1953.

The May 20 issue of The NCAA News implied that Joe Paterno, head football coach at Pennsylvania State University, was the only coach to win four Kodak Coach of the Year plaques. Paterno is the only Division I-A coach ever to win four, but Division III also has a four-time winner: Bob Reade of Augustana College (Illinois). He was honored in consecutive years from 1983 through 1986.

Softball all-Americans are selected

NCAA softball champions claimed a number of spots on the division all-America teams selected by the National Softball Coaches Association.

Division I

Shawn Andaya, Texas A&M's pitching ace who led her team to the 1987 Division I women's softball title, was one of three Lady Aggies named to the Division I all-America team.

Andaya, who finished regular-season play with a 31-5 record, went 5-1 in tournament play without allowing any earned runs in 48 innings. The senior had a perfect outing in game 14 against UCLA, the first in three years and only the third in the tournament's history.

Joining Andaya on the all-America team are Julie Smith and junior Liz Mizera. Smith, in her first year as a Lady Aggie, went three for four in the last game and tied a Division I record with nine hits in the series. Mizera was responsible for nine putouts and 20 assists at shortstop.

Runner-up UCLA and third-place Cal State Fullerton were the only other teams to place more than one player on the squad. Titan outfielder Chenita Rogers also was named to the all-America team in 1986.

Division II

Cal State Northridge outfielder Barbara Jordan was named to the Division II all-America team for the third consecutive year. The senior had six hits in 10 at-bats and accounted for three stolen bases.

Joining Jordan on the squad are teammates Debbie Dickman, Lori Shelly and Priscilla Rouse.

Dori Stankewitz, Chris Palmer and Beth Greig were selected from runner-up Florida Southern. Other selections include Sacred Heart pitcher Debbie Tidy and Bloomsburg first baseman Jean Millen, both of whom made the team for the second time.

Division III

NCAA champion Trenton State placed third baseman Tracy Warren, utility infielder Diane Klueg and pitcher Donna O'Connell on the all-America list. Warren and Klueg also were named to last year's team.

Other players named for the second consecutive year are Marge Theobald, catcher for Montclair State; Gia Celularo, Allegheny second baseman, and Melissa Vogel, Allegheny outfielder.

Following are the full division all-America teams.

be taken seriously."

That is another way of saying — "we're not sure what would happen if we wiped out football, and we're afraid to find out."

The report continued:

"There is concern that a move to Division III sports would undermine or adversely affect the university's appeal to prospective students, or certainly a major segment of such students. Intuitions suggest that the opportunity for association with a major intercollegiate sports program, even as a casual spectator, is an important ingredient in this institution's ability to attract students.

"Stated in another way, there is concern that a large segment of current and prospective SMU students are attracted not only by the institution's academic standing, but also by the balanced array of student life opportunities it offers, including, prominently, football and other major-college sports. A shift to Division III, it is felt, might well affect this segment and alter the university's enrollment and overall institutional health.

"A related concern focuses on alumni, who chose to attend SMU and who continue to relate to the identity of the university as they know and understand it. To alter that identity, some argue, will tend to alienate many who are rightful stakeholders in the future of the institution. Such a development, by way of alumni giving or in other dimensions, may adversely affect the health of the university and all its undertakings."

Damage already has been done at SMU. Although there is no way to know how much has to do with the scandal and how much has to do with the economy, contributions are down and layoffs have been made.

SMU already has tested the theory that a school used to big-time football cannot afford to survive without it. These tests, however, have taken only the form of pop quizzes. SMU officials have demonstrated they are not ready to risk a final exam.

Players who take payments could face fraud charges

A Federal prosecutor in Chicago reportedly is considering whether athletes who violate NCAA rules are subject to criminal charges of fraud against their schools.

The New York Times reported June 3 that sources said Anton R. Valukas, the U.S. Attorney in Chicago, believes that by falsely representing themselves as amateurs when they had accepted payments from an agent, athletes had perpetrated a "fraud on the schools."

Valukas would not comment on the case, but the sources said, "The athletes may in fact get prosecuted."

The Times said that a grand jury is conducting a nationwide investigation that could involve college and professional football and basketball players and some agents. The investigation centers on Norby Walters and Lloyd Bloom, partners in World Sports & Entertainment, a talent agency.

Walters has said he loaned some athletes money before their college eligibility expired and that it was a routine practice among agents.

Potential grand jury witnesses interviewed by the FBI also have been asked about threats of violence said to be made by some agents, the newspaper reported.

Since colleges routinely require their athletes to sign statements each year that they have not reached any agreements with agents and have not accepted any improper payments, any violations of those statements could be considered fraud, the Associated Press reported.

Using the mails to send the payments or false documents could constitute mail fraud, the source told the newspaper. Failure to report the payments as income could lead to tax charges.

The newspaper reported that about 40 athletes from 20 schools have been or will be subpoenaed to appear before the grand jury.

Scholarship fund named for coach

A memorial scholarship fund has been established for the women's basketball program at Iowa Wesleyan University in the name of the late Rita Horky.

Horky, 50, was a graduate of Iowa Wesleyan and played on two U.S. national teams. She coached at Wayne State University (Michigan) and Northern Illinois University. She is a member of the AAU Hall of Fame and was an original member of the Helms Hall of Fame for women's basketball. She served on the U.S. Women's Olympic Basketball Committee. She died April 7.

Contributions can be sent to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Horky, 304 Giles Street, Blissfield, Michigan 49228.

CFA seeks system to prevent athletics abuses by members

By Herschel Nissenson

With a warning from its newly formed committee of chief executive officers that the future of big-time college athletics could be at stake, the College Football Association has agreed to appoint a committee to study a national monitoring system to prevent possible abuses.

"Although we are in the entertainment business, our fundamental purpose is to be on the side of integrity, and there is no question where the colleges and the presidents will stand on that issue," Thomas K. Hearn, president of Wake Forest University, told a record gathering of 215 delegates as the CFA ended its 11th annual meeting May 31 in Dallas.

Martin Massengale, chancellor of the University of Nebraska, Lincoln, and the CFA's board chair, said a study committee would be appointed in the next few weeks, and it is hoped it will have its report ready for the CFA's 1988 meeting.

The monitoring system was proposed by the Rev. Edmund P. Joyce, executive vice-president of the University of Notre Dame.

Father Joyce said such a system would be preventive rather than punitive. He said a monitor could be appointed for each of the CFA's 66 campuses—63 active and three associate members—or perhaps one agent for four or five schools. Monitors would have total access to every aspect of a school's football program and would make written reports to the president.

Vincent J. Dooley, head football coach and athletics director at the University of Georgia, said last year's hiring of Boyd M. McWhorter, former commissioner of the Southeastern Conference, as a special consultant to the president on athletics and academic matters, has proved beneficial.

Hearn said there is a feeling "that abuses are widespread, therefore the system is corrupt, therefore occasional (NCAA) penalties are unfair because the violators are only doing what everyone else is doing."

He cited another view that "abuses are not the norm and college football is essentially sound, that it's a public relations problem, that the media blow things out of proportion."

"If the system is corrupt," he said, "there eventually will be a law to eliminate the system. If there are only occasional abuses, the system is in such peril that any further evidence of institutional violations will put the whole system in ultimate jeopardy."

In other action, the CFA:

- Approved the appointment of a committee to study the possibility of a football championship and to develop from one to three formats.

- Approved the drafting of legislation for the NCAA's regular Convention next January that would allow student-athletes to receive the maximum Pell Grant award from the Federal government. Such awards are based on need and the maximum is $2,100, but the NCAA limits athletes to $900 in addition to a full athletics grant.

Pennsylvania State University head football coach Joseph V. Paterno called the NCAA limit "immoral," while Nebraska's Tom Osborne said, "the NCAA as a whole has really totally forgotten the players, and they're the reasons we're here."

- Approved the drafting of legislation to restore the full month of May as an evaluation period for high school prospects. Beginning next year, the first 10 days of the month will be eliminated from the permissible evaluation time.

Paterno said the continued reduction of the evaluation period has led to video scouting services that charge a prospect $200 and a college $4,000.

- Approved the drafting of legislation that would limit a head coach to one off-campus visit to a prospect.

- Approved the drafting of legislation that would allow financial aid for

Thomas K. Hearn

- Approved the appointment of a study committee to evaluate the involvement of college basketball coaches within the CFA.

- The football coaches' committee appointed a committee of Paterno,

Osborne and Texas A&M's Jackie Sherrill to meet with representatives of the National Football League to try to develop an evaluation system that would not take college players away from their campuses as often as they do.

The CFA members also discussed legislation that will be voted on at the June 29-30 special NCAA Convention.

They voiced opposition to cutting the total number of football grants-in-aid from 95 to 90 and supported retaining the current complement of one head coach and nine full-time assistants.

But there was some sharp disagreement over a report from the athletics directors' committee that favored eliminating the volunteer coach and reducing the number of graduate assistants from five to four.

"Our concern is what is a volunteer coach," said Notre Dame athletics director Eugene F. Corrigan. "Is it a guy who runs the summer camp for the head coach? Is he paid by the university? I just want it to be consistent rather than something that has us challenging each other. We need to tighten the rules."

Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz was upset with the University of Pittsburgh's bringing in John Jenkins from the defunct Houston Gamblers of the USFL to help install a run-and-shoot offense last season.

Dooley said the coaches oppose any staff reduction but said they might accept a total of five coaches other than full-timers, one of whom could be a volunteer coach.

The athletics directors and faculty representatives supported the June legislation that would reduce spring practice to 20 sessions in a 30-day period, with a maximum of 15 sessions in pads. The coaches agreed they could live with five no-contact sessions but favored the current 20 practices in a 36-day period.
