Members urged to plan June Forum attendance

All NCAA members—and especially chief executive officers—are being urged to attend the next national meeting in the NCAA Presidents Commission National Forum.

"We are asking NCAA institutions and conferences to make plans now to attend the Forum in June," John B. Slaughter, chair of the Commission, said. "For the Forum to succeed and for the Commission to remain effective, it is imperative that we have appropriate participation at this meeting."

The third meeting in the National Forum series will be Monday and Tuesday, June 20-21, at the Hyatt Orlando, Orlando, Florida. It tentatively is scheduled to begin at 1 p.m. June 20 and to adjourn by 1 p.m. June 21. The meeting schedule, hotel information and delegate-appointment forms will be sent from the NCAA national office early this spring.

"Because the June session will not be a legislative, or voting, meeting, we realize that we will not have the attendance of an annual NCAA Convention," Slaughter said. "But the fact that the Commission will base its eventual recommendations on what it gleans from the discussions in June should be important enough to attract several hundred delegates."

"The major topics in June are such that we believe most NCAA members will want to be represented at the meeting, especially those in Division I," he continued. "What we assume will happen is that those who normally send three or four or more delegates to a voting Convention will send one or two to our June Forum."

Participation

The Commission also will seek ways of encouraging greater participation in the discussions at the meeting, according to Florida State University President Bernard F. Sliger, chair of the Commission's Ad Hoc Committee on the National

Roll-call votes

Complete listings of the 19 roll-call votes taken during the 1988 NCAA Convention in Nashville will appear in the February 3 issue of The NCAA News.

Delegates hear an impromptu debate on revenue-sharing

Remarks from Edward B. Fort, North Carolina A&T State University chancellor, and John R. Thompson, Georgetown University head men's basketball coach, attracted most of the media attention focused on the afternoon portion of the January 11 NCAA Presidents Commission National Forum, but three other respondents who shared the podium with Fort and Thompson at Nashville's Opryland Hotel also offered thought-provoking points.

Although obviously not planned, Fort's and Thompson's speeches provided a kind of impromptu point-counterpoint. Each dealt with the concept of revenue-sharing within the NCAA's membership structure.

Other respondents were Donald B. Canham, director of athletics at the University of Michigan; Judith R. Holland, senior associate athletics director at the University of California, Los Angeles, and James J. Whalen, president of Ithaca College and Division III chair of the Presidents Commission for 1986-1987.

These respondents followed morn-

Division III members divided over need for reorganization

A survey of Division III institutions conducted late last year confirms the strong opposition to awarding financial aid on the basis of athletic ability that the division demonstrated in voting during the 1988 Convention.

The survey also reveals a sharp disagreement in the membership over whether Division III's current structure and organization should be retained or changed.

Opinions about division philosophy and initial-eligibility standards also were solicited in the survey, which was conducted on behalf of the Division III Steering Committee and the Division III subcommittee of the Presidents Commission.

The survey was sent to chief executive officers at 323 Division III institutions and was answered by 190 institutions, for a response rate of 59 percent. Results will be reviewed by the Division III Steering Committee, which may utilize the data in preparing future proposals for consideration by the division's membership.

Financial aid

One survey question already ad-

ressed by the membership at the 1988 Convention pertained to whether student-athletes should be awarded financial aid on the basis of athletic ability.

In the survey, 73.1 percent of the respondents disagreed or strongly disagreed that athletic ability should be considered in awarding financial aid; most of the respondents said they strongly disagreed (58.9 percent).

Although 55.3 percent of the respondents strongly agreed (and another 10.5 percent agreed) that financial aid should be granted to student-athletes on a need-only basis, 53.2 percent strongly agreed (and 18.9 percent agreed) that qualified student-athletes should be eligible to receive institutional merit or leadership awards that are not need-based, so long as they qualify under the same guidelines as all other students.

At the 1988 Convention in Nashville, Division III members reaffirmed by a 172-61 vote on Proposal No. 93 their intent to award financial aid only on the basis of need. The percentage of votes in favor of need-based financial aid (73.8 percent) mirrored opposition in the survey to granting financial aid on the basis of athletic ability.

Divided on structure

While survey respondents' views on financial aid were clear, their views on Division III's structure and organization were sharply divided.

When asked whether the present structure of Division III is appropriate and should remain unchanged, 21.6 percent of the respondents answered that they strongly agree, 23.3 percent said they agree, 26.8 percent said they disagree and 22.6 percent said they strongly disagree.

Similar disagreement was recorded on questions that asked whether an additional division should be considered to make division membership more homogeneous and whether sufficient diversity in academic standards now exists to warrant forming a special conference similar to Division I's Ivy League.

On forming an additional divi-

Drug testing faces U.S. court test

The constitutionality of the NCAA drug-testing program is being challenged in Federal district court in Seattle.

Elizabeth O'Halloran, University of Washington cross country and track athlete, has named the Association a codefendant with the University of Washington, which was the defendant in a suit filed in state court last year by O'Halloran, who was ruled ineligible by her school when she refused to participate in its drug-testing program.

Last July, King County Superior Court Judge George Mattson ruled the school's drug-testing program, which requires consent of athletes in order to participate, violated both the state and U.S. constitutions because it invaded privacy. Mattson also said the NCAA should be brought into the case.

Later, the NCAA obtained an order from Federal Judge Walter McGovern to have the case moved to Federal district court.

McGovern denied a request by O'Halloran's lawyers to incorporate Judge Mattson's ruling at the Federal level. He also dismissed an action by the university that sought to have the NCAA program declared unconstitutional should the university's drug-testing program be found in violation of the constitution.

McGovern said the NCAA should be a codefendant "because the integrity of its nationwide drug-testing program involving member institutions is at stake."

O'Halloran also is seeking a temporary injunction that would allow her to compete while the litigation continues. A ruling is not expected until next month.

Stanford case

A trial date of February 8 has been set in Santa Clara, California, County Court in which the NCAA will attempt to show the need to test for all drugs in sports programs at Stanford University.

Judge Conrad L. Rushing issued a preliminary injunction in Noveming presentations by five primary speakers who dealt with various aspects of intercollegiate athletics relating to economic issues. Primary speakers were Robert H. Atwell, president of the American Council on Education; Christopher C. Fordham III, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, chancellor; Thomas J. Frericks, vice-president for athletics programs and facilities at the University of Dayton and NCAA secretary-treasurer; Neal H.

Pilson, president of CBS Sports, and Mitchell H. Raiborn, Bradley University professor of accounting.

going to be that which is involved in a sharing of the wealth across a broader spectrum," Fort noted, "then that wealth-sharing process must not only involve 'sharing at the top' (of NCAA play-off brackets), but ultimately it must also involve full-scale participation by those two multibillion-dollar giants mentioned earlier—the NFL and the NBA—and a willingness on the part of bowl sponsors to open up the sharing of the gold."

Capitalism fading?

"After listening to all this talk about revenue-sharing," Thompson began, "I have to ask one simple question: Am I the only capitalist in this room?"

"I don't think (revenue-sharing) works," he added, later citing a belief that all the money a successful Georgetown basketball program generates in a given season, regardless of source, should be returned directly to the university. "And," Thompson noted, "I believe there are many people in this room who feel the same way I do."

"I understand the aim of fairness and sharing the wealth, but not everything we do in this country is fair and equitable," he said. "It's the system we've been brought up in."

Revenue-sharing was not the only concept Thompson took issue with during his time at the microphone. He noted what he believed to be a failure of many to ask for individual accountability from student-athletes.

"If a player fails to graduate from Georgetown University, don't blame me," Thompson said matter-of-factly. "It's not my fault, it's his fault..."

sion, 23.2 percent of the respondents said they strongly agree, 24.7 percent said they agree, 20.5 percent said they disagree and 23.2 percent said they strongly disagree. Similarly, 18.9 percent said they strongly agree that establishment of a special conference similar to the Ivy League should be considered, while 25.8 percent said they agree, 23.2 percent said they disagree and 23.2 percent said they strongly disagree.

Philosophy

Elsewhere in the survey, respondents were given a series of statements pertaining to Division III philosophy that were based on the division's 1983 statement of philosophy and asked (1) whether they agreed or disagreed that the statement represented the "real and present world of Division III athletics" and (2) whether they agreed or disagreed with the statement "as an appropriate guide for future planning and implementation of Division III athletics programs."

In most cases, approximately 75 percent or more of the respondents agreed or strongly agreed that the statements represented the "present world," except when asked if participants in athletics receive "no unique privileges in admissions" (62.7 percent agreed or strongly agreed) or "no unique privileges in financial aid" (60 percent agreed or strongly agreed). Also, only 61.6 percent agreed or strongly agreed that "sports for men and women are given equal emphasis" and 52.1 percent agreed or strongly agreed that "the desired quality of competition is similar in all sports."

Other statements drew the following responses of agreement and strong agreement when respondents were asked if they represented reality:

- That "participation is encouraged by maximizing the number and variety of athletics opportunities in varsity, club and intramural sports" (83.7 percent).

- That participants receive the same treatment as other students (76.8 percent).

- That participants have no unique privileges in academic advising (80 percent), grading (91.6 percent) or living accommodations (89.5 percent).

- That "athletes are not denied rights and opportunities that would be available to them as nonathletes" (87.9 percent).

- That "the athletics program is controlled, financed and staffed through the same general procedures as other departments of the college" (78.9 percent).

- That "participant interest will be (is) one factor considered in the determination of the level of support provided by the college to each sport" (79.5 percent).

- That "students are supported in their efforts to reach high levels of performance by providing them with adequate facilities" (74.7 percent), "competent coaching" (82.1 percent) and "appropriate competitive opportunities with students from similar institutions" (85.3 percent).

- That "primary interest is given to in-season competition" (80.5 percent), but "exceptional teams and individuals may be (are) encouraged through postseason championships (92.1 percent).

- That "the purpose of the NCAA is to assist its members to develop an approach to athletics competition that is both consistent and equitable" (77.9 percent) and that the Association's purpose "should be (is) to do so in ways that minimize infringement of the freedom of individual institutions to determine their own special objectives and programs" (74.8 percent).

Reality vs. desirability

For each of the statements above, respondents also were asked if it is an "appropriate guide for future planning and program implementation." For every statement except one, higher percentages of those surveyed agreed or strongly agreed that they are appropriate guides for the future than that they are currently true.

The only exception involved the statement that "exceptional teams and individuals may be (are) encouraged through postseason championships." Of those responding, 85.3 percent agreed or strongly agreed that the statement was appropriate for the future, compared to the 92.1 percent who agreed or strongly agreed that the statement currently is true.

The widest gaps between present reality and desirability for the future were observed in the following statements:

- Student-athletes "have no unique privileges in admissions" (87.3 percent agreed or strongly agreed the statement is appropriate for the future; 62.7 percent agreed or strongly agreed the statement represents the present).

- Student-athletes "have no unique privileges in financial aid" (91.6 percent, appropriate for the future; 60 percent, present).

- "Sports for men and women are given equal emphasis" (92.7 percent, appropriate for the future; 61.6 percent, present).

- "The desired quality of competition is similar in all sports" (81.6 percent, appropriate for the future; 52.1 percent, present).

- "Students are supported in their efforts to reach high levels of performance by providing them with adequate facilities" (94.3 percent, appropriate for the future; 74.7 percent, present).

Initial eligibility

The survey posed two questions pertaining to initial eligibility. Responses revealed that 16.8 percent agreed and 56.8 percent strongly agreed that initial-eligibility standards should be established for Division III, while 10.5 percent disagreed and 27.9 percent strongly disagreed.

When asked if Division III standards should be identical to those of Divisions I and II, 12.1 percent of the respondents disagreed and 51.1 percent strongly disagreed, while 11.1 percent agreed and 19.5 percent strongly agreed.

Of those disagreeing that the standards should be identical, 55 respondents said the standards should be more stringent, compared to 34 who said they should be less stringent.

Issues ranked

Respondents to the survey also were asked to rank in order of importance the six issues they believe are most in need of review in Division III.

Ranked first on the list was "changing the championship format for football."

Next on the list, in order, were "limiting out-of-season practice," "limiting the length of playing seasons," "indexing of initial academic eligibility requirements similar to Division II's response to Bylaw 5-1-(j)," "setting academic guidelines/standards for continuing eligibility" and "reducing the size of football coaching staffs."

"The ad hoc committee will meet soon to continue planning the June program," Sliger said, "and I intend to have the committee discuss changes in the format that will encourage greater involvement in the discussions by those attending the meeting."

He also noted that the approach to the June program will be different because there are three specific topics to be addressed. In the first Forum session in June 1987, four speakers discussed in somewhat general terms what they believed to be right and wrong in college athletics. In the second session, at the recent Nashville Convention, all presentations related to economic considerations in college athletics.

"This time, we are going to be discussing the NCAA structure itself; the procedures the NCAA uses in conducting its business, and the volatile issue of proper financial aid for student-athletes, including the concept of aid based on financial need," Sliger said. "Obviously, there will be opportunity for discussion of each of these significant topics. There are widely varying views in these areas, and we assume members will want theirs to be heard."

Sliger's committee will develop a roster of speakers for the three topics. Meanwhile, the Presidents Commission's executive committee and the NCAA Administrative Committee will meet in February, if possible, to develop recommendations regarding the NCAA procedures topic.

Sliger said consideration also is being given to featuring a keynote address by a nationally prominent speaker at the Orlando Forum.

Topics

The three topics for the June program were announced by Sliger's committee last August:

- The discussion of the NCAA membership structure will include such matters as the current division and subdivision structure; problems with multidivision classification, and the desire for greater, if not total, "federation" of the Association's decision-making procedures.

- The review of NCAA procedures will include concerns regarding the ever-increasing detail in the Association's legislative and interpretative processes, as well as the desire of some Commission members for a drastic revision of how the Association's rules are established.

- The financial aid topic will be based in part on a preliminary report by the NCAA Committee on Financial Aid and Amateurism, and the concept of aid based on need (all or in part, in some sports or all) will be a part of the discussion.

Action expected

"I believe the National Forum thus far has served its purpose," Slaughter said after the January 11 Forum session in Nashville.

"It still is our intention to have the Forum discussions result in actions at the 1989 NCAA Convention, and probably at Conventions in the years ahead. At the very least, the Commission intends to provide an opportunity to the NCAA membership to consider reform in certain areas," he said.

"Our primary interest at this point is to suggest that as many members as possible schedule this important meeting on their calendars and make plans to be in Orlando June 20-21."

ought to take place in college athletics. "The interesting thing about being an athletics director is that you have to live in (the present) with all the pressures that go with this profession and at the same time be ready for tomorrow, while planning for five years in the future."

"The trouble we seem to be having," she added, "is that we get so caught up in today that we allow tomorrow to happen without adequate planning."

While noting the need for involvement by chief executive officers at NCAA member institutions, Holland also emphasized the need for "leadership from another source... perhaps even more than from the president. That is leadership from the athletics administrators of this nation, men and women, (at) all levels."

"We must reestablish ourselves as leaders in intercollegiate athletics," she continued. "We have to meet the demands of the present and do so with masterful leadership."

Holland concluded that managed and planned change is a "necessary ingredient for solutions to the issues confronting intercollegiate athletics.

How revolutionary these changes are remains to be seen. But we must take the lead in preparing for the future. As Robert Kennedy stated, 'Pleasantries, self-satisfied mediocrity will serve us badly. We need the best of many—not of just the few.'"

Lessons learned

Whalen noted that as a member of the NCAA Presidents Commission, he had learned a few lessons, one of which is the definite need for presidential involvement in the management of intercollegiate athletics.

He recognized the purpose of Commission members, who are representing institutional CEOs, and of CEO involvement at NCAA Conventions. But, he called for more.

"What is required of us as presidents is that we are vitally concerned, that we inform ourselves on the issues and speak up, that we understand what is going on at home relative to athletics and, perhaps most important, that we sustain our interest and concern over the long haul."

Whalen said service on the Commission also has taught him the complex nature of many issues facing intercollegiate athletics. "When I first began my work on the Commission," he recalled, "I had the answers!"

"I really felt I knew what had to be done—or at least I had some pretty strong opinions about what should be done. There had to be cost containment. Freshmen could not be eligible. There could be no spring (football) practice. All aid had to be need-based. Deemphasis had to occur across the board."

"Frankly, the longer I have been immersed in these issues and the more I have studied them, the more complex they appear."

While not backing down from a desire to see change occur in college sports, Whalen noted that the most important lesson he has learned through participation in NCAA affairs is the need to make time an ally.

"There is no question that the Presidents Commission must continue, and it must keep alive the fire in its belly to achieve solutions no matter how long it takes," Whalen concluded. "And we must do that within the NCAA."

"We must all stay in the game, and we must play a full four quarters. And let me add (that), as we do that, let's try to keep the 'C' in the NCAA—the tie that binds. I fear we are losing it."

Canham made no bones about his perception of today's major-college athletics program. "The student-athlete is well-served," he told a large crowd in the Opryland's Tennessee Ballroom.

"They are getting better coaching, better medical attention, certainly better counseling and tutorial help, and they are playing in better facilities."

Canham also took issue with the concept of cost-containment as an athletics cure-all. "We are wrong when we talk about cost-containment as a solution to (college athletics) problems."

"I think if we have a failing," he added. "It's lack of communication... between presidents, athletics directors and faculty people who volunteer their time." Canham suggested that events like the Forum would be enhanced if more people would share their ideas on generating revenues and managing athletics programs.

"We talk a lot about sharing wealth," he noted, "but not about sharing ideas."

Yoder to leave post in August

Richard B. Yoder, athletics director at West Chester University of Pennsylvania, will leave that post August 31 to return to the classroom.

Yoder has been AD for nine years and previously was a member of the football coaching staff. He joined the physical education department in 1962 as an assistant professor.

A 1959 graduate of West Chester, Yoder is a tenured associate professor of physical education.

Yoder will continue to represent the school in NCAA and Eastern College Athletic Conference affairs until the end of August.

He is a member of the NCAA Football Rules Committee and the Division II Football Committee. At the January NCAA Convention, he ended a four-year term on the NCAA Council and membership on the Eligibility Committee and the Legislation and Interpretations Committee. He also was a member of the Division II Championships Committee.

Football rule change expected to add excitement to game

The NCAA Football Rules Committee has adopted a rule that will give defensive teams an opportunity to score on point-after-touchdown tries and has deleted the rule that prohibited the same team from taking consecutive timeouts.

The committee, meeting January 18-20 in Kansas City, Missouri, added provisions to Rule 8-3 that award defensive teams two points for scoring on a point-after-touchdown try.

Under the former rule, the point-after-touchdown opportunity ended if the defensive team gained possession of the ball or was entitled to possession after a foul, if a penalty against the offensive team involved a loss of a down, if an accepted penalty resulted in a score, when it was obvious a scrimmage kick was unsuccessful, or the kick touched a player of the kicking team or the ground.

Defensive teams still are prohibited from advancing fumbles. The two points would be awarded for returning an interception or advancing a blocked kick for a touchdown.

Homer C. Rice

Change adds excitement

"Giving the defensive team the opportunity to score on point-after-touchdown attempts will add excitement to the game," Homer C. Rice, chair of the committee, said. "The play previously was the only situation in football in which the defense was not rewarded for an interception or blocked kick."

"This change is one of the more drastic rules changes in several years."

The committee also voted to allow the same team to call consecutive timeouts during the interval between downs. Teams previously could request only one charged team timeout between downs.

"It was the committee's belief that teams own their timeouts and should be able to utilize them consecutively if they so choose," Rice said.

Safety-related changes

In safety-related measures, the committee made padding on goalpost supports mandatory for the upcoming season and will require mouthpieces to be yellow beginning with the 1990 season in order to make it easier for officials to identify players who are not in compliance with mandatory-equipment rules.

Injuries down

"The committee received a report that injuries have decreased in each of the last five years," Rice said. "Safety is the committee's main concern and the report we received reflects that. Injuries related to blocking below the waist continue to concern the committee and blocking techniques taught by coaches will continue to be reviewed."

Another report received by the committee indicated that there is no significant difference in injury rates between artificial and natural surfaces. A study among 15 Division I-A teams by the NCAA Injury Surveillance System revealed that 171 injuries occurred on natural surfaces and 145 occurred on artificial surfaces. The evidence from the study does not necessarily reflect all the possible cause-and-effect relationships involved in football injuries and the evidence is not necessarily conclusive; however, it does indicate that artificial surfaces do not cause an inordinate number of injuries as is often stated to be the case.

A myth

"According to the injury surveillance data, it appears that it is a myth to believe that artificial surfaces cause more injuries than grass fields," Rice said. "The study indicates that one of the big factors that cause injuries is related to a player's position. The committee will continue to monitor the results of the injury surveillance study."

Another area of concern to the committee is players' taunting and baiting opponents. Although rules are in place to penalize players who taunt or bait opponents, the committee suggested that officials need to do a better job of enforcing player-conduct rules.

"Abusive language, baiting and taunting, and pointing fingers at opponents in a challenging manner has no place in the sport of football," David M. Nelson, secretary-rules editor, said. "Rule 9-2-1-a-5 clearly states that unsportsmanlike acts such as these carry a 15-yard penalty. Officials need to do a better job of enforcing the rule and coaches must let their players know that such acts will not be tolerated."

Points of emphasis

Nelson said enforcing unsportsmanlike-conduct rules again will be addressed in the points of emphasis in NCAA Football Rules and Interpretations.

Other points of emphasis will be below-the-waist blocking techniques and offensive and defensive use of the hands.

In addition, Rice appointed ad hoc committees to study rules provisions regarding crowd noise; blocking below the waist; defensive pull-and-grasp techniques, and possible alternatives to point-after-touchdown kicking tries, which in the committee's opinion have become a "nonplay." Division I-A teams were successful on 94.9 percent of point-after-touchdown kicks last season.

In other rules actions, the committee increased the penalty for illegal use of the hands from five to 10 yards and added a rule that ends the opportunity for point-after-touchdown tries if any offensive player other than the player who fumbled recovers the ball. The rule is intended to prevent intentional fumbles by the offensive team.

The committee also rescinded the note to Rule 1-4-5-1 that was adopted at last year's meeting regarding manufacturers' logos.

The rest of the committee's rules actions were minor editorial revisions or intended to clarify the rules.

Legislative Assistance

1988 Column No. 4

NCAA Bylaw 6-1-(b)-(2)-(iv) — Pell Grants (Proposal No. 59)

The NCAA Council reviewed the provisions of 1988 Convention Proposal No. 59 amending Bylaw 6-1-(b)-(2)-(iv), which permits a Division I student-athlete who receives a Pell Grant (as well as institutionally administered financial assistance) to receive a maximum combined total that does not exceed the value of tuition, fees, room and board, and required course-related books plus $1,400. The Council noted that the effective date of August 1, 1988, would not permit the additional Pell Grant money to be administered retroactively to student-athletes prior to the 1988-89 academic year.

Further, member institutions are reminded that the provisions of NCAA Constitution 3-1-(g)-(1) preclude a member institution from awarding a student-athlete financial aid that exceeds the cost of attendance that normally is incurred by students enrolled in a comparable program at that institution or that exceeds the limitations set forth in Bylaw 6-1 for the membership division of the institution the student-athlete attends, whichever is less. Accordingly, the maximum combined total of tuition, fees, room and board, and required course-related books plus the amount of Pell Grant aid cannot (under NCAA legislation) exceed the cost of attendance as determined by the financial aid office at the certifying institution.

NCAA Bylaw 11-3 and Case No. 423 (Proposal No. 93)

The Council has reviewed the application of Bylaw 11-3-(a)-(6) and Case No. 423 (pages 428-429, 1987-88 NCAA Manual) and determined that prospective student-athletes entering Division III member institutions during the fall 1988 term would not be affected by the changes adopted in Proposal No. 93 (Division III financial aid package). For students entering Division III member institutions after the fall 1988 term, however, consideration of athletic ability in the formulation of Division III financial aid packages would be prohibited.

NCAA Bylaw 1-4 — media evaluations (Proposal No. 119)

The Council has reviewed the application of Proposal No. 119 amending Bylaw 1-4, which precludes an athletics department staff member from evaluating or rating a prospective student-athlete for the news media and scouting/recruiting services prior to the prospect's signed acceptance of the institution's offer of admission and/or written tender of financial assistance. The Council concluded that Proposal No. 119 would preclude an athletics department staff member from evaluating or rating a prospective student-athlete for an independent publication promoting the institution's athletics program if the prospect has not yet signed an acceptance of the institution's written offer of admission. It remains permissible, however, for an athletics department staff member to confirm that the institution is recruiting a particular prospective student-athlete.

NCAA Constitution 3-3-(c) — Olympic waiver (Proposal No. 129)

NCAA member institutions are reminded that in accordance with the adoption of Proposal No. 129, the NCAA Academic Requirements Committee has been granted the authority to waive the enrollment and satisfactory-progress requirements of Constitution 3-3 for any participant in the Olympic Games who, because of such participation, may lose eligibility for practice and intercollegiate athletics participation in any sport. Please note that before a student-athlete is eligible to compete for the institution under these circumstances, the Academic Requirements Committee must approve such a waiver in each particular case.

Official determined to get records on SMU

Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox said January 21 he will obtain the Dallas bank records he needs for an investigation into the Southern Methodist University football program, even if that means going to a grand jury.

"They're going to have to give us the information one way or another, if we have to get it through a grand jury subpoena. We would prefer that that not be the case," he said.

Capital Bank has turned over about half the records requested in connection with the SMU investigation, Mattox said. The bank has said the delay in turning over records is not related to former Mustang coach Bobby Collins' job there as a director.

"They have said it's just a lot of information that they need to give us. There could be other motivations that are involved, but very simply, we're not going to go away," Mattox said.

The records have been requested as part of an investigation into whether the university acted properly when it spent more than $860,000 to end the contracts of Collins, former athletics director Bob Hitch and former assistant athletics director Henry Lee Parker. The Capital Bank records are related to the possible theft of at least $10,000 in university funds by a former SMU athletics department official, Mattox's office has said. The official has not been identified.

"There are moneys that do not appear to be properly accounted for; and we are attempting to determine whether those moneys have been taken by an individual for his or her own use and benefit, or whether they have been used in some other way within the SMU athletics program, and we cannot make that determination until we are able to get access to all the records," Mattox said.

Large sums of money are involved in the investigation, he told the Associated Press.

"We're just speaking of $10,000, because we're unable to give an accurate assessment of how much money may very well be involved until we have access to the bank records," Mattox said.

The NCAA banned SMU football in 1987 and limited the Mustangs' 1988 season after finding that the university had improperly paid football players, using a booster slush fund. SMU later canceled the 1988 season.

Bill gives penalized programs right to sue

Universities hit with NCAA sanctions could file suit to recover lost ticket sales and bowl revenues from boosters, sports agents or others who prompted the penalties, under a bill introduced January 21 in the Oklahoma Legislature.

Watonga Democrat Bert Russell said his bill is similar to a "booster-buster" law enacted last year in Texas in response to NCAA sanctions against Southern Methodist University's football program.

That program was given the "death penalty," the NCAA's most severe penalty.

Russell said his bill would allow a school or a regional athletics association, such as the Big Eight Conference, to file a lawsuit against anyone who causes the school to go on probation, United Press International reported.

The defendant must have knowingly broken rules and must have been a contributing factor to disciplinary action against the school or association.

"This is aimed at giving some statutory relief to a school that has had penalties put on it," Russell said.

The bill exempts anyone who is a student of the school or an employee of the school, athletics organization or the NCAA.

Damages that could be recovered under the bill include revenues from television contracts and ticket sales lost because of probation.

Currently, agents, boosters or others violating NCAA rules by offering illegal inducements to prospective athletes face no criminal or civil penalties because of their actions.

However, those illegal actions can lead to stiff penalties against schools the athletes are associated with, and they can cause an athlete to become ineligible to play.

Georgia bill aimed at agent control

Agents and attorneys could be charged with a misdemeanor, fined up to $1,000 and jailed for signing college athletes before they complete their eligibility under a bill introduced in the Georgia Legislature.

State Sen. Culver Kidd, D-Milledgeville, said he offered the bill earlier this month because of reports in the past year of agents' dealings with athletes in violation of NCAA rules.

Fourteen college athletes lost their eligibility in 1987 because they signed with agents, a violation of those rules, United Press International reported.

"You would hope that such a bill wouldn't be necessary, that these agents would regulate themselves,"

Kidd said. "But that hasn't happened. Other states have found it necessary to protect college athletes, and I agree with them that something has to be done."

If the Georgia version of the bill becomes law, agents doing business in the state will be required to register with the secretary of state and pay a $100 fee.

The bill also makes it a misdemeanor for an agent or attorney to "intentionally give any false information or make any false promises or representations" to any Georgia athlete. The bill prohibits an agent or attorney from offering "anything of value" to induce an athlete to sign a contract.

Being a fan is enough to make you want to scream

By L. Jay Oliva

There are two minutes to go in my son's high school basketball game; the score is tied. The crowd is going wild. Our point guard steals the ball from the opposing team, comes belting down the court toward the basket, and an opposing player steps in front of him.

Immediately, the ref slaps his left hand to the back of his head, turns to the opposition basket, throws out his right fist, and yells, "Charge!"

In righteous indignation, I rise and call upon my already rasping voice for one last piercing scream—a beauty. The ref, already red-necked, turns directly toward me in the stands and matches my vocal volume: "Technical!" My wife hides her head in her lap. My son, on the court, raises his eyes to the gym ceiling.

It will take me a week to recover my natural ebullience.

I am, you see, a fan. My son's performance on a basketball court is one form of stimulus for fan behavior, but not the only one. My blood pressure rises and my adrenalin soars when there is competition at hand. Are we a breed? A genus? A phylum unto ourselves?

Allow me now to turn the reel. Saturday afternoon—I am lounging on the couch before the TV set. Terrible day, no World Series, no basketball play-offs, no pro football, no track meets, not even a golf match. Only college football. Ugh! I turn on Michigan versus Iowa, and an announcer contends this is a great rivalry. The testimony? Ninety-thousand screaming fans!

Phooey, but I'll watch awhile. My lord, but it is a tough game; and, after all, I am told that Iowa won by a field goal with seconds to go last year and broke Michigan's heart. And I know a Russian historian at Michigan. And I was at Ann Arbor once. I have made my decision: "Let's go Michigan."

It is 17-17 with five seconds to go. My palms are sweaty, and I am now talking loudly to the dog: How long will this crazy coach let that clock run before he sends in the kicking team? The coach sends in the kicking team... a 50-yard field goal try, it's up, it's GOOD. I slump back, tired but fulfilled.

Ah, you say, a fan is merely a couch potato communing with his dog. Not exactly. It is more to the point that for a true fan-personality, no experience can be truly enjoyed without an emotional commitment. But let us move on.

It is February 15 and I am hustling into the office in Bobst Library.

It is 8 a.m. and only the guards are there. The New York Times copies are laid out in a row with the names of administrators scribbled along their tops. I grab the copy with my name, tuck it under my arm, run for the elevator, and pace irritably up and down while it descends. I get on and urge it up 12 floors; like an offensive lineman, I push its weight all the way. Fumbling with a pile of keys, I finally get my door open and fling the paper onto the table.

Times Index... Guggenheim Fellows... page 27 of the B section. I rip open the paper to B-27 and hustle through the list. Two of my colleagues... no, three... great... four... five... incredible... SIX. All wonderful; all deserving. How many for Princeton... how many for Harvard? I drop into my chair, ecstatic. Hot damn! Hurray for our side.

The emerging point, you see, is that being a fan is much more than yelling for blood relations or yelling for an anonymous pigskin to sail through the uprights. Fandom means investment and joy in the success of colleagues, ecstasy in the success of deeply felt enterprises, caring about those who share our commitments. Not that "hurrah" is always the final word.

The tough reality for fans is that winning can be as elusive as the gentle butterfly. If winning feels wonderful, losing does not.

The room is electric. My president and I, with our vice-president for development, are assembled in the conference room to meet a prospective benefactor. We are here earnestly to present our case for a chair in science. The president is magnificent. (If I had the resources, I would give the chair myself.)

My turn to speak. I am impassioned, presenting the case with all the skill born of years in the classroom. My listener, though, is still stiff, unrelenting. I see the set of his jaw, and it drives me on to more energetic heights. I make it clear that this particular academic program is so manifestly worthy. The vice-president for external affairs

It's hard for gladhandler to steer a true course

By Blackie Sherrod
The Dallas Morning News
(Excerpted from a column)

In the mode of his personality, the guy would have preferred to sneak in his office at midnight, throw his belongings in a duffel bag and skedaddle out the back way. No fuss. No ink. No honor guard firing salutes.

This is—was—the mien of Walter Byers, the most influential figure ever in college sports. They honored him at a farewell luncheon in Nashville at the NCAA's annual confab, and he had rather attended a root canal. After 36 years of service, much of it maligned and damned, Byers had rather snuck off to his beloved Kansas ranch, shed his tie and vest for the last time, and communed with alfalfa and livestock for the rest of his days.

Some of his critics have accused him of being a recluse, aloof, a loner who likes to throw his iron fist from the shadows.

Yet, come to think of it, most sports commissioners or executive directors or whatever retreat into similar caves sooner or later. They perhaps are driven into seclusion by eager sharpshooters, on the theory that a moving, obscure target is hard to draw a bead on.

Peter Ueberroth, the baseball commissioner, himself has become more and more of a hermit. He began his term with high visibility and was criticized for that, so he turned in the opposite direction.

Remember the commissioner before him, Bowie Kuhn, became of the same mold. Pete Rozelle is not nearly as accessible as he was 20 years ago. These people dodge the limelight because the limelight becomes harsh and unflattering and troublesome, and you cannot blame them for that.

Byers was the glue that held together 700 diverse interests who often did not know their own minds. He was the researcher and the negotiator and the blueprinter for the future—not some college chancellor from Corvallis, Oregon, who just happened to be the NCAA president for that year and went to three or four meetings in that capacity and couldn't tell you the height of a high hurdle if his life depended on it.

Of course, Byers often held that he did not make NCAA rules; those were voted by NCAA membership, and he was merely the functionary who enforced the rules. In essence, that was true.

But Byers had a tremendous input on the formation and passage of those rules. He knew much better than the college chancellor from Corvallis just what the problems were and the best way to deal with them. So the presidents asked Byers for guidance and he provided same. Sometimes, that guidance proved wrong but, heck, no leader is infallible.

LSU basketball coach Dale Brown and others have compared Byers' office to the Gestapo. In truth, he did run an extremely tight ship. His staff reported by 8:30 every morning and any tardiness resulted in docked vacation time. No coffee breaks, no smoking in the building, not even a Coke can on a desktop.

But maybe that's what it took. Lyndon Johnson ran the White House that way; so did Harry Truman.

There is no more controversial position in sports than steering the NCAA. And if that was the personality of the person chosen to run it—being nigh invisible, inaccessible, highhanded—then so be it. There's lots of things worse than being a loner, and being an ineffective gladhandler is one.

Top priority for NCAA: federation

Fred Jacoby, commissioner
Southwest Athletic Conference
The Dallas Morning News

"We have been steadily moving to a federated approach (in the NCAA). Richard Schultz (NCAA executive director) may be able to facilitate it and move it along a little quicker.

"But he's only one person, and there are more than 800 institutions. He's the facilitator, and he will do a good job. But I wouldn't want to give him too much of the credit or too much of the blame.

"The biggest thing he can do is further the federated principle. Within a year's time, there has been more movement. The question is just when to finish it off."

Forrest Gregg, head football coach
Southern Methodist University

"Recruiting is going to be easy. We're going to look them (recruits) in the eye; be honest; tell them they'll have books, tuition and meals, and have a chance for a great education."

in your life, leads to success: Identify your task; define every detail of that task; determine how to best perform each detail; work very hard through practice repetition to perfect each movement, every detail of performance, and constantly try to be the best that you can be when you perform that task.

"Sound familiar? Indeed, sport is valuable practice for achieving the truly meaningful things in life. It is a very small step to couple the habits associated with the pursuit of excellence with a goal or a product that is meaningful."

Richard D. Schultz, executive director

The (Nashville) Sunday Tennessean

"Since August, I've only been in Kansas City two weekends, and one of those was at Christmas. I think it's important that the NCAA communicate with its constituency.

"The reception has been very positive, and I think the trips have been very important for the future of college athletics.

"We have an opportunity for change in intercollegiate athletics; and if we are to accomplish what we need to accomplish, I think we have to set up a line of communication. I can make much more progress going to a college campus than sitting behind my desk.

"I'm excited about the direction of the NCAA. I think we've had an identity problem in the last few years. There are people in the country who believe that every coach cheats and that every athlete uses drugs. I think it's up to us to let people know this simply isn't the case."

Edward H. Jennings, president
Ohio State University
The Columbus Dispatch

"It's no academic disgrace to be excellent in intercollegiate athletics. While every great athletics school is not necessarily a great academic institution, I think we would find that every great academic institution is now or has been a great athletics one."

Jim Walden, head football coach

"It'll help (extension of a maximum of 30 initial football grants-in-aid by one year), but it's not going to clear up our problems instantly.

"If I take 30, I've only got 77 guys. But it's still better than 72 guys. Heck fire, five more guys are going to help our program a lot.

"I think they (other coaches) worry it'll help me (his proposal to abolish the limit on initial football grants). It's not logical to ask a man to help another man beat him. That's the way the NCAA thinks."

weighs in, and my spirits revive. She does a magnificent job.

But when I look across the table, I see that jaw is even more prominent, jutting as though cantilevered from the face by architectural forces unknown to mere mortals. He allows as how he will think about it; I know he won't. We courteously bid farewell.

I spend the afternoon worrying about the conversation like a puppy with a rubber bone. Where did we go wrong? Could we play it over? Did I do the program justice? On the drive home, I think of little else; I don't remember crossing the bridge. I speak distractedly to my family; I sleep fitfully, full of "I should have said..."

Last thought before dozing at 2 a.m.: It won't happen again.

Have you got the picture? The fan is not just a sports fan; sports are simply the medium in which the fan is most easily observed. We are in the board room, the court room, the operating room, the classroom.... We love to win; we hate to lose; we love to root, whether it is for a good stock, or a good student, or a good research project, or a good merger, or a good patient recovery. Some say sex, and some say money, and some say power, but

I say you do not know what makes some folks tick if you do not know about caring, about rooting...if you do not know about choosing sides and investing your heart.

It is New York University against Clark University (Massachusetts) in basketball. We are on our home court. We have only been back in basketball for three years, and we are this season 16-2; this game is against the No. 11 team in the country, and a victory will put us in the top 20 in Division III in the nation.

As chancellor, I chaired the committee that brought basketball back; I know every player on the bench; I know their parents.

The packed Coles Center is going wild. I am in agony; there are 20 seconds to go, and we are down by one point. We move quickly up court and score; we lead by one. There are 10 seconds left for Clark to score and win. My voice is gone: All dignity forsaken, I am screaming like a banshee.

Clark takes a time out, then brings the ball upcourt, sets up expertly for a jump shot, they shoot—and miss. We rebound. The buzzer sounds and the gym is in pandemonium.

I am called to the TV cameras for a postgame reflection; and in seconds, I gather myself together, button my shirt, straighten my tie, slip my jacket on, comb my hair, and proceed to deliver thoughtful, balanced commentary that is deeply a part of me, reflecting good sportsmanship, praise for both teams, the values of sport whether one wins or loses.

As soon as the TV lights go off, I let out a primeval yell and stick both arms high in the air. Hurrah for our side!

Proposal withdrawal took spice out of Convention agenda

By John Bibb
The (Nashville) Tennessean

The Missouri Valley Conference's decision to withdraw a little ditty known as Proposal No. 73 took a little spice out of the NCAA Convention's agenda.

As originally proposed, Missouri Valley members had requested a reduction in the number of conference games a basketball team must play to gain automatic qualification to the 64-team NCAA tournament bracket.

If the Missouri Valley had stuck by its guns and the legislation had been approved, it would have furthered the cause of those who prefer to play fewer conference games prior to holding a league tournament to determine the recipient of the automatic NCAA bid.

As things stand now, a 10-team league must play a double round-robin, 18 games, to qualify for the automatic bid.

The original proposal would have allowed such a conference to elect to play a single round-robin, nine games, with a champion determined by a tournament.

The Big Ten, which is considering adding its own tournament, was particularly interested in the Missouri Valley's original plan.

The general idea of the proposed change is nothing startling. Many basketball coaches believe they would have a better chance for national recognition while sending more of their conference's teams to the tournament if they didn't chew each other to pieces during their regular season.

The idea sounds reasonable enough, and some proponents of the change offer strong supporting statistics. But in the case of the Southeastern Conference, the alteration doesn't wash. The SEC, which pursues a meat-grinder 18-game schedule followed by a highly successful tournament, has not suffered when it comes to NCAA tournament representation.

Year after year, the basketball tournament committee has taken the strength of the SEC competition into consideration when it gets to the task of filling its championship bracket.

Still, despite this strong NCAA tournament representation, a number of SEC basketball coaches regularly campaign for a diluted regular-season schedule.

So far, their campaign has not persuaded the powers that be in the SEC to cut back on regular-season league games. Certainly, the SEC cannot complain it is not getting its fair share of challengers in the tournament. Last year, the league sent six of its 10 teams to the NCAA event.

Nevertheless, some basketball forces feel their teams are being overlooked.

A general rule in the tournament-selection process seems to be consistent: Consideration is given to each team's record, and how a team performs on the road.

Obviously, there are those who believe there are too many teams falling through the cracks.

Accordingly, they're anxious to see conference teams schedule more nonleague opponents. They contend this sort of scheduling would furnish the NCAA committee a more accurate barometer in their selections.

Let nonqualifiers practice with varsity

By Bucky Waters
Eastern Basketball

The Founding Fathers of Proposition 48 had excellent and long-overdue intentions. This relatively new NCAA rule has helped many a freshman basketball player—those who have serious academic deficiencies—get adjusted to campus life and get his education off on the right path without having to worry about mastering the 2-3 zone or the box-and-one.

There is a growing problem, however, which has sprouted as a result of Proposition 48. Since recruits who do not "predict" (that is, they do not carry the grades or test scores to become eligible to play their freshman year) are not allowed to practice with the team, many of them—perhaps half—are taking the junior college route to hone their hardwood skills and, hopefully, get their grades off the life-support system.

The juco plan is nothing new in college basketball, but it's become much more chic since the inception of Proposition 48.

I have nothing against junior college basketball. For many young kids, it's a great opportunity to improve their game and develop it to the major-college level; and more importantly, it's a chance for the kids to hit the books more frequently.

There are drawbacks, however, which could be eliminated in many cases if Prop 48 allowed ineligible freshmen to at least practice with the team on campus.

By being allowed to practice as freshmen, I firmly believe that many of these recruits would ignore the juco circuit and opt for their true school of choice. It would provide an opportunity not too unlike freshman basketball; much less time committed to the game, more time spent in the library, a chance to meet and make friends with your teammates and coaches, an adjustment period to campus life that just isn't there in junior college.

I realize that my idea is unrealistic in many cases. Certainly, there are coaches who can't afford to give a kid a scholarship at risk of the kid sitting out for a year. Many youngsters want to play regularly and would not be satisfied with mere practice sessions.

Nonetheless, my intuition as a former coach and educator tells me that there are enough young men out there who, if given the opportunity, would be willing to attend college for a year even if their passion for basketball is temporarily limited to the practice courts.

One modification of Proposition 48 that I have heard would be to allow the freshman ineligibles to still play four years of ball after spending a year on the sidelines; in other words, it would be as if they were red-shirted during their freshman year. To this so-called solution, I ask, what is the incentive for a high school kid to achieve better grades and test scores if he's in no danger of losing a year of eligibility at the school of his choice?

I sincerely hope that the wise folks in Shawnee Mission, who gave us Bylaw 5-1-(j), will be all the more wiser and take my advice about allowing practice for the freshman casualties of Prop 48.

A precedent will be set on March 4 at Notre Dame, Indiana, when first-day ceremonies are held for the postage stamp marking the centennial of the birth of Knute Rockne.

Many United States postage issues have covered athletics, and a few have named specific universities, but the Rockne stamp will be first to give special recognition to an athletics coach.

Rockne, of course, needs no introduction to gridiron historians; but since his name still is so prominent today, some observers will find it hard to believe that this is his centennial year.

Born March 4, 1888, at Voss, Norway, Rockne emigrated to Chicago as a youngster and lived there until his enrollment at Notre Dame in the fall of 1910.

His career as player and coach there was surprisingly brief—just over two decades—and ended with his death in a Kansas airplane crash March 31, 1931. His 13-year Irish coaching record of 105 victories, 12 losses, and five ties still is tops in winning percentages among major-college football coaches.

A 1969 stamp issue was intended to mark the centennial of the college gridiron game, but the design of that stamp was a disappointment to many observers since it simply indicated "Football, 1869-1969," with no mention of the collegiate connection.

A stamp issued in 1984 honoring Jim Thorpe had more of a college flavor, since it portrayed him in an authentic gridiron uniform of the early 1900s, with the Carlisle monogram prominently displayed.

Six previous issues honor or identify American universities, though not for athletics purposes. The bicentennials of Columbia University (1954) and Washington and Lee University (1949) were observed, along with the 1955 centennial of land-grant colleges that named both Michigan State University and Pennsylvania State University. Both Dartmouth and Daniel Webster were covered by a 1969 issue that noted the famous Dartmouth College case in which Webster successfully argued before the United States Supreme Court. Illinois Institute of Technology was depicted in a 1982 stamp covering the architecture of Mies van der Rohe.

To some degree, both Harvard University and Princeton University also have been portrayed. A 1986 issue honors John Harvard himself; a 1956 issue honors Nassau Hall and is printed in traditional orange and black colors but neglects to mention Princeton as the location. A 1979 stamp shows the Jefferson-designed University of Virginia Rotunda but does not identify it as being on the Charlottesville campus.

By indirect association, the numerous stamps honoring United States presidents relate to colleges and to college athletics.

Theodore Roosevelt was active in football rules reform; Dwight Eisenhower was both an athlete at the U.S. Military Academy and president of Columbia University. Thomas Jefferson was the founder of the University of Virginia, and James Garfield served as president of Hiram College. Gerald Ford's athletics activity is well-documented; but since postal regulations prohibit the portrayal of living persons on United States stamps, his likeness has not yet appeared.

Woodrow Wilson also deserves to be identified with college football, but the exact connection remains unclear. It is certain that he was a prime organizer, manager and unofficial coach of Princeton teams in the late 1870s.

Also, although Wesleyan University's records do not show him as a member of the coaching staff, he did help plan strategy and was partially responsible for one of that school's greatest victories, a 10-2 win over the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia in 1889.

Letter to the Editor

Let us know who the penalty's on

To the Editor:

All televised college football games place a microphone on the referee. This practice has spread all the way down to Division III. Speaking as a broadcaster, I would like to ask one question:

If the ref doesn't announce who the penalty is on, why waste the money buying the sound system? We can get the same information without the mike. We all know the signals, and we can see which team is walking backwards, so do we really have to hear the ref say, "Holding on the offense?" If we are going to use the technology, would it be too much to ask for the ref to add "Number 75" to the announcement?

I welcome any logical explanation (and I emphasize logical). Just remember one thing before you reply. Hockey players go to the penalty box, and basketball players raise their hands. And in each case, the public address announcer tells the crowd all about his/her sin. Despite this, the NCAA has never had an ice hockey or basketball player die of embarrassment.

NCAA governmental affairs report

A review of recent Federal government activities affecting the NCAA membership is published quarterly in The NCAA News. These reports are prepared by Squire, Sanders & Dempsey, the Association's legal counsel in Washington, D.C.

Pension and tax law proposals

Preferred Seating. The proposed amendment to the Internal Revenue Code, granting donors a tax deduction for 80 percent of any amount contributed to a higher education institution in return for preferred seating at games, was dropped out of the budget reconciliation bill signed by President Reagan December 22, 1987. The preferred-seating provision had been included in the budget reconciliation bill passed by the House in late October and in the tax portion of the Senate reconciliation bill approved by the Finance Committee in mid-October. However, the budget reconciliation bill changed shape when it became one of the vehicles for implementing the November 20 deficit-reduction agreement negotiated by congressional leaders and the Reagan Administration. For political reasons and because it faced severe time constraints, Congress stripped virtually all of the technical corrections and miscellaneous tax provisions from the bill, including both the preferred-seating provision and the provision repealing the exemptions granted to the University of Texas, Austin, and Louisiana State University in 1986.

Football Coaches Pension Plans. On December 11, during its deliberations on the continuing resolution to fund the Federal government for the current fiscal year, the Senate adopted an amendment to the Employee Retirement Income Security Act that authorizes college football coaches to transfer their pension rights from institution to institution. The amendment was included in the final version of the continuing resolution signed by President Reagan December 22. According to its supporters, it will allow the American Football Coaches Association to establish a pension plan under Section 401(k) of the Internal Revenue Code.

Scholarships. H.R. 2649, which would reinstate full nontaxable status for scholarships and restore the tax deduction for interest paid on education loans, still has not been referred to a House Ways and Means subcommittee. The bill was introduced in June by Representatives Lancaster, D-North Carolina; Price, D-North Carolina; and Kennedy, D-Massachusetts, and now has 77 cosponsors.

Four other pending bills addressing tax issues relating to scholarships and student loans also have not been referred to a House Ways and Means subcommittee. H.R. 2670, introduced last June by Representative Henry, R-Michigan, is more limited than H.R. 2649 and would exclude from gross income amounts received for travel, research and living expenses. H.R. 592, introduced last January by Representative Schulze, R-Pennsylvania, and H.R. 603, introduced that month by Representative Tauke, R-Iowa, would restore the deduction for interest paid on student loans; and H.R. 3444, introduced on October 7 by Representative Donnelly, D-Massachusetts, would provide a credit for interest paid on education loans. A companion bill to H.R. 592, S. 628, was introduced in March by Senator Grassley, R-Iowa.

Graduation Rates. Hearings have not been scheduled on H.R. 355, the "College Athlete Education and Protection Act of 1987." The bill, introduced by Representative Howard, D-New Jersey, in January, would deny income tax deductions for contributions to be used in the intercollegiate athletics programs of higher education institutions that do not graduate 75 percent of their student-athletes within a five-year period after enrollment.

Government recognition of and support for athletics

Secretary of Education's Remarks. In a speech concerning competitive athletics delivered at an American Sportscasters Association Awards dinner December 3, Secretary of Education William J. Bennett spoke against what he called "sports-bashing." He said that "critics (who) think big sports programs are incompatible with education...do not understand the real value the educational value—of competitive athletics. They do not understand that a central purpose of sports is the experience of competition, challenge and achievement."

Olympic Coins. On October 28, President Reagan signed into law H.R. 2741, which authorizes the minting and sale of $1 and $5 coins to support the training of American athletes participating in the 1988 Olympics.

National Women in Sports Day. On December 3, the Senate passed S. J. Res. 196, which was introduced by Senator Packwood, R-Oregon, and would designate February 4, 1988, as "National Women in Sports Day." The resolution currently is pending before the House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

Drug-abuse prevention

White House Conference for a Drug-Free America. NCAA President Wilford S. Bailey has been advised that he is being appointed to serve on the White House Conference for a Drug-Free America. The Conference sponsored a series of regional meetings between November 1 and December 16 and will hold the national conference in Washington, D.C., February 28 through March 3.

Drug-Free Campuses. On November 6, NCAA Executive Director Richard D. Schultz wrote to Rep. E. Clay Shaw, R-Florida, in support of H. Res. 272, a resolution introduced by Shaw September 22 to express the sense of the House of Representatives that colleges and universities should demand drug-free campus environments and should enforce policies to eliminate drug use by students. The resolution, which now has 46 cosponsors, was referred to the House Education and Labor Subcommittee on Postsecondary Education.

Sale of Steroids. No hearings have been scheduled on H.R. 2928, which would amend the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetics Act to increase to felony status the crime of selling anabolic steroids without a prescription. The bill, which was introduced in July by Rep. Richard H. Baker, R-Louisiana, and referred to the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, now has 14 cosponsors.

National Youth Sports Program

FY 1988 Appropriation. As reported above, December 22 President Reagan signed into law a continuing resolution providing funding for the entire Federal government for fiscal year 1988. The continuing resolution, along with the budget reconciliation bill, implements the November 20 deficit-reduction agreement. Despite the climate in which the measure was passed, it allocates $6.319 million for the NYSP—an increase of $453,000 over last year's appropriation of $5.866 million.

The amount of the 1988 appropriation was set in a December 16 House-Senate conference on the labor, health and human services, and education portions of the continuing resolution. The House and Senate had allocated $7 million and $6.13 million in funding for the NYSP in their respective versions of the FY 1988 appropriations bill. Because of intense time pressures and the enormous number of issues to be addressed, the conferees reportedly "split the difference" on many items in disagreement, including the NYSP. According to staff, the conferees agreed to a $6.6 million appropriation for the NYSP, which is a little above the midpoint between the House and Senate levels. Because the conferees had not reached their spending-reduction targets in resolving their differences, the amounts they agreed to were cut by 4.26 percent across-the-board (to $6.139 million in the case of the NYSP).

Title IX

Litigation Developments. On December 16, 1987, the Supreme Court decided in Board of Regents v. Tilton, 489 U.S. 1, 103 S.Ct. 1217, 63 L.Ed.2d 531 (1987), that the federal government's loan guarantees to the University of Texas at Austin for the construction of a new library building did not violate Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972. ber 11, the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia dismissed WEAL v. Bennett, a 13-year-old suit against the Federal government. In previous orders issued in WEAL and related cases, the court had established mandatory time limits for the investigation of Title IX and

Form 1099 mailed to members

Copies of Internal Revenue Service form 1099—reflecting payments received from the NCAA during 1987—have been mailed to members of all Association committees, including the Presidents Commission, Council and Executive Committee.

The payments represent the per diem and "flat-rate" amounts received during the calendar year and must be declared by the committee members as income. However, only those individuals who received $600 or more from the Association were sent forms.

The Association is required under Federal tax laws to report those amounts paid to nonemployees and independent contractors. Expenses that are directly reimbursed, such as air travel for committee members, are not included on the form because they do not have to be reported as income.

To offset the amount reported as income on the 1099 forms, committee members should report as expenses the amounts paid for lodging, meals, entertainment and other appropriate expenditures related to the meetings attended.

This is the fifth year that the Association has reported the payments, as required.

Abernethy enters plea of not guilty

Former Atlanta sports agent Jim Abernethy January 22 entered an innocent plea to three misdemeanor counts stemming from payments he made to Auburn University football player Kevin Porter during the 1987 season.

Abernethy's written plea of innocent was entered at his circuit-court arraignment on charges that he tampered with a sports event, violated the Alabama deceptive-trade-practices act and violated commercial-bribery law.

The written plea allowed Abernethy to waive any personal appearance at the arraignment. He appeared in person last week to surrender on the charges and post a $1,000 bond.

His trial before Circuit Judge Robert Harper is scheduled February 29.

Abernethy, who says he is no longer a sports agent, disclosed in December that he had made payments during the 1987 season to Porter, a senior cornerback, as well as to other college athletes.

The disclosure resulted in Porter's being disqualified from participating in Auburn's Sugar Bowl contest with Syracuse University or any NCAA-sanctioned all-star game.

Alabama Attorney General Don Siegelman has said he hopes the Abernethy case will discourage sports agents from making similar contacts or payments that violate NCAA rules and can destroy a young athlete's collegiate career, the Associated Press reported.

other civil-rights complaints by the Department of Education. As a result of the dismissal, the department no longer will be required to process Title IX complaints within the court-ordered time frames. Plaintiffs reportedly will file an appeal.

Legislative Developments. Sponsors of S. 557, the "Civil Rights Restoration Act of 1987," hope to bring the measure to the Senate floor for debate early in 1988. The bill, which would make Title IX and three other civil-rights statutes institutional (rather than program-specific) in scope, currently has 58 cosponsors.

The companion bill to S. 557, H.R. 1214, which has 150 cosponsors, and the Administration-supported alternative, H.R. 1881, which has 11 cosponsors, remain pending before the House Committee on Education and Labor and the House Judiciary Committee. The House reportedly is waiting until the Senate acts before turning its attention to these bills.

College sports abuses
Financial Inducements to College Athletes. No action has been taken on H.R. 1637, the "Intercollegiate Athletics Integrity Act of 1987," which was introduced in March by Rep. Bryant, D-Texas. The bill would terminate Federal financial assistance to institutions that aid or abet in the corrupt offering or giving of financial inducements to college athletes, and would provide for criminal sanctions against individuals who make or offer such inducements. According to Bryant's staff, discussions are under way to refine the language of the bill, which has no cosponsors.

Proposed Commission on Intercollegiate Athletics. Hearings have not been scheduled on H.R. 2176, the "Commission on Intercollegiate Athletics Act of 1987," introduced last April by Rep. Luken, D-Ohio. According to Congressman Luken, the purpose of the Commission would be to study ways in which to stop abuses in college sports programs and to end the exploitation of student-athletes. In a meeting with NCAA Executive Director Schultz in mid-November, Luken stated that he did not intend to "push" his bill at the present time.

Copyright
1986 Cable Royalty Fees. On December 10, the Copyright Royalty Tribunal requested that all claimants file comments concerning whether it is necessary to commence a proceeding to distribute the over $60 million in 1986 fees.

Professional sports antitrust developments
Franchise Relocation and Division of Revenues. S. 782, the "Professional Sports Community Protection Act of 1987," remains pending before the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation. The bill would provide an antitrust exemption for the decisions of professional football, basketball and hockey leagues relating to franchise relocation and division of revenues.

Telecasting. On October 6, the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Antitrust, Monopolies and Business Rights held hearings on S. Res. 291, a resolution introduced by Sen. Specter, R-Pennsylvania, that expresses the sense of the Senate that the antitrust division of the U.S. Justice Department should study and report to the Congress on National Football League telecasting. Currently, Public Law 87-331 provides professional football, baseball, basketball and hockey with an antitrust exemption for agreements covering telecasting of their sports events, which is conditioned upon those leagues' not televising in conflict with certain high school and college football games. On November 20, Senators Specter and Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, sent a letter to the antitrust division requesting that it determine whether that antitrust exemption applies to cable television and pay-per-view services and report back within four months.

Charter bus rules
As previously reported, last April, the Urban Mass Transportation Administration ("UMTA") prohibited UMTA-funded companies from providing bus or van charter service when there is a private charter operator "willing and able" to provide the service. The UMTA staff currently is preparing a notice of proposed rulemaking that would exempt specified nonprofit groups from the prohibition. According to UMTA staff, however, the proposed exemption will not extend to postsecondary educational institutions or athletics teams.

Three-point field goal is living up to its billing

By James M. Van Valkenburg
NCAA Director of Statistics

The three-point goal in college basketball was supposed to open up the inside game, give the big players a chance to score more and put the outside shooter back in the game. The men's national midseason Division I trends show it is doing exactly that, thanks probably to an increased use of the three-pointer.

Last season, the first year of nationwide three-pointers, the average Division I game produced seven successful three-pointers in 18.25 attempts (both teams combined). At midseason 1988, successful three-pointers have increased to 7.6 per game, and attempts are up to 20.01 per game—an increase of 9.6 percent. Three-point accuracy is down a bit from 38.4 percent last year to 38 percent at midseason.

From another angle, 17.1 percent of all field-goal attempts now come from three-point range vs. 15.6 percent last year.

How do we know it has opened up the inside game? Because for the first time ever, we have a direct comparison involving shots from two-point range. Last year, all Division I players shot 47.9 percent from inside the three-point line. This year, that figure has jumped to 48.5 percent. In the past 25 years, using shots from all ranges, there has been only one larger increase in national field-goal accuracy.

Even though three-point accuracy is down, national field-goal accuracy from all ranges is 46.6 percent at midseason vs. 46.4 last year.

Scoring goes up

Scoring at midseason is up to 146.4 per game (both teams combined, all 3,987 games involving at least one of the nation's 290 Division I teams through January 16), compared to 145.5 last year. Last year, however, scoring would have been down from 138.7 in 1986 to 138.5 without the three-pointer, so one could not say it had opened up the inside game. Now, we are having a real increase, because scoring would be 138.8 without the three-pointer and shooting accuracy from two-point range has jumped. And the jump apparently is due to more use of the three-pointer.

"The three-pointer has surpassed my fondest expectations," says the father of the rule, Edward S. Steitz, secretary-rules editor of the NCAA Men's Basketball Rules Committee.

Helps produce upsets

Many coaches who once opposed the rule now favor it. Spectators are learning that it can help produce upsets. It is likely that Nebraska supporters never again will leave the arena with their team 14 points down and three minutes left. That was the case January 16, when Nebraska outscored Missouri's defending Big Eight Conference champions, 22-6, to win, 70-68.

"God bless the three-point rule," wrote Michael Kelly, sports editor of the Omaha World-Herald. "This is college basketball in the latter part of the Twentieth Century, the best game going." Of course, Missouri helped by missing free throws and fouling Nebraska players to put them on the line, but the three-pointer made the upset possible.

Conference leaders

The lists of the top five conferences in scoring and field-goal accuracy are dominated by four conferences, which are on both lists. In scoring, the Metropolitan Collegiate Athletic Conference leads the Big Eight by a narrow margin, 82.65 to 82.58 points per game, followed by the Big East Conference at 80.5, Atlantic Coast Conference 80.4 and

Big Ten Conference 80.3. In field-goal accuracy, it is the Big Ten 50, ACC 49.9, Big Eight 49.81 to 49.79 over the Big East, and the Western Athletic Conference fifth at 49.7 percent. In free-throw accuracy, the East Coast Conference leads at 72.6 percent, then the Big Ten 69.8, West Coast Athletic Conference 69.73, Big South Conference 69.70 and the Big Eight 69.3. The Big Ten is on all four lists; the Big Eight on three.

In three-point shooting, the Missouri Valley Conference is king, making 41.4 percent to lead in accuracy and scoring 5.37 per game to lead by a wide margin. In accuracy behind the Missouri Valley, the Big Ten nudges the East Coast 40.75 to 40.72; then come the West Coast would be down to 135.4 per game, so the rule has not yet opened up the inside game. The trend in women's basketball is the same as that in men's basketball a year ago. Probably over the next two seasons, more women will shoot the three-pointer, the inside will open up and scoring will increase. Not until next year will we have a direct comparison for two-point range.

Conference leaders

The Big Eight leads all conferences in scoring at 78 points per game, followed by the Southeastern Conference 76.9, ACC 76.6, Ohio Valley Conference 74.2 and High Country Athletic Conference 73.7. The SEC leads in field-goal accuracy at 47.3 percent. Next are the High

Florida International men's coach Rich Walker after his team ended a nine-game losing streak: "It's great getting the Magilla Gorilla off our backs." (Rich Kelch, Florida International SID)

Can you top these?

The North Coast Athletic Conference in Division III is above Division I levels in three-point shooting, making 4.3 per game per team in 10.75 attempts for 40 percent vs. 3.8 in 10 for all of Division I, which is shooting 38 percent. Can any Division III conference top that? (Dennis Collins, NCAC executive director)

The Southwestern Louisiana women's team made 10 three-pointers in one game and attempted 25 in another. Can any women's team in Division I top that this season? (Hank Largin, Southwestern Louisiana assistant SID)

Scholar-athletes

Four members of the 11-member women's team at Western Illinois achieved a perfect 4.000 grade-point average last semester and two are starters—sophomore Debbie Kirsch and freshman Dianne Ellefritz (also a starter in volleyball last fall). The entire team had a 3.211 grade-point average last semester and its players are 3.218 over their entire college careers. (Bonnie Barker, Western Illinois women's SID)

The Indiana State women's team combined for a 3.100 grade-point average last semester. These smart ladies also are off to State's best start since 1974—12-2 for all games and 5-1 in the Gateway Collegiate Athletic Conference. (Karen Griess, Indiana State associate SID)

Four members of the Webster men's team topped 3.000 in grade-point average last semester, led by sophomore Paul Berra with a perfect 4.000. Webster's starting five and sixth man combined for a 3.180 average. (John Arenberg, Webster SID)

Four players and one manager on the Augustana (South Dakota) women's team made the dean's list last semester, which requires a 3.300 or better grade-point average. Players Lori Anderson, Fran Knoll and Bridget Lindquist and manager Heidi Burgers all had perfect 4.000 marks. The fifth was junior Darla Wienk. The first four are freshmen. (Steve Matthies, Augustana SID)

The Alabama women's team has two players who earned perfect 4.000 grade-point averages last semester—senior Shelly Pyles and sophomore Julie Beaty. Pyles, a prepharmacy major, is Alabama's career record-holder in assists and steals. Beaty, an education/communication major, is the first player off the bench. Both made the president's list and the dean's list. (Becky Hopf, Alabama women's SID)

Family affairs

Senior center Tom Thompson, who leads Nebraska-Omaha in scoring, rebounding, assists and steals, recently moved past his father, Dean Thompson Sr., on the all-time UNO career scoring list, 919 to 883, but trails his brother, Dean Jr., the career leader at 1,816 (1980-1984). (Gary Anderson, Nebraska-Omaha SID)

At UC Riverside, forward Bill Turner's father, Bill Sr., played in the NBA with the Los Angeles Lakers from 1966 to 1970, while guard Reggie Howard is a cousin of Reggie Theus of the Sacramento Kings. (Tony Phillips, UC Riverside SID)

Three members of the Barry team are first cousins to famous athletes—Todd Collins to Florida quarterback Kerwin Bell, Alberto Nadal to Miami (Florida) 7-footer Tito Horford and Robert Tucker to Kansas City Chiefs return specialist Michael Clemons. (Eddie Cappa, Barry SID)

Like family

Rollins has a small "family" of sorts on its squad. Five players and head coach Tom Klusman all are products of St. Xavier High School, Cincinnati, Ohio. The five players are the Wolf brothers, Jeff and Dan, among the national leaders in scoring and three-point shooting; Andy Holman; Scott Martin, and Mike Reeves. It all started when Cincinnati's great former coach, Ed Jucker, came to Rollins in 1972 and immediately turned the program around. Klusman was one of his first recruits.

It is like a family or school reunion at Calvin every time the women's team takes the court. The Lady Knights have three graduates of Unity Christian, Hudsonville, Michigan, in the starting lineup (Julie Post, Sally Huyser and Karen Hiemstra) and another (Annette Post) is the first player off the bench. And a fourth starter (Sara Onversma) went to Covenant Christian, about 10 miles from Unity. (Phil deHaan, Calvin SID)

Quiz answer: Kentucky and Indiana are next with five championships each. Six colleges have won two each (Cincinnati, Louisville, North Carolina, North Carolina State, Oklahoma State and San Francisco) and 17 have one each. Summing it up, only 26 colleges have won the Division I men's championship.

Final Four Quiz:

UCLA is on top with 10 NCAA men's basketball championships, which equals the number won by the next two colleges combined. Name the two schools. Answer later.

Athletic Conference 40.6 and the Pacific-10 Conference at 40 percent.

Eleven conferences are scoring at least four three-pointers per game. In second place is the ACC, edging the Pacific Coast Athletic Association, 4.60 to 4.57, then the Ivy Group 4.53, East Coast 4.33, the new American South Athletic Conference 4.26, Pac-10 4.19, WCAC 4.05, Metro 4.022 to 4.019 for the Colonial Athletic Association, and the Southwestern Athletic Conference 4.00.

Women going for three

Women are using the three-pointer nationwide for the first time this season, and the midseason figures surely must be a surprise to those who predicted it would be little used because of its difficulty.

The national accuracy figure in women's Division I basketball at midseason is 33.1 percent, or only 4.9 percentage points below the men's figure. But that should not be a surprise, because the women's accuracy figure has been running a little less than four points behind the men's in recent years.

Use of the three-pointer tends to be more of an individual thing in the women's game, at least so far. The women are attempting 8.59 three-pointers per game at midseason and making 2.84, both teams combined. Only 6.75 percent of all field-goal attempts are three-pointers. One factor is different—the women use a 30-second clock, the men a 45-second clock.

Scoring is 138.2 at midseason (both teams combined, all 3,702 games involving at least one of the 280 Division I teams). That is up slightly from 138 in 1987; but without the three-point rule, scoring

Country 46.6, Southern Conference 45.8, Big Eight 45.7 and Southwest Athletic Conference 45.5. In free-throw accuracy, the North Star Conference edges the ACC, 69.91 to 69.88, followed by the Gateway Collegiate Athletic Conference 69.3, Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference 69 and High Country 68.4.

Six conferences are shooting above 36 percent from three-point range—Metro Atlantic 39.2, Metro 38.8, Mountain West Athletic Conference 37.9, Big Eight 37.3, Midwestern Collegiate Conference 36.9 and Ivy 36.4. Ten conferences are scoring at least 1.7 three-pointers per game—Southwestern Athletic Conference 2.41, Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference 2.37, Ohio Valley 2.05, American South 2.01, Big South 1.88, Big East 1.86, Southland Conference 1.83, ACC 1.81, Midwestern 1.75 and Pac-10 1.74.

Quotes of the week

Louisiana Tech swingman Byron Newton returned to the lineup after an injury and turned in an outstanding all-around performance in a victory over Southwestern Louisiana. Said his coach, Tommy Eagles: "He is to our team's chemistry what sugar is to Kool-Aid—he makes it better." (Keith Prince, Louisiana Tech SID)

Assistant coach Ed Beglane, reflecting on the Niagara men's 3-9 start: "Coaching our team is like being in the Navy—it's not a job, it's an adventure." (Jim Mauro, Niagara SID)

Webster men's coach Ken Baxter, after his assistant, Jim Rossow, accepted a job as sports editor of the Mohave Daily Miner in Kingman, Arizona: "We've been trying to improve media coverage, but I never

Shorter backboard finds favor in Southern Conference

For the second consecutive basketball season, the Southern Conference is testing, under game conditions and with the approval of the NCAA, a rectangular glass backboard that is one foot shorter than backboards in use around the country.

The experimental equipment, which provides a full 12 inches of additional clearance from the present backboards (four feet by six feet), was designed to achieve maximum safety advantages to players and significantly reduce liability problems.

The 3-foot-by-5-foot-6-inch board is being used in all home games played by the nine conference member schools and also will be tested in the league's postseason NCAA qualifying tournament, March 4 through 6 at the Asheville, North Carolina, Civic Center.

All members of the NCAA Men's Basketball Rules Committee used the board on their practice courts in the 1985-86 season, the first step taken prior to activating a conference-wide experimentation under game conditions. The Southern Conference agreed to test the board last season, and the response from coaches and players was positive.

"Due to the unanimous acceptance of the backboard by all of our head coaches," explained league Commissioner Dave Hart, "the decision was made to continue the testing into this season. The board provides distinct safety advantages to players, and to spectators, as well."

In addition to cutting off a foot at the bottom of the backboard, the new configuration allows the goal to pass beneath the backboard frame and attach itself to the rear support structure.

"This system eliminates holes through the glass and completely isolates the backboard to protect the glass no matter how much weight or dynamic shock loads are exerted on the goal," explained Ed Schroeder, vice-president for engineering for Porter Equipment Company of Schiller Park, Illinois, designer and manufacturer of the equipment.

"It thereby makes the backboard virtually indestructible under normal playing conditions," added Schroeder. "The weight a normal glass board can take in terms of stress is 435 pounds, applied to the tip of the rim in front of the glass, before the glass shatters. Now, according to independent testing, more than 4,300 pounds of stress can be placed on the front without any failure."

In addition to the Southern Conference experimentation, the board was successfully used in the 1987 NABC (National Association of Basketball Coaches) all-America game in New Orleans. It has also been used in many high school tournament games, with favorable results.

Appalachian State University men's coach Tom Apke, a former member of the NCAA's rules group, says he is "always looking at ways to improve the game," and thus likes the new board. "I'm particularly concerned about the injury factor," said Apke. "By removing 12 inches from the bottom of the board, it gives us a safer product. My observation is that it doesn't alter the game and makes it safer. It's a real plus."

The testing in the Southern has shown that it is not a hindrance to the game. In some cases, players were not aware of the difference in the size the first time they shot at the basket. In most instances, players adjusted to the board in one practice session.

Tom Apke

Joe Cantafio

"I like the theory behind it," remarked Joe Cantafio, men's coach at Virginia Military Institute. "My first reaction was 'Oh, my God,' because I thought they'd be difficult to shoot at. But the players had just the opposite reaction, because all you see is the orange basket rim."

East Tennessee State University coach Les Robinson, the dean of conference coaches (11 years at The Citadel, three at East Tennessee State) was one of the first to use the shortened board on his practice court, during the 1985-86 season.

"The biggest negative about the board is that when we play a non-conference opponent on the road, we have to readjust to the old boards. As far as I am concerned, the new configuration required little time for our players to get used to. It fits just like a glove. We are very pleased with it."

Southern Conference coaches will submit, for the second year, a completed questionnaire to the NCAA's rules committee, reporting on all facets of the experimental equipment. "The reports will be reviewed at the committee's meetings in Kansas City during the NCAA Final Four," explained J. Dallas Shirley, supervisor of officials for the Southern and coordinator of the league's experiment.

"In the 1½ seasons that we have used the shorter backboard, virtually all comments from our coaches, players and spectators have been favorable. I am encouraged by the potential this presents to substantially reduce injuries to the head, hands and arms."

Shirley, a member of the Basketball Hall of Fame, recently completed a six-year term as a member of the NCAA rules committee and as chair of its research subcommittee. It was during his tenure on the committee that the Southern was chosen as the first NCAA Division I conference to experiment with the three-point field goal (1980-81 season).

Minority hiring studied

University of Kansas athletics director Bob Frederick and Rudy Washington, executive director of the Black Coaches Association, said January 25 that they have developed a plan for recruiting Blacks for head-coaching jobs.

The two issued a statement saying they have reached agreement "in principle" on a plan, the details of which were withheld until a written agreement is signed, said KU sports information director Doug Vance.

"The plan developed by consultations by the University of Kansas athletics director and the Black Coaches Association executive director is expected to provide an exemplary model for adoption by other institutions' programs," the statement said.

Washington, who is an assistant basketball coach at the University of Iowa, and Frederick, whose school came under attack last month after hiring a new football coach, met in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, to work out the agreement, Vance told United Press International.

The criticism of KU's hiring program came from Harry Edwards, a California consultant to the Black Coaches Association who blasted Frederick and KU for allegedly snubbing black applicants while looking for a new head football coach.

Washington sought Frederick's help in developing a plan in response to Edwards' criticism. Frederick had said the only minority candidates who applied for the coaching job were not qualified for the post.

The statement issued by Washington and Frederick said Washington reviewed KU's affirmative-action plan and found it to be satisfactory.

Scholarship deadline February 26

Nominations for NCAA postgraduate scholarships for men's and women's basketball players must be mailed by February 26 to the appropriate district selection committee chair, as outlined in the nomination folder that will be mailed to all NCAA member institutions.

A total of 20 scholarships (10 for men and 10 for women) of $4,000 each will be awarded by the NCAA Postgraduate Scholarship Committee, which, since 1964, has been honoring outstanding student-athletes from NCAA member institutions who excel academically and athletically.

Eight scholarships (four for men and four for women) will be allocated to Division I student-athletes, and eight (four for men and four for women) will be awarded in Divisions II and III. The remaining four scholarships (two for men and two for women) will be awarded at large.

Faculty athletics representatives are responsible for collecting the complete nomination forms and forwarding them, along with an official transcript of the candidate's academic record, to the appropriate district selection committee chair.

Each institution is asked to limit its nominations to one male student-athlete and one female student-athlete. Institutional representatives and student-athletes must complete the five forms included in the scholarship folder.

The Association annually awards 100 postgraduate scholarships of $4,000 each. In addition to the 20 scholarships for basketball student-athletes, 25 are presented to football participants and 55 to varsity athletes in sports other than football and basketball in which the NCAA sponsors championship competition.

Additional information may be obtained by contacting Fannie B. Vaughan, executive assistant, at the NCAA national office.

Experiment with graphite bat approved

A graphite composite bat has been approved by the NCAA Baseball Committee for use on an experimental basis during the 1988 season.

In order for the bat to be used in an official game, however, mutual consent must be given by the competing teams' coaches.

As of January 26, only the Worth graphite bat, model TRX-1, has been tested and approved experimentally by the committee.

Graphite bat models must be tested by an independent testing agency and given final approval by the NCAA Baseball Committee before they can be used in official contests involving NCAA member institutions.

"Based on results from a manufacturer's study and an ongoing independent testing agency study, the NCAA Baseball Committee feels this bat more closely performs and sounds like the traditional wood bat," said Amherst College coach Bill Thurston, secretary-rules editor of the committee. "At the same time, we feel the bat will be as durable and popular as the aluminum bat."

Coaches with players using the graphite bat are responsible for notifying umpires during the pre-game meeting that both coaches have agreed to the use of the bat.

Meanwhile, the committee will monitor game-condition results and further independent testing of the graphite composite bat, which is being conducted by the aerospace engineering faculty at Mississippi State University.

Drug testing

ber 1987 that limited the Association's drug-testing program at Stanford to student-athletes in men's basketball and football for specified substances. Twenty-six sports at the school were exempted from testing.

The NCAA later sought a full hearing, which Rushing granted in December.

Two Stanford student-athletes had sought the injunction early in 1987, claiming their rights of privacy were violated by drug-testing procedures.

Rushing found the NCAA program in violation of both California and U.S. constitutions, but he later revised his ruling to exclude violations of the U.S. Constitution.

Extensive security network planned for Summer Olympics

By Barry Renfrew

The 1988 Summer Olympics could be the most heavily guarded event in the history of sports, with a massive army poised to prevent any attempt to disrupt the Games.

South Korea is stepping up security measures for the Games, to be attended by a record 161 nations, following the bombing of a civilian jet in an attack widely blamed on archrival North Korea. South Korea says its communist opponent is determined to disrupt the Olympics.

"It is a stark reality that there exists a state of serious tension between the south and north due to the north's malicious plotting to disrupt the Olympics in Seoul," South Korean President Chun Doo-hwan said in a January 22 speech.

Hundreds of thousands of police, security agents and soldiers will help guard the Games, along with a vast array of sophisticated security devices. Warships and warplanes will patrol, as army units go on alert across South Korea well before the Olympics begin.

The 40,000 U.S. soldiers based in South Korea will be on alert alongside the South Korean army on the North Korean border during the Games. U.S. officials have said aircraft carriers and other navy units may be moved into the region to boost defenses.

South Korean and U.S. officials do not expect North Korea to launch a full-scale military attack. But they are concerned about terrorist attacks and sabotage.

North Korea is demanding to cohost the Games, which have become the focus of the fierce struggle between the two Koreas to become the dominant nation on the divided Korean peninsula. The two nations still are at war technically, since a peace treaty never was signed at the end of the Korean War in 1953.

South Korea sees the Olympic Games as the crowning touch of the enormous economic growth in recent years that has transformed it into an emerging power. It also sees the Games as proof that the world accepts it as superior to North Korea.

The bitter hatred between the two nations was brought home January 15 when a woman confessed that she was a North Korean agent and had put a bomb on a South Korean airliner that was destroyed November 29, with the loss of all 115 people on board. She said the plane was destroyed to wreck the Olympics.

North Korea has denied it was responsible for the plane attack, but the United States and other nations agree the north was behind the attack. North Korea has staged terrorist attacks before.

North Korean agents killed 20 people, including four south Korean cabinet ministers, in a bombing attack in Rangoon, Burma, in 1983. A bombing that killed five people at Seoul's Kimpoo Airport on the eve of the Asian Games in 1986 was blamed on North Korea.

South Korean officials also are concerned about international terrorists attempting to disrupt the Games. A top member of the Japanese Red Army terrorist group arrested in Tokyo late last year was on his way to South Korea for what security officials say may have been a reconnaissance mission.

South Korean security officials are determined to ensure that nothing will go wrong and are planning a massive security shield to protect the Olympics, which run September 17 to October 2.

"Given the hostility of North Korea and the possibility of its involvement in Olympic terrorism, we have left no stone unturned to secure safety," said Olympic security chief Hwang Kyu-ung.

The South Korean military will be on alert, with the 520,000-strong army standing guard along the border to safeguard Seoul, which is just 30 miles from the border.

North Korea has the sixth largest armed forces in the world even though its population ranks just 40th. The north also has the world's largest commando force—80,000 troops skilled in secret operations.

Olympic officials say some 120,000 police and security agents will be mobilized to guard the some 280 Olympic sites and other facilities. The country's many security and intelligence agencies will play key roles, and most of the security plans are secret.

Special regiments of combat police assigned to protect Olympic stadiums and other facilities already are guarding the sites. Elite police and army commando units will watch for terrorists.

The Olympic Park in southern Seoul has been equipped with a huge array of 117,000 security gadgets. The electronic security measures include metal detectors at all entrances, television cameras watching all areas and X-ray machines that can detect plastic explosives, which escape most detectors.

A high-security fence surrounding the Olympic Park is wired so that guards are warned immediately if an intruder attempts to get over. The athletes' village, where competitors will live, is to be ringed by three security fences.

"We won't allow ourselves to heave a final sigh of relief until the last airplane transporting the participants takes off safely for home," said one official.

Renfrew writes for the Associated Press.

Haney warns MVC teams about fights

Missouri Valley Conference Commissioner James A. Haney has notified member institutions and their head basketball coaches that players involved in fighting during games could be subject to suspension.

Haney warned of possible suspensions after reviewing videotapes of a bench-clearing incident at the Drake-Indiana State game in Des Moines, Iowa, January 7.

Haney wrote: "A coach or player participating in a fight will be subject to penalties that could include suspension for one or more games, including permanent suspension for the season, depending upon the severity of the misconduct."

Haney also instructed the coaches to maintain control along the bench area if a fight between players breaks out on the court.

Haney said, "When a coach, player or players leave the bench area during a fight or possible fight between players who have been playing in the game, the head coach will be suspended for a minimum of one game."

Haney said he has issued private reprimands to the individuals involved in the fight in the Drake-Indiana State game. No further action will be taken.

on the floor was totally out of position," Iba was quoted as saying. "The lead official was blocked out, and the trail official is not even in the picture. I'm kind of tired of officials' making these kind of calls two games in a row and putting us in a hole we might not be able to get out of."

Baylor lost to Southern Methodist University in triple overtime four days earlier when it was called for charging with 10 seconds to go in the third overtime, trailing by one point.

Baylor had taken the lead with seven seconds to play, and a length-of-the-court pass by A&M was ruled out of bounds off a Baylor player under the A&M basket. The in-bounds pass went to McDonald, who made the winning basket.

Iba argued that the referees ruled improperly on the long pass. He said a videotape showed that McDonald touched the ball last before it went out of bounds, the Associated Press reported.

Men's water polo appears to be making comeback

By Ted A. Breidenthal
The NCAA News Staff

The collegiate water polo community, just three years ago, lived in fear of elimination; of having to dismantle its varsity water polo programs, assemble club teams and forget about an NCAA Men's Water Polo Championship.

Water polo's status as an NCAA championship was in serious jeopardy. The number of schools that offered the sport at the varsity level had dwindled to 53, perilously close to the minimum of 50 necessary to conduct the event.

That's when Monte Nitzkowski, salesman, hit the road.

U.S. microbus tour

On February 5, 1985, Nitzkowski, who coaches water polo at Long Beach City College and served as junior college representative to the NCAA Men's Water Polo Committee, and wife Barbara loaded their 1978 Volkswagen van and started an 18,000-mile journey across the United States.

During the 95-day trip, they visited schools at the Divisions I, II and III levels, talking with athletics directors, coaches, student-athletes and anyone else who would listen to their sales pitch.

That sales pitch turned out to be just the answer. It went, simply, like this: U.S. Water Polo Inc., the national governing body of water polo, had agreed to provide grants totaling $6,000 over three years to institutions that wanted to start intercollegiate water polo programs.

The trip was a success. Nine schools agreed to accept the grant and initiate a varsity water polo program.

Monte Nitzkowski

A number of schools were influenced by the grant, Nitzkowski said. "I also think that at the Division II and Division III levels, it paid dividends more than at the Division I level, because a lot of those schools were looking for another sport."

One thing Nitzkowski observed during his barnstorming trip was the variation in economic health at the institutions.

"But, if you have the facilities and a competitive swimming program, (then) financially, water polo is a wash. For one thing, it counts as one of the sports required for NCAA membership, and it can be done at minimal cost."

The grant program is very simple—no strings attached.

"We started the grant program because we were afraid the NCAA would drop water polo as a championship sport," said Nitzkowski, an all-America swimmer at UCLA in 1951.

"U.S. Water Polo will provide the starter funds to institutions that want to add water polo as a varsity sport. In return, we have a developmental base for our Olympic team. It all boils down to the schools giving back to the Olympic effort." Development

The NCAA is instrumental to the development of water polo, as are high school programs across the country.

Said Nitzkowski, "As far as dollars and cents are concerned, the money is just not there to develop water polo as a club sport. Developing a team sport at the club level is virtually impossible."

"With our long-range goal focusing on a strong, internationally competitive Olympic team, we have to develop players at the high school and collegiate levels. So far, we have created a developmental base that can compete with the top powers of international water polo."

"U.S. Water Polo's showcase is the NCAA championship and the U.S. Olympic team. To that end, the NCAA is an essential step in the developmental process. We've got to continue the developmental-base process to compete at the Olympic level."

Popularity, ability growing

The popularity of water polo has grown considerably in the past three years, especially in the East (previously, varsity programs were found predominantly on the West Coast). At the same time, the skill level has improved dramatically across the board. Twenty-six Eastern institutions sponsor men's water polo as a varsity sport, and more are on the threshold.

"The sport has really grown in numbers and popularity because of a total group effort by coaches, referees, administrators and players to promote the game," said John Benedick, water polo coach at Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "It's been a total community effort by everyone connected with the sport, not a singular or separate group. It's people like Monte Nitzkowski touring the country and promoting the sport. That's what water polo is all about."

Ed Reed, water polo coach at Brown University, says the sport is growing "by leaps and bounds" in the East, although it still has a way to go.

"The level of ability is growing on the East Coast. A few of the schools with continental pull—schools like Navy, Brown, Harvard and Yale—can recruit kids from California. But some of the lesser-known schools have a difficult time pulling kids from the West Coast to the East."

"It's awfully difficult to compete against the California teams. We're just too young and too inexperienced."

"I run a water polo camp every year, and I know (Navy water polo coach) Mike Schofield does, too. Each year, the level of ability gets better and better. And these kids will probably stay in the East to go to school. The future looks bright."

The 58-year-old Nitzkowski, who was a member of the 1952 U.S. Olympic swimming team, Olympic coach in 1972, and national-team and Olympic coach from 1977 to 1984, looks at water polo as a natural, logical counterpart to an institution's swimming program.

"I think water polo would be very attractive if you have a pool and a swimming program. The two sports can work well together. Matt Biondi (of the University of California, Berkeley), who is a world-class swimmer as well as an excellent water polo player, is a perfect example. His participation on the water polo team has, in effect, made him a better swimmer and brought prestige to two of the university's programs."

"Some coaches view water polo as a threat. We view it as a means to expand your program, to offer the student-athlete more."

Nitzkowski is grateful that U.S. Water Polo can help support collegiate water polo. He hopes that water polo sponsorship will increase from 57 institutions to more than 60 before next season and approach 70 institutions in the next three years.

"We consider what we do with water polo a part of the NCAA family. We're not even thinking about elimination any more. We need the NCAA, and that is why we are very supportive."

Further information about starting a varsity collegiate water polo program can be obtained by writing or calling Nitzkowski at Long Beach City College, Department of Physical Education, 4901 E. Carson Street, Long Beach, California 90808; 213/420-4240.

Regional basketball coverage outdrawing national telecasts

During remarks made at the Presidents Commission National Forum in Nashville, Neal H. Pilson of CBS Sports noted that regional syndicators of college basketball games get better ratings in the areas they serve than do any of the networks. Raycom Sports' January newsletter backs up Pilson's claim.

According to figures published in Raycom Communique, its 1987 telecasts of conference action in five regions drew ratings significantly higher than games carried by ABC, CBS and NBC. Raycom's Atlantic Coast Conference coverage commanded the largest number of viewers (12.3 rating), but regional telecasts of Metro, Southwest, Big Eight and Pac-10/PCAA games also outdistanced the networks in their respective regions.

In other sports-television news, the A.C. Nielsen Company recently reported that all-sports ESPN now is being received in 26.1 million subscriber households—52 percent of American homes with televisions.

How Come You Never Hear About These? Department: Steve Rainey stands tall at Pan American University. On the basketball floor, the 7-0 sophomore is the No. 2 center on the men's team. In the classroom, the Navarre, Ohio, native was one of only 73 students to make a perfect 4.000 grade-point average during the fall 1987 semester. Rainey earned A's in accounting, business law, American literature, French and biology—16 credit hours in all.

At Northwestern (Louisiana) State University, assistant football coach/academic adviser Donnie Cox was all smiles when fall 1987 grades were posted. And with good reason—18 Demon players were named to the dean's list with 3.000 GPAs or higher. "That's more than double (the number of players on the honor roll) we've ever had before," Cox noted.

Hollins College student-athlete Amy Morgan probably would welcome days with more than 24 hours. The 5-7 senior guard is among Old Dominion Athletic Conference leaders in scoring, field-goal percentage, assists and rebounds. After the basketball season, she likely will pick up her tennis racket and attempt to return to the Division III Women's Tennis Championships, where she and partner Amy Ware advanced to the 1986 semifinals.

Away from the athletics fields, the Huntsville, Texas, native is a dean's list student who serves as student government athletics association president and as a sports reporter for the school paper. The economics major is a member of the Omicron Delta Kappa national leadership society and is considering law school.

Mount Union College will donate more than $700 to multiple sclerosis research from ticket sales for the school's Carnation City Basketball Classic, which was held December 29-30.

As was reported in this column December 16, Mount Union head coach Jim Dafler came up with the idea of donating half of all ticket sales to MS, which amounted to $491 (total sales were $982). In addition, the school received

Briefly in the News

$213 in donations from people who could not attend any of the games.

"We are very proud of the coaches and players who got involved in this service project," said athletics director Larry Kehres. "We also are extremely grateful for the fine support of the community and media in this worthy endeavor."

Richard Dippel, father of Mount Union player Jim Dippel, and Janet Rector, whose son, Ken, plays on the team, are afflicted with the deadly disease.

Trivia Time: Mary T. Meagher recently was honored by the NCAA (as one of Today's Top Six in the College Athletics Top XII at the 1988 honors luncheon) and as winner of the Broderick Cup, given annually to America's outstanding female athlete. How many NCAA swimming titles did she win during her collegiate career? Answer later.

What began as the championship game of a holiday tournament December 30 ended—the next day—as the longest college hockey game in history.

According to The Hockey News, Clarkson University's Mike Morrison scored at 9:28 of the fourth overtime to give his team a 7-6 victory over Colgate University in the Syracuse Invitational tournament. The game lasted 99 minutes, 28 seconds—2:17 longer than the 1984 Division I championship final between Bowling Green State University and the University of Minnesota, Duluth, previously the longest game on record.

The Hockey News also reported that Colgate, following this marathon contest, played back-to-back overtime games against Western Michigan University and Ohio State University in the Riverfront Classic in Cincinnati.

Portland State University President Natale A. Sicuro has appointed two special committees to deal with issues relating to the financing of intercollegiate athletics, following approval last month by the state board of higher education of a proposal to move the school's athletics programs from Division II to Division I.

According to a news release from Portland State, the athletics financial management committee has been charged with establishing "a clear-cut and strict process of budget planning, development, execution, accounting, monitoring and evaluation." The athletics development committee will work with the university's foundation and with the Viking Athletic Association to raise adequate revenue to fund the school's athletics programs now and in the future.

Trivia Answer: Mary T. Meagher won six NCAA individual swimming titles—two in the 100-yard butterfly (1985 and 1987) and four in the 200-yard butterfly (1983, 1985, 1986 and 1987). She and former University of Florida diver Megan Neyer are the only women swimmers ever to win four NCAA championships in the same event (Neyer did it in both one- and three-meter diving, "owning" them in 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1986).

Bradley University men's basketball players recently became crime fighters for a couple of hours.

After a January 2 game against Loyola University (Illinois), the team stopped at a fast-food restaurant in Chicago. Manager Mike Egel was robbed of $180 inside the store by an 18-year-old man who fled on foot.

Seniors Jerry Thomas and Bruce Mordini caught the robber after an eight-block chase and held him until police arrived. Ninety minutes later, after the filing of a police report, team members returned to the restaurant and ate an "uneventful" postgame meal.
