Rep. Conte says NYSP can count on his help

The 1988 National Youth Sports Program workshop in Arlington, Virginia, March 3-5, brought project administrators together with Congressional representatives and speakers with expertise in various phases of NYSP.

A luncheon on Capitol Hill celebrating the 20th anniversary of the program featured speeches by Rep. Lindy Boggs, D-Louisiana; Sen. Quentin Burdick, D-North Dakota, and Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Massachusetts.

Rep. Bill Green, R-New York, and Rep. Ralph Regula, R-Ohio, were among other Congressional representatives in attendance. The luncheon also featured a presentation by participants from the University of District of Columbia's NYSP project.

"It is a good program," Rep. Conte said. "Yet, every year, somebody tries to give me a good fight on this. The administration proposed wiping out the program altogether last year. We cannot accept these cuts, yet we have to stay within the limits set by the deficit-reduction deal agreed to last December. You know where I will be this year—right where I always am, out in

Whatever it took, Bruins had it

(The seventh of a 10-part series commemorating the 50th anniversary of the NCAA Final Four)

He won with teams dominated by a big, talented center. He won with teams that were filled with guards and forwards. He won with teams that fell somewhere in between big and small.

In the history of the NCAA Division I Men's Basketball Championship, no one has won more games and championships than John Wooden. Year after year, in the late 1960s and early 1970s Wooden's University of California, Los Angeles, Bruins dominated college basketball. He had a 47-10 career record in tournament games, including an incredible 38 straight victories in the sudden-death atmosphere of the postseason.

"The championships were all very important to me, but I think our record in tournament play was maybe the most special thing those teams did," Wooden said recently. "They faced elimination every time they stepped on the floor. I think it's a great testimony to what fine young

Flexibility allowed in granting Bylaw 5-1-(j) waiver hearings

An NCAA Council subcommittee has given itself leeway to determine whether it will hear requests for academically justified Bylaw 5-1-(j) waivers that previously would have been rejected automatically.

By changing one word in its waiver-application procedure, the Council Subcommittee on Bylaw 5-1-(j) Exceptions has left open the possibility that it will hear waiver requests that fall short of meeting previously established "threshold criteria" (see February 17, 1988, issue of The NCAA News). The subcommittee now says an application "should," rather than "must," meet the criteria before it will be considered.

"The subcommittee didn't want to preclude itself completely from considering applications that approach meeting the threshold requirements but do not meet them across the board," explained Daniel T. Dutcher, NCAA legislative assistant who serves as a staff liaison to the subcommittee.

The action was taken after concerns about the rigidity of the requirements were expressed by Division I conference commissioners who participated in a late-February seminar in Kansas City, Missouri.

Divisions I and II voted at the January Convention to authorize the Council to grant exceptions to the initial-eligibility requirements of Bylaw 5-1-(j) in cases where a member institution provides "objective evidence" that a student's overall academic record warrants such an exception.

As a result, the Council subcommittee was formed; and in February, it established principles and procedures for member institutions to follow in applying for waivers. Among the threshold criteria set forth by the subcommittee were minimum grade-point averages for student-athletes who meet standardized-test requirements but fall short on core-course requirements, or vice versa. The criteria also defined what constitutes an "acceptable" standardized test.

Although the subcommittee has opened a door for applicants who fall short of meeting the criteria, it has not changed the actual criteria, Dutcher emphasized. The action merely gives the subcommittee discretion to hear cases that automatically would have been excluded from consideration before.

To date, the subcommittee has heard 14 requests for waivers and is tentatively scheduled to conduct its next hearing during an April 13 telephone conference. The calls are being scheduled as needed to handle waiver requests.

June Forum on Commission's agenda

A review of planning for the Presidents Commission National Forum scheduled for June 20-21 tops the agenda for the Commission's regular spring meeting April 6-7 at the Westin Peachtree Plaza Hotel in Atlanta.

President Bernard F. Sliger of Florida State University, chair of the Commission's Ad Hoc Committee on the National Forum, will report to the group on plans for the June 20-21 Forum session in Orlando, Florida. The Commission also will receive a progress report on the Forum-related research being conducted by the American Institutes for Research.

Each of the Commission's three division subcommittees will discuss the June Forum plans from the perspective of the respective divisions.

Another major topic on the agenda for the Atlanta meeting is the continuing interest by a number of presidents and chancellors in some type of freshman ineligibility in intercollegiate athletics. The Division I, Division I-A and Division

II subcommittees all are scheduled to discuss that issue, including the possibility of legislation that may be submitted by NCAA members in that regard at the 1989 annual Convention.

The Division II subcommittee also will review the current academic requirements for athletics eligibility in that division, and the Division III subcommittee will discuss the Division III financial aid legislation in light of the actions of the Division III membership in January.

Other topics on the agenda for the full Commission:

- The concept of a seminar or other type of orientation for chief executive officers at NCAA Conventions.

- A status report on implementation of the legislative provisions promulgated by the Commission and adopted at the June 1985 "integrity" Convention.

- A report by NCAA Executive Director Richard D. Schultz on his recent meetings with representatives of the Association of Governing Boards and the American Council on Education.

- Status reports on NCAA drug-education and drug-testing programs, as well as player-agent issues.

Chancellor John B. Slaughter, University of Maryland, College Park, will chair the full Commission

Young to represent Pac-10 on Presidents Commission

Charles E. Young, chancellor of the University of California, Los Angeles, has been appointed by the Pacific-10 Conference to succeed Ira Michael Heyman of the University of California, Berkeley, on the NCAA Presidents Commission.

Heyman resigned from the Commission after serving since it was formed in 1984. He was the Commission's Division I and Division I-A chair in 1986 and 1987 and was instrumental in launching the group's 18-month National Forum.

Young, UCLA's chancellor for the past 20 years, has been active in athletics matters, both in the NCAA and in the American Council on Education, throughout that period. He was a member of the NCAA-funded Select Committee on Athletic Problems and Concerns in Higher Education in 1982-1983.

A native Californian, Young earned his bachelor's degree at the University of California, Riverside, after military service in the Korean War. He was Cal Riverside's first student-body president. He earned a master's degree and John Vallely and Henry Bibby, and forwards Sidney Wicks and Curtis Rowe, the Bruins proved to be of championship caliber. Wooden was forced to be more creative, and he pulled his team out of the low-post offense that had featured Alcindor and put them in a high-post, running offense that would highlight the outstanding quickness of Wicks and Rowe.

The Bruins beat a Jacksonville team that featured a front line of 7-2 Artis Gilmore, 7-0 Pembroke Burrows and 6-10 Rod McIntyre, winning a fourth straight title, 80-69. They did it again in 1971, beating Villanova in the championship game, 68-62.

There would be two more championships, as sophomore center Bill Walton joined the team. He would do things that only Alcindor had done before, and the inevitable comparisons between the two began.

"Alcindor was the most valuable player I ever coached," Wooden recalled. "Walton was the second most valuable. Walton could do more things at a higher level than Alcindor. But the things Alcindor did well, he did as well as anyone I have ever seen."

"The fact was that both were excellent team players who had no trouble working within the concept of a team. That is what made them so great."

Joining Walton in the starting lineup were Bibby and Greg Lee and forwards Keith Wilkes and Larry Farmer. UCLA won the 1972 championship, beating Florida State, 81-76.

Wooden's team the next year may have been his best. Only Bibby was lost from the starting lineup, replaced by Larry Hollyfield. Off the bench came players like David Meyers, Tommy Curtis and Swen Natar; and the Bruins cruised past Memphis State, 87-66, to win a seventh NCAA championship.

Walton's performance that year may have been the greatest in Final Four history. He made 21 of his 22 shots from the field, finishing with 44 points and breaking Gail Good-rich's title-game record of 42 points. Walton also was so effective defensively that Memphis State made just 42 percent of its shots from the field.

In Walton's senior year, the Bruins proved they were human. They not only saw their losing streak ended at 88 games by Notre Dame in South Bend, but they ended up losing in the semifinals to North Carolina State, blowing a seven-point lead in the second overtime and falling, 80-77. It's considered among the best Final Four games ever played. UCLA had Walton and Wilkes that year, who were matched by the Wolfpack's twosome of Tom Burleson and David Thompson.

The defeat was hailed as the end of the UCLA dynasty. Walton and Wilkes were graduating. Wooden had only one starter back, Meyers. The rest of the team was made up of untested juniors and sophomores.

Still, the Bruins won the 1975 championship, beating Kentucky, 92-85, at the San Diego Sports Arena. Meyers received help from Marques Johnson, Richard Washington, Andre McCarter, Pete Trgovich and Ralph Drollinger that year. Before the title game, Wooden announced that it would be his last as a coach.

"That team was one of the most fun to coach that I had," Wooden said. "They had been easy to deal with on and off the court, and they had reached their full potential as a team. It was a very good time to walk away."

Indiana (1976), Marquette (1977) and Kentucky (1978) would win the next three championships before the 1970s ended with one of the most talked-about matches in NCAA history: Magic Johnson of Michigan State against Larry Bird of Indiana State. Nearly 18 million homes or 38 percent of the televisions in use that night were tuned to the game, making it the most watched final in history.

Exhibit covers championship history

The history of the NCAA Final Four will unfold in pictures and memorabilia at Municipal Auditorium in Kansas City, Missouri, beginning March 30, with a special 50-year Final Four exhibit.

Free to the general public, this exhibition will be open daily in the Little Theatre area of the auditorium, the site of more Final Fours (10) than any other arena in the nation.

The exhibit covers all five decades of the tournament, from the 1939 championship game to the 1988 championship scheduled for Kemper Arena April 2 and 4.

More than 250 photographs will be displayed, including Final Four coverage by photojournalist Rich Clarkson, who has covered 30 of the 49 tournaments.

Included with the photography are five commemorative paintings by Kansas City artist John Boyd Martin.

These original watercolors cover the tournament and the outstanding players and coaches who have gained acclaim. In various display units are video presentations highlighting each of the decades, plus a number of trophies, jerseys, basketballs, programs and special publications that cover the tournament and the players and coaches.

The exhibit will include a special section covering the nine tournaments held in Kansas City.

The exhibit will open to the public at 10 a.m. Thursday, March 30, and is scheduled to remain open until 7 p.m. most days through April 7. It will be closed to the public for private functions Friday evening, April 1, and Saturday morning, April 2, and will be open from noon until 5 p.m. Easter Sunday.

Photographs in the exhibit were made possible through a grant from the Professional Photography Division of the Eastman Kodak Company, a Final Four Foundation sponsor for several of the tournament's commemorative events.

The exhibit is available for school and youth tours throughout the

A CBS News program, "48 Hours: More Than a Game," will be broadcast Thursday, March 31, at 7 p.m. Central time, presenting an inside look at college basketball—more particularly the NCAA Division I Men's Basketball Championship—from the viewpoints of players, coaches, cheerleaders, fans and boosters.

CBS News anchor Dan Rather and correspondents Bernard Goldberg, David Dow and Peter Van Sant spent two days and nights scheduled days and it will be open to the public for an extended period during the National Association of Basketball Coaches All-Star Game scheduled to be played in Municipal Auditorium Thursday, March 31.

1988 Column No. 12

NCAA Constitution 3-1-(h)-(1)—recognition and postseason award banquets

The NCAA Council has reviewed the NCAA Legislation and Interpretations Committee's decision regarding the application of Case Nos. 91 and 92 (pages 338-339, 1988-89 NCAA Manual) as these regulations relate to team award or recognition meetings and annual all-sports banquets. The Council agreed that under those cases, an institution is limited to providing not more than three banquets per year in a sport. Also, the Council noted that the application of Case No. 90 requires that no awards be presented to student-athletes in the conduct of that recognition banquet, and confirmed a previous interpretation precluding the provision of transportation for student-athletes who are provided an "occasional family home meal," noting the distinction between that type of situation and the provision of transportation (which is permissible) for student-athletes to attend the institution's banquets permitted per Case Nos. 91 and 92.

NCAA Constitution 3-1-(h)-(4)-(vi)—career-counseling panels

In accordance with the NCAA Player-Agent Registration Program, lists of registered player agents are being distributed periodically to directors of athletics at all Division I member institutions, all individuals serving as chairs of career-counseling panels and all chief executive officers of member conferences. Also, these lists are available upon request to any Division II or III member institution. By signing a registration form, a player agent agrees not to jeopardize the remaining eligibility of a student-athlete under NCAA legislation and to notify the directors of athletics before contacting enrolled student-athletes.

Under the provisions of Constitution 3-1-(h)-(4)-(vi), counseling panels may be established to assist in providing student-athletes with reliable information concerning professional athletics career opportunities and also to assist student-athletes in the selection of competent representation. Student-athletes are being urged to cooperate only with player agents who have registered as part of the NCAA program. Educational and professional background information has been provided to the national office by the registered player agents and is available from the national office. Institutions wishing to obtain such information or to establish counseling panels should contact Richard J. Evrard, director of legislative services, at the NCAA national office.

This material was provided by the NCAA legislative services department as an aid to member institutions. If an institution has a question it would like to have answered in this column, the question should be directed to William B. Hunt, assistant executive director, at the NCAA national office.

Nebraska Legislature advances bill to pay football players

The Nebraska Legislature advanced a bill March 21 designed to make a "dramatic statement" to the NCAA that football players at large universities are exploited and should be compensated.

NCAA plans to resume talks on draft with pro leagues

Team owners in the National Football League apparently have rejected for now any idea of establishing a draft for underclass football student-athletes.

Current NFL rules allow drafting of college players who have completed their eligibility or have graduated. All others must go through a supplemental draft.

NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle said sports agents are to blame for the current controversy regarding early signing of undergraduate players.

"As salaries have gone up, the proliferation of agents has gone up," he said. "They're trying to sign more players so they can get a higher percentage. Now, the agent gets his cut and the player is still satisfied with what he makes. That's led to growth and more agents."

NCAA Executive Director Richard D. Schultz said the Association would appoint ad hoc committees to enter discussions with the NFL and National Basketball Association on the drafting of college underclassmen.

Schultz said a meeting with NFL

Final Four posters are available

Five paintings, depicting the five decades of the NCAA Division I men's basketball Final Four, have been produced by noted sports artist John Boyd Martin.

The originals will go on permanent display at the Naismith Memorial Basketball Hall of Fame, but not before a limited-edition portfolio and a composite poster of the series are produced for sale to the public.

A limited number (950 copies of each print) of the five-print series will be sold on a first-come, first-served basis.

The composite poster is sponsored by Rawlings, which provides the official basketball for the NCAA tournament.

National distribution of the poster and the limited-edition portfolio is being handled by Sports Poster Impressions, P.O. Box 20221, New York, New York 10028. Phone orders are being accepted at 1-800/847-4150 or 1-212/772-9550.

Orders for the limited-edition prints only are being accepted by Score Board, Inc., 100 Dobbs Lane, Suite 206, Cherry Hill, New Jersey 08034 (telephone 1-800/356-2193 or 1-609/354-9000).

The original five paintings will be on display as a feature of the 50th Final Four exhibition in Kansas City.

Athletics trainers plan symposium

The National Athletic Trainers Association will hold its 39th annual national meeting and clinical symposium June 11-15 at the Baltimore Convention Center.

Sponsored by Sen. Ernie Chambers of Omaha, the bill states that football players at the University of Nebraska, Lincoln, should be paid as state employees if similar laws are passed in at least four other officials could take place in late April, and a meeting with NBA administrators might be scheduled after the league's play-offs.

"We'll just talk about their ideas," Rozelle told United Press International. "The athletics directors and college football coaches like their players to stay in school. Maybe they can cooperate with us on some things, and we can cooperate with them on others."

Big Eight Conference states.

The bill was given first-round approval on a 26-12 vote in a tamer form than what Chambers originally introduced. His original bill would have required Nebraska players to be paid regardless of laws in other states. The bill also included several paragraphs outlining reasons why Chambers believes athletes are exploited and should be paid.

Amendments by the Government, Military and Veterans Affairs Committee removed from the bill the reasons and the April 15, 1989, operative date.

"This allows us to put something into statute and make a very dramatic statement to the NCAA," said Government Committee Chair Dennis Baack.

Paying athletes is against NCAA regulations. Chambers said several coaches across the country, including Nebraska's Tom Osborne, have come out in support of his proposal, United Press International reported.

The NCAA has resisted changing its rules because schools with smaller football programs are against such legislation, Chambers said. But passing such a bill may eventually lead to a rule change, he said.

Players should be paid because football players at large schools spend more hours practicing, playing football and performing other football-related activities than do highly paid National Football League players, Chambers said.

"Everything they do meets the definition of a job," he said.

Since football requires so many hours, players usually cannot hold other jobs and may be tempted to get into sports scandals in order to get money, he said.

Chambers said he purposely excluded other sports from his bill because football generates huge amounts of revenue for the university and subsidizes other sports. College football is more than a game, he said.

"It is big-business entertainment, bringing in hundreds of millions of dollars a year," he said.

Sen. Don Wesely of Lincoln said the issue needs to be studied further. Although the bill does not contain details as to how much football players should be paid, he said: "If all we're doing is trying to send a message, then the details aren't important."

The bill needs two more votes and Gov. Kay Orr's signature before becoming law.

Comment

Letter to the Editor

Another view of Proposition 39

To the Editor:

I am writing in regard to Carl F. Ullrich's comments in The NCAA News, March 2 issue, concerning Proposition 39. I am somewhat amused that his main issue for not supporting this legislation was the fact that Division I members of the Presidents Commission overwhelmingly indicated opposition to passage of this legislation, even though the actual vote from the floor definitely did not reflect an overwhelming majority.

He further reminds us all about this grade-point-average rule and how "it would move student-athletes struggling with the difficult courses to lighter courses; and consequently, they would move into major programs such as those highlighted in television bowl coverage—general studies and undergraduate studies." Does he not realize that this occurs right now without this legislation?

He concludes with a statement "that there is a basic unfairness in having some outside agency decide for each institution the athletics eligibility of its students."

What about a senior student-athlete with a 1.700 GPA who then must become a B student for the next 30 hours to graduate? I ask, is that fair?

Significant changes needed in tournament

By Glenn Dickey
San Francisco Chronicle

Now that basketball tournament time is here, it's time to consider some significant changes in the NCAA tournament:

- Let everybody in. The tournament has been expanded to 64 teams, but the effect of the expansion has been to draw increasingly artificial distinctions between those teams admitted and those teams that are not.

- If all Division I teams were admitted, half of them would be eliminated on the first night and the tournament very quickly would work down to those who really belonged. That would make it unnecessary to balance strength of schedule and strength of conference in making selections.

- Divide all the tournament money equally among all Division I schools. The current plan, which divides the Final Four receipts among the schools (and leagues) competing, is too much of an incentive to cheat. Schools are willing to take the chance because the money is so big. If the money were divided equally, that temptation would be removed.

- Return to the regional concept of competition. In recent years, the NCAA has tried to even the competition in every regional, moving teams all over the country. That has hurt the West, already at a disadvantage because Eastern teams get more television exposure.

- If the NCAA wants a truly national tournament, instead of a battle among teams east of the Mississippi, it's going to have to build up all regions.

Monday night basketball or Friday night fights?

By Fran Blinbury
Houston Chronicle
Excerpted from a column

It used to be that the term "street fight" in college basketball was just a colorful figure of speech. But this season, it's become an ugly fact of life in an intense game that has all of a sudden bubbled over with madness.

Based on the way things have gone in the regular season, cruising down The Road to Kansas City might be more like running a gauntlet as teams take to the court carrying brass knuckles and rubber hoses. Or this might be the year that the Final Four will be played by the only four teams that haven't been punched out by the end of March.

You've got to wonder if clubs are playing for bids to the NCAA's hoop fest or an invitation to join HBO's elimination boxing tournament.

Of course, there has never been any depth to which frenzied and mindless athletics supporters would not stoop.

But lunacy in the stands, though often sickening, is one thing. The craziness that has turned the dog-fight for No. 1 in college basketball into an honest-to-goodness fist fight is something else.

Are the young players merely emulating their idols in the pro ranks, where even the threat of five-figure fines and suspensions has not proven to be a deterrent to violence in the NBA?

Or are they taking their cues from the men on the sidelines, who spend so much of their time berating officials, chastising each other and posturing for TV cameras in an attempt to gain more notoriety and the big bucks that come with it?

Now, it's tournament time and the stakes are higher. And in this season of ultimate parity, it means that there are so many more teams within reach of the treasure chest of riches to be derived from winning it all.

It means more reaching, more

"Since we now have Proposition 48 and the death penalty, the next step that would complete the credibility of the NCAA is to include the athletics department for accreditation review.

"As the English and chemistry departments are examined, the athletics department should also be included. This would force college presidents, as well as each school's board of trustees, to control the athletics department.

"Let's make the showcase of college basketball an extravaganza. Increase it from 64 teams to all 290 schools that compete in Division I.

"A true all-comers tournament would take two extra weeks to whittle the field to 72 teams. Give champions of elite conferences two-week byes. Give the cellar-dwellers the toughest roads, such as two or three games within a matter of days. You won't hear many complaints.

"Too much basketball? I knew you'd say that. Then cut the regular season to 25 games and start the first week of December instead of late November. There would be no more need for cupcake schedules to pad victory totals.

"I feel very strongly that you play your way into the tournament (Division I Men's Basketball Championship), and politics don't have much to do with it.

"The schedules don't lie, and the results don't lie. TCU was on the bubble two times while I was on the committee (Division I Men's Basketball Committee) and didn't get in. My being there probably hurt us more than helped us."

about. They are about winning; winning and its handmaiden, making money.

"The arrival of big bucks has brought a paranoid, whining quality into collegiate sports, the same quality that has long marked professional games. When teams win, coaches are apt to snarl that now, at last, they will be given the respect that has been denied. When they lose, they make excuses.

"... Today we have players and coaches and fans who scream and rant and take every advantage, whether fair or not.

Staying alive: defense, good coaching and luck are needed

By Hal Bock

A little bit of giddyup combined with a touch of slow-down, a lot of defense, and some luck along the way: That's what it takes once you've survived college basketball's long, hard winter with a decent enough record to reach the NCAA tournament.

That's what it takes to get from the first weekend's minefield when 64 schools are running and gunning their way through basketball's version of Russian roulette, to the final weekend when just four teams are still playing.

"It takes a team that doesn't play a giddyup style, and it takes a team that doesn't play a funeral style," said NBC broadcaster Al McGuire, who coached Marquette University to the national championship in 1977.

"If you're a coast-to-coast team, you'll be frustrated by a team that makes seven passes before taking a shot and melts the clock on you. If you're a slowdown team and one of those giddyup teams gets out in front on you, you can't make it up. You need to be a team in the middle."

And it takes defense. "Nobody wins the national championship without an outstanding defensive team," said University of Louisville coach Denny Crum, who has won two of them in this decade, in 1980 and 1986.

"At this level, there's a certain amount of tenseness involved. Your shooting is not always what it might have been to get you there. At a time like that, defense can carry you through tight spots."

If you're smart, McGuire said, you'll make that defense a man-to-man, not a zone.

"A team that plays a zone will have serious problems because a zone is stronger when you're ahead," he said. "If you get behind, it gets tough to play zone. And you won't lead every game."

Of course, a little bit of luck helps, too.

"You have to be lucky once or twice in the tournament to win," said Jud Heathcote, who coached Michigan State University to the 1979 title.

"You have to peak at tournament time," Heathcote said. "For three straight years, DePaul was ranked 1-2-3 in the country and had first-round byes. Each of those years, it lost its first game in the tournament."

The 64-team field has eliminated byes. Everybody plays, right from the start. "It's better that way,"

Expand play-off and pay athletes, McGuire suggests

The NCAA in recent years has expanded its basketball tournament and former Marquette University coach Al McGuire says it should take it to its logical conclusion—every single Division I team.

McGuire, now an NBC-TV college basketball analyst, said, "It would only take you one more week—grabbing, more clawing, more pushing and, probably, before it's over, more fighting.

It would be nice to think it will stop before somebody really gets hurt. Because, after all, it's only a game.

But then with the TV money on the line, we know it isn't, don't we?

Denny Crum

Jud Heathcote

Heathcote said. "You get ready right away. There's no sitting around."

"You have to come up with your best game against the best team. That's not necessarily in the finals. It might be in the round of 16 or the round of eight. That's what Villanova did when it beat Georgetown in 1985."

"There's no question that winning six in a row at that level is tough," Crum said. "But somebody does it every year."

"You need outstanding players who are well-coached. They've got to be playing their best at tournament time, and they have to have played a tough schedule all year. That's our game plan."

McGuire has some other ingredients from his championship recipe book.

"To make progress in the tournament, a team needs to be senior-oriented," he said. "It needs to be experienced, with a visible coach who's been in the steam room before."

"When they announced the bids, 64 coaches were cruising. It's their moment, I'll tell you something, though. The old gladiator, the guy with the scars, was in his cocoon getting mentally tough."

"This is crunch time. You have to know your stars and go to them. This is the time for your big brother, not your little brother."

"The key is to get super play from your No. 7 and No. 8 men. The sixth guy is already good. Seven and eight have to play beyond their capabilities, because things come up. A kid gets a finger in the eye. Another kid gets the Asian flu."

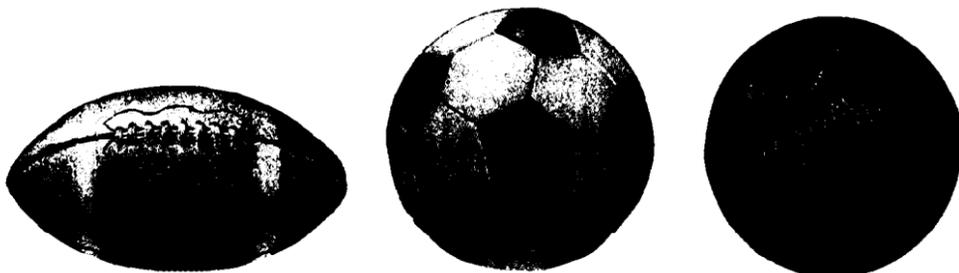

McGuire said all those factors—a deep, experienced team; a team that plays man-to-man defense and doesn't depend on style extremes, and a team with stars to carry the workload—are the same requirements as the tournament demanded a decade ago, when his Marquette team won.

"The athletes are better. The coaches are smarter. There is more money. But the ground rules are the same," he said. "Only one in 64 will do it for six games, and that team will win it."

Sun Devils use balance to upset Midwest powers

Relying on its balance during the Division I Wrestling Championships March 17-19 at Iowa State University, Arizona State became the first institution west of the Rockies to capture a team title in Division I wrestling.

The Sun Devils also became the first team in a decade to win the crown without an individual champion. The feat was accomplished last in 1978, when Iowa began its streak of nine championships.

Dan Gable's Iowa Hawkeyes were second with 85½ points to Arizona State's 93. The Sun Devil total was the lowest winning mark since 1974. Defending champion Iowa State was third and Oklahoma State fourth.

The victory marked the first time in 14 years that a team from outside Iowa has emerged as the winner.

Arizona State, coached by former international standout Bobby Douglas, had seven wrestlers finish among the top six in their weight classes. Mike Davies reached the finals at 190 pounds, and Chip Park (126), Dan St. John (158) and Jim Gressley (167) all finished third. St. John's victory over Iowa's John Heffernan in the consolation finals and an Iowa loss in the 126-pound championship final allowed the Sun Devils to begin their celebration early on the tournament's closing night.

Iowa's only victory among three finalists came from Royce Alger at 177 pounds. Alger won last season at 167. Other wrestlers repeating from 1987 were world champion John Smith of Oklahoma State (134) and Carlton Haselrig of Pittsburgh-Johnstown (heavyweight). Haselrig has won the Divisions I and II titles for two straight years.

Named outstanding wrestler in the tournament was Scott Turner of North Carolina State, champion at 150 pounds. The lone point surrendered by Turner in the championships was to defending champion Tim Krieger of Iowa State in the finals.

Kenyon men easily capture ninth crown in Division III swimming

Teammates cheer Kenyon's Alan Schmidt in 200-yard backstroke

Kenyon coach Jim Steen moved within one step of earning an unprecedented 10 consecutive NCAA team titles as the Lords blew away the competition at the Division III Men's Swimming and Diving Championships.

The Lords, who have dominated the championships since 1980, won their ninth consecutive title during the March 17-19 meet at Emory. Claremont-Mudd-Scripps finished a distant second, nearly 250 points behind the Lords.

The battle for second place was hard-fought, as Claremont-Mudd-Scripps and UC San Diego finished with 314 and 313 points, respectively. Denison finished fourth with 274 points.

Once again, the relay events proved to be the Lords' domain. They swept all five races, including the new 200-yard freestyle and 200-yard medley relays.

Another highlight of the meet was Kevin Casson's record-setting performance in the 1,650-yard freestyle. The St. Olaf veteran bested by more than eight seconds the record set in 1984 by Kenyon's George Pond.

The diving events were split, with the one-meter title going to Sean Fri of Oberlin. Merchant Marine's Bill Nixon claimed the honors on the three-meter board.

Texas snares fifth consecutive Division I title

Texas' Longhorns continued their reign as Division I women's swimming and diving champions by claiming their fifth consecutive team title during the March 17-19 meet at the University of Texas Swim Center in Austin.

The gap between first and second places was considerable this year. Texas piled up 661.0 points to runner-up Florida's 542.5. Stanford (419.0), California (241.0) and Clemson (218.5) rounded out the top five.

Texas senior Betsy Mitchell won both backstroke events for the third consecutive year, turning in times of 54.11 for 100 yards and 1:57.21 for 200 yards. Teammate Tracey McFarlane set a meet record with her time of 1:00.51 in the 100-yard breaststroke.

Florida and freestyle were one and the same in this meet, as the Gators claimed the top spot in all five single freestyle events and set American records in two of the freestyle relays. Among the victors was Tami Bruce, who set meet records in the 200- and 1,650-yard events.

Also setting an American record was Texas' 200-yard freestyle relay team.

Other meet records were established by California's Hiroko Nagasaki in the 200-yard breaststroke, Texas' 200 yard freestyle relay squad, and Florida's 400- and 800-yard freestyle relay teams.

Trojans poised to capture men's swimming crown

The 1988 Division I Men's Swimming and Diving Championships will feature some very intense competition, since many of last year's titlists have graduated.

Gone are Stanford's Pablo Morales, who earned an outstanding 11 individual titles in his four-year career; Stanford teammate Jeff Kostoff, who won three crowns in the 1,650-yard freestyle, and California's Matt Biondi, who swept the 50-, 100- and 200-yard freestyles in 1986 and 1987.

Other individual titlists who have graduated are 200-yard breaststroke champ John Van Sant (Army) and three-meter winner Michael Wantuck of Ohio State. Also, Harvard's David Berkoff, winner in the 100-yard backstroke, will sit out the meet this year to concentrate on training for the Olympic trials.

Entering his 31st season as Southern Cal's head coach, Peter Daland returns three key swimmers in the distance freestyles, events in which the Trojans earned 114 points—a bit more than one-third of the total 296—on the way to a second-place finish in 1987.

Dan Jorgensen, Mike O'Brien and Chris Chalmers earned most of those 114 points with first-, third-and eighth-place finishes, respectively, in the 500 free, and second-, fourth- and fifth-place spots, respectively, in the 1,650.

Also bringing experience to the squad will be David Cademartori, the only Trojan to make the finals in three events at last year's championships. Cademartori finished fourth in the 200 fly, fifth in the 100 fly and eighth in the 200 individual medley and could be higher this year with Morales out of the picture.

Giving the Trojans a big boost will be newcomer David Wharton, considered by many to have been the top recruit in the country. The freshman set a U.S. record in the 400-meter individual medley and placed second in the 200 IM at the world-championship trials.

He also set national prep records in the 500 free and 200 IM. Daland may rely on Wharton to fill the void left by the graduation of freestyler Thomas Fahrner, a critical element in Southern Cal's relays.

Florida's chances of a repeat top-three finish are likely despite Troy Dalbey's decision to train for the Olympics rather than return for his sophomore season with the Gators.

Dalbey finished second behind California's Matt Biondi in the 100 and 200 freestyles and was the best bet to claim both titles with the graduation of Biondi.

However, coach Randy Reese still has many returning scorers, including Sandy Goss and Paul Robinson, two members of the winning 800-yard freestyle relay team. Expect top finishes from the relay teams again this year, as all members but Dalbey return. Goss also swam to the No. 2 spot in the 200 backstroke.

Another Gator veteran is Paul Wallace, who finished fourth in the 100-yard freestyle and third in the 200-yard individual medley. Other scoring possibilities will come from Jayme Taylor, Jason Gorrie and David Fairbanks.

Reese is hoping Gorrie can return to the form he had two years ago that earned him a second-place finish (behind teammate Matt Cielinski) in the 500 free and a fourth-place spot in the 1,650.

And if Fairbanks, a member of the United States' 1986 world-championship team, can make it to the backstroke finals, the Gators will have some solid scoring opportunities.

California sophomore Sean Kil-lion, though he failed to score at the 1987 NCAA championships, had several top finishes to his credit in national competitions the same year. Coach Nort Thornton hopes the young swimmer will become the next great freestyler in the style of former Bear Matt Biondi.

Killion certainly has the potential to top Biondi's records and maybe even equal his eight career titles. In 1987 national competition, Killion set a record in the 800-meter freestyle, finished second in the 400-meter free and had top-five finishes in the 1,500-meter free and 400 IM.

Bringing depth to the team in the short freestyle events will be Tommy Werner, Joel Thomas, and newcomers Charles Cline and Mark Henderson. Werner and Thomas both helped the 400-yard freestyle relay squad to a 1987 title.

Juniors Paul Kingsman and Lee Concepcion look for a spot in the backstroke and breaststroke finals, respectively.

Rounding out the top five teams should be Michigan and UCLA, both of which have several returning point-scorers. Important for the Wolverines will be junior diver Lee Michaud, who finished fifth on the one-meter board.

Underdogs' triumphs, scoring highlight play-off

By James M. Van Valkenburg
NCAA Director of Statistics

This Golden Anniversary NCAA Division I Men's Basketball Championship does not have to take a back seat to any in terms of victories by low-seeded underdogs in the first two rounds.

Richmond, Rhode Island and Murray State have seen to that. All three are from overlooked, seldom-watched (on television) conferences—Richmond from the Colonial Athletic Association, Rhode Island from the Atlantic 10 Conference (it was overshadowed there by No. 1-ranked Temple) and Murray State from the Ohio Valley Conference.

In future years, however, this 50th tournament may be remembered for its high scoring and straight shooting. So far, it is the highest-scoring tournament in 11 years. Teams already have produced nine game totals of at least 100 points. That includes North Carolina's record 123-point spree vs. Loyola Marymount. The Tar Heels shot an amazing 79 percent from the field in that game, breaking the tournament-record 78.6 by Villanova in its 1985 championship-game upset of Georgetown.

National trends heading into post-season play show that scoring continues to rise, with the three-pointer given credit for opening up inside play. The NCAA tournament is following that trend, except that its figures are higher. More about that later.

Cinderella stories

Richmond, coached by veteran Dick Tarrant, a New Jersey native, is the lowest-seeded team in the "Sweet 16." The Spiders were seeded 13th in the East region and knocked off fourth-seeded Indiana, the 1987 national champion, 72-69, in the first round.

"Dick Tarrant was a good coach before I even started coaching," said Indiana coach Bob Knight. "If I were to pick the best coaches in the country or the ones who have done the best jobs with basketball programs, Dick would be one of them—one of a handful."

Tom Penders at Rhode Island has the same kind of respect in the Atlantic 10, as does Steve Newton at Murray State in the OVC. And North Carolina State's Jim Valvano likely would second the motion after Newton's 14th-seeded team ousted Valvano's third-seeded team in the Midwest first round, 78-75. That 14-over-three tied Murray State with Austin Peay State (OVC as well), Cleveland State of the Association of Mid-Continent Universities and Arkansas-Little Rock of the Trans America Athletic Conference for the biggest upsets ever in terms of seeding places, at 11 each.

Austin Peay shaded Illinois last year, and it was Cleveland State over Indiana and Arkansas-Little Rock over Notre Dame in 1986. Murray State, by the way, nearly ousted sixth-seeded Kansas before Danny Manning's field goal with 38 seconds left won it.

Rhode Island is 28-6, with three losses to Temple; Richmond is 26-6, and Murray State is 22-9. Penders did not think his 11th-seeded Rams should be underdogs against sixth-seeded Missouri, and they proved it with a first-round victory, 87-80. After his team knocked off third-seeded Syracuse of the Big East Conference in the second round, 97-94, however, Penders said: "To say I expected this is ridiculous. They think they can beat anybody right now." Guard Tom Garrick led with

C. M. Newton's Vanderbilt team upset Pittsburgh in the tournament's second round 28 points as his father, a blind war hero, and his family cheered him on.

These unheralded teams proved once again that it is a big country with a lot of outstanding teams, players and coaches waiting for their chance. There were other upsets, too, as Vanderbilt (seventh in the Midwest) beat Pittsburgh (second) in overtime, and Villanova (sixth in the Southeast) edged Illinois (third).

Once again, though, all four No. 1 seeds are present in the "Sweet 16"—Temple, Purdue, Arizona and Oklahoma. And Pittsburgh is the

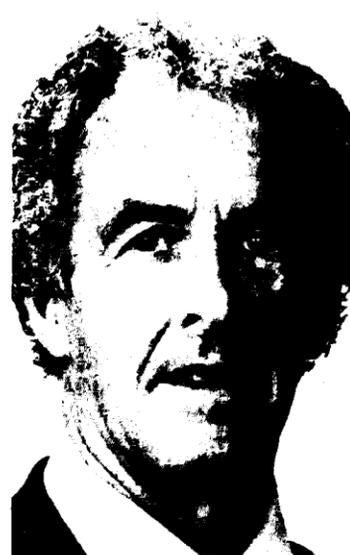

Rhode Island, coached by Tom Penders, already has defeated Missouri and Syracuse

"Sweet 16" for the first time in history.

Temple is in the round of 16 for the first time in 30 years, Vanderbilt for the first time since 1974, Arizona since 1976 and Michigan since 1977. Repeaters from 1987 are North Carolina, Oklahoma, Duke, Kansas and Iowa—just five of them.

Kentucky is among the 16 for an incredible 30th time, North Carolina now has 17 trips, Kansas State and Louisville 16 each, Kansas and Villanova 14 each, Duke nine, Michigan and Iowa eight each, and Oklahoma seven; Purdue, Arizona, Temple and Vanderbilt have appeared three times each and, as crease over last year is modest, but the three-pointer must get the credit because more teams are using it, and as a result, the inside game is opening up.

How do we know? Because two-point accuracy in this tournament is up to 51.2 percent vs. 50.9 last year. Three-point accuracy is down to 36.9 percent vs. 40.4 in last year's tournament, but teams now are trying 26.23 shots per game (making 9.67) vs. 23.37 per game (making 9.43). Putting it another way, 26.2 percent of all shots from the field are three-pointers vs. 21.8 percent in the 1987 tournament.

National trends

The national trends heading into postseason play are quite similar to the tournament trends, except, of course, that the shooting and scoring figures are a bit lower. The most dramatic figures are in two-point shooting accuracy, proving once again that the three-pointer is opening up the inside game.

The nation's Division I shooters produced 48.9 percent accuracy from inside the three-point line for 8,121 games involving 290 teams entering postseason. A year ago, Division I players shot 47.9 percent from inside the three-point line. Using shots from all ranges, one must go all the way back to 1963—25 years ago—to find a bigger one-season jump in accuracy. It went from 40.2 in 1962 to 41.7 in 1963.

From all ranges, national accuracy is 47 percent vs. 46.4 a year ago. Scoring now is 147.8 vs. 145.5 for 1987. Free-throw accuracy now is 68.8 vs. 69.1 in 1987. Tournament shooting now is 48.1 from all ranges and 71.0 percent at the line.

Nationally, three-point accuracy now is 38.4 percent—same as last year—but teams now are making 7.93 shots and attempting 20.67 (both teams combined) vs. seven and 18.25 in 1987. As mentioned, the same is true in the tournament, except that the figures are higher.

The winning teams in the tournament so far are shooting 41.4 percent on a little more than 10 three-point attempts per game, while losers are shooting 34 on a little more than 16 attempts per game. Often, it is a catch-up measure. But sometimes, it can be a potent offensive weapon, as Kansas State showed with 10-for-13 against DePaul, with Will Scott going 7-for-8. And do not forget Barry Goheen of Vanderbilt, who made two late three-pointers—the last at the buzzer—to send the Pittsburgh game into overtime and provide the momentum for that upset of the Big East champion.

Individual leaders

Eighteen players on the remaining 16 teams are averaging at least 20 points per game in tournament play.

Dean Smith saw his North Carolina team score a record 123 points in the second round Oklahoma's Stacey King is on top at 31 per game; then Kentucky's Ed Davender, 26.5; Rhode Island's Tom Garrick, 26.0; Kansas' Danny Manning and Kansas State's Mitch Richmond, 24.5; North Carolina's J. R. Reid and Duke's Kevin Strickland, 24.0; Louisville's Pervis Ellison and Michigan's Glen Rice, 23.5; Purdue's Melvin McCants and Kentucky's Rex Chapman, 23.0; Temple's Mark Macon, 22.5; Arizona's Anthony Cook, 22.0; Rhode Island's Carlton Owens and Richmond's Peter Woolfolk, 21.5; North Carolina's Ranzino Smith, 21.0; Purdue's Troy Lewis, 20.5, and Kansas State's Will Scott, 20.0.

Scott leads all three-point shooters with an amazing 12-for-19 for 63.2 percent. Davender is the only player ranking high in both field-goal percentage (68 on 17 of 25) and free-throw accuracy (17 of 18 for 94.4). Using a minimum of 14 field goals made, both Smith and Temple's Tim Perry are shooting 75 percent; Iowa's Ed Horton, 69.6; Reid, 69.2; Cook, 66.7; Ellison, 65.5; McCants and Strickland, 64.3; King, 63.4, and Rice and Chapman, 61.3. At the line, using a minimum of 15 made, Temple's Mike Vreeswyk is perfect (15-15) and Richmond is third behind Davender at 94.1. Both King and Richmond's Steve Kratzer are averaging 12 rebounds, and Oklahoma's Mookie Blaylock is averaging 9.0 assists to lead those categories.

Big Ten, Big Eight lead

The Big Ten Conference and Big Eight Conference lead with three teams each in the remaining 16. The Big Ten is 7-2 in tournament games, the Big Eight 6-2. Three leagues have two teams each—the Atlantic 10 (4-0), Atlantic Coast Conference (6-3) and the Southeastern Conference (6-3).

Those with one left are the Colonial (2-0), Big East (6-5), Pacific-10 (2-1) and Metropolitan Collegiate Athletic Conference, (3-2). Other conferences with at least one victory in the tournament are the Western Athletic Conference (1-3), Pacific Coast Athletic Association (1-3), Southwest Conference (1-3), Ohio Valley (1-1) and West Coast Athletic Conference (1-1). The two independents were 1-2.

SEC, Pac-10 lead

Current members of the Southeastern Conference and Pacific-10 Conference have produced the most victories in a conference comparison covering the first six NCAA Division I Women's Basketball Championships and the first two rounds of the seventh tournament. The comparison reflects only the current lineups projected back to 1982, the year of the first NCAA tournament.

only No. 2 gone. Chances are, though, that one or more will not make the Final Four, judging by 1980s history. In 1980, all four No. 1 seeds were knocked out. Every year since then—seven straight years—two No. 1 seeds have made the Final Four. Only two teams seeded below fourth have won the championship in the 1980s—North Carolina State (sixth) in 1983 and Villanova (eighth) in 1985.

Poll accuracy

North Carolina State and Villanova are among just three NCAA champions in history that did not make at least one top 10 in a national wire-service poll for the regular season. The other was CCNY, which did not make the 1950 Associated Press top 10 (the AP's first poll was for 1949; United Press International started in 1951).

North Carolina State was 16th in the AP poll, 14th in UPI; Villanova did not make the top 20 in either poll.

Fifteen NCAA champions were ranked No. 1 in both polls, but only one in the 1980s—North Carolina in 1982. Two other champions were No. 1 in at least one of the two polls. Fourteen more champions made the top five in at least one national poll, making the top fives 31-for-39 in national titles (no polls the first 10 years). Besides the three mentioned above, the other champions not making at least one top five were Kentucky in 1958, California in 1960, Marquette in 1977, Indiana in 1981 and Louisville in 1986 (but all ranked at least ninth in at least one poll).

Four never in Final Four

Four of the remaining 16 teams never have been to the Final Four—Rhode Island, Arizona, Vanderbilt and Richmond. In fact, Rhode Island and Richmond are in the mentioned, this is the first time for Richmond and Rhode Island. Among the "Sweet 16" leaders not around this time are UCLA at 21 and Indiana and Notre Dame at 14 each (compilations include the eight-team fields before 1951).

North Carolina and Kentucky have made nine trips to the Final Four; Louisville and Kansas seven each; Duke five; Kansas State four; Michigan, Iowa and Villanova three each, and Temple, Oklahoma and Purdue two each. Championships? It is Kentucky five, North Carolina and Louisville two each, and Kansas and Villanova one each.

Fifth highest ever

Tournament scoring averages 157.4 per game (both teams combined) for the first 48 games. If maintained through the remaining 15 games, that would be the fifth highest in the 50-year history and highest since 157.9 in 1977. The record is 172.6 in 1970 (for 29 games involving 25 teams), followed by 161.2 in 1965 and 161.1 in 1975.

The total of nine 100-point games (eight by winners, one by a loser) ranks second in history to the 11 in 1970 (in just 29 games, remember). There were seven 100-point scores last year, the first with both the 45-second clock and three-pointer. Now get this—in the first seven years of the 1980s, there were exactly three 100-point games. In all of the 1970s, there were 44 in far fewer tournament games.

Credit the three-pointer

Scoring hit 154.6 in the 1987 tourney—first with the three-pointer—or 11.6 per game over 1986. And the 143 figure in 1986—first year of the clock—was a huge jump over the 127.4 in 1985. Summing up, we have a 30-point increase since 1985, thanks both to the clock and to the three-pointer. The in-

No academic payoff found in athletics success, study shows

A researcher who has studied the relationship between successful college athletics and reciprocal academic payoffs says no such partnership occurs.

"Winning or losing in big-time college sports doesn't seem to have that much of a reciprocal payoff for the campus itself," Lee Sigelman, a University of Arizona administrator, told the Birmingham News.

Sigelman has studied annual giving to colleges compared to their athletics programs' won-lost record.

"My idea was that schools that are more successful on the field would collect more in gifts to the annual fund," he said. "In point of fact, there simply wasn't a relationship."

Fund-raisers at athletics powerhouses Auburn University and the University of Alabama, Tuscaloosa, agree.

"Athletics has a lot of vocal supporters; but with the exception of a few, they don't tend to be major donors to the institution," said John Blackburn, vice-president for educational development at Alabama. "Winning doesn't help you, but losing hurts you."

Auburn's Julian Holmes, director of planned gifts, said, "A good football season creates a positive environment on campus and off."

But transfers to academics from a winning season are almost nil, according to United Press International.

"Donors give to a first-class product," Holmes said. "Winning and losing in academics is more important than winning in sporting events."

The real beneficiary of a good football season is the athletics department, said James H. Frey, a sociology professor at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas.

"Essentially, what I found was that successful athletics teams will raise money for athletics, particularly in football, but researchers could not demonstrate that successful athletics teams produced more or stimulated funding on the academic side," Frey said.

"In fact, in a few cases there were negative correlations, with a little depression in the amount of money that was raised the year after a successful winning football or basketball season."

"I like to see a good football or basketball game as much as the next guy," said Sigelman. "I just have trouble seeing the justification (for athletics programs) as being the economic health of the university."

However, Blackburn said, having a celebrity such as Paul "Bear" Bryant, the late Alabama coach, helps open doors to big contributors.

"Our primary thrust is to go after big gifts—$100,000 or more—and that sort of gift doesn't seem to be weighted much to the success or lack of success of the athletics programs."

Secondary infractions cases total 371 since September '85

In the past three months, the NCAA enforcement staff has processed 60 secondary infractions cases—those that provide only a limited recruiting advantage or are determined to be isolated or inadvertent—bringing the case total since September 1, 1985, to 371.

In such cases, the assistant executive director for enforcement is empowered to determine whether a violation of NCAA rules should be considered secondary or major.

Penalties may be imposed in accordance with NCAA enforcement procedures, or actions taken by institutions and conferences may be accepted as sufficient after consultation with a member of the NCAA Committee on Infractions.

Forty-seven of the 60 cases processed between January 1 and March 15 were self-reported to the NCAA and appeared to involve technical or inadvertent violations, according to the enforcement staff.

As a result of its review of the violations, the enforcement staff is recommending that member institutions redouble efforts to establish appropriate administrative and monitoring procedures to avoid certain common problems.

For example, eight institutions erroneously certified at least one student-athlete eligible under satisfactory-progress legislation without sufficient official documentation of hours earned from the registrar or other appropriate administrators.

Two institutions permitted academic nonqualifiers to practice for a period in excess of two weeks while awaiting receipt of high school transcripts.

Recruiting brochures continue to be a source of concern. Seven institutions printed brochures that used more than one color of ink inside the covers or were involved in distributing printed materials that were not available to all students.

Three coaches were involved in violations of the 48-hour "quiet period" that precedes the National Letter of Intent signing date, although the involved prospects selected other institutions.

Institutional or conference corrective actions in these cases, which were accepted as sufficient by the Program receives community boost

The University of Missouri, Kansas City, will continue to play NCAA Division I basketball, thanks to the Kansas City business community, which helped raise the $500,000 needed to keep the program alive.

In February, UMKC Chancellor George A. Russell said the program was $500,000 short of revenues needed for its $1.4 million budget for this fiscal year, which ends June 30.

In their first season in Division I competition, the Kangaroos finished 9-18. UMKC attracted fewer than 2,000 fans in five of its 14 home games at Municipal Auditorium and averaged 2,438.

Coach Lee Hunt said the program should generate more interest once it becomes affiliated with a conference, a move that is expected after next season.

NCAA, included declaring prospective or enrolled student-athletes ineligible in cases involving eligibility or recruiting regulations, improving monitoring procedures, forfeiting games that involved ineligible student-athletes, terminating the recruitment of prospects involved in recruiting violations, reprimanding involved personnel, and imposing sanctions against coaches who were directly involved in violations.

Media attitude puzzles player's family

By John F. Bonfatti

Two years ago, William and Jeff Taggart were reading the news coverage of the cocaine-related deaths of college basketball star Len Bias and pro football player Don Rogers.

"We talked about what caused it," said William Taggart. "He was pretty proud of the thought that he had not done any of that."

So it was a surprise for Taggart to hear rumblings about drug use after his son Jeff, a junior guard-forward at Canisius College, suffered a seizure during the Canisius-Niagara March 5 game and died of a heart attack as he was being transported to a hospital.

"We never even thought about that," said the elder Taggart Monday following a campus memorial for Taggart. "There was never any doubt in our minds."

Yet, the deaths of Bias and Rogers had an impact on the death of Taggart, if only because the sudden drug-induced deaths of those two athletes in June 1986 cast suspicions on any athlete who dies unexpectedly due to heart problems.

In Taggart's case, the questions began the day after his death when a reporter asked coach Marty Marbach if there was ever any indication of drug use by Taggart.

Marbach and Taggart's teammates quickly and emphatically said Taggart was not involved with drugs, but talk continued when a television station played a tape of the conversation between the hospital emergency room where Taggart was taken and the ambulance attendants, one of whom was heard to say the seizure was "possibly drug-induced."

The Erie, New York, County medical examiner's office subsequently found no trace of drugs in Taggart and said he died from hypertrophic cardiomyopathy, a disease common to athletes that causes the heart to become larger than normal.

It was the same condition that caused the sudden death of former college and pro basketball star Pete Maravich several months ago.

Although the medical examiner's report put to rest the drug talk, the elder Taggart, Marbach and the Taggart family minister all questioned the media's role in linking Taggart with drugs.

"I think it's just bad press," said the Rev. R. L. Williams. "Unless you really have the facts and figures, I don't know why you automatically have to deal with it in a negative aspect." Williams also said the fact that Taggart, like Bias and Rogers, was black and the media covering the story were overwhelmingly white may have had something to do with it.

"I hate to think that every time a black athlete has a sudden death that it's always necessary to try to make it seem like it's related to drugs," he said. "Maybe it's a stereotype of some sort; that automatically when Blacks die an early death, they have to have been doing something wrong."

Taggart's father said his son's celebrity status probably made the questions inevitable.

"If you put it in perspective, if it was one of my other sons... who'd died from a heart attack, it probably wouldn't have even made the paper, plus there wouldn't have been any thoughts about drugs," he said.

Marbach said the Bias and Rogers deaths have people thinking drugs are involved in any heart-related death of an athlete.

"Lenny Bias' death has caused a much-increased public awareness of drug use in athletics," he said. "Because of Lenny's death, I think any time you have a young athlete that all of a sudden has a heart seizure, a lot of people subconsciously say, 'Oh, maybe it's the same thing.'"

Marbach said he understands that the drug issue "becomes one of those questions that have to be asked," but notes the toll those questions—lacking any factual basis—take on Taggart's friends and family.

"What's sad is the family has to go through added pain that's not needed until you have all the facts," he said.

"Here's a situation (with) a great kid, great family; they can't believe they've just lost their son; and all of a sudden, people are asking them about drug use."

As a parent and policeman, Taggart didn't believe his son was involved with drugs, because Jeff, unlike many popular collegians, didn't have an entourage fawning all over him.

"We used to talk about phony people and having people accept you for what you are and not for what they think you can do for them," said William Taggart. "He didn't have a bunch of people following behind him. You can spot them when they're coming around your house (and) we didn't have any of those people coming around the house."

Bonfatti writes for the Associated Press.

Oregon court gives approval of petition to fund athletics

The Oregon Supreme Court has refused to change the wording of an initiative petition that would raise money for college athletics by increasing the state tax on beer and cigarettes.

The ruling is a setback for the Oregon beer distributors who went to court in an attempt to change the explanation of the proposed ballot measure and delay the start of the signature-gathering process.

The initiative calls for a one-cent increase each on a bottle of beer and on a package of cigarettes. The proceeds would go to athletics programs at Oregon's public colleges and universities.

The initiative is being supported by boosters of college athletics, who argue that more money is needed for the University of Oregon and Oregon State University to be competitive in big-time college athletics.

Supporters have until July 8 to collect the 63,578 signatures needed to qualify the measure for the general election ballot, United Press International reported.

Opponents argued in court that the explanation should be revised because it does not fully describe the effects of the proposal.

Paul Romain, a lobbyist for the beer distributors and chair of the Coalition Against Regressive Taxation, told the court the explanation did not adequately describe the effect of the tax.

He asked the court to add language that would explain the true extent of the measures by pointing out that it would double the current tax on a barrel of beer from $2.60 to $5.70 per barrel.

He also said voters have the right to know that the measure would increase the current tax on cigarettes from 27 cents to 28 cents per 20-cigarette pack.

John Reuling, the assistant state attorney general who wrote the ballot title that appears on the initiative petition, told the court the title does not need the details the beer distributors are demanding.

He said voters want to know how much more it will cost them to buy a can of beer or a pack of cigarettes. "That's all it does and that's sufficient," Reuling said.

Administrative Committee minutes

1. Acting for the Council, the Administrative Committee:

a. Appointed Jack H. Friedenthal, Stanford University, to the Eligibility Committee, replacing Lewis A. Cryer, no longer an NCAA member.

b. Appointed Georgene A. Brock, Mankato State University, and Liz LaPlante, University of California, San Diego, to the Men's and Women's Tennis Committee effective September 1, 1988, replacing Barbara L. Karas, West Chester University of Pennsylvania, and Yvonne E. Kauffman, Elizabethtown College, whose terms will expire on that date.

c. Approved a policy specifying that the Association's representative to the U.S. Olympic Committee executive board is permitted to determine the individuals who will represent the NCAA at USOC annual meetings.

d. Approved a staff recommendation that the practice of requiring each Division I-A institution to submit detailed, per-game data on football ticket sales and home-game football attendance be discontinued; instead, each such institution would be required to file a seasonal report, but only those institutions that fall within 10,000 of the minimum per-game attendance requirements would be required to submit detailed reports.

e. Considered a recommendation by the Postgraduate Scholarship Committee that six of the 10 new scholarships in the other-sports category, as previously approved by the Executive Committee, be earmarked for specific sports (three for men's soccer and three for women's volleyball), with the other four to be divided equally between men and women and selected at large without division allocation; remanded the recommendation to the committee and directed it to make a thorough review of the issues involved and to submit a recommendation to be effective for the 1988-89 academic year.

2. Acting for the Executive Committee, the Administrative Committee:

A. Denied a request by Northern Michigan University for an additional half-day's per diem for participation in the 1987 Division II Football Championship, noting that the institution encountered weather problems in returning home from the game site and incurred additional meal expenses; suggested that the Association's travel agency attempt to recover the additional costs incurred from the airline involved.

b. Clarified that the Executive Committee's intention in appointing the committee dealing with future space needs for the NCAA national office was that it be constituted as a special committee, rather than an Executive Committee subcommittee, and that it include the Association's executive director and controller as members of the committee; acknowledged that this constitutes approved exceptions to the Association's policies prohibiting the appointment of special committees and the inclusion of staff members on NCAA committees, and verified that those policies otherwise remain in effect.

3. Report of actions taken by the executive director per Constitution 5-1-(g) and 5-2-(d):

a. Acting for the Council:

Veto overridden

Title IX, the Federal statute forbidding discrimination against women's athletics by colleges, was restored to full effect March 22 when Congress overrode President Reagan's veto of a civil-rights bill.

By a 73-24 vote in the Senate and a 292-133 vote in the House, Congress enacted a law that reversed the Supreme Court's decision in the 1984 Grove City College case, the Associated Press reported.

The Supreme Court had held that the old antidiscrimination statute, known formally as Title IX of the 1972 Education Amendments, applied only to specific programs receiving Federal funds, not all programs in an institution.

Under the new law, any university that receives Federal money for any program must comply with the law.

Two schools giving Kalamazoo a national tennis reputation

By Dick Kishpaugh

The already strong interest in collegiate tennis in Kalamazoo, Michigan, received another major boost this spring with the dedication of the Thomas S. Markin Racquet Center on the Kalamazoo College campus.

Named in memory of the late son of one of the major donors, David Markin, the indoor center includes four tennis courts, plus three racquetball courts and one for squash.

The center provides the Hornets with one of the finest indoor facilities to be found at a Division III college.

The outdoor facilities at Stowe Stadium—scene of NCAA competition as well as the National Boys' 18 and Boys' 16 USTA championships—combine with the new Markin building to provide the college with a complete range of facilities.

But the collegiate tennis picture in Kalamazoo is not confined to just one school. Kalamazoo College and Western Michigan University are the closest of neighbors. A stray tennis ball out of one of Western's outdoor courts could easily land on Kalamazoo's football field. The distance between the two administration offices can easily be covered by a few minutes of brisk walking.

The cooperation between Western, with Division I athletics programs, and Kalamazoo's Division III activity is superb, and only in men's tennis and soccer is there any rivalry between the two institutions.

Kalamazoo College, a four-time NCAA Division III men's tennis team champion, is strong enough to challenge most major schools in that sport, as evidenced by back-to-back victories over Michigan State (8-1) and Western Michigan (6-3) last spring. Southern-trip schedules for the Hornet team are liberally sprinkled with opponents such as Vanderbilt, Florida State, Florida and Rollins.

There is a long and successful history of men's tennis at both schools.

Western's program today is under the coaching of Jack Vredevelt, whose 238-105 record from 1974 to the start of the 1988 season not only includes the most victories ever by a Bronco coach, but also leads in all-time victory percentages.

Other outstanding mentors in Bronco history include the late Frank Householder (105-62 from 1943 to 1947) and the late Hap Sorenson (165-156 from 1950 to 1972). The record shows 15 Mid-American Athletic Conference team championships, tops in that highly competitive Division I league.

Western's facilities include the 10-court outdoor Sorenson complex, three indoor courts at Gary Center and use of nine indoor courts at nearby West Hills Tennis Club.

In men's tennis, Kalamazoo holds one of the most remarkable records in the history of collegiate athletics. The Hornets will be seeking their 50th consecutive Michigan Intercollegiate Athletic Association championship this spring and will be seeking to extend the extraordinary record of 307 league dual-meet victories with only one loss since the start of the 1936 season.

The single defeat in more than a half century was inflicted by Hope College in a 4-3 decision April 24, 1962; the Hornets then outscored Hope in the MIAA championships to gain a tie with the Dutchmen for the 1962 league title.

Thus, in the span from 1936 to 1987, inclusive, with no title decided in the wartime seasons of 1943 to 1945, Kalamazoo has won 48 undisputed and one shared MIAA titles.

Allen B. Stowe was the founder of the Hornet tennis tradition, coaching all of those champions from 1936 until his death following the 1956 season.

George Acker took over the Hornet program in 1959; entering the 1988 season, his credentials show a 402-203 dual-meet record, four national championships and the coaching of 29 players who attained all-America status.

With the addition of the Markin Center to the list of facilities, and with the fine tradition at both Western and Kalamazoo College, the city of Kalamazoo is rightfully proud of its status as a stronghold of collegiate tennis.

Kishpaugh is a sports historian who resides in Parchment, Michigan.

end...so you'd start out with 32 sites, eight teams to a site. That's 256 teams and the other teams would have to play some type of (out-bracket) to get there."

"I think it could be a likelihood down the road a piece," McGuire said of the tourney's ultimate expansion.

McGuire told United Press International that there would be opposition to opening the tournament to everyone. He said that included static from most conferences that like the big money of conference tournaments.

"What you'd have to do is throw out the postseason conference tournament. There's no reason for it anyway," McGuire said.

McGuire said the NCAA should consider reimbursing its student-athletes for money they earn for the schools and claims most decisions involving college basketball are made because of money, including scheduling of games for television.

"It's all financial, but everybody makes believe it isn't," McGuire said. "It's not that it's bad. Money doesn't make it bad. Money is good. But all decisions are made (by money).

"It's all a joke, but no one talks about it. The student-athlete is treated worse than a migrant worker and makes less."

McGuire said he thinks student-athletes should be reimbursed "some way through the NCAA, not through the school. The check should come right from the NCAA. That eliminates the hanky-panky."

front for the youth sports program." "I firmly believe that sports are an excellent device for focusing youngsters' attention on their need for a healthy body, especially a drug-free body," Rep. Green said.

"My own office operates a local basketball tournament each year, combined with talks by sports personalities about the dangers of drug abuse. The NCAA deserves great credit for running a national program to benefit and protect our children."

The workshop's general session included remarks by David J. Kirker, director, Office of Community Services, Family Support Administration, Department of Health and Human Services. This department represents the Federal government in the NYSP partnership that also includes the NCAA and selected colleges and universities.

The general session also included presentations of 20th-year awards to Ohio State University and the University of Southern California. The two institutions hosted the NYSP pilot projects in 1968 and have continued to host projects each year.

Speakers and their topics included Deborah Wilson of George Mason University, drug education; Carol Sudol of George Mason University, AIDS; Gale Wiedow of the University of South Dakota and Fred Furukawa, chief evaluator, lesson plans, teaching and motivation; John Brooks of USA Today, USA Today's educational program Classline Focus, and Joan Handler of the American Red Cross, aquatics organization.

Jack Coberly of the U.S. Volleyball Association and Randy Hester of the U.S. Tennis Association spoke about the youth programs sponsored by their organizations. James O'Donnell of the U.S. Department of Agriculture spoke about food and nutrition.

Representatives from Southern Cal; the University of Dayton; Floyd College; Arizona State University; Lane College; Southern University, Baton Rouge, and University of District of Columbia gave presentations about their projects. These seven projects had been cited as very special by the NYSP Committee.

"A good word to describe this workshop is 'dynamic' because of the way it was formatted," Nadine Felix-Olmsted, chair of the NYSP Committee, said. "Our major topics were covered quite well."

In 1987, 135 NYSP projects had 57,780 participants. An increase in Federal funding for 1988 has resulted in the addition of seven new projects. They are Central Carolina Community College; Illinois State University; Langston University; St. Augustine's College; San Diego City College; Southern Illinois University, Carbondale, and West Virginia University.

Underdogs'

The SEC leads in total victories at 50 (against 32 losses), including a 4-2 record so far in this seventh tournament. The Pac-10 is next in victories at 26-14, including 3-0 this year. Then come the American South Conference (dominated by former independent Louisiana Tech), 21-6 (1-0 this time); the Sun Belt Conference (0-2), 18-10; the Atlantic Coast Conference (3-2), 15-23; the Southwest Conference (1-1), 14-8; the Pacific Coast Athletic Association (1-0), 14-11, and two tied at 13-13—the Big Ten Conference (2-0) and the Atlantic 10 Conference (3-2).

Those are the nine conferences with at least 10 tournament victories. Ranked by won-lost percentage, it is the American South, .778; Pac-10, .650; Sun Belt, .643; SWC, .636; SEC, .610; PCAA, .560, and the Big Ten and Atlantic 10, .500.

Only seven conferences have had one of their current members reach the national semifinals. SEC teams have made the trip six times; Sun Belt, SWC and American South four times each; Pac-10 three times, and PCAA and Southland Conference one each. The other trip was made by independent Cheyney, coached by current Iowa coach Vivan Stringer.

Current Pac-10 members have won two championships and four other conferences one each—the SEC, SWC, Sun Belt and American South (Tennessee, Texas, Old Dominion and Louisiana Tech, respectively; the two Pac-10 titles were won by Southern California).

In almost every case, a conference is dominated by one outstanding team, usually under the same coach during the seven years. The SEC is the exception, with Auburn, Georgia, Mississippi and Tennessee. Eight members have been in the NCAA tournament; seven have won at least two games. Two—Tennessee and Georgia—have reached the national semifinals and finals.

The other conferences (under 10 victories) ranked by victories are the Big Eight Conference (2-3 this time), 9-14; Southland Conference (1-1), 6-8; Colonial Athletic Association (1-0), 4-3; Gateway Collegiate Athletic Conference (0-1), 4-8; Ohio Valley Conference (0-1), 3-8; Metropolitan Collegiate Athletic Conference (1-1), 3-11; Big East Conference (1-3), 2-9; Mountain West Conference (0-1), 2-6; ECAC Metro Conference, 1-1; Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference, 1-2; Ivy Group, 0-1; High Country Athletic Conference (0-1), 0-6; Middle Atlantic Athletic Conference (0-2), 0-7; Mid-American Conference (0-1), 0-7, and Southwestern Athletic Conference 0-2 (those without records in parentheses did not have a team in this year's tournament). Independents (all Cheyney) were 8-3. Teams from 20 conferences were in the 40-team field this year. The "Sweet 16" includes members from nine of those conferences, led by the SEC with four teams; the Pac-10 with three, and the Big Ten and ACC two each.

Historically, the biggest conference changes have come on the West Coast, where the Pacific West Athletic Conference and Northern Pacific Athletic Conference formerly held sway.

If the current "Sweet 16" looks familiar, that is because 13 are repeaters from 1987. They are Southern California, Louisiana Tech, Tennessee, Long Beach State (all four in the "Sweet 16" all seven years), Georgia, Mississippi, Texas, Auburn, Ohio State, James Madison, Rutgers, Virginia and Iowa. Maryland makes it for the first time since 1982, and Washington and Stanford for the first time ever.

Attendance averaged 3,370 per game the first two rounds, a whopping 43 percent above last year at the same point. The final 1987 average was a record 3,608 (122,674 for 34 sessions; the total now is 80,886 for 24). Iowa's second-round 11,336 turnout is a record for games before the semifinals and finals.

Overtraining can produce health woes

By Jane Sutton

New studies show that too much exercise can actually reduce longevity and that compulsive "exercise addicts" may be taking years off their lives by working out too hard for too long.

No one is arguing against regular exercise, but the research indicates there can indeed be too much of a good thing.

In a recent study of 17,000 Harvard University alumni, a Stanford University epidemiologist found that those who exercised heavily actually had a slightly shorter life expectancy than more moderate exercisers.

The February issue of Longevity, a monthly newsletter published by Omni Magazine, suggests that athletes who burn more than 3,500 calories a week—the equivalent of running more than 35 miles—may increase their oxygen intake so much that they increase the generation of free radicals in their blood. Free radicals are breakdown products of oxygen and are believed to contribute to aging and cancer.

Scientists long have been searching for some sort of marker, perhaps some blood measurement, that could indicate exactly when an athlete is overtraining.

"So far, there's been nothing. About the only way you can define what we call overtraining is training to the point where you not only are feeling very fatigued, but your performance is falling off," said Bill Fink, a sports-medicine researcher at Ball State University.

"What happens to the psyche of an athlete is that he will get to a point where his performance doesn't improve anymore. What he will do is increase training, thinking he has somehow slipped. That's exactly the wrong thing to do. At that point, he digs his own grave," Fink said.

Connie Chan, a psychologist at the University of Massachusetts, Boston, has treated people she considers "exercise addicts," people who are just as dependent on exercise as drug addicts are on drugs.

"We define it as someone who, if they are forced to miss it for whatever reason, then suffers withdrawal symptoms," Chan said. "Their schedule and their day are organized around it. Exercise becomes the No. 1 priority."

NCAC teams capture three titles

The North Coast Athletic Conference collected an NCAA men's basketball title and two swimming and diving team titles within 10 days to cap its most successful showing ever in the Association's winter championships.

The titles were won by Ohio Wesleyan University in the Division III Men's Basketball Championship (see page 8) and Kenyon College in Division III men's and women's swimming.

Counting the Kenyon squads, the NCAC also placed five teams among the top 21 at the Division III Men's Swimming and Diving Championships and four squads among the top 20 at the Division III Women's Swimming and Diving Championships.

Conference swimmers captured 11 of the 20 individual men's events and 13 of the 20 individual women's events.

The conference's showing in the winter championships comes on the heels of a fall season in which five NCAC member institutions were ranked nationally in five sports.

So far this year, conference teams have ranked among the nation's top 20 in 10 sports and could top the 17 top-20 rankings it collected last year through fall, winter and spring competition. The NCAC sponsors eight spring sports.

Besides winning team honors, the conference collected several individual honors. Allegheny College swimming coach Tom Erdos and Denison University diving coach Dan Eddingfield collected national coach-of-the-year honors in Division III women's swimming, and Kenyon senior Dennis Mulvihill was named Division III men's swimmer of the year.

Also, Ohio Wesleyan senior Scott Tedder was named most valuable player in the Division III men's basketball finals.

Lawmakers predict override of Reagan's civil-rights veto

Senate and House leaders say they have the votes to override President Reagan's veto and win a four-year struggle to broaden civil-rights protection for women, minorities, the elderly and the disabled.

The Civil Rights Restoration Act passed both chambers earlier this year by lopsided margins, far greater than the two-thirds majority needed to override a presidential veto. Supporters and opponents said there was little chance the veto would be sustained.

"We expect a veto to override," House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, said March 21.

The House passed the bill, 315-98, and Republican head-counters said only a dozen members at most were expected to move into the president's corner.

The Senate vote was 75-14, with seven absentee cosponsors who would have voted for the measure had they been there, the Associated Press reported. A leadership aide said there were more than enough votes for an override "if all goes as planned and hoped."

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, leader of the Senate opposition, said he and the President had fought an uphill battle. He said some senators planned to switch sides but added, "Let's face it, some people are afraid to vote against a civil-rights bill."

Vice-President George Bush March 21 indicated last-minute support for the Reagan veto, saying the legislation "is imperfect and the imperfections should be corrected."

The restoration act forbids the distribution of Federal funds to entire institutions, state and local government agencies, and many corporations if any part of them practices discrimination.

It was spurred by a 1984 Supreme Court ruling that civil-rights laws applied only to a specific program activity receiving Federal aid. The government could not cut off money to a college, for example, if discrimination occurred in a department that did not receive such aid.

Supporters of the legislation say it restores civil-rights laws to the way they were interpreted before the court challenge mounted by Grove City College in Pennsylvania.

Religious schools, many of them fundamentalist Christian, opposed the bill. Reagan said it would impinge on religious freedom and vastly expand the power of the Federal government over churches, synagogues, corporations, and state and local governments.

Congress had tried since the Supreme Court decision to pass a corrective measure but became enmeshed in various controversies involving regulation and abortion. The final bill has broad bipartisan support, and many Republicans asked the President not to veto it.

The restoration act says entire institutions and government agencies must not discriminate if any program or activity within them receives Federal aid. Entire corporations are covered if they provide a public service such as health care or if the aid goes to the business as a whole, as in the Chrysler Corporation bail-out.

The Supreme Court decision applied specifically to Title IX of the 1972 Education Amendments barring sex discrimination in Federally funded education programs.

It was interpreted also to cover the 1964 Civil Rights Act barring racial discrimination in Federally assisted programs, the 1973 Rehabilitation Act barring discrimination against the handicapped in any program or activity receiving Federal aid and the 1975 Age Discrimination Act barring employment discrimination against older people.

TV exaggerates fight problem, coaches claim

Incidents of fighting in college basketball games have been replayed over and over again on television, and some coaches believe that is part of the problem.

Jim Boehm of Syracuse is one who believes television has exploited the problem.

"I think most of it is the media attention it has gotten," he says. "Sure, the game is more physical."

Boehm says the widespread exposure of college basketball has increased the public's awareness of "isolated" incidents.

"I don't think we have a serious problem," Boehm told Randy Minkoff of United Press International.

"We have two games out of 280 teams where there is a fight; and all of a sudden, you see it on television. In hockey, there are probably 280 fight from two games."

Jim Boehm

DePaul coach Joey Meyer agreed, noting that the fights are given extra attention by television.

"I don't think fighting can be condoned; but you see it a lot, and you start to believe there is a problem," Meyer says.

Meyer's father, Ray, said fights have been a part of sports for years but only since television became a major factor has the issue gotten magnified.

"I saw a tape of a fight in a Big East game the other day. Then I saw it again on the 10 o'clock news; the next day, a couple of times, and then on the weekend," the elder Meyer says.

The real perpetrators — according to critics — are probably local sports-casters. Hungry for exciting tape to spice up a local telecast, the fights are a good "grabber" to highlight a nightly sports report.

Brent Musburger of CBS, the network's principal play-by-play man during the NCAA tournament, admits television is caught between reporting news and increasing the risks of more fights.

"I think for the most part, we've done a good job and have been responsible," Musburger said. "If you don't show it, you aren't reporting what goes on. But if you show it over and over again, then you are exploiting it."

Abbott gives credit to parents, Michigan for his success

University of Michigan pitcher Jim Abbott, winner of the 1987 Sullivan Award as America's outstanding amateur athlete, made some interesting comments in a press conference following the March 7 awards dinner in Indianapolis.

"I always wanted to go to the University of Michigan to play baseball," said the 20-year-old Flint, Michigan, native, "and when they offered me a scholarship, I had no other choice... it was the best decision of my life to go to the University of Michigan, and I can't thank the people there enough for what they've done for me.

Jim Abbott, University of Michigan

"My parents (Mike and Cathy Abbott) have to be shocked. I can't tell you what their support and encouragement meant to me growing up. Every day I went to school, my dad always told me to be a leader; don't be a follower. And maybe tonight, I was a little bit of a leader."

From Illinois Benedictine College comes word that men's basketball coach Tony LaScala picked up his 300th career victory when the Eagles defeated Rockford College, 108-85, February 27. The victory also gave Illinois Benedictine a perfect record at home this season.

On the women's side, recognition keeps piling up for Illinois Benedictine student-athlete Anne Westerkamp, who may be the best multisport athlete of either sex at any level of college sports this year.

Consider that, as a member of the IBC women's volleyball, women's basketball and women's softball teams, Westerkamp already has earned all-America recognition five times and was named team most valuable player in all three sports last year.

Trivia Time: Jim Abbott is one of only five athletes representing team sports who have won the prestigious Sullivan award. Football players Felix "Doc" Blanchard and Arnold Tucker won the 1945 and 1946 awards, respectively, and U.S. Sen. Bill Bradley won it for his basketball exploits in 1965. The other team-sport athlete in this group won the 1973 Sullivan. Who is he? Answer later.

Apparently, the "Dean Dome" is a hit with more than just University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, basketball fans. Barely two years old, the 21,444-seat Dean E. Smith Center was voted the nation's "best new venue" according to fall 1987 polls conducted by Performance Magazine and POLLSTAR, an entertainment industry computer information service.

"The entertainment industry and our subscribers are looking at basketball, concerts and everything else Smith Center is doing and has done well," said Gary Daugherty, national facilities sales director for the magazine. "Smith Center's peers have recognized the arena as the best."

Since the facility opened January 18, 1986, 1,096,124 people have attended 74 events that have ranged from Tar Heel basketball games to concerts by rock groups Genesis, Boston and Pink Floyd—an average of 69.1 percent of capacity for each event.

Tennis players from the University of Texas, Austin, and Jacksonville University are making news in the classroom.

Texas men Paul Kocsielski, Mitch Michulka and Robert Rutledge compiled fall 1987 grade-point averages (4.000 scale) of 3.750, 4.000 and 3.700, respectively. The Longhorns' top six singles players combined to produce a 3.560 for the semester.

Jacksonville women Laurie Kane (biology/premedicine major) and Robyn Jones (physics major) have perfect (4.000) cumulative GPAs. Biology major Renee Alexis and math major Kim Babiak joined Kane and Jones on the dean's list.

Another famed arena—the Houston Astrodome—has added another first to its storied history. The world's first roofed baseball/football stadium recently became the first facility to sport separate playing surfaces for each sport.

"Magic Carpet," a synthetic surface made by Monsanto, will be used for both surfaces. When not in use, the appropriate "rug" will be stored on large rollers in a 12-foot concrete pit sunk into center field.

Last week's (March 16 issue of the News) installment of the series on the Final Four covered the tournament during the 1960s, when teams from the University of California, Los

Briefly in the News

Angeles, began a tremendous run of success in the Division I men's basketball play-offs.

Left out, however, was the fact that the dynasty created by legendary coach John Wooden began in Kansas City, site of the 50th Final Four April 2-4. Wooden's 1964 Bruins defeated Duke University, 98-83, for the first of 10 national championships the team would earn under his guidance.

Notably, that championship was the last played in Kansas City.

Lisa Love, University of Texas, Arlington, women's volleyball coach, received the "Table of Champions" award March 5 from the Dallas All Sports Association. The award is given to athletes, coaches or teams in the Dallas-Ft. Worth area who accomplish significant goals in athletics during the preceding year.

Love's team finished 32-7 last fall and advanced to NCAA regional-semifinal play for the second consecutive season.
