Discussion leaders selected for Forum

Seven representatives of NCAA member institutions—including presidents, a faculty athletics representative, and men's and women's athletics administrators—have agreed to serve as conveners of the smaller-group discussion sessions at the Presidents Commission National Forum June 20-21 in Orlando.

The seven are Merrily Dean Baker, director of women's athletics, University of Minnesota, Twin Cities; Raymond M. Burse, president, Kentucky State University; Harold H. Haak, president, California State University, Fresno; David L. Maggard, director of athletics, University of California, Berkeley; John P. Reardon Jr., director of athletics, Harvard University; Judith M. Sweet, director of athletics, University of California, San Diego, and Albert M. Witte, professor of law, University of Arkansas, Fayetteville.

The conveners will serve as the discussion leaders in the seven "breakout" sessions that will follow each of the three topics at the June Forum: NCAA membership structure, NCAA legislative procedures and the proper basis for financial aid for student-athletes.

All delegates to the Forum will be preassigned to one of the seven groups, and those assignments will be made sequentially as registrations are received. That is designed to assure a random distribution of individuals in each discussion group, by division, by geography and by campus position.

The Ad Hoc Committee on the National Forum added the breakout sessions for this Forum program to encourage discussion of the points made by the primary speakers, who will address the entire Forum audience.

The conveners:

Baker

Director of women's athletics at Minnesota since 1982, Baker is in her fourth year as a member of the NCAA Executive Committee.

A former president of the Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women, she was associate director of athletics at Princeton University for 12 years before moving to Minnesota. She also has been director of women's athletics at Franklin and Marshall College and a coach at St. Lawrence University.

She is a graduate of East Stroudsburg University of Pennsylvania, where she earned 12 letters in four sports.

Burse

President of Kentucky State University since 1982, Burse is completing a four-year term on the NCAA Council this year. He also served in 1984-85 as a charter member of the NCAA Presidents Commission. He currently chairs the NCAA Council Subcommittee to Review Minority Opportunities in Intercollegiate Athletics.

He is a graduate of Centre College in Kentucky, studied organic chemistry at Oxford University on a Rhodes scholarship and earned his juris doctorate at Harvard Law School.

Burse was a lawyer in Louisville

Since this year's sample size is significantly smaller than last year's, the Research Committee said it cannot compare results clearly from the two surveys.

However, the committee was able to compare each year's average number of partial qualifiers per institution. It reported a slight decrease in that average, from 2.4 last year to 2.3 this year.

Among the 202 responding schools, 124 (61 percent) said that partial qualifiers enrolled at their campuses for the fall 1987 semester. In addition, 52 schools (26 percent) said that nonqualifiers were registered.

Last year, 67 percent of 250 schools responding to that survey

Results of survey on Bylaw 5-1-(j) released

A survey asking Division I institutions to report the number of Bylaw 5-1-(j) partial qualifiers or nonqualifiers who enrolled as freshmen last fall reveals that prospective student-athletes falling into those categories are a small percentage of all recruits who enrolled.

At 202 schools responding to the survey, 457 (4.5 percent) of 10,197 enrolled freshmen were partial qualifiers under Bylaw 5-1-(j), while 143 (1.4 percent) were nonqualifiers.

Itemized by race, 297 (65 percent) of the partial qualifiers are black, including 213 who failed to achieve the minimum test score and 32 who did not achieve the minimum grade-point average.

An average of 1.5 blacks and 0.7 whites per institution are partial qualifiers this year, compared to 1.6 blacks and 0.7 whites in 1986.

Of the 143 nonqualifiers, 63 (44 percent) are football recruits.

Partial qualifiers are prospective student-athletes who earned an overall grade-point average of 2.000 or better in high school and graduated but did not meet the core-curriculum or test-score requirements of Bylaw 5-1-(j). Nonqualifiers are those who did not earn overall grade-point averages of 2.000 in high school and did not meet the core-curriculum or test-score requirements.

The numbers were collected during the NCAA Research Committee's second annual study of partial qualifiers and nonqualifiers at Division I institutions, which compared for the first time the number of prospective student-athletes ineligible under Bylaw 5-1-(j) to total freshman enrollment.

This year's survey, like last year's, also collected information on the number of partial qualifiers receiving athletics-related aid, itemized by sport, and those failing to achieve minimum standardized-test scores and/or minimum core-curriculum grade-point averages, itemized by sport and race. Also, nonqualifiers were reported again by sport.

Despite the fact that this year's questionnaire was very similar to last year's, a lower percentage of Division I institutions participated in the latest survey—70 percent, compared to 88 percent last year. Surveys were sent to 291 institutions.

Members' foreign sports tours must be approved by NCAA

Student-athletes from NCAA member institutions are leaving the country practically all the time, taking their skills and love for their chosen sports abroad as participants on competitive tours.

Three kinds of foreign tours take place these days. Two involve a specific member institution's teams, and the third involves all-star teams that are organized by a conference or other group, like Athletes-in-Action.

Certain NCAA legislation applies to each kind of tour, some of which must be formally approved by the NCAA Council. "The first major types of tours, institutional tours, fall under guidelines contained in (the NCAA) bylaws," said David A. Knopp, a legislative assistant in the Association's national office. "The other major type of tours, all-star tours, is governed by the bylaws and other legislation. In no case, however, is the approval process tedious or very complicated." Knopp noted that two different kinds of foreign tours are undertaken by teams representing member institutions. The difference, in essence, involves whether the contests or dates of competition will be exempt from the limitations on the number of contests or dates of competition for that academic year per NCAA Bylaw 3-3.

"In no case... is the approval process tedious or very complicated."

"Tours that meet the provisions of NCAA Bylaw 3-6-(c) are those for which all contests or dates of competition count toward the limitations on the team's number of contests or dates of competition," Knopp explained. "These tours must be taken during the permissible playing season in the given sport."

"Tours arranged to meet the provisions of Bylaw 3-6-(b) take place during a vacation period at the institution and involve exempted contests. Before taking place, however, this kind of tour must be approved by the NCAA Council."

That approval process begins when an institutional staff member contacts the national office and requests an application form. "A letter from the institution indicating that all provisions of Bylaw 3-6-(b) are being met is not sufficient," Knopp noted. "And no action regarding (certification of) the tour will be initiated until the application is submitted in a completed form and received at the national office."

The latter point is particularly important, according to Knopp. "We ask that a schedule of games or meets, indicating dates and opponents, is included. And we also request a copy of the institution's academic calendar."

"This information allows us to verify the number of contests to be played on the tour and that all opponents in the contests to be exempted are foreign teams and to verify that the tour will be conducted during an institutional vacation period," he continued. "These two items are most often neglected when applications are submitted, and no action on the request for approval of a tour under Bylaw 3-6-(b) is taken until they are received."

Both kinds of institutional foreign tours are conducted on a once-every-four-year basis. As Knopp noted, however, those four-year cycles are exclusive to the kind of tour being made.

"A school may schedule and conduct what we call a Bylaw 3-6-(b) tour one year and conduct a Bylaw 3-6-(c) tour the very next year," he explained. "The one-in-four-year cycle applies individually to each kind of activity."

All-star tours usually are planned by a member institution's conference or some other sponsoring organization. In some respects, these teams are like summer basketball teams when it comes to approval of a foreign tour.

"Student-athletes are required to have written permission (for participation on the all-star team) by their institution's director of athletics," Knopp said, noting a similarity to summer basketball participation.

Notre Dame's Russo joins panel for financial aid discussion

Joseph A. Russo, director of financial aid at the University of Notre Dame, will participate in the panel discussion of financial aid for student-athletes during the Presidents Commission National Forum June 20-21 in Orlando.

The other members of the panel were announced in last week's issue of The NCAA News: Marvin G. Carmichael, director of financial aid, Clemson University, chair; Judith M. Brame, director of women's athletics, California State University, Northridge; Jeffrey H. Orleans, executive director, Ivy Group, and Diane Tsukamaki, director of financial aid, Lewis and Clark College.

All are members of a subcommittee of the NCAA Committee on Financial Aid and Amateurism that is studying the feasibility of need-based financial aid in college athletics. Originally, Russo was unable to participate in the June program due to a scheduling conflict, which now has been resolved.

Russo has 23 years of experience with student financial aid, at Genesee Community College (New York), Le Moyne College and, for the past 10 years, at Notre Dame.

He serves on the national council of the College Scholarship Service and is editor of the Journal of Student Financial Aid, published by the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators. He also teaches a graduate-level course in student aid administration at Notre Dame.

Russo received his bachelor's degree from Le Moyne and a master's from Syracuse University.

reported the enrollment of partial qualifiers, and 15 percent reported the enrollment of nonqualifiers.

The majority of this year's partial qualifiers again are prospective participants in football and men's basketball. Sixty men's basketball players (13 percent) and 156 football players (34 percent) are partial qualifiers, including 48 men's basketball players and 113 football players who are receiving athletics-related aid. Last year, men's basketball and football accounted for 57.4 percent of partial qualifiers.

Among women's sports, basketball has the most partial qualifiers with 41 (nine percent).

The total number of partial qualifiers receiving athletics-related aid is 278 (61 percent).

ESPN will televise both the November Big Apple NIT and the postseason National Invitation Tournament for each of the next three seasons.

In 1988-89, ESPN will televise exclusively coverage of 10 Big Apple NIT games—including the semifinals and championship—and the semifinals and championship game of the postseason NIT.

ESPN's coverage of the 52nd postseason NIT will feature exclusive telecasts of the semifinals and championship.

more problems for partial qualifiers than did the core-curriculum grade-point requirement. Fully two-thirds (304) of the 457 partial qualifiers failed only to achieve the minimum test score. Another 89 (19 percent) failed solely on the grade-point requirement and 63 (14 percent) failed to achieve both the minimum test score and grade-point average. The percentages are similar to those recorded in last year's survey.

The survey was unable to reveal the number of partial qualifiers or nonqualifiers under Bylaw 5-1-(j) who did not register at Division I institutions.

Division I institutions' responses to the survey are reported sport-by-sport in the accompanying tables.

Basketball's return near at Tulane

The president of Tulane University says board approval is "very imminent" for a plan to bring basketball back to the school, which abolished men's basketball in 1985 because of a point-shaving scandal.

Tulane President Eamon M. Kelly said April 14 that the school could have a men's team by the 1989-90 season.

"The reestablishment of the program has been recommended by the special committee we set up to explore that possibility. All it needs now is the approval of the board," Kelly said.

Kelly eliminated the men's basketball program April 4, 1985, nine days after star forward John "Hot Rod" Williams and others were arrested for sports bribery and related charges.

Williams, now a forward with the Cleveland Cavaliers, was acquitted later but not before the scandal resulted in the resignation of Tulane's athletics director and the entire men's basketball coaching staff.

The committee is made up of students, faculty and alumni. It has recommended that basketball be resumed under certain conditions, all considered minor, according to Kelly, who would not elaborate, the Associated Press reported.

"The board's (directors) OK is the final step needed to reinstate basketball."

W. Kent McWilliams, a member of the Tulane board of directors, said the board approved the return of basketball last year, subject to the study done by the special committee.

"I expect it to get final approval at the board meeting next week," McWilliams said. "The plan was approved by the Tulane senate earlier this week. The board's OK is the final step needed to reinstate basketball."

The search for a coach would begin immediately, Kelly said.

"I would think we'd want to start looking for the right person as soon as the conditions for the program's return are set," he said.

Athletics director Chet Gladchuk said he was working on a plan for Kelly that would deal with the entire scope of reinstating men's basketball.

"The logical approach would be to put the resources in place first, then begin getting the people we want to take charge of the program," Gladchuk said.

Gladchuk said Tulane would need a complete plan for facility, funding, scholarships and staff ready before a head coach could be hired.

"To say we have that game plan now would be premature, but I am working on it and will have it ready for Dr. Kelly as soon as the board approves the return of basketball," Gladchuk said.

Gladchuk said chances of seeing a Tulane team in action in 1990 were "very realistic."

Kelly said he wasn't worried that reinstating men's basketball at Tulane might revive the Williams scandal.

"I think everyone understands that we acted quickly and decisively when we had a problem at Tulane. I'm sure they realize we'll guard against anything like that ever happening here again," Kelly said.

Legislative Assistance

1988 Column No. 16

NCAA Constitution 3-1-(e) and (f)—summer camps

The NCAA Legislation and Interpretations Committee has considered the application of Constitution 3-1-(e) and (f) and confirmed that these provisions would restrict a student-athlete with remaining eligibility from conducting his or her own summer basketball camp.

NCAA Bylaws 1-2-(b) and 1-9—recruiting (spouses)

The Division I subcommittee of the Legislation and Interpretations Committee has considered the application of Bylaw 1-2-(b) and 1-9 and determined that a spouse of an institutional coaching staff member is permitted to contact a prospective student-athlete, the prospect's parents (or legal guardian), or the prospect's spouse only during the prospective student-athlete's official or unofficial visit to the member institution, thus restricting such contact to a 30-mile radius of the institution's main campus.

NCAA Bylaws 5-1-(d) and 5-1-(j)-(2)—seasons of competition

The Division I subcommittee of the Legislation and Interpretations Committee has considered the application of Bylaws 5-1-(d) and 5-1-(j)-(2) to a situation in which a nonqualifier or partial qualifier initially enrolls at a Division I institution for either a single term or an academic year and then transfers to either a junior college, a Division II or III member institution, or an NAIA institution and participates in one year of intercollegiate competition. The subcommittee agreed that in all such situations, a nonqualifier or partial qualifier would be entitled to a maximum of three seasons of competition at a Division I member institution following the initial year of collegiate attendance.

NCAA Bylaw 1-2-(b)—alumni/booster (recruiting)

The Division I subcommittee of the Legislation and Interpretations Committee has considered a previous Council-approved interpretation (August 1987) and agreed that while a prospective student-athlete may visit a locker room after a game when athletics representatives are present in the room, the provisions of Bylaw 1-2-(b) would preclude a member institution from introducing an athletics representative (e.g., a former student-athlete) to a prospective student-athlete in the locker room, inasmuch as such an introduction is not considered "incidental" contact.

This material was provided by the NCAA legislative services department as an aid to member institutions. If an institution has a question it would like to have answered in this column, the question should be directed to William B. Hunt, assistant executive director, at the NCAA national office.

Academics, athletics blend well

By Russel C. Jones
University of Delaware

While watching the Winter Olympics, I was pleased to see members of the University of Delaware skating club competing at the international level.

This also made me reflect upon the role of amateur sports, in general, and the importance of athletics for the university, in particular.

I find inspiration in the hard work and determination, with few rewards and not much appreciation, necessary for an amateur athlete to attain excellence. At this university, we encourage our student-athletes to match that commitment to excellence in sports with a similar commitment in their studies.

It seems to me that there are significant benefits of a strong athletics program to the university community.

Sports are important to several constituencies, including students, faculty, staff, alumni and the community at large. For students, faculty and staff, a vigorous athletics program provides a valuable esprit de corps. For alumni, it is one of the major ties back to the university. And, for Delaware as a whole, it provides for major interaction between the university and the community. This is particularly the case in Delaware, where we have no professional sports franchises.

Who should the players be in the university's athletics program?

It is very important that scholar-athletes are indeed scholars as well as athletes. They are only athletes for a few years. They need to have the wherewithal to succeed in life for a much longer period than that.

So, it is essential that they get a good education, one with which they can get a job after their athletics days are past, even if they happen to become professional athletes.

This balance between athletics and academics is reflected in the university's position on recruiting student-athletes.

The average student coming to the University of Delaware is well-prepared for study here. We look for a good high school background, good performance on test scores—perhaps 100 points above the national average for SAT scores combined. It is that which sets the academic pace at the university, and that is the pace at which the scholar-athlete must also compete.

Our student-athletes compete very well in the academic arena.

For true enjoyment, suspend any disbelief

By Ira Berkow
The New York Times
Excerpted from a column

What we are supposed to be watching is a game (Division I Men's Basketball Championship final) played by the best amateurs in the nation, possibly the world, and engaged in nothing more than a highly visible, madly emotional extracurricular activity, something along the lines of those people with painted faces who do cartwheels on the court during the timeouts, or those with painted faces behind the baskets who wield trombones and bang the drums loudly.

That the basketball players are amateurs, like the cheerleaders and the band members, is a moot point. In many cases, it is total fiction, again like a rousing Hollywood reel.

Traditionally, though, the best posture has been one of suspension. As with a good Hollywood movie, the greatest pleasure accrues to the spectator who can suspend disbelief.

Despite the voluminous NCAA Manual, schools continue to cheat and corrupt the system and participate in what cynical observers believe is symbolic of the moral decay of the nation.

Or at least the moral decay of big-time intercollegiate athletics.

Every time one looks around, there are at least a score or more of schools under sanction or probation by the NCAA for some recruiting violation or some improper modus operandi.

The bargain struck by the colleges is that the players will get a free education and the players will, in turn, function as gladiators who help make the turnstiles whirl and bring the television networks trundling to their doorstep.

Winning teams make millions. Not just from gate receipts and television contracts, but also in the form of donations from boosters and alumni, and free advertising to lure prospective students.

So the universities have developed a lovely little cottage industry to stuff their tills, kind of like monks making and marketing wine, or some little old ladies licking stamps.

Meanwhile, the basketball players are, as the professed agreement goes, growing erudite in the classroom.

Meanwhile, coaches must win, and everything else—the students, their education, the NCAA rules books—are clearly and necessarily second.

After all, coaches must eat, too. And coaches, unlike many professors, have no tenure. Coaches must win in order to keep their jobs, which with salary, sneaker endorsements and TV shows, might earn them as much as $500,000 a year.

So we watch the basketball entertainment and marvel at the skills and recall the great games and individual performances of the past.

We watch all this with anticipation, with excitement, with pleasure, and we suspend disbelief.

26-week rule will help put athletics back in perspective

Mikki Flowers, associate athletics director
Old Dominion University

Norfolk Virginian-Pilot/Ledger-Star

"We (NCAA Council Subcommittee to Review Playing Seasons) were charged with studying playing and practice seasons to see if there were abuses (in their lengths). If we found them, we were to recommend legislation to stop it.

"And we compromised a lot—we looked at the uniqueness of each sport and made adjustments.

"I guess some people felt it wasn't a dramatic solution (26-week rule). But when I met with the Presidents Commission, the problems were different than it perceived. We tried not to hinder what was happening (on the fields); yet, we wanted to get going with some sort of regulation.

"I'm happiest about the fact that during the next few years, we'll be able to look at Divisions II and III (where all sports are under the 26-week rule) and see how this rule affects the competitiveness of their teams. It'll give us a real gauge on the value of the legislation.

"I think the mission was accomplished. Maybe the plan could use some massaging, but the concept is sound. We have at least started putting athletics into the proper perspective of college life, although I know more needs to be done."

University of Pittsburgh

The New York Times

"I think it is important for the NCAA to become more involved in dealing with the issue (regulation of sports agents' activities). For instance, the NCAA should modify regulations prohibiting scholarship athletes from earning money from part-time jobs and limiting the amount of spending money they can receive.

"Many of the athletes who become prey for agents come from financially underprivileged backgrounds in the first place; and if they don't have access to spending money to buy toothpaste or to go to a movie, they become that much more vulnerable to fall in with an agent.

"Therefore, I feel it is important that some of those rules be reexamined and perhaps revised.

"However, I don't feel that we should pay salaries to college athletes. I think the value of an athletics grant-in-aid too often is ignored or underestimated by those people who claim college athletes are being 'used' by schools simply to make money themselves."

"Certainly, I've seen it before, the attitude that girls have a right to be in athletics as long as they are cute little cheerleaders who stay out of the way of the big, strong boys.

"But that's a prejudice that women have to overcome in every state—that the girls are welcome to come to the games as long as they are majorettes or cheerleaders or little soft things who stand back and cheer for their men.

"The University of Texas had always had a very strong men's athletics program, with a football team that was outstanding year after year.

"That may seem to be a hindrance (to the development of women's sports), with all the emphasis placed on the men; but, actually, it helped. The university had an expectation of excellence in athletics because of the tradition, and administrators were anxious that the university not be embarrassed in any phase of competition."

Let's take a look at the 'exploitation' of college football players

By Michael Kelly
Omaha World-Herald

University of Oklahoma football coach Barry Switzer, in a visit to Omaha two years ago, said the day is coming: a college football players' strike.

"At Ann Arbor or Lincoln or Los Angeles, or at any major university," Switzer said, "one day at 1:30, they won't come out of the locker room. One day, the athletes will be organized, I promise you."

Maybe sooner than we think. Even though most University of Nebraska, Lincoln, players are "paid" in the form of grants-in-aid worth $32,400 for out-of-state players over the customary five-year period—and even though financially needy athletes now can receive Federal grants totaling $7,000 in that period—the Nebraska Legislature has passed a bill to pay stipends to football players.

It was vetoed, however, by Gov. Kay Orr.

Some NCAA rules, certainly, could use changing. But does the university really need to pay football players more than they already receive? If they don't get what they want, will they strike?

The idea of paying players may not gain support from people who (a) couldn't afford college; (b) had to work during college to pay all or part of their education, or (c) had to face huge bills to pay for their children's college education.

The same may be true of financially disadvantaged people who see that Nebraska football players already receive many benefits unavailable to most. They eat at a training table, study in a comfortable setting and receive doting academic help.

One of the arguments supposedly in favor of paying players is that those on grants-in-aid aren't "allowed" to work during the school year, under NCAA rules. For those of us who "had" to work during college, spending as much time at low-paying jobs as athletes spend at their sports, that is not a compelling argument.

It's true that college football players work hard at practice, in the weight room and at games. They risk injury, spend a lot of time on their sport and, at schools such as Nebraska, undergo public scrutiny and must deal with the attendant pressures.

It's not easy. But neither is it forced upon them.

At Nebraska, the athletes play for a football team that brings in millions of dollars each year—and therein lies the core of the proponents' argument.

Because Nebraska has supported the idea of a stipend such as $60 or $70 per month per player, Chancellor Martin A. Massengale said 10 days ago that the bill was "consistent with the efforts of the University of Nebraska, Lincoln." Football coach Tom Osborne, who supports a stipend, said he was opposed to the legislation.

If the Big Eight wanted to secede from the NCAA and make its own rules, the league apparently could do so. But its teams couldn't play against NCAA members if states with Big Eight teams adopted legislation to pay players.

Richard D. Schultz, executive director of the NCAA, said he didn't think the Nebraska legislation would have "one iota of effect" on NCAA members, who have voted against paying players.

Because of the reversal of the so-called "Grove City" bill passed by Congress over President Reagan's veto, Schultz said, any plan to pay athletes couldn't be limited to football players.

Even if Nebraska can afford to pay its athletes, Schultz said, many universities cannot.

And yet, largely because of television, there is much money to be made in major-college sports. The Big Eight made about $3.6 million on the NCAA basketball tournament, about $450,000 of which goes to Nebraska.

That windfall doesn't line the pockets of university officials and coaches—it goes into the athletics program. That and football money help pay for the nonrevenue sports.

The best way to spend sports money is on academics, to help ensure the future of athletes. If players haven't graduated when their eligibility is up, keep paying for their education until they get their degrees.

Many of the players come from families who, with scholarships, easily can afford to help with "pocket money." The NCAA in January increased the yearly Federal Pell Grant allowance, for financially needy students, from $900 to $1,400.

The players don't have it so bad. Far from being exploited, they receive attention and opportunities most people only wish they had.

Crum joins critics of NCAA policy on fighting

A second head men's basketball coach has spoken out against the new NCAA policy on fighting in college games.

Earlier, Gary Williams, head coach at Ohio State University, criticized the policy (The NCAA News, April 13) because it does not include an appeal process to player suspensions.

That's the same criticism now leveled at the rule by Denny Crum, coach at the University of Louisville.

Crum focused most of his objections on a decision by the NCAA Men's Basketball Rules Committee to eject any player involved in a fight and place him on probation.

If the player is involved in a second fight, he would be barred from participating in his team's next game. A third altercation would mean suspension for the rest of the season.

There will be no appeal process, and Crum said, "You can't penalize somebody without some kind of an appeal process. There's no place for fighting in college basketball—and I certainly don't condone it—but I have a real problem with this," he told the Associated Press.

Louisville was involved in a fight this past season, and two Cardinals were ejected, along with two Uni-

"If somebody is slugging you in the face, are you supposed to just stand there and take it?" Crum asked. "I don't think protecting yourself should be considered fighting. Who started the fight should have more to do with who should be punished. This is ridiculous."

Crum also aimed some critical comments at Bylaw 5-1-(j), which stipulates that incoming freshmen must achieve, among other requirements, a minimum score of 15 on the American College Test or 700 on the Scholastic Aptitude Test to be eligible to play or practice their first year. Without those scores, players also lose a year of eligibility.

Although he doesn't object to the spirit of the rule, Crum said, he strongly believes players who do not qualify should be allowed to practice and should retain four seasons of eligibility in five years.

"What we are doing is penalizing the players who need the extra year more than anybody," Crum said. "That doesn't make any sense. We're going backward there. What we need to do is give him five or six years to complete his degree, not take years away from him."

Crum said it was ridiculous not to allow the players to practice "because they absolutely get lost. They're not at practice every day where you can keep your thumb on them and make sure they do what they're supposed to do."

Crum said he saw little hope that the rule—passed with the support of college presidents and faculty athletics representatives—will be changed any time soon.

"Every coach I've talked to feels the same way I do," he said. "But coaches don't make the rules."

Academics

The average high school grade-point average of our scholarship athletes compares very well with the average of the total student body. We must continue to select our scholarship athletes from the same applicant pool as that from which we choose our other students.

It is a difficult task for the scholar-athlete to balance the demands of athletics and academic programs.

The university helps by providing tutors or counselors when necessary, or more flexible schedules than perhaps the average student has.

The scholar-athlete should have the same opportunity to complete a degree as the average student who comes to the university. Our scholar-athletes have performed successfully in that regard. In fact, the most recent figures available show that a slightly greater percentage of our athletes receive degrees than do other students.

By keeping sports in the proper perspective—as part of a student's education—we can place the right not competitive.

My own criterion is that we should win roughly half the time. We are, in fact, doing slightly better than that. Our record for the years

"If, over long periods of time... we are either winning all of the contests or losing all of the contests in any given sport, we are probably doing something wrong."

emphasis on winning.

If the University of Delaware chooses to compete in a sport at the intercollegiate level, then it should be competitive. It is not fair to the student-athletes nor to our various constituencies if, over time, we are 1981 to 1987, in 22 sports, shows that we won 64 percent of the games we played.

In some sports, we obviously do better than that average; in others, we do somewhat worse. If, over long periods of time, however, we are either winning all of the contests or losing all of the contests in any given sport, we are probably doing something wrong. We are either overemphasizing a sport, or we are not putting enough resources and enthusiasm into it.

In addition to a wide variety of varsity sports at the intercollegiate level, there are a number of club sports and an extensive intramural program. We are fortunate to have these fine programs at the university.

I encourage students to participate in them in any way they can; and when participation is not possible, I urge them to show their appreciation of our athletes by attending athletics events and cheering the participants on.

Bok urges universities to impart ethics, morality

College and universities must make a greater effort to teach students how to behave ethically, inside and outside the classroom, Harvard University President Derek Bok said April 15.

"Colleges and universities have created a world that dominates the lives and thoughts of countless young people during years in which their character and values are being formed," Bok said in his annual report to the university's board of overseers.

"Under these conditions, students must get help from their universities in developing moral standards, or they are unlikely to get much assistance at all," said Bok.

A more comprehensive effort is needed that not only encourages courses in moral reasoning and professional ethics but goes beyond the classroom to build an environment that supports basic values such as honesty, nonviolence, promise-keeping, freedom of expression and respect for the law, Bok said.

He also said schools should encourage activities, especially programs of community service, that build respect for others and an awareness of the needs of those less fortunate, United Press International reported.

In addition, Bok said schools should maintain a high ethical standard in dealing with the moral issues that periodically face the institution and make sure that faculty, administration, coaches and other staff reinforce this message.

Huskers win men's gym title

After finishing second three consecutive years, Nebraska took the team title at the NCAA Men's Gymnastics Championships, posting a 288.15-287.150 victory over Illinois April 14-16 in Lincoln, Nebraska.

The title was the sixth for the Cornhuskers and the team's first since 1984.

"I was impressed with Illinois, and UCLA is an extremely talented team," Nebraska coach Francis Allen said. "All three of these teams are terrific college teams. If we had let up, we would have gotten beat. The crowd helped us...the crowd made us."

Miguel Rubio of Houston Baptist was a double winner in the individual competition. He took the all-around title with a score of 114.150 and was the horizontal-bar titlist with a score of 9.950.

Chad Fox of New Mexico won his third straight vault title. He is the first competitor to win three consecutive individual titles in an event since Jim Hartung of Nebraska won the still-rings competition in 1980, 1981 and 1982. Fox is only the second gymnast to win three straight vault titles. The first was Earl Shanks of Chicago, who won titles in 1940, 1941 and 1942.

Nebraska's Kevin Davis won the parallel bars outright this year. Last year, he was co-champion with team-

Legislation and Interpretations Committee minutes

Acting for the NCAA Council, the Legislation and Interpretations Committee:

Summer camps

1. Student-athlete's basketball camp. Agreed that the application of Constitution 3-1-(e) and (f) would restrict a student-athlete with remaining eligibility from conducting his or her own summer basketball camp.

Recruiting (official visits/student hosts)

2. Official visits. Considered several interpretations regarding the application of Bylaw 1-9 (official visits) and recommended that the NCAA Recruiting Committee develop standards that may be reviewed by the Legislation and Interpretations Committee prior to review by the full Council in August.

Permissible expenses (travel expenses)

3. Expenses for senior student-athletes to be honored by a state's governor. Agreed that the provisions of Constitution 3-1-(h)-(i) would permit a member institution to provide actual and necessary expenses for its senior student-athletes in any sport (as opposed to a particular team) to be recognized by the governor of the state in which the member institution is located.

Recruiting (spouses)

4. Spouse of institutional coach-staff member (Division I). Considered an NCAA Division I Recruiting Committee recommendation regarding the application of Bylaws 1-2-(b) and 1-9 and determined that a spouse of an institutional coaching staff member is permitted to contact a prospective student-athlete, the prospect's parents (or legal guardian), or the prospect's spouse only during the prospective student-athlete's official or unofficial visit to the member institution, thus restricting such contact to a 30-mile radius of the institution's main campus.

Seasons of competition

5. Seasons of competition for nonqualifiers and partial qualifiers (Division I). Considered the application of a previous Division I subcommittee interpretation (reference: Item No. 5 of the minutes of the committee's February 4, 1988, conference) concerning the applications of Bylaws 5-1-(d) and 5-1-(j)-(2) to a situation in which a nonqualifier or partial qualifier initially enrolls at a Division I institution for either a single term or an academic year and then transfers to either a junior college, a Division II or III member institution, or an NAIA institution and participates in one year of intercollegiate competition; agreed that in all such situations, a nonqualifier or partial qualifier would be entitled to a maximum of three seasons of competition at a Division I member institution following the initial year of collegiate attendance.

Alumni/booster (recruiting)

6. Introduction of boosters to prospective student-athletes in locker rooms (Division I). Considered a previous Council-approved interpretation (August 1987) and agreed that while a prospective student-athlete may visit a locker room after a game when athletics representatives are present in the room, the provisions of Bylaw 1-2-(b) would preclude a member institution from introducing an athletics representative (e.g., a former student-athlete) to a prospective student-athlete in a locker room, inasmuch as such an introduction is not considered "incidental" contact.

Coaches (financial aid director)

7. Division III coach on financial aid committee (Division III). Considered a previous Council-approved interpretation (January 1988), which indicates that the provisions of 1988 NCAA Convention Proposal No. 92 (amending Case No. 415) would preclude an institution's director of financial aid from continuing to coach on a part-time basis an intercollegiate team at a Division III institution; recommended that the Council review this interpretation and determine whether an institution's director of financial aid may continue to be involved on a part-time basis as a coaching staff member if the individual currently has an employment contract with the member institution and is excluded from any involvement in the financial aid packaging for all students who will participate in intercollegiate athletics.

Nebraska governor vetoes stipend bill

Gov. Kay Orr has vetoed a bill that called for paying stipends to University of Nebraska, Lincoln, football players, saying passage of a law on the issue is "inappropriate."

The bill's sponsor, Sen. Ernie Chambers of Omaha, said he was disappointed but not surprised, and the mere passage of the bill makes a national statement, United Press International reported.

"This is the first time in history a state has passed such a bill. Her veto cannot erase the fact," Chambers said. "It has generated discussion all over the country."

The bill provided for the payment of stipends if at least four other states with Big Eight Conference schools pass similar laws. It was passed by the legislature April 8 after lawmakers voted to reconsider its defeat the previous day.

Chambers said the bill was intended to show the NCAA that football players should be given some monetary rewards for the hard work they put in on the football field. Paying players is against NCAA rules.

Orr said, however, "an expression to the NCAA through the enactment of a statute is inappropriate." Orr said that by passing the bill, the legislature registered its concern for athletes. It is important now that the university express itself clearly on the issue, she said.

"The board of regents is the appropriate forum for dealing with the NCAA," she said. "Therefore, I strongly urge the regents to address this issue and communicate their position to that body."

Chambers vowed to introduce the bill again next year.

"I'm not the least bit daunted, and I shall return," he said.

High Country plans postseason tournament

The High Country Athletic Conference is planning its first postseason basketball tournament in 1989, says Margie McDonald, executive director.

The winner of the two-day event will receive the conference's automatic bid to the NCAA Division I Women's Basketball Championship. The decision to hold the play-off was made by the conference's primary women athletics administrators.

Details concerning both site selection and the number of teams involved will be discussed and determined at a May 18 meeting.

The conference includes Brigham Young University, Colorado State University, Creighton University,

New Mexico State University, the University of Utah and the University of Wyoming.

The winner of the regular-season championship will be declared the conference champion. The winner of the tournament will receive the automatic bid. Currently, the regular-season champion gets the free pass to the NCAA tournament.

"The championship tournament should allow us to receive more visibility at the end of the season," McDonald said. "It will help us showcase our teams at the campus of one of our institutions and create an opportunity for all of our teams to have one more shot at NCAA tournament qualifications," she told

Margie McDonald

United Press International.

The dates for the first championship will fall on two consecutive days between March 8 and 11, 1989, she said.

Fenner gets three-year term of probation, fine of $1,000

Former University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, football star Derrick Fenner was sentenced to three years' probation and fined $1,000 April 15 for his conviction on drug-possession charges.

"I think you have the necessary talent, mentally and physically, to make something of yourself," said Prince George's County Circuit Court Judge Jacob Levin in handing down the sentence.

Fenner, 20, of Oxon Hill, faced a maximum sentence of four years in prison and a $20,000 fine after pleading guilty in late January to one count of cocaine possession. As part of the plea bargain, prosecutors agreed not to pursue a charge of illegally transporting a handgun, the Associated Press reported.

The charges stemmed from Fenner's arrest last May after he was pulled over by authorities while driving a friend's truck. When the running back could not produce vehicle registration, police searched the vehicle, uncovering a .38-caliber revolver and ammunition under the front seat. They also found a plastic bag containing 25 vials of cocaine in Fenner's pocket.

Prosecutors dropped a murder charge against Fenner in an unrelated incident last November, the fatal shooting of a Hyattsville man. They said new evidence showed the running back, who was charged with the crime in June, was miles away when Marcellus Leach, 19, was shot to death May 23 in the courtyard of a county apartment complex during what police called a "turf war" over drugs.

After he was cleared, Fenner was a state's witness at the trial of an acquaintance accused of that murder. He conceded on the stand that he had sold drugs "a couple of times" but insisted, "I was never a drug dealer."

"We then ask the team's sponsor to forward those letters of permission with their application for approval of the tour."

Case No. 260 (page 389, 1988-89 NCAA Manual) indicates that permission letters must be received and that tours must be approved for teams that include more than a specific number of players from one member institution.

Those limits vary by sport (e.g., four in fencing, five in field hockey, etc.), and all tours by all-star basketball teams must be approved because of the provisions of NCAA Constitution 3-9-(b) If those limits are exceeded, the all-star tour would count as the institution's one-in-four-year opportunity.

"In effect, participation on an all-star basketball team making a foreign tour is no different than playing in a summer basketball league or tournament," Knopp said. "Players on these teams ask for a waiver per NCAA Constitution 3-9-(b)-(4)-(vi), which relates to off-season international competition."

Like an institutional tour, Knopp said that organizations sponsoring all-star tours conducted per Case No. 260 or Constitution 3-9-(b)-(4)-(vi) and approved under Bylaw 3-6-(b) must include a schedule of competition with their application for approval.

"Although all of this undoubtedly can appear complicated, the certification and conduct of foreign tours is not difficult under NCAA legislation," said Knopp. "I would encourage individuals with questions to contact me at the national office. And I would suggest that member institutions or other organizations considering a foreign tour obtain the necessary approval forms well in advance and submit them fully completed."

"These steps will assure expedient processing of the request for approval."

Handy man becomes jack-of-all-trades

John Simons has become a jack-of-all-trades since going to work at Philadelphia College of Textiles and Science. After joining the athletics department staff as assistant women's basketball coach, Simons also was named the department's equipment manager.

Women's softball season has rolled around now—with Simons as head coach. When the Lady Rams' head coach resigned in late February, head women's basketball coach Julie Soriero, who also is the school's coordinator of women's athletics, asked Simons to fill in.

Basketball season ended March 5, with the softball team on spring break and the season opener only 12 days away. Simons' first practice with the team occurred March 13. His "crash course" proved successful, however, when the Lady Rams defeated Chestnut Hill College, 15-3, March 17.

"We're calling this the 'microwave team,'" Simons quipped, in a news release from the school. "(The players went) from the freezer to the field real fast."

Baseball fans at Pan American University have a real fireman to cheer. Senior pitcher Dave Kandra, who piled up 20 saves in two years at Butte Junior College (Chico, California) before transferring to Pan American, spends his summers fighting forest fires in the West.

"In the summer, I work—I've never played summer baseball," said the 6-3 native of Tulalake, California. "I work for the U.S. Forest Service. They fly us to the fires on helicopters."

"I've worked on some big fires. It's tough work," Kandra added. And although he's compiled a 6-1 record as a starter at Pan American, Kandra hinted that he would enjoy a return to "firefighting" from the mound. "I like coming into the game in the late innings when it's close...I could pitch some relief this year."

Q Is there a limit of how many television exposures an institution can have during the football season?

A Television appearances of the football teams of NCAA member institutions were limited under the NCAA-administered television contracts from the 1950s through 1983. In 1984, the United States Supreme Court ruled, in a lawsuit brought about by the Universities of Oklahoma and Georgia, that the NCAA could not administer such a contract. That decision opened the door for institutions' football teams to appear on television as often as they wished. The NCAA can impose no limits on such appearances.

tics team through a weekend practice in preparation for the NCAA Northeast regional, coach Judi Avenner went home—then to the hospital—and had a baby.

Practice ended at 11:30 a.m. March 2, and Avenner went into labor that afternoon. Sunday at 5:56 a.m., Avenner delivered a 6-pound, 8-ounce son. Mother and baby—the second for Avenner and husband Marshall—are doing fine.

Avenner's team congratulated her by winning the regional April 9.

"Is UMass the overtime capital of the sports world?" the headline asks. Frankly, the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, has a legitimate claim.

The Minuteman football team

McNeese State University football coach Sonny Jackson had the day off April 15 when his charges held the school's annual spring football game. A week earlier, the head-coaching positions for the blue and gold squads were auctioned off in a fund-raiser for the McNeese State football program. Jackson gave successful bidders complete control over their teams, allowing them to call all plays and make all other coaching decisions.

Already this spring, the Minuteman lacrosse team defeated Cornell, 8-7, in five overtimes.

Trivia Time: Some media outlets recently reported, incorrectly, that the University of Texas, Austin, became the first school to win Division I men's and women's championships in the same sport during the same year when the Longhorn men captured the NCAA swimming team title. Which school actually can claim the honor, and in which sport? Answer later.

Jim Cherniss, women's volleyball coach at Idaho State University, has been asked by Sport America—a branch of the U.S. Information Service—to conduct a series of clinics this spring in Brazil. Joining Cherniss will be his wife, Norma, who will conduct dance and tennis clinics. She coaches the former at Idaho State.
