Convention seen as beginning of era of reform

By Timothy J. Lilley
Managing Editor, The NCAA News

If the NCAA's first official event of the new decade accurately set the tone for the 1990s, college athletics may have taken the first steps on its most dynamic adventure in history.

"I think the positive thing out of all this," Executive Director Richard D. Schultz said January 10, soon after the close of Convention business, "is that there is now within the membership a very strong and urgent feeling that we need some reform... that we need change."

"And I think what took place (during the Convention) is a very positive step in that direction."

How will this Convention be remembered? That probably depends on your perspective:

- Some will remember it as the legislative meeting where the NCAA Presidents Commission finally exercised the muscle many had hoped it would flex from the time it was established six years ago.

- Many will remember votes to rescind 1989 Convention Proposal No. 42 and modify NCAA Bylaw 14.3 to permit partial qualifiers to receive nonathletically related financial aid.

- Some will not forget the almost five-hour debate on measures to reduce the time demands on student-athletes, during which two dozen roll-call votes were taken.

- Some will recall quick passage

athletics at Colorado State University, before the start of Tuesday's general business session of proposals to stiffen penalties for positive drug tests and to establish a year-round NCAA drug-testing program.

- Some will remember landmark votes to establish graduation-rate disclosure procedures in Divisions I and II.

- Few will forget that this Convention voted to permit America's elite athletes to receive broken-time payments, insurance coverage, and athletics apparel and equipment from national governing bodies without losing intercollegiate eligibility.

- Few in attendance will forget television crews and still photographers capturing debate on these and other issues as it happened when speakers like University of California, Los Angeles, Chancellor Charles F. Young and University of Nebraska, Lincoln, football coach Tom Osborne, among others, were practically obstructed from delegates' view more than once by roaming bands of media.

- And Schultz attempted to preserve, through his news-conference comments, the student-athlete focus of many 1990 Convention votes.

"I think you could go out of here and call this the Convention of the student-athlete," Schultz told many of the almost 150 members of the

Seven begin Commission terms

Seven new NCAA Presidents Commission members began serving four-year terms at the conclusion of the 84th annual Convention January 7-10 in Dallas.

The new members were chosen by chief executive officers of NCAA member institutions who voted by mail ballot for candidates representing the various divisions.

The seven new members of the Commission:

- Division I: William H. Cunningham, University of Texas, Austin (position designated by the Southwest Athletic Conference); Ronald E. Beller, East Tennessee State University (Division I-AA South region), and Samuel H. Magill, Monmouth College (New Jersey) (Division I-AAA at large).

Glen C. Tuckett

Tuckett gets Gomez award

Glen C. Tuckett, director of athletics at Brigham Young University, has been awarded the 29th annual Lefty Gomez Award by the American Baseball Coaches Association.

The Gomez award recognizes contributions to amateur baseball. Tuckett was his school's baseball coach from 1950 to 1976 and compiled a 498-251 record.

Tuckett is a member of the NCAA Division I Baseball Committee. Past assignments have included the Olympic Baseball Committee, which was responsible for baseball being included in the 1984 Olympics.

Upon his retirement from coaching in 1976, Tuckett was the ninth most victorious coach in the NCAA. His teams won 13 division championships, three conference titles, three district championships and had two appearances in the College World Series. In 1974, he led the U.S. team to the title of the World Amateur Baseball Tournament.

Posters are part of project on eating disorders

The NCAA has mailed posters outlining the warning signs of anorexia and bulimia to the senior women administrators at all member institutions.

The posters are part of the Association's educational project titled "Nutrition and Eating Disorders in College Athletics." In December, two videotaped programs and supplemental written materials were distributed to each NCAA member institution. A third video program will be mailed in early February.

The 18-by-24-inch, two-color poster depicts a despondent young woman sitting on a scale to which her ankle has been chained. Below the photograph is the headline "Don't Let Weight Control You" and the warning signs for anorexia and bulimia.

Additional copies of the poster are available from the NCAA circulation department for $7 per copy. Payment must accompany any order, which should be directed to the Circulation Office, NCAA Publishing, P.O. Box 1906, Mission, Kansas 66201.

News Fact File

Fifty Divisions II and III member institutions elect to be classified in Division I in one men's sport. Exactly half of them are in District 2, but every district has at least two. Ice hockey and wrestling are tied for the most popular move-up sport with 13 institutions each (11 of the 13 in wrestling are in District 2). Next are soccer, nine, and baseball, eight.

The other seven are scattered in five sports—gymnastics, lacrosse, skiing, tennis and volleyball.

the Honda-Broderick Cup January 9 in Dallas as the nation's outstanding collegiate woman athlete for the 1988-89 academic year.

Huber was one of 10 finalists for the award, which was presented at a dinner held in association with the National Association of Collegiate Directors of Athletics. The recipient was selected in balloting involving the more than 800 NCAA member institutions.

The Villanova psychology major and recent NCAA Today's Top Six honoree won eight Division I individual titles during her collegiate career, including a cross country title last fall.

The other nine finalists received Honda Awards as the outstanding athletes in their respective sports. They are Sandra Birch, Stanford University (tennis); Michelle Dekkers, Indiana University, Bloomington (cross country); Mary Eggers, University of Illinois, Champaign (volleyball); Bridgette Gordon, University of Tennessee, Knoxville (basketball); Pat Hurst, San Jose State University (golf); Jenna Johnson, Stanford University (swimming and diving); Diane Madl, University of Connecticut (field hockey); Janice Parks, University of California, Los Angeles (softball), and Lucy Wener, University of Georgia (gymnastics).

Also receiving Honda Awards as athletes of the year in Divisions II and III were Janet Cobbs, a volleyball player at North Dakota State University, and Anna Prineas, a track and field standout at Carleton College.

Another honor, the Honda Inspiration Award, was presented to Angie Jacobs, a softball player at the University of California, Berkeley.

Volleyball grants available

While this year's grant recipients, Juniata College, Jersey City State College and Long Island University/C. W. Post Campus, prepare for their 1990 competitive seasons, the United States Volleyball Association has announced the availability of 10 men's NCAA varsity volleyball start-up grants to be offered for 1990-91.

The three colleges received grants from the USVBA, in cooperation with the Sporting Goods Manufacturers Association and the United States Volleyball Educational Foundation. These schools have made a commitment to continue the program at an NCAA varsity level for three years.

Applicants for 1990-91 must sponsor men's volleyball in the three years of the grant period: 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

All applications must be received by the USVBA before April 20, 1990. Interested universities should contact Dick Powell, USVBA, 1750 East Boulder Street, Colorado Springs, Colorado 80909; telephone 719/578-4750.

Ideas sought to reduce time demands on athletes

Athletics interest groups in sports other than football and basketball are invited to submit recommendations to reduce time demands on student-athletes in those sports by sending such proposals to the NCAA national office.

Adoption by the 1990 Convention in Dallas of Proposal No. 30-A requires the submission of such ideas no later than April 1. The proposal itself suggested athletics administrators, coaches and NCAA governing sports committees as examples of groups that may wish to develop such recommendations.

Proposal No. 30-A was approved overwhelmingly in a roll-call vote in Dallas. A total of 710 voted in favor, with only 33 opposed.

Ideas submitted in accordance with the proposal (i.e., recommendations to reduce time demands that are received by April 1) will be compiled for review by the NCAA Presidents Commission and the NCAA Council in their April meetings. The source of each such idea will be identified in that compilation.

It is anticipated that coaches associations, governing sports committees, athletics directors' groups and conferences will be the most likely sources of such proposals, although individual submissions also will be accepted.

The recommendations should be sent to NCAA Presidents Commission, P.O. Box 1906, Mission, Kansas 66201.

Proposal No. 30-A requires the Council or the Commission to sponsor legislation at the January 1991 Convention to reduce time demands on student-athletes in all sports other than football and basketball. Those two sports were treated by adoption of such proposals at the Convention in Dallas.

NCAA reforms offer promise for future

USA Today
An editorial

College basketball seasons will be shortened.
Spring football practices will be cut back.
Athletes will be tested for use of steroids.
Colleges will publish graduation rates of athletes.
Freshman athletes will be eligible for summer school scholarships to prepare them for college academics.

Freshmen struggling to meet academic standards may receive nonathletics scholarships.

All those reforms were voted in by the delegates to the NCAA annual Convention in Dallas—not a bad week's work for the people who run college sports.

They didn't exactly wipe away the grime of corruption that has tarnished college sports for almost a century. Given the money in big-time sports, that would take more self-sacrifice than NCAA institutions have been able to muster.

But they did clear off enough ethical smudges to offer hope for the future.

Most encouraging was the courage shown by the Convention in shortening the basketball season from 28 to 25 games. That will cost money—and at many institutions, money is what big-time college sports programs are all about.

The millions sports raise for stressed university budgets are the excuse for trying to win at any cost—and forgetting that the mission of universities is to educate students.

This was no small loss. Gate receipts for three home games mean big money. At Syracuse University, which draws the biggest crowds, it can mean $1.5 million.

The money will buy much-needed class time for basketball players, who now spend an average of 30 hours a week practicing and uncounted hours traveling to games.

Cutting back spring football practice will do the same, while publishing graduation rates will help students determine which institutions educate athletes and which don't.

Steroid tests will help to protect students from the temptation to sacrifice their health for a gridiron victory.

And the new scholarship rules will provide yet another incentive to help athletes in the classroom.

Critics call the reforms an illusion.

They are wrong. On their own, these reforms will help student-athletes. As part of a larger movement begun in 1984 by university presidents, they can mean even more.

The presidents tightened academic standards for athletes and imposed a "death penalty"—termination of sports programs that break the rules repeatedly.

If student-athletes are ever to become full participants in the academic life of their institutions, the university presidents, individually and collectively, offer the best hope.

Any college that wants to reform can recognize that fact today. It can make its coaches and athletics director accountable to the college president, whose job is education.

Astoundingly, that is not always the case. Often, athletics directors report to trustees and alumni who have proven all too willing to corrupt their institutions.

That may win games, but it doesn't educate anyone.

When education is put first, everyone wins. That's ample reason for colleges to clean up their act.

Commission must be careful not to abuse its new power

Bernard F. Sliger, president
Florida State University

The Kansas City Star

"It would have been demoralizing had things gone any differently (at the NCAA Convention). I don't think it would have ended the (Presidents) Commission, but it would have been demoralizing.

"Because of what happened (the approval of all major legislative items proposed by the Commission) and the way it happened, we shouldn't get arrogant. We still probably aren't talking to as many people as we should talk to when we write some of this legislation.

"This should make us more responsible, because now that we know what we can do, we've got to be very careful."

Eugene F. Corrigan, commissioner
Atlantic Coast Conference

WRAL-FM (Raleigh, North Carolina)

"The fact the presidents won (approval of their legislative proposals at the NCAA Convention) was important and the fact the student-athlete won was important. You can't have a better Convention if those two things happen.

"I think we probably took some steps back financially that we may need to try to reclaim in the next year or so, because I think some of those things are going to have much more of an effect than people realize.

"But I think it's going to be a trade-off, and the trade-off will be to help the student-athletes. So I feel good about where we are."

Lattie F. Coor, president
Arizona State University

Omaha World-Herald

"This (NCAA Convention) strongly affirms the place of the Presidents Commission in setting policy at the NCAA Convention.

"It was a big day for the issue of limiting the demands on student-athletes. It's a start. It's not the end. It's a beginning—but a significant beginning.

"This Convention has said the NCAA will now move to balance the life of a student-athlete."

Sen. Joseph Biden Jr., Delaware Democrat
U.S. Senate

The Associated Press

"The NCAA has sent a strong message to college football players and to every young American athlete that using steroids is a dangerous form of cheating and will no longer be tolerated.

"This is a good step by the NCAA. I hope the NFL takes note and expands its antisteroid policy to include year-round, random steroid testing. While the NCAA and other sports groups are moving in the right direction, we must mount a national crackdown against these drugs."

Bob Knight, head men's basketball coach
Indiana University, Bloomington

United Press International

"I don't think that the presidents have ever gotten together and told the chemistry department what the hell to teach or how to lecture. I don't know why they are any more qualified to tell the athletics department what the hell to do.

"Now, there are some things the presidents could do that would help kids. The seven o'clock (basketball) starting time would be one."

Richard D. Schultz, executive director

Legislation will benefit players, Paterno says

Pennsylvania State University football coach Joe Paterno praised the NCAA's decision to demand disclosure of graduation rates for athletes, saying it will force coaches to give their players more time to study.

"It will put academics up front," Paterno said January 9. "There will be less time for meetings and practices and studying film.

"Suddenly, there is a new criterion for coaches to operate under. How many of your players graduate? It will cut back practice time."

Under Proposal No. 24, passed at the NCAA Convention, Division I schools will be required to publish graduation rates beginning in 1991. Failure to do so could mean possible ineligibility for NCAA events or championships.

NCAA Division II schools will have until 1994 to publish graduation rates.

A bill was pending in Congress that would have forced NCAA members to disclose graduation rates.

"It's going to make a big impact overall, particularly on the type of kid you recruit," Paterno said. "The kids going to a school should know the graduation rate of that school and the public should know.

"It should never be very far from a kid's mind that he's got to get that diploma.

"Parents want to know the chances of their kid graduating," he said. "I had that information for them. Other schools also will have to come up with that information," he told the Associated Press.

Prepared statements on freshman eligibility

(Editor's Note: Immediately following the opening business session of the 1990 NCAA Convention, January 7 at Dallas' Loews Anatole Hotel, an estimated 1,500 Convention delegates and members of the media heard two members of the NCAA Presidents Commission debate the issue of freshman eligibility.

Following are the prepared remarks delivered by Charles E. Young, chancellor of the University of California, Los Angeles, and Thomas K. Hearn, president of Wake Forest University. Transcripts of their rebuttals follow those remarks.)

Opening remarks

Charles E. Young

The subject of the eligibility or ineligibility of first-year students to participate in intercollegiate athletics is again an issue of debate (though not at this time action) at an NCAA Convention. I say again because this is not the first time it has been before this august body. Indeed, it is interesting to note that the history of debate over the issue of freshman eligibility is longer than the history of the NCAA itself.

While the NCAA is celebrating its 85th anniversary this year, the issue of freshman eligibility/ineligibility (as we know from the research on this topic done by Ron Smith and Jay Helman) is now entering its second century, dating from the proposal in 1889 from then Harvard University President Charles Eliot to have all first-year students declared ineligible for intercollegiate competition to protect against what he considered—over 100 years ago—the questionable recruiting practices of the universities and colleges of that era in bringing marginally qualified students to their institutions to represent them on the playing field or court.

While I am a political scientist by discipline, the historian in me could not help but be intrigued by the comprehensive historical report I have already cited, compiled in 1987 by Ronald Smith and Jay Helman of Pennsylvania State on this century-old issue. Major conference affiliations have been formed as a result of colleges and universities bonding together to develop a common standard with regard to freshman eligibility. Major intraconference disputes developed that lasted several years—including a dispute that started 75 years ago and required five years to resolve between two of UCLA's sister Pac-10 universities—Stanford and the University of California, Berkeley.

While most of the restrictions placed on the recruitment, provision of financial aid and eligibility of student-athletes throughout the history of intercollegiate athletics appear to have been stimulated by the concern for athletics equity (the so-called level-playing-field issue), arguments for the ineligibility of freshmen seem to have come more out of a concern for the necessity to minimize the pressure of athletics participation on the academic pursuits of student-athletes and (as a correlate of that goal) to protect the academic integrity of the colleges and universities involved. This certainly was the rationale for the proposal made by Harvard's Eliot and has been echoed throughout the subsequent 10 decades.

On the contrary, review of the history of the debates and comments associated with proposals for the relaxation of or elimination of freshman-ineligibility rules exposes a focus on the need to accommodate special circumstances (such as the depletion of male undergraduates created by World War II or the Korean Conflict) or cost-reduction measures that would result from the elimination of separate freshman teams or competition (such as were instrumental in the legislation to permit a return to freshman eligibility passed at the 1968 and 1972 Conventions).

Despite these general historical characterizations, it is reasonable for those opposed to a change in the status quo or open on the subject to ask why such a change should be made. The apparent lack of research that demonstrates that nonparticipating freshman athletes do better academically than participating ing the late 1950s as an assistant football coach and head men's lacrosse coach at Delaware.

In 1960, Carzo moved to the University of California, Berkeley, as an assistant football coach, remaining there until moving to Tufts.

He was head football coach at Tufts from 1966 through 1968, head lacrosse coach from 1966 through 1973 and golf coach from 1973 through 1980. He also was assistant athletics director from 1969 until becoming AD in 1974.

Carzo has been a member of the NCAA Council since 1988.

Boone

Boone is in his 11th year as athletics director at Richmond, where he enjoyed successful baseball and football careers as a student during the late 1950s.

A draft choice of the Los Angeles Chargers of the American Football League in 1960, Boone opted for professional baseball. He spent six years as a player and coach in the New York Yankees organization. In 1967, he returned to Richmond as director of athletics promotions.

In 1972, he became assistant athletics director, and later that year he became head baseball coach. Through four seasons, Boone led his teams to a 96-56 record, one Southern Conference title and one appearance in the Division I Baseball Championship.

Since becoming AD, Boone has established an endowment fund for football scholarships and was instrumental in the formation of the Colonial Athletic Association in 1985.

Dempsey

Dempsey has been athletics director at Arizona since 1982. The appointment brought him back to the school where he had served as an assistant basketball coach and assistant athletics director from 1963 to 1967.

The Wayne, Michigan, native was an all-conference basketball player at Albion College, where he received a bachelor's degree in 1954 and a master's degree in 1956. He also coached five sports at Albion before completing a doctorate at the University of Illinois, Champaign, in 1963.

After serving on the Arizona staff, Dempsey was an AD at three schools—University of the Pacific,

Charles S. Boone

San Diego State University and the University of Houston.

Dempsey is a former chair of the NCAA Division I Men's Basketball Committee and is a member of the Special Committee on Cost Reduction.

to the men's athletics director at Drake University and assistant AD at the University of Kansas.

Howlett is chair of the NCAA Committee on Women's Athletics and is a member of the Special Committee on Women's Basketball Television. She was the first woman member of Simpson College's hall of fame.

freshmen is understandably cited as supporting the status quo, or at least as undercutting the argument for change.

I believe the evidence is clear that while most of our students have a difficult time making the transition academically and socially from high school to the highly competitive environment that prevails at most of our colleges and universities, those who come in at the lower end of the spectrum of academic preparation (as unfortunately is the case with regard to many of the student-athletes at our universities) find that transition more difficult. To compound the problem, we then place added burdens on many of these same students by placing them in the pressure cooker of athletics competition.

Furthermore, the AIR data with regard to the problems identified by the athletes themselves make it clear that their greatest problem is that the rigors and other circumstances of athletics competition make it difficult, if not impossible, for them to lead lives similar to those of "regular" students. I believe the ability to get started in their university careers with less pressure placed upon them to be "irregular" would certainly help.

Even if the proponent of freshman ineligibility is able to convince his colleagues that there are sound academic reasons for change, the argument is far from over. I have found that one of the major problems I confront in this regard is that each person making an opposing argument sets up his own strawman version of the ineligibility rule that I believe would meet the academic integrity test and at the same time be workable.

The basic thrust of such a rule change would be to declare all first-year students ineligible for intercollegiate competition. I believe this should be in all sports, but I believe an argument could be made for a distinction between team and non-team sports, on the grounds that while often very heavy in the individual sports, the pressures are different; and where some types of individual competition may be both necessary and proper. I emphasize the word competition since I would propose that such students as have met the requirements of Proposition 48 be allowed to participate in a limited way in practices to allow them to learn, to maintain, and to improve their skills and physical conditioning. But on the days of competition, such students would not be allowed to be a member of the varsity team and not part of the travel party to the game.

Those students who did not meet the Proposition 48 requirements would continue to be ineligible for

"I am not suggesting that the elimination of freshman eligibility is the end-all solution."
—Chancellor Young

practice or financial aid during their freshman year.

The second basic element of such a rule change would be to allow those first-year students who have met the qualifications standards of Proposition 48 four years of eligibility for NCAA competition in the ensuing four years, while those students who do not meet the standard would be eligible for only three of the ensuing four years. All other provisions of Proposition 48 would remain the same, including the awarding of financial aid. Further, there would be no change in the maximum number of grants-in-aid to be available per sport.

While I am not prepared to support a specific implementation proposal at this time, I would support, in principle, the provision that is a part of the proposal of the Committee on Basketball Issues, which would make the fourth year of eligibility contingent upon probable graduation.

This is not a complete return to the pre-1968-1972 arrangements. Prior to 1968-1972, a student-athlete retained only three years of eligibility in the ensuing four years after the initial year of ineligibility. This proposal would allow four years of eligibility. This change takes account of the fact that for most except the best-prepared and career-focused of our students, something of the realities of Proposition 48, in that it preserves a meaningful distinction between those who meet that test and those who do not.

Some might describe this proposal as a so-called "mandatory redshirt" year, but it is more than that. As a redshirt, a first-year student is able to be a member of the team travel group, to suit up for the game, and consequently, should be ready if needed to play in the contest. This, in turn, leads to a full schedule of game preparation each week in addition to the team practice sessions, as well (I am told by some of our most successful coaches) as a much more intense and pressurized experience.

I am fully aware that there are those who do not believe that a change in the current freshman eligibility rule is necessary. As I said earlier, some will argue that there is no statistical evidence to demonstrate that there is any significant disadvantage for the academic performance of first-year student-athletes under the current rules. Others, even if they agree that there are academic reasons for change, will suggest that a rule such as that which I have proposed will result in additional financial aid costs, due to the increased number of five-year grants, at a time when economic pressures are affecting all of us, an argument I believe is unfounded.

Others will suggest that certain regions of the country will have more of an opportunity than others to replenish their varsity teams with junior college transfers if first-year student-athletes are ineligible for competition. A corollary of this argument is that certain highly talented student-athletes will not enroll in the four-year institution of their choice but will instead enroll at a local junior or community college in order to retain the edge of actual competition and then transfer to the four-year institution, and thereby be deprived of their first-year acclimation to the four-year institution.

Another group will suggest that the same prohibition of competition should extend to other university activities such as the debate team or the glee club or the varsity band that marches on the football field at half time.

Finally, others will argue that such a rule change would unduly penalize those talented first-year student-athletes who do meet the qualification standards of Proposition 48, who are able to study, practice, and compete in the first year, and that, further, the rule change would motivate students to require five years to complete their undergraduate studies rather than encourage them to finish their required degree courses in four years.

I have heard these arguments and criticisms before and, indeed, there is some merit in them. But I must simply state that I do not consider these points—individually or collectively—to carry sufficient weight as to overcome the general concerns that I have with regard to the actual circumstances of recruitment practice (including the promises of immediate first-year competition), of the inadequate high-school preparation for university academic work, and of the irrefutable time pressures placed upon a young student's daily life from extensive preparation for and participation in athletics competition.

Further, it is an issue on which former student-athletes have keen views as well. I took special note this past May when the six former college football student-athletes inducted into the academic all-America hall of fame—each of whom had achieved at least a 3.2 GPA in undergraduate course work—suggested that first-year students be declared ineligible for varsity sports so these students can better adjust to college life.

I am not suggesting that the elimination of freshman eligibility is the end-all solution. There are many other issues regarding academic integrity and participation in intercollegiate athletics that will continue to receive attention. We must reduce the time pressures on all our athletes, not just freshmen. We must reform the recruiting process and undertake cost-cutting initiatives. Fortunately, some substantial changes in several of these areas are on the agenda for action at this Convention.

But, we must venture forth on several fronts at once if we are to restore intercollegiate athletics to its proper and respected place in American higher education. And one of the changes that is necessary is to enable those student-athletes we recruit and admit to our universities to get a fair start in the race for their education. I hope after today's discussion, a proposal to eliminate freshman eligibility will receive active consideration during the coming year by the Presidents Commission and be returned, at least in some form, to the Convention a year from now for consideration and adoption by the membership.

Thomas K. Hearn

While this session is called a debate, I am not here in the spirit of a contest. There is no specific proposal that we might debate. My purpose is to clarify the issues involved in the discussion of freshman eligibility or ineligibility. I am perplexed as to why this issue has become a symbol of academic reform in college athletics. It is essential that we separate symbol and substance. Given the ills that prevail, freshman ineligibility is no panacea. Were freshmen to become ineligible, our athletics houses would not be in order, and some problems would certainly be made worse.

Everything I will say follows from a principle of academic priority. That principle states that all the changes that must be achieved to enhance the educational experiences of student-athletes must come at the expense of their involvement in athletics. That is a serious principle, often violated, which derives from the nature of the university.

We know from the AIR studies how intrusive athletics involvements are, and there are proposals before this Convention to begin to assert this principle.

We must no longer compromise the education programs of student-athletes to accommodate purely athletics concerns. We must be certain that our single objective for student-athletes is their educational development. So few student-athletes become professional athletes — for all intents and purposes none — that such athletics-career objectives should play no role in college athletics. Proposals to make our student-athletes better athletes — bigger, faster, more skilled — and our teams more competitive do not meet the test of this principle.

We pay lip service to this academic-priority principle; it would pass this body by a huge majority if we put it to a vote. But the principle of academic priority is not something this body has protected and fostered. We act otherwise. As the 1987 Smith and Helman study, funded by the NCAA, concluded: "It has proven difficult to ensure that those involved with intercollegiate athletics have as great a concern for the preservation of academic integrity as they have for promoting an environment for athletics equity and financial security." The nation now is demanding that athletics be placed within the academic mission of the university. Above all, we must end the exploitation of young people that occurs when we violate the principle that schools exist for learning, not for playing.

Let me now outline what I call an "academic" freshman-ineligibility proposal. It is a freshman-ineligibility proposal designed to pass the academic-priority principle. Such a proposal must meet the following tests:

All student-athletes should be ineligible to compete as freshmen, not just men's basketball and football players. We know how much time is involved in all sports programs. There is no academic justification for limiting ineligibility to one or two sports. More class time is lost in golf. Baseball play more games. More practice hours are demanded in swimming.

Only three years of athletics eligibility should remain after the freshman year. Normal academic progress envisions a degree in four years, and three years of eligibility is required by the academic-priority principle if freshmen are ineligible.

There should be severe restrictions on practice for freshman athletes. There can be no freshman teams, no living in athletics dorms, eating at training tables or serving as the dummy for the coming opponents each week. Practice and other athletics involvements should be severely restricted.

There should be the virtual elimination of the practice of redshirting. The principle should be that athletes, like other students, graduate in four years. Holding students out to improve their athletics skills does not pass the test.

This "academic" freshman-ineligibility proposal passes the priority principle. But is such a proposal desirable? I am not convinced.

Most of you know of the study conducted by the American Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers. It was a thorough and thoughtful analysis. It concludes: "None of the evidence arising from the study suggests that participation in freshman athletics, in itself, has a negative effect on academic performance in the freshman year. Therefore, this study provides no support for a blanket prohibition of freshmen participating in college varsity athletics." Professor Slatton of Iowa reported, after reviewing studies over the past decade, "There are simply no academic or sociological data to suggest that freshman athletes need a year to adjust to college life" (The NCAA News, November 6, 1989). The Pac-10 survey reached a similar conclusion and found that the academic performance of redshirt freshmen at every institution was lower than the performance of all freshman athletes. (Memorandum from David Price to Collegiate Commissioners Association, September 7, 1988.)

My second concern is cost. Eligibility was restored to freshmen out of financial concern. A major NCAA effort headed by Commissioner Corrigan is seeking ways to reduce costs. Most athletics programs are financially at great risk. We must not create new burdens except where there is clear and but undesirable side effects of freshman ineligibility. In the real world of football, with squad sizes at 95 and 25 available grants per year, the freshman year will be a time of athletics testing to see which of the freshman recruits should be encouraged to leave the program. "Running off" recruited student-athletes is another generally undisclosed scandalous practice. No policy which makes that practice competitively desirable should be sanctioned.

Finally, in our attempts not to discriminate against student-athletes, even this proposal for freshman ineligibility discriminates against them. We do not prohibit drama students, debaters or student journalists (to name three extremely time-consuming extracurricular activities) from participating as freshmen. It is reasonable to expect a legal challenge to such a policy. How do we reasonably prevent athletes but not others from participating in extracurricular programs?

Thus, a proposal for freshman ineligibility that passes the academic-priority test is of doubtful value.

I have not seen an ineligibility proposal of this academic sort. What I have seen are what I will call "redshirt" proposals requiring the ineligibility of freshmen in men's basketball and football only. These proposals generally award four years of eligibility, upon the condition of normal progress toward a degree. There are obviously other issues that need to be clarified about these proposals, such as practice requirements, freshman teams, redshirting and the like. A fully defined version would be needed for full analysis.

I oppose these "redshirt" freshman-ineligibility proposals. These proposals do not pass the academic-priority test. So long as four years of athletics eligibility are awarded, See Prepared, page 10

"What underprepared students need and deserve is access, certainly, but access to our classrooms, teachers and special learning opportunities. They do not need access to our playing fields."

—President Hearn

Uniform evidence is that freshman athletes are not harmed academically by their participation. That does not mean, of course, that present levels of performance are satisfactory.

obvious need. I would oppose any freshman-ineligibility proposal that costs money, and any proposal that passes the priority principle will cost money — lots of it.

whatever the circumstances, there is a gain for the athletics program at the expense of the principle of the four-year baccalaureate degree. No basketball or football player of talent would ever graduate in four years. That in itself is, for most institutions, a costly proposal. If freshman ineligibility for football and basketball were introduced without the elimination of redshirting, some students would be on course for six years.

At this Convention, we are considering modest steps to address the time requirements of football and basketball. Other sports will receive such attention in coming Conventions. The solution to the problem of the excessive time involvement in athletics should affect all students, all sports, all four years. To leave present athletics demands in place violates the academic-priority principle. Our response to the demands of athletics participation must be to reduce those demands, not to lengthen student careers.

These redshirt proposals discriminate among student-athletes in an unjustifiable manner. There is no academic justification for football and men's basketball ineligibility only. The time demands on student-athletes in many sports are excessive, and their educational programs are being harmed. What is good for football and basketball academically is good for all sports. Hence, the suspicion that the selection of football and basketball has athletics and financial, rather than an academic, basis.

The practice of redshirting constitutes a voluntary freshman-ineligibility plan. In a CFA survey taken after the 1986 football season, 44 institutions reported that 721 freshman players were withheld from competition, an average of 16.4 per team. Here is Chuck Neinas' conclusion based on the survey of these 44 schools: "It would appear that declaring freshmen ineligible in the sport of football would have a minimal impact upon the programs that are well-established and enjoy a winning tradition, but would have serious consequences for programs that may not have the luxury of redshirting a large number of players from the freshman class."

I would not call redshirting a "luxury," but Mr. Neinas' point is well-made. Redshirting places at a competitive disadvantage those schools that maintain educational rather than athletics priorities by providing their student-athletes a normal degree path. Redshirting is an athletics, not an academics practice. Freshman ineligibility proposes simply to make this athletics practice mandatory rather than voluntary. Its justification, however, remains the same.

Clearly, much support for this redshirt proposal is athletically based. Whether three rather than four years of eligibility are permitted and whether all sports are included give chief witness to whose proposal this is.

Redshirt proposals for freshman ineligibility are athletics proposals marching in academic regalia. It is clearly in the interest of athletics teams to have 22- and 23-year-old men on the field rather than 18 and 19 year olds. That is not an interest that passes the academic-priority test. The redshirt proposal, as commonly presented, needs to parade in its own uniform sneakers and shoulder pads.

Discussion of freshman ineligibility is directed to the circumstances of underprepared student-athletes.

Our hypocrisy regarding the academic-priority principle shows here. What underprepared students need and deserve is access, certainly, but access to our classrooms, teachers and special learning opportunities. They do not need access to our playing fields. In our admission of the need to study. Given what we know about the time demands of athletics programs for students, many of these at-risk students should not play varsity sports as undergraduates. They desperately need an education that remedies their poor preparation and is the

not to recruit at-risk students. There is growing evidence that Proposition 48 is having an impact where it matters most, in the high schools across this nation. This nation has no more urgent priority than the redemption of public education. The NCAA has an opportunity to make a substantial impact on the preparation of high-school students across the nation. If this assembly were to retreat on these efforts to enhance public education by nullifying the objectives of Proposition 48, there would be outrage from the public and from national political leadership. The consequences of compromise on this matter could well jeopardize the authority of the NCAA over college athletics.

Concerned as we are and should be for the underprepared student, let us not forget those good student-athletes whose level of academic performance is being jeopardized by athletics demands. Graduate and professional school ambitions are at stake for these young men and women. Their academic progress, whatever the sport or class year, must also be kept in view. The academic-priority principle is not limited to underprepared men's basketball and football players.

We would strengthen over time the standards for athletics eligibility. Students who are ill-prepared for college should be held out of play and practice as freshmen. Those whose scores meet certain thresholds should be allowed to compete. If such standards rise, we will see a corresponding rise in the achievements of high-school athletes. That will influence high-school performance.

these students for athletics purposes, we exploit them unless we provide these students an education their special circumstances require. Our athletics concern about access becomes the right to play rather than

basis of their future.

The implications of freshman ineligibility for Proposition 48 are disturbing. If all freshman football and men's basketball players are ineligible, there will be little incentive

After modest start, Smith making basketball history

By James M. Van Valkenburg
NCAA Director of Statistics

North Carolina coach Dean Smith has won 601 games over the past 23 seasons for an average of 26.1 victories per season. No coach in history has won that many over that long a span. But under current national conditions, he might never have had the chance, because his 66 victories for his first five years might have gotten him fired.

The current total-victories leader in Division I men's basketball with 667 entering the season, Smith had a modest .584 winning percentage his first five seasons, with 13.2 victories per season and no NCAA tournament appearances. Then, his 1967 team reached the Final Four, starting a 601-143 run.

Nevada-Las Vegas coach Jerry Tarkanian, the current national leader in winning percentage at .823, has averaged 25.2 wins per season for his 21 seasons on the four-year level through last season. (Including his 6-3 NCAA tournament record at Long Beach State, vacated by NCAA action, his percentage goes down to .821, but his wins per season give him a 25.5 average.)

Over those same 21 seasons, Smith's record was 547-133 (.804) to Tarkanian's 530-114 (without the vacated games). For his entire career, Smith's 23.8 victories per season rank fifth among current coaches behind Tarkanian, Middle Tennessee State's Bruce Stewart at 24.6, Syracuse's Jim Boheim at 24.4 and Louisville's Denny Crum at 24.2 (using a minimum of five seasons as a Division I head coach).

Then come Georgetown's John Thompson at 23.5; Temple's John Chaney, 23.4; Arkansas-Little Rock's Mike Newell, 22.6; Oklahoma's Billy Tubbs, 22.4, and Lou Carnesecca of St. John's (New York) at 21.9.

The top 10 in winning percentage is similar, with Tarkanian .823, Chaney .785, Smith .778, Boheim .758, Thompson .747, Crum .747, Stewart .741, Indiana's Bob Knight .733, Carnesecca .730 and Colorado State's Boyd Grant .711.

The early years

North Carolina was coming off probation, prohibited by the school's administration from recruiting outside the state and limited to 17 regular-season games when Smith took over from Frank McGuire, who had become a head coach in the pros.

Smith's first team in 1962 was 8-9—his only losing season. Smith had been an assistant at Air Force and North Carolina before taking over as head coach. He played at Kansas, where he learned pressure defense under the legendary Forrest "Phog" Allen. He was a substitute for Allen's 1952 NCAA champion and his 1953 NCAA runner-up. A native of Emporia, Kansas, and a graduate of Topeka High School, where his father was a coach, he attended Kansas on an academic grant.

Tarkanian's college coaching career also began in 1962, at Riverside City College. His first team was 14-13, and that was to be his worst season.

In seven years at the junior college level at Riverside and Pasadena, his teams were 212-26, with five California state championships. A native of Euclid, Ohio, he attended Pasadena City College before graduating from Fresno State in 1955 and entering high school coaching.

Smith's 19 NCAA tournament teams were 41-20 with seven Final

Dave Jamerson of Ohio is second in scoring average among Division I men

Delmonica DeHorney, Arkansas, is seventh in Division I women's field-goal percentage

Kim Brewington, Johnson C. Smith, is the Division II women's scoring leader

Wittenberg's Brad Baldrige ranks fourth in Division III men's rebounding

Fours (second to John Wooden's 12). His 1982 team won the championship; four times since then, he has been one victory from the Final Four. Tarkanian's 14 NCAA teams were 27-15, with two Final Fours and three other teams one victory from the Final Four.

From another angle, 167 of Smith's 171 lettermen eventually earned degrees—a record that surely must be among the best.

Rupp, Wooden and Bee

While Smith's 26.1 victory average the past 23 years and Tarkanian's career 25.2 victories surpass all previous coaches, such comparisons are not completely fair because of shorter schedules for great coaches like Adolph Rupp, Wooden and Clair Bee.

Wooden averaged 23.3 wins and 4.8 losses during his last 23 years at UCLA (536-111 through 1975) for an .828 winning percentage, and Rupp (the all-time leader with 875 wins) averaged 22.7 and 5.2 (522-119 through 1972) during his last 23 years at Kentucky for .814. Smith

Chapman .789, Wright State's Ralph Underhill .763, Central Florida's Joe Dean Jr. .753 and Rider's Kevin Bannon .751.

Three 500-plus coaches were together at a tournament in Hawaii—Smith, Driesell and Stewart—along with 400-plus winner Crum. They took turns chiding each other.

"Dean's won almost 700 games, and he's been the underdog in every one of them," Driesell said.

Stewart brought up his own absence from coaching since undergoing cancer surgery. "I didn't think I was away that long but some things have really changed," he said with a straight face to a quiet room. "First, Dean got funny, and second, Dean got funny."

Divisions II-III leaders

Clarence "Big House" Gaines, in his 44th season at Division II Winston-Salem State, started the season with 791 victories—second in history to Rupp's 875 on the all-time list that includes all divisions and all associations.

LeMoyné-Owen's Jerry Johnson

Basketball notes

has averaged 26.1 and 6.2 for .808 over the same span.

Only Long Island's Clair Bee at .827 is above Tarkanian's .823 career winning percentage. Bee also coached 21 years (last season, 1951) and averaged 19.5 victories and 4.1 losses (410-86).

Leaders in victories

Some prefer total victories as a measurement. The current top 10 in victories is as follows: Smith, 667 entering the season; UTEP's Don Haskins, 542; James Madison's Lefty Driesell, 540; Illinois' Lou Henson, 535; Tarkanian, 530; Missouri's Norm Stewart, 526; Knight and Alabama-Birmingham's Gene Bartow, each 514; Stetson's Glenn Wilkes, 497, and Old Dominion's Tom Young, 496.

Both Wilkes and Young have topped 500 victories since the season started. Florida's Norm Sloan started the season with 627 but resigned in December.

Smith, Tarkanian and Knight are the only active coaches in the top 10 in both winning percentage and victories.

Among Division I coaches with fewer than five head-coaching seasons at the top level, Mount St. Mary's (Maryland) coach Jim Phelan had 663 wins starting the season, Ohio's Larry Hunter had an .801 percentage, St. Bonaventure's Tom started with 568, Angelo State's Ed Messbarger 567, Philadelphia Textile's Herb Magee 440 and Quinnipiac's Burt Kahn 432.

In wins per season, Fort Hays State's Bill Morse had a 26.3 average (315-82) over 12 years entering this season, Paine's Ron Spry 25.3, Southwest Baptist's Jerry Kirksey 24.2, Washburn's Bob Chipman 24.1, Florida Southern's George Scholz 23.7, Virginia Union's Dave Robbins 23.6, Millersville's John Kochan 23.3, West Texas State's Mark Adams 23.0, Norfolk State's Charles Christian 22.4 and Sacred Heart's Dave Bike 22.3 (minimum five seasons at the four-year level).

In winning percentage, it was Morse .793, Robbins .776, Kochan .773, Christian .762, Scholz .755, Chipman .751, Long Island/C. W. Post's Tom Galeazzi .742, Southeast Missouri State's Ron Shumate .723, Bike .721 and Spry .713.

In Division III, Albany's (New York) Dick Sauers had 560, Wisconsin-Eau Claire's Ken Anderson 499, Beloit's Bill Napton 441 and Wartburg's Lewis Levick 437. In wins per season, it was Anderson 23.8, North Park's Bosko Djurickovic 22.4, Cabrini's John Dzik 21.6, Wisconsin-Whitewater's Dave Vander Meulen 20.7, Potsdam State's Jerry Welsh 20.5 and Jersey City State's Charles Brown 20.1.

In winning percentage, Anderson had .815, Djurickovic .789, Welsh .759. Western Connecticut State's Bob Campbell .746, Trinity's (Connecticut) Sam Ogradnick .741, Vander Muelen .738, New Jersey Tech's Jim Catalano .728, Hartwick's Nick Lambros .721, Dzik .716 and Brown .712.

Quotes of the week

The Fresno State women made 62 three-point goals in their first 12 games—10 more than in all 30 games last season in setting a school record—and found themselves ranked 10th nationally in three-point production. Asked for an explanation, assistant coach John Margaritis said: "Well, coach (Bob) Spencer encourages it, we practice it... and we only recruit farsighted players."

Margaritis had another explanation after the team tied the NCAA Division I record by making 15 three-pointers against Baylor: "It's the draft. We leave all the doors to the gym open so we always have the wind at our back." (John Bianco, Fresno State sports information office)

Pete Gillen on being men's basketball coach at Xavier (Ohio): "I'm just a caraway seed on the bakery of life."

Gillen's team is having a good year, powered by Derek Strong, 6-10 and 233, and Tyrone Hill, 6-10 and 243. Hill has set two goals—the Division I rebounding title and a berth in the NCAA tournament Sweet Sixteen. Both are within reach, and Hill, the 11th of 14 children, knows he owes his success to his mother, Eunice. Tyrone once did nothing but eat, sleep and run with the wrong crowd.

"I couldn't get through to him," she recalls. "I kept harping on him, 'Stop doing negative things. Do some positive things. You like basketball; you play at the playground in the rain and snow. Why don't you go out for the team?' I kept on him for years."

"Finally (in his junior year at Cincinnati's Withrow High School), he said, 'OK, mom, I'm going to do what you want. I'm going to go out for the team.' I stretched out my hands and said, 'Thank you, Jesus.'"

[Tom Eiser, Xavier (Ohio) SID]

The Oklahoma-Loyola Marymount game involved the top two scoring teams in men's basketball. ESPN announcer Barry Tompkins predicted, "Instead of a tip-off, the referee will begin this one with a starter's gun, and the players will start from a crouch." Oklahoma won, 136-121, and that pleased OU coach Bill Tubbs, except for one thing—he and opposing coach Paul Westhead didn't appear on television often enough: "We got to slow it down some. I got to get a little TV time. I heard they put the camera on Paul once, and they missed three baskets."

Leon Barmore, Louisiana Tech women's coach, preaches defense, and one player, junior college transfer Annie Lockett, needed more urging than the others. Then, in her first practice after the holidays, Barmore said, "Annie played the best defense she has ever played." The next day, she came down with the mumps. Quipped Barmore: "That just goes to show you that good defense causes the mumps." (Hank Largin, Louisiana Tech women's SID)

Regis (Colorado) coach Lonnie Porter on his recent 200th career victory: "I'm more happy that I have five seniors on this team who will graduate this spring. That's what it's supposed to be all about." [Mike Grose, Regis (Colorado) SID]

Supermarket recruit

It was the final night of the early signing period in November 1988, and New Orleans coach Tim Floyd was in his office, still working the phone and trying to get a prospect. Then, a tall young man, all of 6-11, walked in and said, "Coach Floyd, I'd like to play basketball for you."

"What's your name?" Floyd asked. "Ervin Johnson Jr." was the reply.

Floyd, thinking the young man was joking, looked out in the hallway to see if anyone was around trying to play a practical joke.

It was no joke. Ervin Johnson, not related to living legend Earvin "Magic" Johnson of Michigan State and the Los Angeles Lakers, had never attended college since graduating from high school in Jonesville, Louisiana, in 1985 and had not played organized basketball since the 10th grade.

After high school, he worked at a supermarket in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, and during that time grew eight inches from his high school height of 6-3. A friend of a friend suggested he try New Orleans, which had no starter taller than 6-5.

Floyd offered Johnson a scholarship the night they met. He red-shirted last season and now is starting to contribute. In a three-game span, he blocked 11 shots to take the American South Conference lead.

"He's the hardest-working player I've been around in 13 years of coaching," Floyd said. "From now on, I'm going to recruit in supermarkets." (Ed Cassiere, New Orleans SID) media who registered to cover the Dallas Convention.

"Just let me mention some (legislative proposals) that were passed that were directly aimed at bettering the environment for the student-athlete: summer school aid, aid to partial qualifiers, providing graduation-rate information to prospective student-athletes, reduction of practice time, scholarships for walk-ons, broken-time payments, transportation between terms.

"I do not know of another Convention in the number of years that I have been going—and that has been a good number of years, well before taking this job—that so many positive things have happened on behalf of the student-athlete."

Commission benefits, too

Although Schultz downplayed what many perceived to be an on-the-convention-floor power struggle between the NCAA Presidents Commission and athletics administrators from member institutions, the fact remains that every major Commission-favored proposal was adopted by the largest Convention in the Association's history.

Sure, some were modified. And the debate on Proposal No. 30, which dealt with reducing time demands on student-athletes through modification of playing and practice seasons, may go down as the closest thing to a real-life "twilight zone" the Association's annual legislative meeting will ever see.

But that struggle, which in some ways was every bit as exciting—though not as fast-paced—as any Final Four, certainly served notice that members of the Presidents Commission had arrived in Dallas intent on seeing their legislation passed. Proof of the Commission's triumph came very late January 9, when NCAA President Albert M. Witte, who chaired the general business session, affirmed for a delegate that action on No. 30 finally was complete.

"Mr. President, Microphone No. 2..." Lattie F. Coor, new Arizona State University CEO and one of the Commission's prime on-the-floor movers, asked for immediate reconsideration of No. 30.

In doing so, Coor and other Commission members in attendance hoped for defeat of that motion—and with it the end of any attempts to defer action on No. 30 for the remainder of this Convention, because there can be only one reconsideration of a given proposal. Coor's motion was greeted by an ovation—and a decisive vote in favor of the Commission.

"An atmosphere has been established where presidents can establish policy and leave it to the athletics directors and faculty representatives to then come up with ways of instituting that policy within the framework that the presidents have determined," Schultz said.

"I do not think the presidents want to be involved with the nitty-gritty. I think they get involved in that when they feel that progress has been too slow, and I think that probably was the case here."

Only a first step

Schultz called the transaction of this Convention's business, which included votes to reduce regular basketball seasons from 28 to 25 games and to limit spring football practice, strong initial efforts.

"I think the reduction in time demands on athletes was addressed strongly at this Convention as a major first step on the basis of the massive research that was done on behalf of the Presidents Commission.

Clayton W. Chapman, right, commissioner of the Eastern College Athletic Conference, and Stephen A. Mallonee of the NCAA legislative services staff discuss the success of the interpretations center, which is available to delegates to NCAA Conventions sion. I think (addressing that) was a good first step, and I am hoping that because of the mood that was established, some (other) steps will follow closely."

Schultz told the press that he believes the Association's new legislative calendar could force consideration of some issues to be delayed, but he nonetheless expects major change to be developed more rapidly in the near future—in areas like the NCAA membership structure and cost reduction.

"I would think the major focus in 1991 is going to be legislation forthcoming from those two committees (the Special Committee to Review the NCAA Membership Structure and the Special NCAA Committee on Cost Reduction)," Schultz said. "But I think the thing that has happened (as a result of the 1990 Convention) is that thinking has been stimulated."

"I think people are prepared to move, and perhaps move at a faster pace, than they have in the past—and I think that is something."

Highlights

Following are major legislative highlights of the Dallas Convention. Groupings used are those that were featured in the series of articles in The NCAA News previewing 1990 proposed legislation.

Consent package

Among the 23 proposals adopted as part of the consent package (three were removed for separate votes) were measures that provide greater flexibility for the NCAA Council between Conventions (Proposal No. 4) and that officially confirmed a new ACT test score that reflects a change in this college-admissions test (Proposal No. 11).

Delegates, in passing No. 4, gave the Council the power to adopt in the interim between Conventions noncontroversial legislative amendments necessary for the normal conduct of NCAA business. Interim legislation cannot involve recruiting or eligibility matters, and the Council will have to sponsor Convention legislation to affirm its interim actions.

Because the ACT recently was enhanced (last October 28 marked the first time the revised ACT was administered), Convention delegates approved Proposal No. 11 to confirm that a composite score of 18 on the new test is equivalent to a 15 on the old test. Fifteen is the number score to in NCAA initial-eligibility legislation.

Presidents Commission grouping

Although it included slightly more than 10 percent of this Convention's total legislative proposals, a significant amount of time was spent in debate and voting on these 14 proposals. No. 30 alone required a record four hours and 42 minutes and two dozen roll-call votes.

No. 30:

- Directs that recommendations to reduce time demands on student-athletes in sports other than football and basketball be presented to the Presidents Commission and NCAA Council no later than next April 1 and that appropriate time-demand-reduction legislation be drafted for the 1991 Convention.

- Reduced spring football practice in Divisions I-A and I-AA to a total of 15 sessions (only 10 involving contact) in 21 days.

- Reduced the maximum number of regular-season basketball games to 25.

(Note: See the Legislative Assistance column on page 2 for additional information.)

Passage of Proposal No. 26 rescinded 1989 Convention Proposal No. 42 and modified Bylaw 14.3. No. 26, in effect, "reinstates" the partial qualifier and:

- Stipulates that partial qualifiers may receive need-based, nonathletically related financial aid, but not athletically related aid.

- Stipulates that a partial qualifier will not count against an institution's maximum grant-in-aid limits in a given sport until that partial qualifier practices or plays with the varsity.

Delegates also passed overwhelmingly Proposal No. 24, which requires the provision of graduation-rate information to prospective student-athletes, their parents, high school coaches and two-year college coaches. It also requires public disclosure of that information by Divisions I and II institutions.

Proposal No. 34, which was sponsored by six Big Eight Conference members, would have increased from 25 to 30 the initial financial aid awards in Division I-A football. Delegates defeated the proposal by a roll-call vote of 26 to 80.

Division II delegates voted to reduce spring football practice to 12 two-hour, noncontact sessions in 24 days by approving Proposal No. 31.

Passage of Proposal No. 32 allows the provision of nonathletically related financial aid under specific conditions to incoming student-athletes who attend summer school or a summer orientation program.

Division I members voted to permit student-athletes to receive a combination of an athletics grant-in-aid and Pell Grant awards to a maximum of the equivalent of a full grant-in-aid plus $1,700 or the cost of education at the institution, whichever is less.

Academics

Another interesting segment was the debate and final action on Proposal No. 38, which sought to "reward" partial qualifiers who later displayed sound academic habits by permitting a fourth year of athletics eligibility if certain minimum credit-hour requirements had been met.

After approving an amendment to increase the number of earned credits needed to gain the fourth-year eligibility "reward," Division I members approved No. 38. However, after a vote to reconsider was passed, Division I defeated No. 38 by a counted paddle vote of 125-199.

Financial aid

When they considered Proposal No. 45, Division I-AA delegates had a change of heart similar to that shown in the action on Proposal No. 38. After defeating a measure to reduce from 70 to 60 the financial aid equivalency limitation in I-AA football, delegates approved a reduction from 70 to 65.

After it was noted, however, that the August 1, 1990, effective date of the reduction meant, as one delegate put it, "that we have coaches on the road recruiting with five less scholarships than they had 25 minutes ago," Division I-AA approved reconsideration of No. 45 and ultimately defeated it. The actions suggested that legislation with more appropriate timing could be passed at the 1991 Convention.

Eligibility

Legislation related to drug testing was included in this category, and the three major proposals passed in overwhelming fashion.

Proposal No. 52 sets individual loss-of-eligibility penalties for positive drug tests. First-time positive tests will result in a one-year loss of all athletics eligibility (i.e., regular and postseason). Second positive tests for drugs other than "street drugs" will result in a lifetime loss of eligibility. Student-athletes testing positive for "street drugs" after restoration of eligibility from a previous positive test will earn another one-year suspension of eligibility.

Proposal No. 53 establishes year-round testing, subject to administration by the NCAA Executive Committee. It was announced before the Convention that, based upon passage of No. 53, the Association's initial two-year effort will be limited to the sport of football in Division I and will test only for performance-enhancing drugs.

Proposal No. 54 was passed to specify that team-eligibility sanctions related to the use of banned drugs shall not apply except as applied currently.

Three votes kept Division I delegates from formally asking the Presidents Commission and the Council to consider 1991 Convention legislation to eliminate freshman eligibility in Division I men's basketball. Proposal No. 56 was defeated by a counted paddle vote of 162 to 165. A motion to reconsider also failed.

General

Proposal No. 70 was approved, creating a combined-scoring National Collegiate Men's and Women's Fencing Championships, effective immediately. Its companion proposal, No. 80, was approved to permit creation of a combined Men's and Women's Fencing Committee to handle administration of the new event.

Amateurism

Four proposals that dramatically change the way NCAA legislation treats student-athletes who are among America's elite in their respective sports were approved with little visible opposition by Convention delegates.

Specifically, Proposal No. 83 permits receipt of broken-time payments; No. 84 permits student-athletes to receive the full benefits of the U.S. Olympic Committee's Elite Athlete Health Insurance Program; No. 85 permits individuals to accept (for individual and team practice and competition) apparel and equipment from amateur sports teams and organizations (not affiliated with a member institution) without affecting their eligibility, and No. 86 permits the awarding of properly personalized items, including merchandise, to student-athletes within the Association's award limitations.

Just as important to many student-athletes, based on Convention-floor comments, was the passage of Proposal No. 87, which permits athletics-department staff members to provide local transportation to student-athletes returning to campus for competition during midterm vacations.

Recruiting

Two of the most notable approved proposals in this grouping were Nos. 106 and 107. No. 106 limits Divisions I-A and I-AA institutions' football coaches to one visit per week during the appropriate contact period to a prospect's educational institution. No. 107 adds Fridays during the month of October to Divisions I-A and I-AA football-evaluation periods, but it also reduces the May contact period to 15 days and sets December 24 through January 1 as a dead period.

No. 118, affecting Division I, was passed to stipulate that special seating (e.g., in press boxes, special seating boxes or bench areas) may not be provided to prospects at campus athletics events.

Reprimand issued

Big Ten Conference Commissioner James E. Delany has publicly reprimanded former University of Michigan football coach Bo Schembechler for criticizing the officiating in the Wolverines' 17-10 Rose Bowl loss to Southern California.

Delany said, "Coach Schembechler's recent retirement from coaching after a legendary career makes this decision difficult. However, the compelling need to support standards of sportsmanlike conduct and upholding the principle of consistent application of conference regulations requires this decision."

Prepared

ance generally. American education, from beginning to end, must raise its standards. The NCAA must be part of that process, and the tools at our disposal are powerful. We must not blunt their impact as these red-shirt proposals portend.

The underprepared student has been an important concern, but this concern is largely misplaced. Our concern for these students, athletes and nonathletes, must be with their academic development. We should be directing that they study more and play less, not just in the freshman year. When we admit these students, exploit their athletics talents for as long as possible, and permit their education to suffer, we have violated a sacred responsibility.

An academic freshman-ineligibility proposal—all sports and three years to play—will never be seriously considered. The athletics director would find it prohibitively expensive, and the coaches would oppose it for reasons I do not need to cite.

The redshirt proposals are wrong in principle. We should reduce athletics time demands for all student-athletes rather than accept those demands as somehow necessary. To partially exempt freshman student-athletes in two sports lacks any rationale except a clear athletics interest. These proposal should be taken for what they are: athletics proposals presented in the name of academic reform.

The problems involved in this discussion can and must be solved in the admissions office. We are admitting marginal students; exhausting them in practice, travel and competition, and requiring academic performance for which we know they are not prepared. Freshman ineligibility is no solution to that scandalous conduct on our part. In Professor Slatton's apt phrase, we have "set about to 'protect student-athletes' from our own insanity." Marginal students need academic development lest we fail them and our institutions. Our plan should be to provide freshman eligibility as an incentive to better secondary performance.

It is unfair, unwise, unnecessary and very costly to adopt as a principle that because some students should not be varsity athletes as freshmen, no students should.

Young rebuttal

There are just two or three things I think that I would like to say.

First of all, I think it is very clear that in large measure there is not disagreement between the two of us. Indeed, a good bit of time of my colleague's talk was taken up with urging things that I would join him in urging—that we all spend a great deal more time and effort in seeing to it that those students in general and student-athletes in particular who are coming to our institutions are provided with the help and assistance they need to pursue their college education successfully. I agree with that.

We agree certainly that there ought to be a reduction in the amount of time and pressure that is placed upon all student-athletes, not merely upon freshmen; but I believe that even with a reduction in the time and the pressure that are placed upon all members of the football team—eliminating the necessity for them to spend, as I read from the studies, 30 hours per week in football—that it would be useful to have freshmen spending a little less time than those who have had the opportunity to be acclimated to the program.

Another comment where we do disagree, another area but one where we do disagree and about which I would like to make a comment, is in regard to the four-year academic program. The four-year bachelor's degree in American higher education is a nice thing for us to talk about, but it went out with previous models of automobiles; perhaps it went out with the predominance of Detroit-built automobiles in the United States. That is no longer the case.

The overwhelming bulk of our students are taking longer than four years to get their education. Furthermore, there is nothing that would prevent a student-athlete who is capable of graduating in four years from doing so and then continuing on as a graduate student while he pursued the amount of eligibility that he had left. Those students who are going to pursue the kind of academic program with the rigor that would be required in order for them to graduate in four years, I think, are those students who would, as a matter of fact, like to have some time provided and supported for them to pursue post-baccalaureate work.

With regard to how well students would do under a freshman-ineligibility

bility program in relation to those who were not in such a program, I do not believe you can cite how redshirt freshmen do in comparison to those who are not redshirted.

We are talking about a single system; we are talking about a system in which they are all participating. When one goes back and looks at redshirt freshmen, remember for the most part that is retrospective; a person was a redshirt freshman who did not play. Those people throughout the year, most of them, are participating in practice, they are participating in game preparation, they are dressing for games and they are going to games just as if they were going to play. Those who are not playing are for the most part not as happy as those who are playing, and therefore the fact that they are being redshirted may have some negative effect on how well they do academically.

And lastly, to the question of cost. At least under the proposal as I have presented it, I do not see any reason why there is any increase in cost.

I am not proposing a freshman team or freshman competition program, which would cost additional money, and I am not proposing to increase the numbers of grants-in-aid (or) numbers of students who can be on grants-in-aid in any program at any particular time. So I fail to see how a move away from freshman eligibility along the lines of the program that I have described would increase the cost.

But I want to emphasize the fact that in what I am proposing, I am not in any way saying that the pressure for continued improvement in what we are doing and how we treat our students and in what we guarantee them when we bring them to our institutions should be diminished.

Hearn rebuttal

Let me go back to another way of stating what I think is the general issue here. In the simplest possible terms, the possibility and desirability of freshman ineligibility will be decided upon three criteria — academic, I hope first, but also financial and athletics. And I think this is the problem — a proposal for freshman ineligibility that meets the academic test is going to fail the financial and athletics tests.

The more of our student-athletes who are on five- or six-year degree paths, the more it costs. And I believe that, ultimately, we are talking here about what one of my trustees likes to call adult money; this is not the weekly allowance.

If we declare freshmen ineligible and do not increase grants-in-aid, as Chancellor Young suggests, the coaches, particularly in the nonrevenue sports, are going to riot, ladies and gentlemen; and we know good and well that there will be pressures for increased grants-in-aid.

If we restrict competition (without so many) restrictions on practice then those restrictions it seems to me must be substantially lifted if we are going to provide, in Chancellor Young's phrase, an opportunity for students to be regular students, and we know full well that the athletics directors and coaches are going to oppose those proposals.

So, an academically sound proposal is going to flunk the financial and athletics concerns.

Now, alternatively, if we turn around and make a proposal that satisfies the athletics concerns, what I call the redshirt proposals, then those proposals are irrelevant at best and at worst destructive of the educational and academic needs of students.

Now, these are not debating points, because these things — athletics, financial and academic — translate directly into interest groups that are represented in this hall today. To oversimplify this again, the presidents, chancellors, Presidents Commission and perhaps the faculty athletics representatives are going to reflect and represent the academic interest in this. The athletics directors are going to speak for the financial concerns — they must balance their budgets — and the coaches are going to speak for the athletics interests.

Now, regarding freshman ineligibility, what is going to satisfy one group of us is going to alienate the rest of us; therefore, should a proposal come forth dealing with freshman ineligibility, I am deeply afraid that we would confront a politically charged, divisive and, I think, costly proposal that cannot be adopted in any form before this body that represents a substantial improvement to students.

What we need to be doing is addressing the real, rather than the symbolic, problems that have to do with the time demands being made on students and the characteristics of our admissions process, and about those matters, as I am quite sure you understand, Chancellor Young and I are in agreement.

Those of us in college athletics have been hypocritical about all of this, of course; yet, I have always preferred hypocrisy — not living up to your principles — to cynicism, having no principles. Hypocrites, to their great credit, sometimes — not often, but sometimes — practice what they preach. We have a chance to do just that at this Convention when we vote on those proposals to reduce time demands on our student-athletes.

Son of a gun.

Tom Campisano, rifle coach at Indiana University of Pennsylvania, has sons Tom Jr. (a senior) and Michael on his 1989-90 team. Both were four-year letter-winners in rifle at Indiana High School.

"Tom probably started shooting when he was five years old," the elder Campisano said. "He'd use the roof of a car for support, and we'd have him shoot at targets. Michael has always followed."

"Michael's always had to work harder than Tom," he added. "We practice twice a week, and Michael usually goes in by himself and shoots on Friday mornings."

Both are among the top five shooters on the 1989-90 Indiana team, which was off to a 7-3 start through early January.

Wittenberg University has named its football press box in honor of Dan Hoyt, retired sports editor of the Springfield (Ohio) Sun, and Bob Sullivan, retired sports editor of the Springfield Daily News.

Hoyt, 79, retired in 1979 after 35 years with the Sun. Sullivan, 76, covered sports for the Daily News for 45 years before retiring in 1978. Hoyt and Sullivan told Alan Aldinger of Wittenberg's public information office that they covered more than 600 home football games and 1,000 home basketball games.

Trenton State College officials are heralding the school's athletics and academic accomplishments during the 1980s, and rightfully so. Consider the following:

- Trenton State teams won 15 NCAA team titles (in wrestling, field hockey, women's softball, women's lacrosse and women's tennis) during the 1980s, and 13 other school squads finished second overall in NCAA competition. In addition to the five sports mentioned, second-place finishes were recorded by Trenton State women's cross country and men's basketball teams so the school's on-the-field success really was broad-based.

Academically, Trenton State's incoming freshman classes (all students, including prospective student-athletes) showed dramatic increases in performance. In 1980, the average freshman had an average high-school class rank in the 74th percentile and an average combined (math and verbal) SAT score of 927.

This year's freshman class—the class of 1993—presented an average combined score of 1,120 on the SAT and ranked in the 90th percentile of their high school classes.

All Saginaw Valley State University students now are being admitted free to Cardinal athletics events, according to an announcement from athletics director Robert T. Becker. This change in policy took effect January 11.

"Admitting the students free should give a boost to our attendance," Becker said, referring specifically to men's basketball. "We also expect our pep band to be on hand, and the combination should have a positive impact on the atmosphere at our home games."

Amateur ice hockey's national governing body, USA Hockey, has received a $50,000 grant from the Colorado-based El Pomar Foundation in memory of William Thayer

Tutt, former USA Hockey president who died last year.

"We're very excited to receive the support of the El Pomar Foundation in our effort to keep Thayer's memory alive," said Bob Johnson, USA Hockey executive director. "This grant will help us to continue the work that Thayer so strongly believed in."

The grant will be used to establish the William Thayer Tutt Presidents Club, support and expand the Tutt Library in USA Hockey's Colorado Springs office, and support annual presentation of the Tutt Award to an outstanding "grass-roots" volunteer.

Trivia Answer: Fifty roll-call votes were conducted at the 1990 Convention in Dallas.
