Schultz foresees speedup in reform movement

The NCAA membership has reform on its mind and may be ready to move quickly beyond its actions at the 1990 Convention, NCAA Executive Director Richard D. Schultz told approximately 50 of the nation's top sportswriters February 20 during the '90 College Football Preview.

Appearing as the final speaker at the February 18-20 preview in Kansas City, Missouri, Schultz offered what could be called a "State of the Association Address, Part II."

"The steps taken at the last Convention were small," said Schultz, referring to such actions as votes to disclose graduation rates publicly and to reduce time demands on student-athletes, "but the thinking of the membership was stimulated."

"We still have a fair amount of challenges ahead of us. With the new legislative calendar going into effect, maybe other steps for reform will move a little faster."

Beginning this year, the deadline for membership submission of legislative proposals for the January Convention will be moved up from November 1 to July 1. The intent is to provide more time for the review and refinement of proposals.

During his address, Schultz reiterated many of the points he has made since taking over as executive director 2½ years ago, including the public's misperception of what the NCAA is and the importance of conducting intercollegiate programs with integrity.

The 14th annual preview's format was revised this year to allow sportswriters to get the views and opinions of administrators on the state of collegiate athletics, rather than just having panel discussions with coaches.

After the first panel discussion February 19 with coaches Billy Brewer, University of Mississippi; Spike Dykes, Texas Tech University; and Mike Kelly, University of Dayton, and a second panel discussion that featured John Mackovic, University of Illinois, Champaign; Mike Price, Washington State University; Bobby Ross, Georgia Institute of Technology, and Bob Wagner, University of Hawaii, the college administrators joined the sportswriters

Restructuring report to undergo revision

The Special Committee to Review the NCAA Membership Structure, meeting February 15 in Phoenix, reviewed a draft report of its recommendations and took steps to refine the procedures it will use in reporting those recommendations.

Several revisions were suggested in the draft report, which now will be revised and resubmitted to the committee by mail.

The committee reaffirmed its position that no details of its recommendations will be released until the report has been submitted to the NCAA Presidents Commission and the NCAA Council in those groups' April meetings.

"Our charge is to report to the Council and the Commission," Fred Jacoby, chair of the committee and commissioner of the Southwest Athletic Conference, said. "It would not be appropriate for us to release our recommendations to others before we fulfill our primary obligation to the Council and the Commission."

The report will be submitted to those groups just before the Commission's April 4-5 meeting in Washington, D.C. The Council meets April 23-25 in Overland Park, Kansas, and the report also will be shared with the NCAA Executive Committee for its May 7-8 meeting.

Percentage of partial qualifiers increases second straight year

For the second consecutive year, there was an increase in the percentage of incoming freshman student-athletes at NCAA Division I institutions who were partial qualifiers under Bylaws 14.3.1 and 14.3.2, according to the annual study of partial qualifiers and nonqualifiers conducted by the NCAA Research Committee.

Partial qualifiers are prospective student-athletes who did not meet the requirements of Bylaw 14.3.1 (core-curriculum requirement and/or test-score requirement) but who earned an overall grade-point average of 2.000 or better in high school. Nonqualifiers are those student-athletes who failed to meet all requirements.

The results of this study differ for Division II. Those schools reported a decrease in the percentage of partial qualifiers who enrolled at their institutions in the second year of Bylaw 14.3.

The number of nonqualifiers who were admitted to institutions in both divisions declined significantly between 1988 and 1989. This number has decreased all four years

NFL open to undergrads

The National Football League announced February 16 the development of policies and procedures to admit college underclassmen to its 1990 draft.

Under the new program, which was announced by Commissioner Paul Tagliabue and reportedly applies only to this year's draft, any underclassman who wants to be considered for selection must have been enrolled in college for the 1987 fall semester, meaning that juniors or sophomores who have missed one season would be eligible.

Although only 10 underclassmen had announced their intentions to enter the 1990 draft through early February, some observers believe that as many as 40 could make themselves available.

To be eligible, an underclassman must apply for the 1990 draft by March 22 and provide with his application an affidavit that irrevocably renounces his remaining college eligibility, the Associated

Overland Park civic leaders welcome NCAA move

This is the last of a series of articles in The NCAA News about the Association's new national office building.

It's clear that business and civic leaders of the NCAA's new home town—Overland Park, Kansas—are happy to have the Association as a new neighbor.

The city also believes it will be a great home for the NCAA.

Putting it succinctly, Mary Burch of the Overland Park Chamber of Commerce says the NCAA is "a first-class organization moving to a first-class city."

Overland Park is Kansas' fourth-largest city, with a population of 110,000. In recent years, such businesses as Yellow Freight Systems and Electronic Realty Associates have set up national headquarters in the city, and other firms like U.S. Sprint and Black and Veatch have become major employers.

Yet, few newcomers to the city have generated interest and anticipation equal to that prompted by the Association's decision in May 1988 to build its new seven-story national office building in Overland Park.

A local newspaper has kept residents up-to-date on construction progress at the new building, and several community leaders, including Overland Park Mayor Ed Eilert, attended a recent reception given to welcome NCAA staff members to the city.

Warm welcome

"First-class" isn't the only expression Overland Park leaders are using to describe the NCAA. They also use words like "visible" and "prestigious."

"From a business perspective, the NCAA is a highly visible national organization and it will bring national visibility to the city," Burch said.

The NCAA becomes part of Overland Park's College Boulevard corridor, which in 20 years has grown from a single office building into a business community that is home to more than 1,800 firms, including subsidiaries of several Fortune 500 companies.

"It (the NCAA's presence) is prestigious for the boulevard, and it's good for the businesses there," Burch continued.

The Association also promises to become a magnet of sorts for the city and the boulevard when the NCAA Visitors Center opens its doors in September.

"We're looking at it as, really, the first tourist attraction in Overland Park, and we're making it part of our advertising," said Nick Jordan, president of the Overland Park Convention and Visitors Bureau.

The NCAA's new home is within eyesight of Interstate 435, a major route for travelers passing through the Kansas City metropolitan area. Jordan believes the visitors center can expect to attract a healthy share of the more than 900,000 people who pass through Overland Park annually.

Calling alumni

"You would think that a majority would want to go to the visitors center," he said. "Almost everyone is an alumnus of a college, and sports is an important part of college life."

"It (the visitors center) will become an attraction for Overland Park," Burch agreed. "It's conveniently located, and the Kansas Department of Transportation indicates that it will put up a sign on the interstate directing traffic there."

She believes the visitors center also will be a popular attraction for Kansas City-area residents. "Expect an onslaught of school buses every day," she advised, referring to the likelihood that local schools will make the visitors center a regular destination for class field trips.

But it is the entire organization, for which data have been collected on Division I institutions.

A total of 183 of the 293 Division I institutions responded (62.5 percent), and in Division II, the rate was 49 percent, or 95 out of 194 institutions responding.

Division I summary

A total of 584 partial qualifiers were reported as having enrolled at the Division I institutions that responded to the survey. That number represents 6.5 percent of the total number of athletics grants-in-aid given to freshmen at those institutions in the fall of 1989. In 1988, 5.1 percent of all scholarships went to partial qualifiers; in 1987, it was 4.5 percent.

Again this year, football accounted for the most partial qualifiers, with men's basketball second. Those two sports accounted for 52.4 percent of all the partial qualifiers in the division. There were 235 "partials" in football and 71 reported in men's basketball.

Both basketball and football showed increases in the percentage of partial qualifiers awarded grants. In football, 10.3 percent of all grants went to partials, and in basketball, the percentage was 11.3. That compares with 9.1 percent and eight percent, respectively, from the previous year.

The women's sport with the most partial qualifiers was basketball, with 56. Women's sports accounted for 136 partial qualifiers, or 23.3 percent of the total.

The racial breakdown again was heavily tilted toward black student-athletes. In 1989, 66 percent of all partial qualifiers reported in Division I were black. That number is similar to the numbers that have been collected in all previous studies.

Overall, 84 percent of black athletes were qualifiers. That number went up to 97.5 percent for white athletes. Again, these numbers are similar to those reported in previous years.

The test-score component of Bylaw 14.3 again proved to be the stumbling block for a majority of partial qualifiers. This year, 499 (85.4 percent) of all partial qualifiers failed to achieve the minimum test score under the legislation.

There were 51 nonqualifiers reported as having enrolled in these institutions in the fall of 1989. This rate was down from all previous years.

Division II summary

Division II institutions accepted a smaller percentage of partial qualifiers in 1989 than in 1988. Overall, Division II institutions reported awarding athletics grants to partial qualifiers 8.9 percent of the time last fall. That number is down from 11.2 percent the previous year.

As was the case in Division I, football had the highest number of partial qualifiers. In Division II, 129 football players were sidelined by Bylaw 14.3. That number represents 33.2 percent of the total number of partial qualifiers. The second highest total in Division II came from women's basketball, which reported 37 partial qualifiers as having enrolled in the fall. Overall, men accounted for 72.2 percent of the total number of partials in this division.

The racial breakdown in Division II was noticeably different than that in Division I. White student-athletes accounted for 50.3 percent of the total in Division II, with Blacks adding another 45.5 percent.

The number of nonqualifiers reported in Division II was down from a year ago. In 1989, only 24 nonqualifiers were reported at Division I institutions. Last year, 52 were reported by a similar number of institutions.

Tables below and on page 3 reflect the complete results of the study for both divisions.

Committee on Women's Athletics suggests two incentive programs

The NCAA Committee on Women's Athletics will make two suggestions for distributing some of the Association's revenue from the recent $1 billion television contract with CBS Sports.

The committee will suggest that two affirmative-action incentive programs be considered by the Advisory Committee to Review Recommendations Regarding Distribution of Revenues, which is chaired by Judith M. Sweet, NCAA secretary-treasurer and director of athletics at the University of California, San Diego.

Binders available for keeping News

Readers of The NCAA News are reminded that binders, which provide permanent, convenient storage of back issues of the paper, are available from the publishing department.

Each of the rugged, vinyl-covered binders holds 15 issues of the News. They may be purchased for $10 each, or two for $19. Orders should be directed to the circulation department at the national office.

One program would provide member institutions with subsidies to assist in the hiring of top-level women administrators; the other program would provide matching grants to institutions willing to create new positions in athletics for women.

During the committee's February 11-13 meeting in Kansas City, Missouri, concern was expressed regarding decreasing numbers of senior women administrators serving at NCAA member institutions. The committee will discuss the issue further with the NCAA Council.

The committee discussed feedback it received concerning the videotape highlighting women's athletics. The videotape has been distributed to NCAA senior women administrators. The videotape is intended for use by members in promoting women's participation in athletics.

The committee also reviewed with NCAA communications department staff representatives future public relations efforts for women's athletics.

Randall W. Dick, assistant director of sports sciences, reviewed the recently completed video production regarding nutrition and eating disorders in college athletics, which was commissioned by the Committee on Women's Athletics. The committee was informed that all tapes and supplemental materials have been distributed to the senior woman administrator or athletics director at each member institution. Additional sets of the three-part videotape and supplemental materials may be purchased from Karol Media, 350 North Pennsylvania Avenue, Box 7600, Wilkes Barre, Pennsylvania, 18773-7600 (800/526-4773). Additional posters outlining the warning signs of eating disorders may be obtained from the NCAA national office.

The committee approved publication of a joint brochure for the NCAA Women's Enhancement Program and the NCAA Ethnic Minority Enhancement Program with the intention of generating better coverage among member institutions. Previously, a brochure was published for each program.

At its next meeting, June 24-27 in Bar Harbor, Maine, the committee will review reports by the Special Committee on Cost Reduction and the Special Committee to Review the NCAA Membership Structure.

Restructuring

of the Commission and chancellor of the University of Nebraska, Lincoln, will present the report at the Commission meeting. Massengale is a member of the special membership-structure committee.

Jacoby and NCAA Secretary-Treasurer Judith M. Sweet, athletics director at the University of California, San Diego, will present the report at the meetings of the Council and the Executive Committee. Sweet served as chair pro tem of the special committee during Jacoby's recent recovery from surgery.

More meetings

After those meetings, the special committee intends to discuss its recommendations with the Collegiate Commissioners Association, the University Commissioners Association, the National Association of Collegiate Directors of Athletics and the Division I-A Directors Association at their respective summer meetings.

The committee believes other constituent groups also may wish to review the recommendations, as will some NCAA committees.

Jacoby will deal with the CCA presentation, while committee members James Frank, commissioner, Southwestern Athletic Conference, and Ronald D. Stephenson, commissioner, Big Sky Conference, will handle the discussions with the UCA. Presenters for the meetings with athletics directors and other possible groups will be determined later.

The committee itself also may hold another meeting, if necessary. In the Phoenix meeting, it reserved the right to make additional revisions in its recommendations after the meetings with the constituent groups and prior to the Council's August meeting.

Recommendations

The special committee's recommendations will deal with:

- Greater legislative autonomy among the Association's divisions and subdivisions.

- Criteria for Division I membership that will assure greater similarity of athletics programs and of commitment to the top level of college athletics competition in broad-based programs.

- Steps to reduce markedly the opportunities for multidivision classification.

- Steps to reduce multidivision eligibility for NCAA championships to the greatest extent possible without eliminating championships opportunities for student-athletes.

- A major commitment to enhancing Division II membership.

- Suggestions to the Advisory Committee to Review Recommendations Regarding Distribution of Revenues in areas where the committee believes revenue availability and distribution have an effect on membership-structure issues.

New revenue could lead to less commercialization

(Editor's note: Following is a letter by Temple University President Peter J. Liacouras in response to a request by NCAA Executive Director Richard D. Schultz that the membership provide suggestions for distribution of revenue from the recent television contract with CBS. Liacouras requested that his letter be published in The NCAA News.)

Peter J. Liacouras

I am writing to respond to your request for proposals relating to distribution of the NCAA revenues from the seven-year contract negotiated by the NCAA with CBS Sports, Inc., in the amount of $1 billion for television rights to Division I Men's Basketball Championships and several other meets and tournaments.

The object in using this fund should be to help develop a less commercially driven, cleaner system of intercollegiate athletics. The relentless and often reckless pursuit of revenues and profits has distorted the academic, cultural and larger community values at too many institutions, including some of those that the media habitually depict as the "most prestigious."

Wide sharing of revenues is the most effective, practical way to achieve this objective.

"Revenue-sharing" means just that: sharing the wealth. We should pool the $1 billion fund (later adding all television and radio revenues from all NCAA-sanctioned athletics activities, regardless of sport, to this pool), and then share this pool very widely.

In 1984, I proposed the following "revenue-sharing" formula to achieve this objective (in my response to an NCAA questionnaire), and I reiterate this proposal for distribution of the NCAA revenues in question:

"Share one-half of all postseason (and preseason) revenues equally among all institutions in the division; share one-fourth with all NCAA members; share one-fourth with the participating schools, conference and NCAA."

A portion of the NCAA share should be used to provide "laundry money" and an "emergency home-visits" fund for all student-athletes certified to the NCAA by the member institutions.

Additionally, the NCAA bureaucracy should be reduced by one-half in all areas except enforcement, and the funds thus saved could be used for other direct benefits of the student-athletes.

The NCAA, by this action, would give meaning to its rhetoric to clean up intercollegiate athletics. The NCAA also would help reverse certain bad trends in our society; i.e., the disproportionate effect and narrowing influence on our culture and society stemming from the over-commercialization of sports, including intercollegiate athletics. By the proposed action, the most pernicious feature of intercollegiate athletics—profits based on "wins" and "markets"—would be ameliorated.

University presidents, while emphasizing the value and benefit of sports, must remind our citizens that untrammelled competition for more dollars is hurting sports and our society. Action, rather than mere words and imagery, is needed. The best way for the NCAA to stimulate this end is to share revenue widely, rather than to reward colleges lavishly because they win.

Our proposal requires courage and leadership on your part. It deals directly with the root cause, rather than "band-aid" or diversionary approaches recommended by the Presidents Commission. You can go down as a real American leader, Dick, if you can pull this off. We will help you in every way possible.

I am sharing this letter, of course, with Judith M. Sweet, chair of your advisory committee, who also will receive the recommendations I received from our athletics council and faculty representative to the NCAA.

Fans' criticism of coaches has gotten worse over the years

Dan Devine, former college football coach

"Coaches who learn to insulate themselves from fans are the ones who last longer and are more successful. I really think it (fan criticism of coaches) has gotten worse over the years.

"I'm surprised at two things: that more coaches don't have heart attacks during games and that, along with the verbal abuse, someone hasn't thrown a full can of beer or soda and hit a coach.

"I'm really afraid that's going to happen."

"It's not a good situation for the kids, the colleges or for us. It looks awfully appealing from the outside; but unfortunately, only so many can play.

"Intercollegiate athletics was no less exciting and entertaining when seasons were shorter, athletics department budgets much smaller and players had to play both ways.

"Over the last several decades, the situation has simply gotten out of hand. The NCAA Presidents Commission is to be commended for its efforts to reassert the central mission of education in intercollegiate athletics programs.

"Next year, hope the NCAA reformers will be more inclined to go deep on first down."

It has somehow become acceptable to treat five college kids playing basketball and three middle-aged referees as if they were blood enemies intent on rendering useless all that is dear to you.

"The ABC package (with the College Football Association) called for $210 million over five years. The ESPN package was $110 million. With Notre Dame thrown in, we're just over $400 million and that doesn't include bowl games.

"And what do the players get?

"They get a letter jacket. Some of them, although most don't, also get a degree, with which you can get a job for maybe $18,000 a year, unless you're among the fortunate few who make it into the NFL.

"We're talking sweatshop conditions here, folks. Under the current rules, players not only don't get paid, they can't even get a job during the school year.

"Fortunately for ABC, ESPN and NBC, college kids don't go on strike, although they will oversleep the occasional early morning class."

Excerpted from an editorial

"Score one for doing what's right. The much-maligned NCAA has adopted a program aimed at preventing college athletes from using drugs, especially steroids.

"It is a crying shame that any such testing program would be necessary. Young people in the prime of life whose bodies are their tickets to fame and fortune should be the very last people to use drugs. But sad experience shows this is not the case.

"The testing will be year-round and will start with the most obvious targets: steroid testing on football players at the largest universities.

"This is a giant step from the current setup, which is simply testing athletes at championship events and bowl games.

"It speaks well of men and women who make their living by fielding winning teams that the vote (to adopt the drug-testing program) was so lopsided. But it does raise a question about those who opposed the changes: What's going through their minds, and what's going through their players' veins.

Reflections on time well-spent in college athletics

By Francis W. Bonner

The NCAA's 84th annual Convention was my last. After 23 years of active participation in the NCAA, I am retiring. I have served terms on the Council, Executive Committee, Division I Championships Committee, Division I Steering Committee and a dozen ad hoc committees.

I have produced two NCAA handbooks, lobbied for the NCAA with a senator, chaired I-AA sessions, acted as parliamentarian (I-AA), organized (with Bill Bradford) and chaired the Faculty Athletics Representatives Association and done the Lord-only-knows what else.

It has required much time and work, and I have enjoyed every minute of it.

Some friends have asked me to write somewhat of my memories and ideas about the past, present and future of the NCAA and intercollegiate athletics. With no attention to logical order or elaboration, I shall attempt to comply in cryptic fashion.

In 1968—my first Convention—the structure of the NCAA was simple. There were two divisions—university and college. Those attending that session were mostly athletics directors, and they were in control. The few legislative items were simple, rarely controversial. The Manual was small and not difficult to comprehend.

More complex NCAA

Today's NCAA is much more complex, and the staff has been greatly expanded. But today's NCAA is the most efficient, effective and well-operated organization about which I know—more so than any business firm or university within my ken.

The staff is competent, dedicated, cordial and industrious. Knowing them has been a pleasure.

Walter Byers and Dick Schultz stand out as superb executive directors, with salient differences. Walter—always a private person—operated mostly behind the scenes, a visionary but also practical. The present structure of the NCAA is essentially his creation. Rarely did he publicly promote specific legislation.

Francis W. Bonner

Dick is a study in contrast—very visible, vocal, articulate. He is innovative, tireless and farsighted. He does not hesitate to speak openly for measures and concepts that he supports. And at times, I wish he would not do that. For example, his suggestion that a cash bonus should be provided an athlete who earns his degree within five years is not sound. Why pay a student for doing something expected of all students? And I wish Dick had not openly recommended the change in Proposition 42.

But I agree with him that athletics dormitories should be forbidden. I would add training tables.

On the other hand, I disagree about marking time until we have the report on the five-year study of Proposition 48. (I was on the committee that devised that measure.) That study will not tell us anything we haven't already learned—that it is a sound requirement and that it is working.

CEOs more active

The CEOs are increasing their participation in the NCAA, and that is good. But they need to work harder at educating themselves about athletics. And they need to confer more with coaches and ADs while developing new legislation. All of them need to become well-informed about how things—recruiting, scheduling, budgeting, accounting, etc.—are done by their own athletics people.

And I wish the CEOs had not modified Proposition 42.

Which brings me to some of the other measures they presented to the 84th Convention.

It is all right to shorten a playing season and reduce the other time the student-athlete must devote to his sport. But that will have little effect on graduation rates. The best and surest way to improve graduation rates is to maintain sound admissions standards. The student who is admitted to college without having met the requirements of Proposition 48 (and 42) is a student of risk. And it is likely that he is taking the place of a qualifier who has severe financial need and who is better prepared to succeed academically than is the partial or nonqualifier.

Student-athletes usually do better academically during their practice and playing seasons than at other times—because during those periods, they budget their time and must exercise self-discipline. When the season ends, the partying begins. But I support reasonable measures to reduce the pressures created by their sports.

The NCAA should give more attention to the high schools—athletes, coaches, teachers and administrators. How about establishing a speakers bureau, using college and professional athletes, coaches, faculty, ADs and others to go into the high schools to carry the message about academics, drugs, recruiting, agents and other important topics? It would be worth the cost.

Speaking of money, how about that $1 billion? It should not be used to increase the payoff to the 64 teams competing in the basketball tournament. Help should be given to colleges that are financially unable to field broad-based programs of athletics. And Divisions II and III should not be ignored.

Legislation good

The legislation authorizing year-round drug testing is good. But the penalties for positive tests are too lenient. College athletes should be given adequate information and education about drugs and told that the first positive test of any banned substance will result in permanent ineligibility.

Coaches should not be allowed to go off the campus to recruit (non-contact scouting is OK). The colleges should be free to send ample printed material to the prospect and to pay for one campus visit per prospect. Perhaps the college should also pay the parents' expenses for that one visit. Then, the prospect and his or her parents should be let alone to choose the college they prefer.

I have long wondered whether some sportswriters and media commentators are naive, ignorant or simply eager to be sensational. My dilemma is caused by their espousal of payment to college athletes and other such insane ideas.

I would like to see the NFL and

“... when the ‘man on the street’ says intercollegiate athletics is in a mess... he is dead wrong.”

NBA develop minor leagues (“farm teams”) that would be available to high school graduates who do not have the qualifications or desire for a college education—and for some in college who find that they are in the wrong place.

I disagree with my friends in the predominantly black colleges who contend that every young person should be allowed the attempt to get a college education. That is not practical or desirable. You do a disservice to black youth when you say or imply that they should not be expected to compete equally with whites—e.g., on college entrance requirements.

Regardless of their social and economic circumstances, they should know that how they use their opportunities in grade school and high school is going to shape their future. A flawless jump shot and a 4.5 time in the 40-yard dash should not be their only credentials for entry into higher education.

Higher education an oxymoron?

Relative to some institutions—white and black—I wonder if “higher education” may be an oxymoron—a contradiction in terms. If it is so in some cases, can it be that an obsession with athletics is a major cause? When admissions standards are low or nonexistent, when athletes are not treated like students and when the institution's purpose is to win at any cost—“higher education” may then truly be an oxymoron.

Now an appeal to Dick Schultz: Please don't write off the Faculty Athletics Representatives Association. The FAR is the conscience of the collegiate athletics program. He is different from the AD, the coach and the admissions director. He deserves the NCAA's recognition and support. Please continue to support the FARA.

Finally, when the “man on the street” says intercollegiate athletics is in a mess, that everybody cheats and that the NCAA is a power-hungry bully, he is dead wrong.

Throughout the NCAA membership, I perceive an increasing degree of integrity, a reduction in the number and seriousness of infractions, and an NCAA that is not a dictator or a bully but a servant. If the NCAA should cease to exist today, another such body would have to be formed tomorrow. It is a great organization. Long may it live.

Athletes, aware of value to schools, are asserting themselves

By Hal Bock

Who's in charge here, the players or the coach? Once, the answer was automatic, but not anymore.

Within the past month, the men's basketball team at Drake University and the women's team at Florida A&M University got new coaches after players at both schools boycotted practices, complaining they could no longer play for Tom Abatemarco at Drake and Mickey Cayton at Florida A&M because the coaches were too harsh.

Too harsh? What would Woody Hayes think?

“What is happening is we are seeing an athletes' rights movement taking place,” said Charles Farrell, special project coordinator at Northeastern University's Center for the Study of Sports in Society and president of Sports Perspectives International, an athletes' advocacy organization.

“We always portrayed athletes as dumb. I don't think they are. In some sense, this is a revolt against being exploited. In some sense, they are standing up for their rights. It's overdue,” Farrell said.

It goes beyond college sports. The Tri-City Americans of the junior Western Hockey League refused to play a game December 30 against Portland, protesting verbal abuse from Bill LaForge, the team's director of hockey operations. Management responded by reassigning LaForge to director of scouting so he would not come in contact with the players.

“I would like to think athletes are starting to get a feeling for the power they have. They are beginning to realize that sports is big business and they are responsible for the revenue that is rolling in.”

Alan Sack, sociologist
University of New Haven

tor of hockey operations. Management responded by reassigning LaForge to director of scouting so he would not come in contact with the players.

Perhaps encouraged by the success of the players at Drake and Florida A&M, the Arkansas State University basketball team walked out on coach Nelson Catalina. Thirteen players met with Eugene Smith, the president of the university, to air what he said were “concerns about the relationship between themselves and the head coach.”

But while Abatemarco and Cayton were replaced, Catalina, in the first year of a new three-year contract, remained on the job. Arkansas State athletics director Charley Thornton said the coach's situation would be reviewed at the end of the season.

up with it. He took the fun out of the game.”

However, McCray returned to the team after meeting with Thornton.

“I think we're innocent, but we lost the battle,” he said. “If I don't come back, I lose my scholarship. If I do come back, I'm not going to like the way it is.”

Farrell saw the action of the protesting athletes as recognition of their value to their schools. “They see a $1 billion television contract that rests on their backs,” he said. “What they are saying to the schools is, ‘You are making a lot on me from my sweat and blood. I won't be exploited. I won't be used and abused.’”

Thomas Tutko, a sports psychologist at San Jose State University, said the views of athletes are changing.

“The oldest belief was that the most important thing is to win,” he said. “The new is that we want to win, but you'd better know us as human beings and treat us as human beings.”

“It is a major step forward. If you are treated with respect, it does not diminish your chances at winning. It may, in fact, enhance them.”

Tutko said that taskmasters like Hayes and Vince Lombardi would be alarmed at the change. “They grew up and lived in a different era,” he said. “They wouldn't last now.”

There is other evidence that players are beginning to recognize the clout they have. When defensive line coach Frank D'Alonzo was released as part of a house cleaning at the University of Pittsburgh, second team all-America tackle Marc Spindler decided he'd also leave and declared for the NFL draft. If D'Alonzo had stayed, Spindler said he probably would have, too.

Alan Sack, a sociologist at the University of New Haven and a longtime advocate for athletes' rights, applauded the awakening.

“I would like to think athletes are starting to get a feeling for the power they have,” said Sack, a defensive end on Notre Dame's 1966 mythical national champions. “They are beginning to realize that sports

Letter to the Editor

Misinformed on goal-post changes

To the Editor:

In the January 24 issue of The NCAA News, there appeared an article entitled “New goal posts won't be necessary.”

This article was obviously written to allay concerns about the proposal to narrow the width of goal posts from 23 feet, four inches to 18 feet, six inches.

Unfortunately, the article revealed a complete ignorance of goal-post construction and assembly and therefore conveyed a false and misleading viewpoint about what is involved in the conversion of the goal post to a narrower width.

As a leading manufacturer of “sling-shot” goal posts for pro, college and high school fields, I think we are highly qualified to comment on this issue.

Your article tried to make the conversion to 18 feet, six inches look simple by reducing it to three steps:

1. “Cut off crossbar from main standard; 2. Cut off four feet, eight inches from one end of crossbar; 3.

George Washington has slim lead as most improved team

By Richard M. Campbell
NCAA Assistant Statistics Coordinator

George Washington has a slight edge over South Florida in a close race for the title of most improved team in Division I men's basketball.

The Colonials, coached by 35-year-old John Kuester, have rebounded from last year's devastating 1-27 finish. George Washington was 11-13 through games of February 11—an improvement of 12 games (10 more victories and 14 fewer losses is 24; divide by two).

The fifth-year head coach drew on his background as both a player and an assistant coach to keep his team's approach to the season upbeat. Kuester came to George Washington after two seasons as head coach at Boston University, where he also served as an assistant to current Kentucky coach Rick Pitino. The personable Kuester was a two-year starter for Dean Smith at North Carolina, teaming with Phil Ford in the Tar Heel backcourt in the mid-1970s.

South Florida's Bobby Paschal finally has turned the corner after almost four years in Tampa. His Bulls have rebounded from 7-21 last season to 15-7 through February 11—an 11-game improvement. An advocate of aggressive, up-tempo play, the 48-year-old former Southwestern Louisiana head coach has the reputation of producing not only good basketball players, but good citizens as well.

"I think the No. 1 responsibility you have with anybody you come in contact with—in this case, college basketball players—is to try to see that they become better people by being in your program," Paschal said.

Three other teams are up at least 10½ games but would need great finishes to have a chance for the title. Here are the 16 teams up at least 7½ games through February 11:

	1989	1990	Game Up
Geo. Washington	1-27	11-13	12
South Fla.	7-21	15-7	11
Baylor	5-22	13-9	10½
Eastern Wash.	8-22	15-8	10½
Md.-East. Shore	1-26	9-13	10½
Holy Cross	13-15	20-3	9½
Tennessee Tech	10-20	16-7	9½
Pacific	7-21	13-9	9
Northern Ariz.	2-25	8-14	8½
Brigham Young	14-15	19-4	8
Kansas	19-12	24-1	8
Rider	5-23	9-11	8
Western Ill.	9-19	14-8	8
Coastal Caro.	14-14	18-5	7½
Portland	2-26	7-16	7½
Southern Miss.	10-17	15-7	7½

Fortunes really changed for Gene Iba and his Baylor Bears in a six-game stretch earlier this month. The Bears were riding a five-game Southwest Athletic Conference losing streak following a 78-74 loss to Houston January 17, but Iba's charges won six of their next seven games—including an upset of previously No. 3-ranked Arkansas. Now, the Bears are up 10½ games over last year's 5-22 record.

Eastern Washington and Maryland-Eastern Shore also have improved by 10½ games.

The real surprise among most improved teams could be Holy Cross, winner of eight straight and owner of the school's best record since the 1953-54 NIT championship team that featured Tom Heinsohn and current Crusader athletics director Ron Perry.

Veteran coach George Blaney has utilized a stifling defense (nine opponents have been held to less than .400 shooting percentage from the floor) to lead Holy Cross to its first winning season since 1982-83. Holy Cross and Tennessee Tech are each up 9½ games.

Next at nine games is Pacific, and Northern Arizona is up 8½ games.

Princeton's Sandi Bittler leads Division I women in three-pointers per game

Brigham Young, Rider and Western Illinois join Kansas at eight games.

One of the big stories of the current season is Kansas, which under second-year coach Roy Williams is the only team on the most improved list that had a winning record last year (19-12). The Jayhawks, ranked first in the polls for several weeks this year, jumped to 24-1 under Williams and surprised many of the experts with their inspired team play.

Williams, a 10-year assistant to Smith at North Carolina, introduced a motion offense with crisp passing, and the players responded with nation-leading field-goal shooting (53.3 percent).

Home-court winning streaks

Arizona boasts the longest home-court winning streak in Division I men's basketball at 45 games, with two games remaining this season in Tucson. Oklahoma is next at 43,

Arizona's men have responded to Grand Valley State's consecutive games of scoring at least one three-point field goal. The Wildcats had logged 119 consecutive games through February 3 and made at least three three-pointers in 111 of the 119 games. (Jon Alquist, Arizona Alumnus sports editor)

A bench-clearing brawl in the February 10 Skidmore-Vassar men's game led to 10 players being ejected (four from Skidmore and six from Vassar). Both teams continued to play four-on-four after the fight, and Vassar later had two players foul out to make it four-on-two. Skidmore lost a player to fouls at the 3:42 mark to make it three-on-two for the remainder of the contest. (Bill Jones, Skidmore SID)

Fordham's 5-4 freshman guard, Heather Donlon, continued to lead Division I in three-point percentage at 62.1 on 36-of-58 shooting through games of February 12. Donlon, also known as the H-Bomb to Fordham fans, tied a single-game record by hitting seven of seven from behind the three-point line February 10 against Holy Cross. She is the daughter of Northwestern assistant men's coach Bill Donlon. (Joe Favorito, Fordham SID)

Murray State, the surprise team

of the Ohio Valley Conference, has a big reason for its success even though he is not as big as before. Sophomore center Popeye Jones, among the top 20 rebounders in the nation, shed 59 pounds between June 1 and Christmas in an effort to improve his value to the improving Racers club.

Besides being the top rebounder in the OVC this year, Jones leads the team in scoring (18.3 points per outing) and steals (45) and is second in blocks and third in assists. Having pared his 6-8 frame from 309 pounds at the start of a medically supervised reduction plan to a low of 250 (he's now steady at 255), he has seen his playing time increase from 17 minutes a game to 34 this season. The slimmed-down Popeye got his nickname from his brother the day he came home from the hospital as a baby. (Craig Bohnert, Murray State SID)

Milestones

St. Cloud State women's coach Gladys Ziemer won her 300th game as a collegiate head coach with a 76-73 win over Northern Colorado February 10. She becomes only the fifth Division II women's coach to reach 300 victories. She is in her 17th season with the Huskies and is 300-146 overall. (Mike Dorsey, St. Cloud State assistant SID)

Alfred senior forward Beth Mott recently joined the 1,000-point/1,000-rebound club, making her the first Alfred player (male or female) to do so. She also excels in the classroom, maintaining a 3.740 grade-point average (4.000 scale) in Alfred's world-renowned ceramic engineering program. (Patrick Gillespie, Alfred SID)

Tulsa coach on probation for rest of season

The Missouri Valley Conference has placed University of Tulsa head men's basketball coach J. D. Barnett on probation for the rest of the season for publicly criticizing officials following a February 12 game against Illinois State University in Normal, Illinois.

"Coach Barnett's comments regarding game officiating were totally irresponsible and inappropriate and will not be tolerated," MVC Commissioner J. Douglas Elgin said.

"We have proper and established channels of communication for airing concerns about officiating that we expect institutional personnel to follow."

Elgin said conference policy forbids public criticism of game officials. He said a second offense would result in a suspension.

Basketball notes

with three home dates left. Then come Missouri 30, Clemson 22, Nevada-Las Vegas 20, Duke 18, Delaware 16, Princeton 16, Southern-Baton Rouge 15, Coppin State 14 and New Mexico State 14—all through February 18.

In women's basketball, Auburn is way ahead at 53 games with one home date left. The Division I women's record is 62 consecutive home-court victories by Louisiana Tech from 1982 to 1986.

Southern Mississippi is next at 27 followed by Stanford at 26, Illinois State at 25. Then come Louisiana Tech 19, Hawaii 18, Nevada-Las Vegas 19, Dartmouth 18, Washington 14, Virginia 14 and Southwest Missouri State 12—all through February 18.

High-scoring pair

Bo Kimble and Hank Gathers of Loyola Marymount, the major reasons for the Lions' record-breaking scoring offense (124.9 per game), have five of the top eight individual scoring games this season. Kimble, the nation's leading scorer, has four—54 vs. St. Joseph's (Pennsylvania), 53 vs. Oregon State, 51 vs. U. S. International and 50 vs. San Francisco—while Gathers, last year's scoring champion, had 48 points against Louisiana State.

Ohio's Dave Jamerson, currently second in national scoring, had the high individual game of the year with 60 points December 21 vs. Charleston. The other high-scoring games are Louisiana State's Chris try's political affairs." (Tracey Judd, Sun Belt Conference public relations director)

After a 1-18 start in which the St. Louis women's team lost 16 consecutive games and led at half time only twice, head coach Steve Cochran on his inspirational talk at the half of the Detroit game, which the Billikens won, 83-77: "I just reminded the team that we have never lost when we've been ahead at half time." (Bob Nass, St. Louis SID)

Texas senior forward Travis Mays about the success of the Texas women's basketball program: "It was very bizarre to have the women's program outdrawing the men's program in Division I. Our program was really down when I first got here. I always thought the men's game was much more explosive than the women's game. But here, the women were running, and we were playing the slow-down game. They were more explosive and exciting to watch. That's why they were pulling in the fans and we weren't."

Speaking of Mays: With 27 points vs. Texas Christian February 11, Mays became only the fifth Southwest Conference player to top 2,000 career points. He trails Baylor's Terry Teagle (2,184), Texas Tech's Rick Bullock (2,118), Arkansas' Sidney Moncrief (2,066) and Houston Michael Young (2,043). (Donna Hart, Texas women's SID office)

Committee adds new meaning to basketball 'switch'

Switching is a common term in basketball parlance, but the Division III Men's Basketball Committee has given a new meaning to that term by switching the format for this year's championship.

With the expansion of the championship field to 40 teams in 1989, the championship included first-round games and the traditional two-game regionals, single-game quarterfinals, and the semifinals and final at an already determined site.

The new format includes single games at separate sites in the first and second rounds, a four-team sectional tournament that brings together teams from two different regions, and the four-teams semifinals and final.

James F. Burson, chair of the committee, said the one-one-two-two progression of games will give the championship "more of a flow."

"It is a natural progression for the building of enthusiasm for the national finals," he said.

"I think it is an excellent format," Wittenberg coach Dan Hipsher said. "It mirrors the Division I format."

The impetus for the change was a concern over the extremely high success rate of the home team in quarterfinal play. The committee tracked this ingredient and found four teams in, the home-court advantage (is diminished)."

"When you get down to the final eight teams, home court is a tremendous advantage," said Potsdam State coach Jerry Welsh, also an advocate of the change.

Burson thinks the sectional tournaments will be very exciting and will become a focal point for players and coaches.

"There will be a real feeling of accomplishment to get to that level," he said. "It gives intersectional play a new life, too. Now, every year, (the teams in sectionals) will play a team from another area."

Robinson is sorry to see the regional championships eliminated because he thinks earning that title was special. However, there may be a trade-off because of the opportunity to play a team from another area.

The revamping of the format is not considered a drastic change from the standpoint of strategy.

"You will coach like you normally would, but you will be in a more equitable situation," Hipsher said.

Championship Profile

Michael Harper of North Park is the only player to be named most outstanding player twice (1978 and 1979).

NFL

Press reported.

Supplemental NFL drafts—like those used recently for underclassmen like former Oklahoma State University star Barry Sanders—have been eliminated under the new procedure.

Some have called the NFL move inevitable, since underclassmen in basketball, baseball and ice hockey for some time have had the opportunity to enter those sports' professional drafts.

NCAA Executive Director Richard D. Schultz has maintained throughout recent discussion of the issue, including meetings with Tagliabue and other NFL officials, that the Association believes student-athletes have the right to leave school at any time.

Even so, NFL officials reiterated their desire to see underclassmen stay in school whenever possible.

"Commissioner Tagliabue strongly believes that staying in school is in the best interests of the overwhelming majority of young athletes for educational, athletics and personal reasons," league spokesman Joe Browne said in announcing the new draft guidelines. "It is a very difficult transition from the colleges to the NFL, even for the best collegiate players."

Underclassmen who have declared their intentions to leave school early for a shot at professional football include quarterbacks Major Harris of West Virginia University and Scott Mitchell of the University of Utah; running backs Emmitt Smith of Florida, Tennessee's Reggie Cobb, Rodney Hampton of Georgia, Marcus Wilson of Virginia and Arkansas' Barry Foster; linebackers Keith McCants of Alabama and Junior Seau of Southern California, and defensive lineman Marc Spindler of Pittsburgh.

University of Houston quarterback Andre Ware, who won the 1989 Heisman Trophy, is another potential early round pick who reportedly is considering early entry into the draft, which some are speculating may be the strongest ever because of underclassmen.

"I'm not ready to say this will be one of the best drafts," said New York Jets general manager Dick Steinberg. "I think a lot of these guys will go a lot lower than people have been saying they will."

Speculation fuels both sides of the debate. McCants is projected as the first player who will be taken—by the Atlanta Falcons, who own the 1990 draft's first pick.

Harris, on the other hand, who finished third in Heisman voting for two straight years, is projected only as a middle-round pick at best and may end up playing in the Canadian Football League next season.

College coaches are facing NFL draft problems

By John Hendel

When John Mackovic coached the Kansas City Chiefs, he drafted a quarterback before that player had used all of his college eligibility. Mackovic may soon learn what it's like to lose such a player.

Mackovic's first draft choice as Kansas City coach was Pennsylvania State University's Todd Blackledge, who had a year of eligibility remaining. Now, as the coach at the University of Illinois, Champaign, Mackovic is wondering whether quarterback Jeff George will leave school early to seek his NFL fortune.

"If he stays at Illinois, I want him to be able to stay and feel good about it on his terms," Mackovic said. "I don't want to be apologizing for anything. And if he goes, I want him to understand what is out there."

More and more colleges are being faced with the question of whether to advise their players to leave school early or, more likely, to stay on the collegiate level as the NFL formally opens its draft gates to juniors.

The fact that some players may leave school early irritates some coaches, while others, Mackovic among them, see the move as inevitable.

"I don't think the two sides are that since 1975, the host team had won 84 percent of the quarterfinal games.

"I certainly was one of the people who thought (a change) needed to be investigated," Franklin and Marshall coach Glenn Robinson said. "The thought is that when you bring Welsh sees another advantage in the format change, in addition to the elimination of the quarterfinal game.

"The thing I like most is that it gives more teams that were seeded during the year the home court for the first weekend," he said.

John Mackovic, head football coach and athletics director at the University of Illinois, Champaign, answers reporters' questions during the NCAA College Football '90 Preview held in Kansas City, Missouri, February 18-20 against each other," he said. "I think that's something I felt as both a collegiate coach and an NFL coach. I think the pros would prefer that the players stay as long as possible because there is a maturity factor, there is a developmental factor. There is something to be gained at this level."

Billy Brewer, who coaches at the University of Mississippi, and Spike Dykes, the coach at Texas Tech University, did not concur with Mackovic.

"I personally would hate to see college athletics, and particularly football, be a training ground for the professional sports, where they can take a kid out any time they so desire," Brewer said.

"I would like for them to leave those kids alone. Let them come out and get their degrees and go through their four years of eligibility."

The NFL's problem lies in the legality of the draft. If the league bans players from making themselves available to the draft, officials fear the decision would not stand the scrutiny of a court of law and the NFL would be slapped with an antitrust suit. That is why the league never refused an undergraduate entrance to the draft.

Dykes sees the decision as one that will "do overall damage to college football."

He said that when Heisman Trophy winner Barry Sanders left Oklahoma State University and turned professional, his Red Raiders' game with Oklahoma State was much different from the 1988 season finale against the Cowboys.

"It's going to take a little of the glitter off," Dykes said. "We played Oklahoma State last year with Barry Sanders and Oklahoma State this year without Barry Sanders, and there's a heck of a difference," Dykes said. "There's a heck of a difference in the importance of the football game. There's a heck of a difference in the exposure. That part of it is what hurts."

Brewer and Dykes each seemed bitter toward the NFL and the chance they might lose their best players early.

"It appears to me that they're pretty selfish," Brewer said of the NFL teams. "All the college coaches do them a great courtesy and extend them a warm welcome on their campuses to help the scouting services and the coaches. I think they may be abusing the game."

Said Dykes, "It's a little bit touchy: You bend over backwards to help these people, who then bend over backwards to take your good players before they're through (in college). Now you can figure the rest of that story out.

"It is a sad, sad situation to see somebody of national prominence (depart), whom everybody is looking forward to playing. All of a sudden, they go to the NFL. And your truly outstanding college football players now are led to believe that they are idiots if they don't do it. And they used to all play the game because they loved the game."

Mackovic, perhaps because he's been on both sides of the draft fence, took the middle of the road in the debate.

"From the NFL standpoint, the NFL is interested in players who can play. They want players who can help them win," he said. "But our mission is not to prepare players for the professional leagues."

"We would like (the players) to stay, not just because they're good players and our best players, but (because) it does make a difference in the long run. We want them to graduate. (A college education) makes a difference in how you lead your life."

Hendel writes for United Press International.

Portland State's wrestling record (6-15) belies its strength

Anybody who says figures don't lie has not seen the dual-match record of Portland State's wrestling team. The Vikings' won-lost numbers not only lie, they mislead, distort, hoodwink and deceive.

Coach Marlin Grahn's defending champions have a 6-15 mark in dual matches this season; yet, they are among the leading contenders to win the Division II Wrestling Championships March 2-3 at the University of Wisconsin, Parkside.

That 6-15 mark is deceiving because Portland State's schedule was loaded with Division I powerhouses, including Oklahoma State, Arizona State, Nebraska, Iowa State and Minnesota. The Vikings made strong showings against most of their Division I foes and went 4-0 against non-Division I opponents.

"We set our schedule after last season when we had five national champions and another returning after sitting out the year," Grahn said. "But one of them has been hurt all year and another transferred, so we had to make some changes. We ended up wrestling with four or five freshmen most of the time.

"If I had to do the scheduling all over again, I'd probably do it a little differently," he admitted. "But the kids have grown a lot by facing such tough opponents, and nobody has gotten hurt because of it. It only cost us in terms of our dual record and some individual records."

The overall records of the Vikings' four returning national champions are impressive, regardless of the opposition. Junior Dan Russell, who wrestled most of this season at 158 pounds after claiming two straight 150-pound titles, has pinned eight foes on the way to a 26-4-1 overall mark. Junior Broderick Lee (118 pounds) has had a successful 19-3-1 season. Sophomores Tony Champion (177 pounds, 17-9-2) and James Sisson (142 pounds, 14-10) round out Portland State's fearsome foursome.

Looking ahead to the qualifying and championship meets, Grahn is unsure about what to expect from the rest of his squad because of its youth. But he knows his team won't suffer from overconfidence.

"Our guys have the right attitude," he said. "We're not going to be cocky, because we've sure been beaten enough. And as defending champions, we know we're not going to surprise anyone like we did last year."

Central State (Oklahoma) won't surprise anyone, either, even though the Broncos are in their first season of NCAA Division II membership. After winning a record eighth National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics wrestling championship in 1989, the Broncos were ranked No. 2 in the preseason poll of Division II wrestling coaches. They ascended to the top ranking in December and have remained there since.

His team's immediate impact on Division II came as only a slight surprise to Broncos eighth-year coach David James.

"I can't say I expected us to be the top-ranked team," he said. "You have to keep ratings in perspective, anyway. But with the success we had in the NAIA, I felt we had a good, solid team going in. And we had competed well in the past in tournaments and duals against Division II schools, and even some Division I schools."

James has a deep squad that features three-time NAIA champion Johnny Nimmo, a senior who has a 21-8-1 overall mark this season. He will vie for his first Division II title at 150 pounds, where he claimed his first NAIA title before winning his next two at 158. The Broncos' other NAIA champion is 118-pound senior Shawn Fleming, who has an impressive 32-7 record this season.

Other Broncos expected to contend for individual titles are 177-pound junior Brett Beams, who was the runner-up at 167 in the 1987 NAIA meet, and junior Greg Oplotnik, who has gone 34-7 this season after finishing fifth at 190 pounds in last year's NAIA championships.

Central State was 12-4-1 in dual matches this season, including victories over division I opponents Missouri, Cal State Fullerton and Southwest Missouri State and a hard-fought, 17-15 win at home over Nebraska-Omaha, the second-ranked team in Division II.

Although Nebraska-Omaha never has won the Division II title, coach Mike Denney's teams are perennial contenders at the championships. The Mavericks' third-place finish last year was their third in the past 10 years; they have finished second twice during the same span.

In 14 dual matches this season,

Event: Division II wrestling.

Field: A field of 140 wrestlers will compete for team and individual championships.

Automatic qualification: Central Intercollegiate Athletic Association, North Central Intercollegiate Athletic Conference and five regional qualifying tournaments.

Defending team champion: Portland State.

Schedule: The University of Wisconsin, Parkside, will host the 1990 championships March 2-3.

The NCAA News coverage: Championships results will be published in the March 7 issue of the News.

Contenders: Central State (Oklahoma), Nebraska-Omaha, North Dakota, North Dakota State, Portland State.

Championships notes: Portland State set a championships record in 1989 when all five of the Vikings' qualifiers won individual titles. The only other team to earn that many individual wrestling crowns was Iowa in the 1986 Division I championships.... Wisconsin-Parkside last was host for the championships in 1982.... Cal State Bakersfield and Cal Poly San Luis Obispo share the all-time lead in team championships with eight. Both schools now wrestle in Division I.... The last team to win consecutive team titles was Southern Illinois-Edwardsville, which won its third straight crown in 1986.

the Mavericks have lost just twice — to Central State and to intra-state Division I rival Nebraska. Junior Joe Wypiszenski, who went 28-4-3 this season after finishing third at 177 pounds last year, posted victories in both dual losses and is a threat to capture an individual title. Also likely to contend are juniors Scott Ruff (142 pounds, 29-5-1) and Mark Passer (134 pounds, 16-8-5), who finished third at 126 pounds in 1989.

North Dakota State has no one left from the squad that won the 1988 championship, but coach Arthur Maughan has put together a talented, young group that has been rated fourth in the coaches poll all season. The sole Bison all-America is 158-pound sophomore Mark Miley, who finished third last year and has a 16-5 overall mark this season. The Bison also are strong at the lower weights with junior 118-pounder Bret Maughan (15-7-1) and 126-pound senior Wayne Werner (15-3-1).

In contrast, cross-state rival North Dakota has an experienced team that features four Division II all-Americans and a junior college all-America. Leading the Fighting Sioux is senior Tim Briggs, the defending 158-pound champion, who has a 23-5 overall record this season. Other wrestlers who have been successful in previous championships are 1988 all-Americans Jair Toedter (heavyweight, 22-11-1 this season) and Duane Barnhardt (134 pounds, 17-12-1) and senior Dale Herbst (29-5), who finished fourth at 190 pounds last year.

'89 wrestling titlist Ithaca returns with its talent intact

Ithaca's failure to capture an individual title was the only blemish — albeit a small one — on the Bombers' 1989 Division III wrestling crown. They were the first team champions since 1978, and the second in the 16-year history of the tournament, without an individual titlist to hoist on their shoulders in triumph.

This year, Ithaca is in position to earn shiny, brand-new regalia since coach John Murray's experienced squad remains largely intact and will face returning individual champions in only two weight classes.

"They're probably as strong a favorite going into the tournament as Division III has had in the past three years," said Augsburg coach Jeff Swenson, whose team finished third last year, 11 points behind Ithaca. "But we're not conceding anything. Nobody does, or they wouldn't bother to hold the tournament. We know how good Ithaca is, but we're not wrestling to beat Ithaca. We're just going to try to wrestle as well as we can."

Ironically, Augsburg will rely on the very strength that brought Ithaca the title: balance throughout the lineup. The Auggies, ranked second in the latest poll of Division III coaches, have all-Americans at five weights and potential scorers at the others.

Augsburg is led by seniors Mitch Hegland, who posted a 38-6 overall record this year after finishing sixth at 118 pounds in the 1989 championships, and John Beatty (23-2), who finished fourth at 134 pounds in 1989 and has moved up to 142 this season. Also back are 158-pound junior Matt Kretlow, who finished fourth last year and is 36-2 this season; Kevin Schiltz, who went 32-7 this year after taking third place in 1989 as a freshman, and heavyweight Chester Grauberger, a junior who finished fifth last year and has posted a 33-5 overall mark this season.

One reason Swenson calls this squad his best ever is the addition of junior 150-pounder Tim Tousignant. The transfer from Navy has an astounding 42-1-1 mark this season.

Trenton State coach Dave Icenhower said in November that his team "may be a year away." But the Lions, who finished a disappointing 11th at last year's championships and were ranked No. 8 in the preseason coaches poll, overcame an early rash of injuries and illnesses to post an 18-1 record in duals and earn a third-place ranking.

An unusual mix of experience and youth makes the Lions a legitimate threat for a championships-record sixth title. The roster contains seven 1989 qualifiers, including junior Rich Venuto, a two-time all-America who finished seventh at 142 pounds last year, and senior heavyweight Steve Spencer, who will be attempting to qualify for his third championships.

Trenton State also features four talented sophomores: Steve Rivera (118 pounds, 14-1 overall), Glen Newman (134 pounds, 15-4-1), Shawn O'Meara (150 pounds, 13-3) and Matt Opacity (167 pounds, 24-2). All but Newman qualified for the 1989 championships, where Rivera finished eighth.

Fourth-ranked Cortland State has a similar blend of young and seasoned performers, although most of the Red Dragons' impact wrestlers are veterans. Among them are three 1989 all-Americans: senior Troy Monks (fourth place, 118 pounds), junior Mike Yanosik (fourth at 167 pounds) and graduate Sean Yengo (seventh at 158 pounds).

John Carroll will rely on three all-Americans to improve upon last year's fourth-place finish (59 points) at the championships. Leading the trio is senior Joe Schmidt, a two-time runner-up at 167 pounds who is finishing his stellar career at 177. Schmidt posted a 29-2 overall mark this season, including 11 pins, on his way to setting the all-time Blue Streak record for victories (114).

Junior Stan Rhodes, a 1988 all-America at 126 pounds, had an 8-5 mark after returning in January from knee surgery. Senior Carl DiBernardo, fifth at 177 pounds last year, moved down to 167 this season and posted a 22-7 overall record.

"This is essentially the same team we had last year at nationals," Ithaca coach John Murray said of his senior-dominated squad. "We're at least as good as we were last year, and maybe much better because we're a year older."

Leading the Bomber squad is senior Mike Fusilli, the 1989 runner-up at 190 pounds who has moved up to heavyweight this season and

"may be the best in the division," according to Murray. The 225-pound, two-time all-America has posted a 27-6 overall record this season. He is just two wins ahead of another two-time all-America, senior 150-pounder Marty Nichols (25-4).

Also back are 1989 finalists Ron Gross (142 pounds) and Dan Bieller (177 pounds) and all-Americans Joel Lamson (126 pounds) and Tim Cotter (134 pounds). But the returnee who may make the biggest difference is senior Mike Cronmiller, who sat out last season after winning the 158-pound title in 1988. He has come back at full strength this season, posting a 24-3 mark; his only losses were to Division I foes.

Cronmiller's return gives Ithaca the one thing it lacked last season: a national champion. The Bombers may have a few more March 3.

Contenders: Augsburg, Cortland State, Ithaca, John Carroll, Trenton State.

Championships notes: Teams from New York or New Jersey have won the last 14 team championships. No school west of the Mississippi River has won the team title in the 16-year history of the championships.... No team has won back-to-back titles since Trenton State claimed the 1984 and 1985 crowns.... Defending champion Ithaca is hosting the championships for the first time. In claiming their first team title last year, the Bombers became the first team since Buffalo in 1978 to win the team championship without having an individual titlist.... Trenton State holds the all-time lead in team championships with five, and Montclair State has won the most individual titles (20).... Fifty-four schools earned team points in the 1989 championships.

Newcomers are hoping for tournament berths

Play-off experience can be an important factor when tournament time rolls around, but in this year's Division III Women's Basketball Championship, the new kids on the block may be the ones who hang tough.

Of the top 10 teams ranked through February 13, two have never played in the tournament and three more have competed only once. St. John Fisher is the only team among the top 10 that has reached either the semifinals or finals. The Cardinals played for the 1988 title.

There is precedent in this championship for a team to win the title as a first-time entrant. Wisconsin-Stevens Point accomplished that feat in 1987.

"The players did a real good job of preparing one game at a time," said Linda Wunder, who coached that team. She currently is the head coach at Miami (Ohio).

Wunder said the strengths of the Wisconsin-Stevens Point team included a balanced offense and good defense. In most games, at least four players scored in double figures.

Although the team was making its first appearance in the basketball championship, two of the players had been members of the volleyball team and had championship experience from that sport.

The Lady Pointers of 1987 also had the ability to succeed in areas

Reattach crossbar to main standard at midline of field."

First, any "freelance" work done on the goal post by the school renders the manufacturer's warranty null and void. Without a manufacturer's warranty, the school is subject to any liability if the goal post causes damage to person or property. We all know how frequently the goal posts get torn down by jubilant fans. I don't think the schools want to expose themselves to this enormous risk.

Second, the crossbar is fastened to the main standard by a sleeve with fastening bolts. The crossbar quickly disconnects by removing the bolts. It is ludicrous to suggest that the crossbar needs to be "cut off" from the standard.

Thirdly, since the mounting sleeve is at the center of the crossbar, an equal section, or two feet, four inches, would have to be cut from both ends in order to keep the sleeve at the center of the crossbar.

To suggest that you can simply cut off four feet, eight inches from one end is ludicrous, because it would render the mounting sleeve off-center and obsolete. Cutting the crossbar is not the solution since it also would require rewelding the sleeves for the uprights at both ends of the crossbar.

The fact of the matter is, the very best way to accomplish this rule change is for each school to purchase a new set of crossbars. The new crossbar would be compatible with the existing main standard and uprights, and, simply, it would be a matter of exchanging the new crossbar for the old. No cutting. No welding. No loss of liability protection.

The NCAA should consider whether all of its schools can afford this expense and complete the work between May (assuming the Executive Committee ratifies the rule) and the start of football season. Perhaps a more realistic target date for the application of this rule would be the 1991 season.

is big business and they are responsible for the revenue that is rolling in."

Sack has conducted surveys of athletes in college and beyond, asking if they felt exploited.

"At 30, 40, 50, when they reflect on their careers and when they have been away from it for a while, they are more critical and more insightful," he said. "The younger players don't see that. They're getting a scholarship. In some cases, they're getting money under the table. They're getting perks. They look around and say, 'Hey, this isn't so bad.' I look and say it could be much better, given their value to their schools."

where they had fallen short previously. The 1985-86 squad was in the running to make the NCAA championship but did not. Consequently, the following year's team zeroed in on that goal. In the first game of the 1987 championship, Wisconsin-Stevens Point faced St. Norbert, a team that had defeated the Lady Pointers decisively early in the year. Wisconsin-Stevens Point won the regional contest, 75-58.

Throughout the championship, the Lady Pointers were motivated by their role as underdogs. They had the incentive to prove themselves in each game.

"No one thought we could do it," Wunder said about winning the championship.

Wunder says a team's ability to continue to play its own style can be a key to success in the tournament. Her squad played hard, played together and made heady decisions en route to the title.

Making free throws takes on added importance in tournament play, according to Wunder. Wisconsin-Stevens Point shot just over 78 percent from the line in its five tournament games. The Lady Pointers went 23 for 26 in the title contest, an outstanding 88 percent.

"If you do have a lead, the players have to have the confidence to put the free throws in and ice games," Wunder said.

Even without previous play-off experience, a team can fare well in the championship if the players keep their composure and continue to do the things that have brought them success all year.

"If the players have played so well all year long, that is not going to change," Wunder said. "They have to play with confidence no matter whom they are playing against."

Bloom is placed on probation

Former sports agent Lloyd Mitchell Bloom, convicted last year of illegally signing college athletes to professional contracts, has received three years' probation for writing bad checks.

Bloom, 30, of Malibu, California, entered a no-contest plea February 15 to one count of writing $14,300 in bad checks.

Van Nuys Superior Court Judge Raymond Mireles also sentenced Bloom to a one-year jail term but stayed the sentence on condition he make full restitution to his victims, including his former accountant, a moving company and two other companies, the Associated Press reported.

Bloom said he is now an actor's manager.

Bloom was convicted in Chicago last June, along with Norby Walters, of five Federal racketeering and mail-fraud counts for secretly signing college athletes to professional contracts before their college eligibility expired.

He also was convicted of using an organized-crime boss to intimidate athletes and entertainment figures who wanted to pull out of business deals.

Bloom was sentenced to three years in prison in that earlier case but is free pending an appeal.

Award to Evert

Chris Evert, who recently retired from the professional tennis tour, was presented the Flo Hyman Award for courage and dedication February 9 during ceremonies marking National Girls and Women in Sports Day.

Hyman, who led the U.S. volleyball team to a silver medal in the 1984 Olympics, died unexpectedly in 1986 after collapsing during a match.

The Revolutionary Gillette Sensor.

It senses and adjusts to the individual needs of your face for the best shave a man can get.

The remarkable Gillette Sensor shaving system creates an entirely new standard in shaving performance. It's a shave personalized to every man. The revolution starts with the platinum hardened Sensor twin blades. They're individually and independently mounted on highly responsive springs. So they continuously sense and automatically adjust to the individual curves and unique needs of your face.

But innovation doesn't stop there. The ultra narrow metal skin guard is also mounted on springs. It moves in total harmony with the blades to set up your beard for optimum shaving performance.

Keeping this technology in constant contact with your face required another breakthrough. A dramatic redesign of the entire pivoting process creates a wider, more responsive, unprecedentedly smooth pivoting action. Innovation is everywhere.

You can feel it in the textured ridges and balance of the Sensor razor. You appreciate it in the easy loading system and the convenient shaving organizer.

Even rinsing is innovative. The new blades are 50% narrower than any others — water flows freely around and through them, helping to make rinsing and cleaning totally effortless.

But the true revolution of Sensor comes not with any one feature, but with the way the Sensor technologies work together. They combine to give your individual face a personalized shave — the closest, smoothest, safest shave you've ever had. Or, more precisely, the best shave a man can get.

It's not certain if other schools will retaliate against Notre Dame

By Doug Tucker

When the University of Notre Dame struck out on its own and signed a football television contract with NBC, many members of the College Football Association grumbled. Then, the University of Kansas decided to act.

"This just seemed like the thing for us to do," Kansas athletics director Robert E. Frederick said after canceling a two-game basketball series with the Irish. "We haven't talked to any other schools."

Frederick made clear he was taking action in protest of Notre Dame's surprise withdrawal from a CFA deal with ABC and ESPN. It's uncertain whether other schools might follow Kansas' lead, although anger persists over Notre Dame's action.

"We've thought about it," said Rudy Davalos, University of Houston director of athletics. "Bob Frederick did what a lot of people have been talking about doing for a couple of weeks now."

About two weeks after the CFA and ABC reached an agreement on a $210 million TV package, Notre Dame signed its own $30 million agreement with NBC for all its home games.

With Notre Dame out, the CFA had to accept a cut of about $50 million in its five-year deal with ABC and ESPN, the renegotiation costing each CFA school about $150,000, according to Frederick.

The CFA is made up of every major football conference and independent except the Big Ten and Pacific-10 Conferences.

"There is lost revenue, but there is also extreme disappointment that Notre Dame would do what it did,"

"If everybody in college athletics acted purely in his own self-interest, it would be very hard for anybody to survive."

Robert E. Frederick
Kansas athletics director

Frederick said. "It could have especially bad consequences for schools that are not in major metropolitan areas with lots of television sets."

"If everybody in college athletics acted purely in his own self-interest, it would be very hard for anybody to survive," Frederick said.

Richard A. Rosenthal, director of athletics at Notre Dame, said he expected no major backlash and described his conversation with Frederick as "very gracious."

"We have no reason to believe anybody is interested in disassociating competitive sports with Notre Dame," Rosenthal said from his office. "We haven't heard from a soul."

"I applaud Kansas for making a gutsy move," Davalos said. "I think it won't happen, but if there was a movement to do that within the CFA, we would certainly listen to it."

A conference official not involved in the dispute said he doubted there could be an organized boycott against Notre Dame.

"I believe they might get into legal problems if they tried to go that route," Big Ten Conference Commissioner James E. Delany said. "But this is an interesting development, to say the least."

As an independent, Notre Dame does not have conference scheduling or loyalty to fall back on and conceivably could be severely inconvenienced if many schools follow the Kansas lead. The games were scheduled for 1992 at Kansas and 1993 at Notre Dame.

"We regret Kansas' decision to request to be relieved from the two basketball games," Rosenthal said. "We disagree with the motive that prompted the request but have no problem granting their wishes."

Charles M. Neinas, executive director of the CFA, declined comment.

Frederick said he debated for several days whether even to make his decision public.

"We're not trying to start anything; we're not trying to encourage anybody to do anything," he said.

He noted that NCAA schools are discussing now how to distribute the $1 billion NCAA basketball tournament contract with CBS, which more than doubles current tournament revenue.

"At a time when everyone in college athletics is talking about getting our house in order and sharing all that new revenue for the benefit of everyone, Notre Dame goes off and does what it did," Frederick said.

"Kansas could make a lot more money if the schools that participate in the NCAA tournament just got that much bigger of a share," he said. "But we've been trying to work with those who want to spread it around and help support other broad-based athletics programs."

Tucker writes for the Associated Press.

Kansas voids two games with Irish over TV pact

The University of Kansas will not play its scheduled basketball games with the University of Notre Dame in 1992 and 1993 because of Notre Dame's football contract with NBC, Robert E. Frederick, director of athletics at Kansas, announced February 15.

Frederick said Notre Dame's withdrawal from the College Football Association TV package with ABC and ESPN would have an impact on many NCAA Division I-A institutions, including Kansas, that are struggling financially while trying to support extensive athletics programs for men and women, the Associated Press reported.

"The CFA package is particularly important to our institution since the Big Eight does not have a live conference television package," he said.

"We understand that Notre Dame has the right to negotiate its own deal, and we respect its decision process," Frederick said. "We simply disagree with the decision and as a result have asked Dick Rosenthal (Notre Dame's director of athletics) to release us from the previously agreed-to basketball games, which he has done."

Kansas was to have played a home-and-home series with the Irish. Kansas, which is a CFA member, said Notre Dame's decision to go it alone "is not in the best interests of Division I-A intercollegiate athletics."

Shooter is back in game, Steitz says

By Trudy Tynan

The chief proponent of college basketball's three-point shot is delighted by the number of 100-point games teams are tossing up this season.

"We've put the shooter back into the game," said Edward S. Steitz, secretary-rules editor of the NCAA Men's Basketball Rules Committee.

It was Steitz who brought the three-point shot to college ball in the 1986-87 season in hopes of boosting scoring and attendance.

"It's accomplished everything the rules committee wanted," said Steitz, of Springfield College. "It's certainly increased scoring. But it's also opened up the game by bringing back the good outside shooter. And that's helped minimize rough post play and potential fights. When we put it in, scoring was declining and so was attendance. It has brought back interest and excitement.

Game was boring

"The game had become boring. Before, all excellent players needed was strength and quickness. Now, they need to be able to shoot from the outside.

"The dunk is no longer basketball's home run; the three-point shot is."

So far, the top point output this year was 289, February 3, when Louisiana State beat Loyola Marymount, 148-141, in overtime. Oklahoma scored the most points this year with a 173-101 rout of U.S. International. The record was set last season when Loyola defeated U.S. International, 181-150.

"What the rules committee is interested in is maintaining that delicate balance between offense and defense," Steitz said.

While he acknowledged that there's little time for defense when a game approaches 300 points, he said the statistics show that in the past five seasons, coaches have learned to stop the three-point shot.

Although about one of every four field goals attempted during the first half of this season was a three-pointer (in 1986-87 it was one of every six), shooting percentages dropped from 38.4 percent in 1986-87 to 36.4 this season.

Line may be moved

Steitz has asked coaches about moving the three-point line back nine inches from the current 19 feet, nine inches to conform to Olympic rules.

"But how can you say 19-9 is too short, when the shooting percentages are going down," Steitz said. "It's been the position of the rules committee to make no radical or significant changes without research or statistics to back it up. And from all we can see, there's nothing out of balance or out of proportion now.

"When we put in the three-pointer, 60 percent of the coaches opposed it. But at the end of the first year, 81 percent were in favor of it, and that number has increased with every passing year.

"The 1980s will go down in history as the time of the most radical rule changes for the good of basketball in its history."

Among the rules changes in the 1980s were the elimination of the jump ball (except to start the game), the installation of the 45-second shot clock and the creation of the three-point shot.

Statistics leader overcomes eyesight problem

Creighton's Kathy Halligan may have an unorthodox shooting style, but it hasn't stopped her from becoming one of the top three-point shooters in Division I women's basketball this season.

The 5-10 sophomore has hit 85 three-pointers in 23 games and ranks second in three-point goals per game. She also is 14th in scoring with an average of 23.7 points a game.

Because of a weak muscle in her left eye, Halligan uses only her right eye to shoot. She shoots the ball off her right shoulder instead of releasing it from the front of her face, and she also turns her head to the left to focus with her right eye.

"If I shot the correct way, I wouldn't be able to see the basket because the ball would be in front of my face," she told Steve Sinclair of the Omaha World-Herald.

"When I concentrate on shooting, I only see out of one eye because if I look out of both, I see double," she said.

She is shooting almost 50 percent from the field, and her three-point shot percentage is over 40.

Her coach, Bruce Rasmussen, says, "To me, she's a throwback to the old days. She is a Larry Bird-type player. She doesn't have great form; she can't jump a lick; she has average speed. But she finds out what her weaknesses are, and she's obsessed with trying to eliminate them. She finds a way to get it done."

Halligan played six-on-six basketball at West Sioux High School in Hawarden, Iowa.

"When she came to Creighton, she had not played in a five-on-five basketball game of any sort," said Rasmussen. "She was really a baby in the game.

"Her progress as a player has been amazing, and there's a reason for it. She has the attitude and approach toward the game you would like to see in every basketball player you have."

Halligan led the Lady Jays in scoring as a freshman with a 15-point average.

In one game this season, Halligan made 10 three-point baskets to set a school record.

"Before my sophomore year in high school, I worked all summer on correct form," Halligan said. "But it was impossible."

Rasmussen said he wouldn't change anything about her now.

'91 Tip-Off Classic: Indiana vs. UCLA

Two of the nation's collegiate basketball dynasties—Indiana and UCLA—will launch the sport's centennial anniversary in 1991-92.

Ex-coach faces felony charges

A felony warrant charging embezzlement was authorized February 14 against former University of Michigan baseball coach Bud Middaugh, the Washtenaw County (Michigan) prosecutor's office said.

The baseball program already is under Big Ten Conference and university investigation for possible recruiting and rules violations.

The one-count warrant alleges that Middaugh, who resigned last July, diverted an unspecified amount of money to his players from the sale of football programs. The money was supposed to go to the university.

Middaugh apparently did not profit from any of the alleged diversion, senior deputy assistant prosecutor Lynwood Noah said.

Edward Stein, the law partner of Middaugh's attorney, Michael Moran, said Middaugh will deny any wrongdoing, the Associated Press reported.

The charge against Middaugh resulted from an investigation by the university's department of public safety and security.

"I can't comment on either investigation except to say that the Big Ten investigation is ongoing," said Michigan athletics director Jack Weidenbach, who will become interim athletics director when Bo Schembechler begins his indefinite game of the collegiate basketball season. The Tip-Off Classic will be played in late November 1991 in the Springfield, Massachusetts, Civic Center.

Although the date is not set, the Tip-Off Classic next November will leave of absence March 1.

Arrangements for Middaugh to be arraigned in 15th District Court on a charge of embezzlement of more than $100 were pending. Under Michigan law, embezzlement of more than $100 is a felony punishable by 10 years in prison and a $5,000 fine.

Middaugh, who quit after 10 seasons as baseball coach amid the conference investigation, was in charge of the crews of athletes who sold programs during home 1987 football games.

feature Louisiana State vs. Villanova.

Burt Weinbaum, chair of the board of the classic, has presented a $200,000 check to Joe O'Brien, executive director of the hall of fame.

"This is the largest single presentation we have made to the Basketball Hall of Fame since the inception of the Tip-Off Classic in 1979. To date, we have donated $1.88 million to the hall of fame's operating budget and building fund to reduce the mortgage," Weinbaum said.

O'Brien said basketball's centennial will be celebrated throughout the world in 1991-92, officially opening in Springfield in mid-December 1991 and climaxing with the 1992 Olympic Games in Barcelona, Spain. "It is fitting that the centennial's first collegiate game will be played in the city where James Naismith invented the game in December 1891," O'Brien said.

Research confirms that business thrives on lots of sun and plenty of water.

The sound of water cascading from a fountain can help crystallize one's thinking.

A sunny room is infinitely more uplifting than a dim room.

Certain color schemes can warm you. Open, airy spaces can make you feel free.

Certainly, none of these thoughts is especially surprising. What is surprising, however, is that only one group of hotels seems to employ them to the fullest advantage of today's business traveller: Hyatt® Hotels.

Which may help to explain why everything, from our atriums to our guest rooms, has such a distinctive appeal.

Why business executives tend to feel more relaxed and more focused at Hyatt.

And why, given our competitive rates and the benefits of our Gold Passport® Frequent Traveller Program, enlightened companies are happy to see their executives come back to a Hyatt Hotel.

After all, what's good for business people invariably is good for business.

Stanford to cut track and field grants to five

Stanford University is cutting back on its track and field scholarships in response to a revenue crunch at the school.

Under NCAA rules, schools are allowed to award up to 30 grants-in-aid combined for men's and women's track and field. But Stanford is cutting down to five.

"We need to trim our budget," said Ferdinand A. Geiger, director of athletics. "Expenses have escalated faster than we've been able to create income, and we can't cope with it any more. It's an inflationary problem."

The move will save an estimated $500,000. Geiger said $1.5 million to $2 million will have to be trimmed from the athletics department budget, but no other sports will face drastic cutbacks.

Track coach Brooks Johnson had expected the cuts for a long time. He said he expects grants in nonrevenue sports to be nonexistent at all schools in three to four years, the Associated Press reported.

Stanford plans to honor all current scholarships.

Sport added

The College of St. Scholastica will sponsor varsity women's soccer in the 1990-91 season, according to Kevin C. Snyder, director of athletics.

Soccer will become the fifth women's varsity sport. The Division III school has five men's varsity sports.

Greg Cane, coach of the men's soccer program, also will coach the women's team.

Snyder said the school will seek membership in the 13-member Minnesota Intercollegiate Athletic Conference for the 1991-92 season.

Martin A. Massengale, chancellor of the University of Nebraska, Lincoln, and chair of the NCAA Presidents Commission; Sam Jankovich, director of athletics at the University of Miami (Florida), and Daniel G. Gibbens, faculty athletics representative at the University of Oklahoma, shared their thoughts about how to bring meaningful reform to college athletics and to reduce time demands on student-athletes.

After the administrators discussion, panelists were available for individual and small-group interviews.

The preview was moderated by Roger O. Valdiserri, University of Notre Dame associate athletics director and chair of the NCAA Communications Committee.

Overland Park

not just the visitors center, that makes the NCAA an attractive neighbor in Overland Park, Burch said.

Noting that the NCAA provides leadership not only in college athletics, but in such areas as drug education, she said the Association represents "quality and excellence."

In the city's business community,

"there have been nothing but extremely positive comments" about the NCAA's arrival, Burch added. The community sees the NCAA as "an added jewel."

Mutually beneficial

And in turn, city leaders believe that as Overland Park grows, the NCAA will benefit.

Of course, the convention bureau's efforts to publicize the visitors center will aid the Association in getting its newest venture off to a good start.

With more than 2,500 hotel rooms in the city and more possibly on the way, the city also offers convenient locations for meetings of NCAA committees.

Already, the NCAA Council is scheduled to meet in April at the 402-room Overland Park Marriott, which is only a short drive from the new national office building. Also, the Association's Committee on Review and Planning and Division II Football Committee have scheduled meetings this year at the city's 357-room Doubletree Hotel, also located in the College Boulevard corridor.

City officials and developers also have discussed erecting a convention center in Overland Park—possibly only a few blocks away from the NCAA's headquarters.

"We would hope we could work with the NCAA to facilitate any organization meetings," Jordan said.

But for now, Overland Park is simply putting out its welcome mat for the more than 180 NCAA staff members who will move into a new building—and their new home town—February 26.

Move to new national office building took less than two years

It has taken less than two years for the NCAA to move into a new national office building—six months to design the building and negotiate terms for its construction, and 15 months to actually build the facility.

But even as the Kansas City-area business community marvels at how quickly the project was completed, NCAA officials remember that the decision to build the building wasn't made overnight.

In fact, it has been more than four years since the Association began a review of long-term office needs that led to construction of the building, said Richard D. Hunter, NCAA director of operations.

Anticipating the need for more space, the Association in September 1985 sought to rezone a four-acre site it owned across the street from its current headquarters building in Mission, Kansas, to permit construction of an office building. "To build on or otherwise occupy the site, or to sell it for any value, it had to be rezoned," Hunter said.

Residents of nearby residential areas, however, opposed the request, and the reluctance of the city of Mission's planning commission and city council to grant rezoning prompted the Association to take the matter to court. More than a year elapsed before the city and the Association reached an agreement to zone the property for a 51,000-square-foot building.

During that time, the Association filled the last available offices in its West building and found itself faced with deciding whether to build a third office building in Mission or to attempt to combine the staff under one roof. The second option became increasingly attractive.

In early 1987, the Association began an informal search for sites in Johnson County, Kansas, where the NCAA could buy or build a building. In May 1987, the NCAA Executive Committee appointed the Special Committee to Review Future Office Requirements to wrestle with the problem of finding additional office space for the national office staff.

Soon after Richard D. Schultz replaced Walter Byers as NCAA executive director in October 1987, Schultz approved a staff recommendation to retain a consultant—or "broker"—to assist in looking for sites for a new building in the Kansas City area as well as to evaluate other cities.

Schultz also, in essence, widened the Association's range of building-site options in Kansas City when he suggested that the NCAA consider leasing a "built-to-suit" building. Doing so made available to the Association properties that Kansas City-area developers were unwilling to sell, Hunter said.

By January 1988, the Association had hired the consultant—Jones and Company—and soon after hired an architect—Calcara Duffendack Foss Manlove Inc.—to determine how much space was needed for the staff.

Between March and May 1988, the Special Committee to Review Future Office Requirements reviewed all of the information collected by the NCAA staff, the consultant and the architect. Among other things, the committee considered relocating the national office to another city but decided that the Kansas City area compared favorably with other possible locations. Then, it began to whittle down the number of acceptable building sites in the Kansas City area.

Finally, in May 1988, the Executive Committee approved the special committee's recommendation to locate the NCAA national office in Overland Park, Kansas.

Since then, it has taken only 21 months for the Association to build its new seven-story, 154,000-square-foot home. But while things may seem to have happened almost overnight, the process wasn't really that simple.

After 3,000-yard workout, swimmer wins 13 events in meets

Trenton State College swimmer Jennifer Harnett got a baptism of fire February 3 when her team hosted Kean College in a dual meet. "We want her going at least 6,000 yards every day," explained Trenton State coach Brenda Campbell, who had her freshman phenom complete a 3,000-yard workout the morning of the meet—to warm up.

Harnett competed in 13 events during the meet—and she won every race. Not all of them counted in the scoring, of course. But nobody finished ahead of her.

"This gave her the challenge of swimming hard, swimming fast times," Campbell said. "But even more than that, it was to get her used to back-to-back swims, of being able to go from one (race) to another without tiring."

Harnett already had qualified for the Division III championships in four events—the 50-yard, 100-yard and 200-yard freestyle events and the 200-yard individual medley. In

"Around the 200 back (her ninth event of the meet), I started to get a second wind," Harnett said. "It would have been nice to towel off once... to put on my sweats."

Trivia Time: What is the record for most individual victories at a single Division III Women's Swimming Championships meet? Answer later.

ESPN has become the first cable network to reach 60 percent of American television households, according to a February 7 announcement by Roger L. Werner Jr., ESPN president and chief executive officer. Recent A.C. Nielsen Company research indicates the all-sports network now is received in 55.34 million American homes (60.1 percent of U.S. TV households).

Wichita State University's men's basketball team hosted 75 Kansas Special Olympians February 4 for a 90-minute clinic that included tips on ball handling, passing, dribbling, layups, foul shooting and outside shooting.

"This really puts wins and losses in their proper perspective," said coach Mike Cohen.

Saginaw Valley State University's athletics department will cosponsor (with the school's student government and substance-abuse-prevention office) a February 25 seminar on the dangers of anabolic steroids. Attendance is mandatory for all Saginaw Valley State student-athletes, and athletics director Robert

Jennifer Harnett

T. Becker said personal invitations will be sent to area junior high and high school coaches and administrators.

"The clinic is not just for athletes and coaches," Becker added, "but for parents and students as well. Steroid use is not limited to athletes."

University of Florida women's basketball player Camille Ratledge recently set the Southeastern Conference's all-time record for career assists. Ratledge finished a February 6 game against the University of South Florida with 780 career assists, 13 more than former University of Tennessee, Knoxville, star Dawn Marsh racked up in setting the old SEC mark.

Allegheny College women's basketball coach Rhonda Seagraves recorded career victory No. 100 February 3 when her team won on the road over Kenyon College. Seagraves is in her fourth season as a head coach.

Ron Mason

Michigan State University ice hockey coach Ron Mason earned career triumph No. 600 February 3 when his Spartans defeated Ohio State University, 4-2. In his 24th season as a college coach, Mason has a career mark through the milestone contest of 600-247-29.

West Georgia College women's basketball coach Jane Williamson recently was honored by the State of Georgia Hall of Fame as 1989 female coach of the year in Division II.

More Report Cards: Gabrielle Weiner, who has earned a 4.000 grade-point average (4.000 scale) in each of her three semesters as the State University of New York, Binghamton, led the school's women's tennis team to a composite fall-semester GPA of 3.230.

In other Binghamton news, men's soccer players Justin Corcoran, Tom Doran, Steve Niedzwiecki and Rich Sexton were named scholar-athletes by the State University of New York Athletic Conference. Sexton and teammate Gary Israel also were named to a New York scholar-athlete team sponsored by Adidas.

Forty-eight student-athletes were honored February 14 by the University of Maine for earning GPAs of at least 3.000 during the past academic year. "It is quite a feat to excel both in the classroom and on the playing field," said Margaret Zillioux, academic support coordinator for Maine's athletics department, "and we feel that the student-athletes who combine excellence in each should be acknowledged."

Allegheny College senior men's soccer player Buff Grady recently received the Robert Barndollar Sportsmanship and Academics Award for the 1989 season. Also captain of Allegheny's men's tennis team, Grady has a 3.360 GPA in history.

Named to the Gulf South Conference all-academic team for the fall were West Georgia College student-athletes Jimmy Cooper [football, 3.520 in engineering (4.000 in the fall)], Barbara Berry (women's volleyball, 3.130 in physical education) and Beth Moscrip (3.750 in mass communications).

Trivia Answer: Williams College's Katherine Ekrich won five individual titles at the 1982 Division III Women's Swimming Championships, which is the all-time record. She also swam on two victorious relay teams that year.

Briefly in the News

the meet against Kean, she swam those events and the 500-yard and 1,000-yard freestyle races, the 100-yard and 200-yard backstroke races, the 100-yard and 200-yard breaststroke races, the 100-yard and 200-yard butterfly races, and a leg of the 400-yard freestyle relay.

She told Trenton Times reporter Harvey Yavener that her only break came during the diving competition.

Despite losing seasons, Catamounts' Lewis still a winner

By Doug Mead

Even though Western Carolina University's Myron Lewis is a chemistry major, there's no secret formula for his success in the classroom. It has been hard work and plenty of it.

"You've got to have enough determination and self-discipline to push yourself," said Lewis, whose grades have ranged between 3.500 and 4.000 each of the past seven semesters. "There have been times when I'd get back to the dorm after practice at 8 or 9 (p.m.) and didn't feel like studying. But I knew that I had to."

"The most important thing you learn in college is managing your time," he added. "You have to take advantage of every chance you get to study, whether it's in a hotel room or on the bus."

Lewis, who will attend medical school at West Virginia University this fall, admits he takes some good-natured kidding from other members of the Catamount basketball team because of his high grades. "A lot of guys on the team seem to think that things come easy for me, but I work at it," he said.

High grades

A native of Hurricane, West Virginia, Lewis ranked fifth in his high-school class of 209 students. However, his SAT score was only 1,090. That's good, but certainly not "Doogie Howser, M.D." territory. The fact that Lewis hasn't made anything below a B in his college career is more of a testament to his hard work than God-given intellect.

And Lewis has done outstanding academic work despite taking the most demanding courses at Western Carolina. His transcript is dotted with organic chemistry, microbiology, chemical dynamics and instrumental analysis. Not a "principles of badminton" in sight.

While Lewis has been a star in the classroom, his success on the basketball court has been more modest. In fact, for Lewis' first three seasons, his GPA was higher than his points per game—3.770 to 1.7.

This season, Lewis has seen considerably more playing time, averaging 26.1 minutes and 6.5 points through the first part of the season.

"I play a much different role this season," he said. "I'm more of a leader. Coach (Greg) Blatt is looking for me to do a lot more things this year. And that's what I've been waiting for, because I know I can play. I know I can help this team. I've just been waiting for the chance."

Four coaches

This is Lewis' fourth year under a different coach—Steve Cottrell as a freshman, Herb Krusen as a sophomore, Dave Possinger as a junior and Blatt this season.

And Lewis admits it's a distinction he's not entirely comfortable with. "That's some way to be remembered," he said. "It's not something any player would ever want. What it means is that I've had to start over every year."

The Cats have finished last in the Southern Conference the past two seasons and appear ticketed for the league's cellar again this year. That's been a difficult adjustment for Lewis.

"I think this team can do better than people expect," Lewis added. "Our younger guys have gotten a lot of experience in the early going, and hopefully, down the road, that will help out."

Lewis feels the future looks bright as long as the Cats can avoid another coaching change. "The main thing Western needs is someone who is going to stay here for a while," he said. "The coaching changes have hurt our recruiting. If coach Blatt stays here for a few years, things should stabilize and the program can get back up to the level that it

Myron Lewis of Western Carolina University has shown that having winning seasons in basketball is not necessarily a requirement for becoming an outstanding student-athlete or enjoying athletics competition

once was."

Lewis, who plays both the lead- and shooting-guard positions, started the first seven games of the season before suffering a severe ankle sprain against South Florida at the Tampa Tribune Holiday Tournament. He is back at full strength now and came off the bench in WCU's first two conference games against league powers East Tennessee State and Appalachian State.

His performance against the Apps—two-of-two from the field, four-of-four from the line, four assists and only one turnover in 23 minutes of playing time—is fairly typical of his contributions this season.

Lewis grew up just down Interstate 64 from Huntington and Marshall University. He was a Thundering Herd fan and dreamed of wearing the green and white and playing in front of the school's followers who pack the Henderson Center. But it was not to be.

The Marshall coaching staff showed little interest in Lewis, and he expected to enroll at a non-Division I school, possibly nearby University of Charleston. However, one spring afternoon, Lewis' high school coach said Cottrell had watched him on film and would be coming to Hurricane to meet with him.

"I was really surprised, but coach Cottrell watched me play (in a pickup game) and we talked for a while, and he offered me a scholarship right then," he said. "And the very next day, my parents and I came down (to Cullowhee) and I signed. Looking back on the situation, I may have rushed my decision to come here a little bit, but I don't regret it."

Mead is sports editor of the Asheville (North Carolina) Citizen.
