Schultz urges delegates to continue reform efforts

By Jack L. Copeland
Assistant Editor
The NCAA News

As delegates to the 85th annual Convention prepared to consider several proposals intended to help usher in a "new model for intercollegiate athletics," NCAA Executive Director Richard D. Schultz used his annual "State of the Association" address at the Nashville gathering to urge the writing of a "second chapter" of reform.

Schultz, speaking during the Convention's opening session January 7, said he was pleased that many of the reform issues he raised a year ago are being considered as legislation this year.

But even as those proposals awaited action in Nashville, Schultz asked the delegates who were registered at the Convention as of the end of the day January 7 to look ahead to next year. He proposed further reform of the Association's legislative process, leading eventually to rules deregulation; a review of the enforcement process, and greater institutional financial control of athletics programs.

"During the past year, much has been said and written about reform in intercollegiate athletics," Schultz said. "We are addressing a serious agenda of reform proposals at this Convention, but reform is more than these issues; it is multifaceted and complex."

"In addition to what we will be considering this week, it includes the legislative process, the interpretation and administration of rules, the role of the 'corporate' NCAA, the resolution of a deepening conflict between the Association and some of its members over the application of the current rules in the enforcement and infractions process, proper financing of athletics departments, and a need to convincingly emphasize who's in charge, and that our

No. 1 priority is the integrity of our programs, and the health, welfare, safety and education of the student-athlete."

Legislative reform

Calling the new legislative calendar a first step toward reform of the legislative process, Schultz urged the Association to "consider voting on policy and intent first at our annual Conventions, then delegate the writing of the rules details to others, with input from the affected segments of the membership." In the process described by Schultz, the group that writes the rule then would bring it back to the next Convention for final approval.

Schultz also asked the Association to become serious about rules deregulation.

"We have talked a lot about this in the past, but we really have not been serious or taken the proper steps to bring this about," he said. To begin the process, Schultz hopes to convene a gathering of coaches representing all Division I sports this spring in Kansas City "to see if we can get agreement from coaches to reduce and simplify the recruiting rules."

At that meeting, the coaches will be asked to help eliminate "discriminatory and unneeded rules" and recommend to the Council a "concise set of rules that are easy to understand and can easily be followed," but also to agree to automatic penalties for violations of those simplified rules. "If we can simplify the recruiting rules, we should be able to use the same method to simplify the rest of our rule book," Schultz said.

Schultz also asked for legislation designed to give the Council and the national office staff more flexibility in dealing with "valid exceptions" to rules.

Enforcement review

Turning to enforcement and infractions issues, the executive director reported that he hopes to begin a review of the enforcement process this year, although he emphasized that effort does not signal any special concerns he has about the process. "The purposes of the review are to make sure that we are doing things in the most effective way, that due process can be guaranteed and that penalties are consistent, and to determine if penalties should be tougher or more moderate, to reduce the time needed to complete the investigation and to project a more positive image regarding the enforcement process."

Schultz noted that the Council has agreed to appoint a special committee to review those questions and said he has suggested that its membership should include representatives of member institutions who have been involved in enforcement proceedings and individuals from outside the membership who can provide "special expertise."

The continuing reform movement also must address the financing of athletics programs, Schultz told the Convention.

"Athletics departments should be funded like any other university department or auxiliary enterprise," he said. Budgets should be developed and administered in athletics as they are in any other area of the university. "Only then can athletics

Topic of forum is NCAA-related women's issues

Patricia W. Wall

In a discussion touching on subjects ranging from the problem of gender-based equality in intercollegiate athletics to the growing array of Association programs and research promoting the place of women in athletics, members of the NCAA Committee on Women's Athletics discussed their work during an open forum January 7 in Nashville.

The purpose of the forum was to report on the committee's activities since it was created in 1988 and to ask delegates to the 85th annual NCAA Convention to suggest other areas of interest, said Phyllis L. Howlett of the Big Ten Conference, who chairs the committee.

Howlett was joined by three other committee members as panelists at the forum — Jim Livengood, athletics director at Washington State University, who discussed gender equality; Patricia W. Wall, associate commissioner of the Southeastern Conference, who reported on NCAA scholarship, internship and vita-bank programs for women, and Joan C. Cronan of the University of Tennessee, Knoxville, who described a study of women in intercollegiate athletics that will be published this spring.

Gender equity

Livengood described how his school added two women's sports, and thus increased opportunities for women to participate in intercollegiate athletics, as the result of a 1987 Washington Supreme Court decision requiring state institutions to maintain a ratio of male to female student-athletes that "mirrors" the ratio in the general student population. As a result, the school offers more women's than men's sports.

In order for other schools nationally to achieve gender equity, Livengood believes, fundamental changes in philosophy may be needed.

"We will never have any change until we recognize that there just might need to be, might have to be, more programs or opportunities on the women's side than the men's side. That becomes not so much a money issue, in my opinion, as a philosophical issue."

Following Livengood's remarks, Howlett said the Committee on Women's Athletics recently has begun to study Title IX and its application to NCAA legislation.

What women see as barriers to careers in athletics is subject of NCAA study

Promoting careers

Wall reported that the committee is pleased with the progress made in developing the Association's programs to award postgraduate scholarships to women seeking careers in athletics administration and provide internships in the national office, but she said the vita bank designed to provide employers with female candidates for job openings has been only "marginally successful" to date.

One problem with the vita bank has been that some women whose names have been provided to potential employers have failed to follow up on those referrals. In addition, while two-thirds of the women listed in the vita bank prefer to be considered for administrative positions over coaching jobs, only about a third of employers who contact the vita bank are seeking administrators.

"We need to find ways in which to bring together those who are hiring and those who wish to be hired, to make the balance a little bit better," Wall said.

Barriers to women

Cronan described the committee's involvement in a study of women student-athletes, administrators, coaches and game officials that will be published by the Association this spring. The study's purpose was to investigate barriers to careers in athletics that are perceived by

College organization pays tribute to Weller

Kenneth J. Weller, president emeritus of Central College (Iowa), received the Award For Outstanding Service from the Council of Independent Colleges at its annual banquet January 5 in Phoenix.

Weller, who retired in August after 21 years as Central's president, was honored for his contributions to independent higher education, especially for his work within the NCAA on Division III athletics. Weller wrote the Division III statement of philosophy, which formed the basis for a nonscholarship level of athletics that emphasized "participant concerns above spectator concerns." He was a member of the NCAA Presidents' Commission, chair of the board of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities, and past president of both the Iowa College Foundation and Iowa Association of Independent Colleges and Universities.

A former economics professor at Hope College, Weller came to Central in 1969. He led a silent procession of students to the town square in Pella after the slaying of four Kent State University students by National Guard troops in May 1970. Weller's letter to Iowa Gov. Robert Ray, urging colleges to avoid additional polarization with students, was used in testimony before a Congressional committee on campus unrest in the wake of the Kent State shootings.

Weller led Central to unprecedented enrollment levels. Six new academic buildings were constructed during his tenure and endowment grew from less than $1 million to more than $16 million. Under Weller, Central expanded its international studies program to include campuses in London, England; Carmarthen, Wales; Leiden, the Netherlands; Paris, France; Vienna, Austria; Granada, Spain; Hangzhou, China; and Merida, Yucatan, Mexico.

In addition to Weller, the CIC honored actor-entertainer Bill Cosby and his wife, Camille, for their philanthropic efforts in higher education. The Cosbys last year donated $20 million to Spelman College.

Other CIC award winners are Christopher F. Edley, president of the United Negro College Fund; The Lilly Endowment, Inc., for its strong support of higher education; Ameritech Foundation, for corporate philanthropy; and Time Warner, Inc., also for corporate philanthropy.

Spring compliance seminars planned

Three regional rules-compliance seminars are being organized for next spring by the Association's compliance services and legislative services departments.

Seminars will be conducted May 1-3 in Dallas, Texas; May 8-10 in San Francisco, California; and May 22-24 in Washington, D.C. Each seminar will begin with an afternoon session Wednesday and conclude around noon Friday.

The primary objective of the seminars is to provide information regarding key interpretations and legislation adopted at the 1991 Convention, said Kevin C. Lennon, director of compliance services. "We also plan to emphasize and discuss the concept of central coordination of institutional compliance efforts."

Each seminar will be intended primarily for member institutions' compliance coordinators, Lennon said. But inasmuch as the responsibility to coordinate compliance efforts is met by different means from campus to campus, each session will be open to any two administrators from a member institution, as well as the director of athletics and faculty athletics representative.

Seminar attendees will be provided a copy of the 1991 NCAA Guide to Rules Compliance, which will include information regarding the principles of institutional control, the role of the faculty athletics representative, and implementation of a compliance program.

Rules-education materials, a comprehensive compliance calendar and an enhanced test-score validation program also will be included in the guide, as will a list of other available compliance aids.

Carol Ann Powell, NCAA legislative assistant, said the seminars are not the only vehicles being developed to provide compliance information. "We also are planning presentations for campus administrators in the offices of financial aid, registration and admissions at regional and national meetings of their respective professional organizations," she said.

Similar presentations will be made to athletics recruiting coordinators and coaches at meetings of their associations.

Although large majorities of the women said they would again become involved in their current positions in athletics if they had "to do it again," many also recognized drawbacks to their careers. For example, most administrators said they believe they are discriminated against in their fields and that they are victimized by harmful stereotypes of women in athletics; most coaches complained about inadequate salaries for the time they commit to their jobs, lack of time for family life and travel demands, and game officials said more needs to be done to attract women into their field.

Cronan said the study gives women in intercollegiate athletics valuable information that they never have had before. "A lot of us have an opportunity to get out and fight some battles for women, and this study gives us some facts and figures to work with."

In addition to taking several questions from the audience, the committee also offered information on the Association's recently announced joint venture with Sara

Lee Corporation to promote women's athletics.

"This was not perceived in the beginning as a donation of money to an athletics program or anything of that nature," said Howlett of the multimillion-dollar program. "What it's designed to do is provide a means by which you can enhance your programs. It's extremely well-conceived, it is being very thoughtfully put together, and I think you're going to be very, very pleased when you finally have it in your hands, which is going to be very soon," she told the forum audience.

Government to retry Walters, Bloom

The government has decided to retry two sports agents accused of using cash and threats of violence to recruit college athletes as clients, the Associated Press reported.

Agents Norby Walters and Lloyd Bloom were found guilty in 1989 after a five-week jury trial, but the 7th Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals last September reversed their convictions.

Walters and Bloom originally were convicted of racketeering conspiracy and mail fraud.

One of Bloom's attorneys, Steve Molo, said he was ready for trial.

"We expect to win," Molo said.

Elden said no date had been set for the new trials.

Walters and Bloom were originally accused of persuading college athletes to sign on as clients in violation of NCAA eligibility rules.

The athletes concealed those agreements from their schools in return for thousands of dollars from Walters and Bloom, the government charged.

At their first trial, prosecutors alleged that the agents had used intimidation by a reputed New York mobster to coerce the athletes to sign agreements giving the agents the right to represent them in contract negotiations with professional teams.

Questions/Answers

Readers are invited to submit questions to this column. Please direct any inquiries to The NCAA News at the NCAA national office.

Q What are the terms of office for NCAA officers?

A As detailed in NCAA Bylaw 4.4, all officers of the Association shall serve a term of two years or until their successor(s) are elected. The president and the secretary-treasurer shall serve concurrently. The terms of not more than two division vice-presidents shall expire in a given year. An officer shall not be eligible for immediate reelection to his or her position.

1991 Column No. 2

NCAA Bylaw 15.2.1.4—fees and related expenses for prospects

Member institutions should note that it is not permissible to waive, pay in advance or guarantee payment of the following expenses for a prospective student-athlete, unless such benefits generally conform to institutional policy as it applies to other prospective student grantees: (1) the institution's processing fee required prior to the admissions offices evaluation of the prospect's application; (2) the orientation/counseling test fee required of all incoming freshmen; (3) the preadmission/academic testing fee; (4) advance tuition payment or room deposit; (5) damage deposits for dormitory rooms; (6) ROTC deposits for military equipment; or (7) any other preenrollment fees required of prospective student grantees. Once the prospect enrolls and is awarded financial aid covering institutional fees, it is permissible for the institution to refund any of the fees paid by the prospective student-athlete in Items 1 through 4 as part of the institution's regular fees.

NCAA Bylaw 16.12.1.4—occasional family home meal

In accordance with Bylaw 16.12.2.7, a member institution may not permit individuals outside of the institution to serve as sponsors or families for student-athletes who are enrolled in the institution, unless such a sponsorship program exists to provide the same benefits and support services to all students at the institution. In addition, per Bylaw 16.12.1.4, it is permissible for a student-athlete to receive an occasional family home meal from an institutional staff member or a representative of the institution's athletics interests.

During its December 13, 1990, conference, the NCAA Interpretations Committee reviewed the provisions of Bylaw 16.12.1.4 and determined the following: (1) it would be permissible for an institutional staff member or a representative of the institution's athletics interests (booster) to provide an occasional family home meal to the entire team in a sport; (2) a preseason team meal (e.g., barbecue) may be considered an infrequent and special occasion, and (3) an institutional staff member or a representative of the institution's athletics interests would not be precluded from providing a catered meal on a special occasion. The committee noted, however, that a meal permitted under this regulation must occur at the home of the institutional staff member or the representative of the institution's athletics interests (as opposed to a restaurant) and the member institution (or a representative of its athletics interests) may not provide transportation to a student-athlete to attend the meal. The committee did not attempt to quantify the terms infrequent and special occasion, but urged member institutions to utilize common sense in applying these standards.

NCAA Bylaw 13.16—precollege expenses

Member institutions should note that an institution or a representative of its athletics interests may not offer, provide or arrange financial assistance, directly or indirectly, to pay (in whole or in part) the cost of the prospect's educational expenses for any other period prior to his or her enrollment or so the prospect can obtain a postgraduate education. Such a restriction is applicable to all prospects, including those who have signed a National Letter of Intent or an institutional offer of admission or written tender of financial assistance.

During its September 27, 1990, conference, the Interpretations Committee reviewed the provisions of Bylaw 13.16.1 and confirmed that it would not be permissible for an institution to provide funding, directly or through paid advertisements, to benefit a high school athletics program. The committee determined that a representative of an institution's athletics interests may provide funding to benefit a high school athletics program located in the community in which the athletics representative resides, provided: (1) the representative acts independently of the member institution; (2) the funds are distributed through channels established by the community, and (3) the funds are not earmarked directly for a specific prospective student-athlete.

In addition, during its December 13, 1990, conference, the Interpretations Committee determined that a member institution may not sponsor a table at a banquet in conjunction with an event (e.g., high school athletics banquet) that will directly or indirectly benefit prospective student-athletes. The committee noted that subject to applicable NCAA recruiting regulations, it would be permissible for a member institution's athletics department staff member to individually purchase a ticket and attend such a banquet.

In a related matter, the Interpretations Committee has confirmed that the provisions prohibiting precollege expenses to prospective student-athletes would prohibit high school groups (e.g., band members, cheerleaders, athletics teams) from participating in a season-ticket sales program for a member institution, even when the opportunity to participate is available to any group in the community and all groups participating receive the same sales commission.

hold its proper place in higher education," he said, prompting applause from the gathering.

Fine-tuning

Although Schultz emphasized future reforms in his address, he urged delegates not to overlook the importance of this year's Convention in moving toward major change in college athletics.

Specifically addressing proposed limitations on playing and practice seasons but referring to the entire package of reform proposals, Schultz urged the Convention to adopt the measures and then "fine-tune" as needed, rather than delay or defeat them.

He also warned that the general public's perception of college athletics is not improving and that there is significant public support for Federal intervention in NCAA affairs.

"It is now time for all of us to refocus, and guarantee by our actions effective control of our intercollegiate programs," Schultz said.

"The proper place of intercollegiate athletics within higher education is the issue at this Convention, not what may or may not be desired by a particular sport, a particular institution, or by any specialized or elite group of individuals. The challenge is obvious. Are we going to control our own destiny or be controlled by others?"

Text of Schultz' Convention speech

Editor's note: The following is the prepared text of Executive Director Richard D. Schultz's State of the Association address to the 85th annual NCAA Convention in Nashville Monday, January 7.

Mr. President, delegates to the 1991 Convention. Welcome to Nashville and what should be an interesting and challenging Convention.

First, I want to call to your attention several items that appeared in The NCAA News. I want to be sure that everyone is aware of the program now available at the Betty Ford Center. The Betty Ford Center in Palm Springs, California, was developed for people suffering from substance abuse and alcoholism. We have developed a program where

Schultz empowered to call enforcement-process study

The NCAA Council has authorized Executive Director Richard D. Schultz to launch a study of the NCAA enforcement process in 1991.

Acting in its pre-Convention meeting January 5-6 in Nashville, the Council approved Schultz's request for that authorization and directed the Administrative Committee to appoint such a special committee.

Schultz emphasized that the study represents an ongoing attempt to refine and improve all NCAA procedures and does not reflect unhappiness with the current procedures. He referred to the study in his "State of the Association" address January 7 in Nashville (see story on page 1).

The Council also committed itself to a review of the major legislative proposals in the "reform agenda" for the Nashville Convention.

"There will be a review of all legislation passed in the reform agenda, and there will be fine-tuning of that legislation as needed," Schultz said. It is likely that the review assignment will fall to one or more

Only a test

Harold Godwin, faculty athletics representative at the University of Idaho, tested his school's electronic-voting box January 7 during registration for the 1991 NCAA Convention at Nashville's Opryland Hotel. individuals from NCAA institutions, will be invited to spend three days in a special executive training program at the center. We have had two of our staff participate in that program and they came away with a completely different perspective of rehabilitation and the identification of addiction. This program will provide special assistance to each member institution in establishing and understanding the problems surrounding drug and alcohol abuse and some of the solutions to successful rehabilitation. This program will be carried out without any expense to the individual institution or to the NCAA, and is being funded through the courtesy of ABC Sports and American Airlines. Frank Uryasz from our sports sciences staff will be coordinating this program and has already been in contact with some of your schools, as this program will be starting this month.

We also want to call your attention to the announcement regarding disability insurance for elite athletes. This is available to football and basketball players only who have the potential to be drafted in the first round by the NBA or the first and second rounds by the National Football League. Any of your athletes who have the potential to fall into those categories and is accepted by the underwriting company will have the availability of an automatic loan from the NCAA's lead bank in Kansas City at a favorable interest rate. These loans will not require a cosigner or any other type of security other than the fact that the underwriter has judged that this player will fall into one of the two draft categories. This insurance has been available for some time, but receiving the loans by the individual athletes has been very difficult. This new program meets NCAA guidelines and will now allow every athlete who qualifies to actually receive the insurance. As you can recall, this was approved several years ago by the Association as one means of countering some of the influence of the unscrupulous agents.

I believe you are all aware that catastrophic medical insurance will be available to all member schools at no cost beginning August 1, 1991. Keep this in mind as you plan your budgets for the upcoming year. We have had a complete review of the NCAA catastrophic medical insurance plan, not only by our staff and the underwriters, but by a select group of risk managers from your institutions. The input from these risk managers has been exceptionally valuable. We are confident that with this input, the new catastrophic medical plan will provide excellent coverage.

One final note: We all have been made aware of problems that can be created if there is not equal access to locker rooms for reporters. The NCAA has had a long-standing policy at championship events to allow reporters of both sexes in locker rooms 10 minutes after a championship contest is completed. We have had men in women's locker rooms and women in men's locker rooms without any serious problems. Both myself and our communications staff urge you to reevaluate the access rules that you have at your institution, and we encourage you to adopt the ones that we use at our championships. It is my understanding that there are still access problems at many institutions that have the potential of creating a substantial amount of negative publicity.

During this past year, much has been said and written about reform in intercollegiate athletics. We are addressing a serious agenda of reform proposals at this Convention, but reform is more than these issues; it is multifaceted and complex. In addition to what we will be considering this week, it includes the legislative process, the interpretation and administration of rules, the role of the "corporate" NCAA, the resolution of a deepening conflict between the Association and some of its members over the application of the current rules in the enforcement and infractions process, proper financing of athletics departments, and a need to convincingly emphasize who's in charge, and that our No. 1 priority is the integrity of our programs, and the health, welfare, safety and education of the student-athlete.

Last year, I proposed a new model for intercollegiate athletics, and I am pleased that many of the proposed items have been submitted as legislation for this Convention. Today, I would like to add a second chapter to that model and address some of the issues previously mentioned.

We need to continue to reform our legislative process. We have taken the first step in legislative reform by adopting a new calendar. This calendar needs some fine-tuning, but overall can be very effective in expediting the business of the Association. Now, and I think especially after we go through this Convention that most of you will agree, we need to consider voting on policy and intent first, at our annual Conventions, then delegate the writing of the rules details to others with input from the affected segments of the membership. The legislative policy group would then bring final legislation back at the following Convention for approval. With this process in place, there would have to be exceptions for both the Presidents Commission and the Council to submit specific legislation under emergency or special authority. The final step would be reduction and further rules deregulation. To reduce and simplify the rules, we have to be serious about deregulation. We have talked a lot about this in the past, but we really have not been serious or taken the proper steps to bring this about. To help accomplish this, we are in the process of establishing a meeting in Kansas City next spring with representative coaches from all Division I sports. The purpose of this meeting is a very simple one: to see if we can get agreement from coaches to reduce and simplify the recruiting rules. To eliminate those that are discriminatory and unneeded and end up with a very concise set of rules that are easy to understand and can easily be followed. At the same time, we want coaches to also agree on automatic penalties if they violate this simple set of rules. If we can be successful with this meeting for simplifying recruiting rules, we then can ask the Council to submit these changes to the 1992 Convention. If we can simplify the recruiting rules, we should be able to use the same method to simplify the rest of our rule book.

At the same time, we need to draft legislation that will provide our staff, as well as the Council, with more flexibility to deal with valid exceptions. For too many years, there has been a fear of making a common-sense decision or exception to an existing rule because of the concern that if we make one exception, many more will follow. We have to have the courage and trust to put flexibility rules in place and then we have to have the wisdom to use that flexibility properly. I will be asking the Council at its post-Convention meeting to establish a subcommittee to deal specifically with new legislative reform and further rules deregulation and simplification. The NCAA should

Fans can subvert the purpose of sports competition

By Sue Wise

I have just returned from a women's basketball game. As I made the long drive home, my eyes welled with tears. Certainly not a typical response to a basketball game, yet this is the third time this season I have left a game early with a knot in my stomach that turned to tears as I drove home.

I'm not talking about the agonies of defeat here; in fact, I was not a coach or a participant in any of these situations. I was an observer, a fan...and I was there to support and encourage the participating teams.

I love basketball. I love competition. It breeds sportsmanship among players and coaches. It teaches discipline. It fosters a sense of servant-giving and grateful receiving—we call it teamwork. Best of all, it teaches us to find the positive amidst despair, to be encouragers in the purest sense of the word. It teaches us to be a part of the solution, not a part of the problem.

The players understand this. Yes, there are exceptions, but for the most part, they want to be a positive part of what sport has to offer.

It is the fans, parents included, who have become a part of the problem. They have lost the perspective and purpose of competition. It is the fans who have caused a knot in my stomach and tears in my eyes. Specifically, my concern involves the incessant berating and taunting of the officials. Why do we feel this is necessary? What are we trying to accomplish? Most importantly, what message are we giving our kids?

I think back on the game I witnessed this evening. The away team was down by four points with seven minutes to go. They were not shooting well; they were not playing well. These kids needed support from their fans, their parents. But it didn't come. The fans were too focused on the officials who were "obviously calling the game in favor of the home team." You've heard the barrage of comments.

But what was saddest to me was the look in these young ladies' faces as a timeout was called. They moved toward the bench with hesitation wondering if they could do it...if they could really come together and pull out a victory. They needed affirmation. They needed encouragement. Each young lady looked to the stands behind the bench, catching a glimpse of her parents—longing for that affirmative nod and a clenched fist saying "You can do it. I believe in you." Instead of that glimmer of hope, I'm afraid these ladies were filled with despair and frustration as each parent used that precious moment to further berate the officials.

It wasn't very long before each player on this team began focusing not on the solution of winning the game, but on the perceived problem of the officiating. They stepped back on the floor feeling helpless and defeated instead of hopeful and encouraged. A deficit of four points soon grew to eight, 10, 12...the game was over.

Why? Why do fans in general and parents in particular feel it is so important to vent their frustrations and hold themselves as knowing more than those guys in the black-and-white stripes? Wouldn't you think that each official enters the game with the desire to give a top-notch performance? Do you not think that he is doing his very best? Isn't that what we ask of our sons and daughters? If we can't accept an official's best, are we also unaccepting of our child's best effort? Are we not saying that winning takes priority over all else?

I wanted to say to the parents at this game, "Look, your daughter needs encouragement from you more than she needs you to yell at the officials. Are you more worried about her or the outcome of the game? She's watching you, whether you realize it or not, and she's getting a message loud and clear. What message are you giving?"

Sure, I know many great fans and supportive parents. To you, I say "Thank you" with all my heart. But, as fans of sports competition, let us all take a deeper look at the message we're bringing to our athletes and to the young kids who surround us in the cheering section.

The responsibility lies in all of us—players, coaches, parents, and fans. Collectively, we need to be a positive part of the solution that sport can offer our children. We need to hold each other accountable to our message—you to me, I to you...and we to the young men and women whose lives we touch.

Court's ruling on due process belies NCAA's procedure

Richard D. Schultz, executive director
NCAA

"In some respects, I've always felt the (U.S.) Supreme Court decision, which basically made a simple statement that the NCAA didn't have to provide due process (in its rules infractions investigations), has hurt the NCAA more than it's helped it, because the perception is that there isn't any due process in the NCAA.

"In fact, there's a lot of due process, especially if you keep in mind this is a private association, that they're administrative hearings and not judicial hearings. And if you compare them to administrative hearings that take place for most private associations, I think you'll find the NCAA provides as much and, in most cases, more due process."

U.S. Air Force Academy

The Columbus Dispatch

"I will admit, I have had a lot of opportunities (for other coaching jobs). But, doggone it, I'm so committed to what this place is all about.

"We're training the future leadership of our country's Air Force. And I'm just naive enough to believe the best leadership training being done at the Air Force Academy is being done on the football practice field.

"So I have to admit something to you, and it might sound a little egotistical, but I feel like I'm doing something real important here."

John Underwood, author
The New York Times

"...The bowls are still the best thing going for football. They are unique to it, and more important than deciding one single (and debatable) national champion and a bunch of also-rans, they provide 19 teams with a chance to finish their seasons as winners.

"But more than anything else, bowl games are (or deserve to be) just rewards for the players themselves—about the only rewards they are allowed any more. For the last 25 years, virtually every piece of NCAA legislation aimed at cost-cutting can be translated into 'what'll we take from the players this time?' Laundry money, letter sweaters, fewer scholarships; less and less of everything.

"Bowls give something back. At bowl games, players are fawned over and feted. They go to formal balls and fancy luncheons. They party on cruise ships, visit Disneyland, go fishing, play golf, roam the Latin Quarter, lie on the beach.

"By contrast, in any play-off format, teams are obliged to fly in on Friday, go to bed early, play their game on Saturday and fly back out. In and out, strictly business.

"Many people who dabble in play-off formulae still try to insinuate the major bowls—Rose, Orange, Sugar, Cotton—into their schemes. It will never happen. The major bowls are 'festivals,' melding parades and parties and ancillary events around the central jewel of the game. They are put on not for profit but as a civic enterprise. The major bowls would fold their tents if a play-off were instituted. And college football would be the worse for it."

Dick Vitale, college basketball commentator
Basketball Weekly

"I think Dick Schultz was the greatest thing to happen to the NCAA because he has the mentality of a coach.

"He was a coach, he's been on the firing line; he knows what coaches go through, so he has a great feeling for a coach. And I think he has an excellent support staff as well.

"I think you're going to see things change drastically. I think you're going to see more of the human element. You're going to see the rule book eventually be a little bit more realistic—having some feeling out there for the kids involved."

Opinions

Bob Kravitz, columnist
Rocky Mountain News

"The pro game has lost me, for the most part.

"It has become too corporate, too big, too tight-lipped, too retentive. Everybody is afraid to say anything, and when they do, like Jerry Glanville, they run the risk of being fined and censured by the commissioner. This is, after all, the league that gave us the 'excessive demonstrative' rule, striking a blow for dullards everywhere.

"Sometimes, you just find yourself wanting to tell these people, 'Don't have a cow, man. This isn't rocket science or the Persian Gulf crisis. What say we let our hair down and have some fun, huh?'"

"That's college football. Mindless, unadulterated fun. Very pure, very simple. Not without problems, to be sure. There is still too much greed, too much cheating, too many shortcuts. But when I go to a college football game these days, I get a visceral thrill. When I go to an NFL game, I get a chill, as if I'm walking into a job interview or a boardroom full of judgemental business clones."

James E. Delany, commissioner
Big Ten Conference
Chicago Tribune

"In an era when we are trying to strengthen our ability to reform, the presidents of our conferences (Big Ten and Pacific-10) feel it would be wrong to add more games, more hype, more pressure and more money to the entire process (in having a Division I-A play-off).

"We have the Rose Bowl, and it has been very good to us. We just don't see the need for a college football play-off."

George King, director of athletics
Purdue University
The New York Times

"Although there are top-notch women administrators, I'm not sure that coaches making a half-million dollars are ready to let a woman on the inside.

"Since it (football) and basketball are the big-money bell-ringers, usually the AD is a former football or basketball coach. In my mind, a male minority person would have a better shot than a woman, since he has played and has an idea of what it's all about.

"(With a family) coaching and travel hours are so long, it may not be as easy for a woman to do the job as a man."

Chris Zorich, varsity football player
University of Notre Dame
Houston Chronicle

"I don't think they should have them (play-offs in Division I-A). The season is already long enough, and all you're doing now is adding more games.

"And that means you do away with the bowls. The bowls give players an opportunity to visit some place they've never been before."

Jim McKay, sportscaster
ABC-TV
Los Angeles Times

"Athletes are treated as something special from childhood. They think they are immune to the laws that govern ordinary people. And, to be sure, they are encouraged to think so.

"We tell the story (in a television documentary) of the coach who finds cocaine in the high school kid's locker room but does nothing about it because the kid's a star, and of the coaches who call the rehab center and say, 'When can we get Butch back? We need him.'"

"You know, the ordinary addict is warned not to go back to the same playgrounds, the same playmates or environment that got him into trouble in the first place. But the athlete has to go right back to the same locker room, the same stresses.

"There's a trap, in which kids see apparently successful recoveries and say, 'Oh, I see how this works. You do coke and then when they catch you, you go away for 28 days, rehab, and then come back where you left off none the worse.'"

"Well, it doesn't work that way. The chances are you won't do as well. And the recovery rate is not 100 percent—more like 50 percent; some say as low as 10 percent."

Unbeaten Division I teams likely a thing of the past

By James M. Van Valkenburg
NCAA Director of Statistics

It has been 15 years since a Division I team went unbeaten throughout an entire season. Bob Knight's 1976 Indiana team did it, but some believe it may never happen again.

This season's tough conference races are just beginning, and just two Division I teams are unbeaten through January 8. They are 9-0 Nevada-Las Vegas, the defending national champion from the Big West Conference, and 12-0 Ohio State of the Big Ten Conference.

It indeed may be next to impossible to sweep the rugged road games in those conferences, then sweep six games in the NCAA tournament.

Indiana swept five games in the 32-team 1976 NCAA tournament to finish 32-0. Since then, only two Division I teams were unbeaten in regular season—Indiana State and Alcorn State, both in 1979. Both lost in the NCAA tournament, Indiana State with Larry Bird not until the title game to Michigan State and Earvin "Magic" Johnson in the most-watched TV game in college basketball history.

72-point game

Thanks to the five-year-old three-point rule, a new single-game individual scoring record vs. a Division I opponent has been established.

It is 72 points by Kevin Bradshaw of U.S. International in a 186-140 loss to Loyola Marymount December 5.

Louisiana State's Pete Maravich had the old record of 69 vs. Auburn in 1969, when all field goals were two-pointers.

Bradshaw, a 26-year-old senior, made seven three-pointers (in 22 attempts; from all ranges he was 23-for-59 from the field). Without the three-point rule, Bradshaw would have 65 points.

Loyola Marymount's 186 points also is a Division I record, breaking its 181 against the same opponent last season.

Quotes of the week

It did not take long for the Radford Highlanders to surpass their victory total of seven for all of last season (7-22). They won their first eight games—best start since the first men's team was organized 16 years ago and the longest win streak since Radford joined Division I six seasons ago. The streak included the school's 250th all-time victory.

The school and Big South Conference scoring records already have been broken by sophomore guard Doug Day with a 43-point game that included 11-for-17 three-point shooting vs. Central Connecticut State. Said coach Oliver Purnell: "Doug was like a shark in a feeding frenzy." Added Day: "It was the kind of night a shooter dreams of having—a night when the basket looks as big as an ocean."

Another standout is senior center Ron Shelburne. His hometown? Well, the nearest large town is Pulaski, Virginia, and the nearest post office is at Hiwassee, but Shelburne says that, really, he is from the small community of Snowville. "It's not a big place. You've got the Simpkins on one end, the Shelburnes on the other end and some Quesenberrys in between. We don't have any stoplights or sidewalks and there's not exactly a lot of tourists passing through, but it's there and that's where I live." (Rick Rogers, Radford SID)

Turnovers are up sharply at New Orleans and coach Tim Floyd is trying to deal with it as best he can. "I'm taking players out of the game when they commit turnovers," the coach said. "There was a caller on my radio show who wondered if that was a little harsh. He thought the players might get tense and tight when they're back in the game. I told the caller he ought to think about the ol' coach on the sideline. He's already tense and tight because of the turnovers." (Ed Cassiere, New Orleans SID)

Taking a page from the famous 12th-man football tradition at Texas A&M, Kermit Davis, new head coach in basketball, has initiated the "Sixth Man," a walk-on player who will start each home game and play until the other team scores. Meanwhile, the student body remains standing to illustrate the team's "stand for defense." Six players are on the sixth-man roster, selected from 85 who attended two tryout sessions.

The first starter, 6-3 Brian Linder,

Ervin Johnson of New Orleans is one of the top rebounders in Division I two seconds left to beat Bentley, 71-70. Coach Keith Dickson then called a timeout to set up defensive strategy and told Smith to miss his second free throw on purpose. Said Dickson: "He (Smith) went, 'Whew,' when I told him he would have to miss the second one." Said Smith: "That was easy for me to do." (Kris Russell, St. Anselm SID)

Two teammates score 91

La Salle's Randy Wood (46 points) and teammate Doug Overton (45), a pair of guards, combined for a Division I two-teammates record of 91 points in a 133-118 victory at Loyola Marymount on New Year's Eve. That broke the 90 by two teams—Notre Dame's Austin Carr (50) and Collis Jones (40) vs. Butler in 1970 and Southern Mississippi's Bimbo Coles (51) and Wally Lancaster (39) vs. Virginia

Union.

Pepeliaev is one of six foreign athletes in the Sun Belt Conference. The best known is South Florida's Radenko Dobras, from Yugoslavia, who was voted most valuable player in last year's Sun Belt Conference tournament.

The others are South Alabama's pair of Michael Hurring (New Zealand) and Neil Smith (Virgin Islands), Old Dominion's Cyril Cox (Grenada), and Pepeliaev's teammate, Yann Bonato (France). (Tracey Judd, Sun Belt SID)

Four flags

The flags of four nations fly proudly in Reilly Center at St. Bonaventure—Sweden, Holland, Canada and the United States. The first two were purchased recently after the addition of freshman forwards Tobias Hauff of Stockholm, Sweden, and Pieter Hemelaer of Breda, Holland. The Bonnies have had a number of Canadians on the roster over the years. (Jim Engelhardt, St. Bonaventure SID)

Syria, Israel join

Syria and Israel do not enjoy warm diplomatic relations, but teammates Mohammad Dagman of Irtakia, Syria, and Jon Ilaklay of Urim, Israel, have no problem playing together on the Hunter team in New York City. (Steve Kahn, Hunter assistant SID)

Real world is tough

It was bad enough playing 12 of its first 13 games on the road, but Nicholls State also lost point guard Ray Washington, who was activated by his Louisiana National Guard unit for duty in the Middle East (the team wore gray sweatbands with his number 10 against New Orleans). Earlier, the football team lost tailback Bennett Williams for the same reason. (Ron Mears, Nicholls State SID)

Two-a-days

The Alfred women's team played two games in one day—can any NCAA team match that? John Jay College withdrew from the Alfred tournament when six of its eight players broke a team rule the night before it began. Tournament directors then decided to have a three-team round-robin tourney in two days. Alfred lost a 10:30 a.m. game to Wilkes, then a 6 p.m. game to Binghamton. (Patrick Gillespie, Alfred SID)

Ever hear of one team playing two games in one day and three in a 24-hour span? This improbable tale began when Bellarmine coach Joe Reibel learned that Lincoln (Missouri) inadvertently had scheduled a game in Arkansas before scheduling Bellarmine the same night.

Reibel then called several coaches in the area seeking a replacement. The only favorable response came from Wilberforce coach Don Nelson, who said his team was playing a Friday night game in Taylor's tournament, and a defeat would mean his team could play Saturday night at Bellarmine, because the third-place game at Taylor was an early-afternoon affair.

As it turned out, Wilberforce lost the Friday night game to Taylor, the 1 p.m. game to Marian, then drove the 210 miles to Louisville and lost to Bellarmine, 95-75. As Nelson's team was leaving, a Bellarmine fan joked that they might be on their way to a 2 a.m. game in Tennessee. (Mark Mulloy, Bellarmine athletics department)

Smart fast starters

Butler's Lady Bulldogs are off to a great start, both on the court and in the classroom. The team won its first nine games for the first time since the 1980-81 season, including a 91-88 upset of Vanderbilt in Nashville in which it shot 20-for-22 (91.9 percent) in the second half to overcome a 10-point halftime deficit (the Division I record is 100 percent on 17-for-17 by James Madison vs. Duke in 1982).

In the classroom, the Butler women boast a combined 3.207 grade-point average (4.000 scale) for the first semester. (Pam Schoeppner, Butler assistant SID)

A pair of 250s

Believe it or not, head coach Charlie Woollum and head junior varsity coach Tommy Thompson each recorded his 250th victory at Bucknell on the same night. Woollum's team beat Yale, 72-63, to make his record 250-100 at Bucknell. In the first game of the double-header, Thompson, a 1960 Bucknell graduate and a member of the school's hall of fame, saw his team beat Penn State-Hazleton, 92-80, to make his record 250-178 as JV coach. (Bo Smolka, Bucknell SID)

Cocaptain at sea

Most athletes hate long bus rides, but how many face long trips at sea? Tom Ramsden, Merchant Marine's senior cocaptain, was at sea aboard the Kings Pointer with the big game vs. Coast Guard coming up (every midshipman is required to sail 300 days before being allowed to graduate). Luckily, he was able to talk the ship's captain into sailing up to New London so that he could play. Unfortunately, Ramsden still had his sea legs, committing six turnovers in a loss. (Joe DiBari, Merchant Marine SID)

a freshman from College Station, Texas, had this to say after playing 22 seconds vs. Oklahoma: "If you had told me after high-school graduation that I would be starting for Texas A&M against Oklahoma, there's not a snowball's chance that I would have believed you. I would have said you were crazy. But it happened and it's a great feeling." (Colin Killian, Texas A&M assistant SID for basketball)

With his North Carolina-Charlotte team trailing Florida, 31-9, after the first seven minutes, coach Jeff Mullins called a timeout. "I told our players they didn't need a coach, they needed a shrink," Mullins said at a postgame press conference after his team rallied to win, 94-92. Junior guard and scoring leader (31 points) Brian Williams, asked about that timeout, said: "Being down by 22 is not that bad for our running style. I just told our guys to forget how young they are and let's just play." (UNCC starts three sophomores and a freshman with junior Williams.) (Mark Colone, North Carolina-Charlotte assistant athletics director for public relations)

Niagara coach Jack Armstrong, referring to his team drawing Indiana in the first round of the Indiana Classic: "For all the history buffs, our game with Indiana takes place on Pearl Harbor Day. I guess since Bob Knight is referred to as the General, we must be his version of the Arizona." (Jim Mauro, Niagara SID)

St. Anselm freshman Pat Smith, a 60 percent free-throw shooter who had missed twice earlier in the game, sank the winning free-throw with Tech in 1988.

There is no three-teammates record, but La Salle forward Jack Hurd scored 29, making it 120 points by three teammates. Can any team top that?

Ex-managers blossom

Arizona State's Michele Cherry served as team manager last season. Now, the 5-6 junior is averaging 13.3 points and nearly seven rebounds per game (while shooting 10-for-23 on three-pointers) through six games—all victories. She is a walk-on who had transferred from Oregon State. (Frank Reed, Arizona State sports information intern)

Augsburg sophomore guard Teresa Von Barga filled an important role on last season's team. She was the team manager and watched her twin sister Tammy play well for the team.

Now Teresa is competing with Tammy for the team lead in three-pointers made. Teresa played a big role in Augsburg's 66-62 comeback victory over Hamline. She entered the game with Augsburg down, 62-53, with three minutes to go. After a teammate made a three-pointer, Teresa made eight straight points, climaxed by a go-ahead layup after a steal at midcourt. Her run included a three-pointer and three free throws when fouled on a three-point shot. (Gene McGovern, Augsburg SID)

Sun Belt international

Freshman Konstantin Pepeliaev, a 7-2 Russian who scored in double figures for Virginia Commonwealth each of his first five games, is the first Soviet player to play for a U.S. college team. He is feeling more at home these days because his wife, Valerie, has arrived from the Soviet

COACHES

Football—Dick MacPherson, who spent the past 10 seasons at Syracuse, was named head coach of the National Football League New England Patriots January 7. He had a 66-46-4 record with the Orangemen, and he compiled a 45-27-1 record in seven seasons as head coach at Massachusetts. MacPherson also has served as an assistant coach with the NFL's Denver Broncos and Cleveland Browns... Austin Peay hired Roy Gregory, who spent the past two seasons as linebackers coach at South Carolina. Gregory also has coached at Mississippi State, Vanderbilt, New Mexico and Memphis State.

Football assistants—South Carolina linebackers coach Roy Gregory named head coach at Austin Peay... Bud Ratliff hired as football recruiting coordinator at Mississippi State, and Rick Christophel named wide receivers coach at the school. Ratliff has served in similar capacities at Pittsburgh and Kansas State. He spent the past season as head coach at Naples (Florida) High School. Christophel spent the past five years on Vanderbilt's staff, serving stints as assistant head coach, defensive coordinator, offensive backs coach and linebackers coach... Missouri defensive coordinator Mike Church has been released by the school. He served two seasons in the position... Terry Malone retained at Bowling Green by new head coach Gary Blackney, who also hired Scott Seeliger and Bob Babich. Malone, who has coached Bowling Green's offensive line since 1986, will continue in that position. Seeliger also will work with the offensive line. He spent the past seven seasons on Wisconsin's football staff. Babich, who has coached at Tulsa—his alma mater—and Wisconsin, will coach Bowling Green's inside linebackers.

STAFF

Sports information director—Kevin Dolan appointed at Massachusetts-Boston. A 1989 Maine graduate, Dolan has served as an intern in the Dartmouth SID office and as acting SID at Massachusetts. He succeeds Stuart Kaufman, who resigned to enter graduate school at Springfield.

Athletics trainers—Northwestern head trainer John Connolly resigned, effective January 31, to become director of physical therapy at Evanbrook Orthopedic and Sports Medicine Associates in Evanston, Illinois. Connolly had been head trainer at the school for five years. Named interim head trainer was Northwestern assistant Mike Barnish, who has been on the training staff seven years.

DEATHS

George Allen, 72, died suddenly December 31 at his Southern California home. Allen ended a five-year retirement from coaching in 1989 to take over as head coach at Long Beach State, where he guided the 1990 Forty-Niners to a 6-5 record—the school's first winning record since 1986. Allen began a long coaching career at Morningside in 1948, and he also served as head coach at Whittier before joining the professional ranks as a defensive coach with the 1958 Chicago Bears. He went on to serve as head coach of the Los Angeles Rams and Washington Redskins, and became the most successful coach in history for both NFL franchises. Allen also coached teams in the United States Football League. Away from football, he founded the National Fitness Foundation in 1952 and was named chairman of the President's Council on Physical Fitness by Ronald Reagan in 1981... Louis J. "Lou" Bonder, Atlantic 10 Conference supervisor of men's basketball officials for the past eight years, died January 1 at his Havertown, Pennsylvania, home. He was 70. A graduate of La Salle, where he played varsity football be a service organization as well as being the governing body for its members. The NCAA and its committees should be doing everything within their authority to help schools and athletes do what they want to do and what is appropriate within the rules. Unless we are willing to adjust and provide more flexibility, this will be almost impossible to accomplish.

Each July, I submit a list of goals and objectives for the upcoming year to the Executive Committee. One of the items that I presented was to conduct a thorough review of the enforcement process. I want you to keep in mind that this was in writing last July. I want a thorough review, including (a) the investigative process by the enforcement staff, (b) the function of the Committee on Infractions, including the hearing process and the method used to determine penalties if guilty, and (c) the release of information to the public regarding sanctions and press conferences at institutions announcing sanctions. The purposes of the review are to make sure that we are doing things in the most effective way; that due process can be guaranteed; that penalties are consistent; to determine if penalties should be tougher or more moderate; to reduce the time needed to complete the investigation, and to project a more positive image regarding the enforcement process. As you are all aware, the special Convention in 1985 made sweeping changes in the enforcement and infractions process. After five years, I feel it is time to review those actions. This review is not because I have any special concerns that that enforcement process is not doing its job fairly, or that the infractions committee is not just. But we all recognize that sanctions and the investigative process are like a lightning rod. They attract much negative publicity, not only to the NCAA, but to the individual universities and college athletics in general. There are no winners in the infractions process.

I have asked the Council to appoint a special subcommittee to help me review these areas. I have suggested that there should not only be Council members, but also others from the membership who have been involved in enforcement proceedings, as well as selected individuals from outside the membership who could provide special expertise. As you are all aware, you make the rules that govern the actions of the enforcement staff as well as the infractions committee. If changes are appropriate, this special committee would recommend specific legislation back to the Council that could be acted upon at the 1992 Convention. We need to strongly support the work of the enforcement staff and the infractions committee. In spite of what you may read or hear, their efforts have resulted in fewer major violations; however, if there are concerns over the procedures, this will provide the membership with the opportunity for adjustment.

An important paragraph in this second chapter on reform deals with the financing of athletics programs. To have meaningful reform, this issue must be addressed. In most cases, it is not realistic to say to an athletics director, we want a broad-based program, we want a winning program, we want equality for women, and we want it to be totally self-supporting. Athletics departments should be funded like any other university department or auxiliary enterprise. A budget should be submitted and approved, and all staff compensation should come through normal university channels. Athletics departments should develop as much revenue as possible by institutionally approved methods, and any shortfalls should be covered by the university and any profits should go to the general fund. Only then can athletics hold its proper place in higher education.

Finally, if we do agree, and let's assume that we do, that the No. 1 priority is the integrity of our pro-athletics. The proposals making up the package have had the most intensive study by the membership of any legislative effort in recent years. The Special Committee on Cost Reduction is a product of the 1989 Convention. The committee on membership structure was formed even earlier. Both committees were to have legislation by 1990, but because of the complexity of the issues, both were extended to this Convention. Both of these groups have broad membership representation. The other reform proposals are based on research presented these proposals to force schools out of Division I, but to provide reasonable minimums more consistent with the Division I philosophy.

I mentioned a year ago that you are what you are perceived to be, and the perception of college athletics by the general public has not improved during this last year. I also mentioned last year that we need to be aggressive and proactive in changing our model, because there are others less qualified waiting in the wings to do it for us. This latter statement is not an idle threat. Let me read you a quote that was recently in the Washington Post from one congressman, and I quote: "The time has come for the power in intercollegiate athletics to be taken out of the hands of the NCAA. The NCAA is an organization that answers to no one." The congressman went on to say that he can raise considerable support for Federal legislation to limit the powers of the NCAA if the organization does not act decisively toward reform of its policy at its upcoming annual Convention. There are indicators of public support for this position. A recent poll indicated that 68 percent of those responding felt Congressional action was the only solution to current problems in intercollegiate athletics.

It is natural to fear change, because we are not sure what that change will actually mean. But we should be more concerned about uncontrolled change in the future if we do not act decisively at this Convention. It is time for the NCAA membership to act on what is best for the whole of college athletics, rather than what may be desired by any of its parts. Special-interest groups, though well-meaning, are threatening the overall control and welfare of the administrative process. Arguments by each interest group are understandable; no one ever wants any type of restriction in his or her program; however, it is that type of special interest that has made it very difficult to bring about meaningful reform to college athletics.

It is now time for all of us to refocus, and guarantee by our actions effective control of our intercollegiate programs. The proper place of intercollegiate athletics within higher education is the issue at this Convention, not what may or may not be desired by a particular sport, a particular institution or by any specialized or elite group of individuals. The challenge is obvious. Are we going to control our own destiny or be controlled by others? Let's take the second small step toward a new model. The gauntlet has been thrown. Let's be sure that we respond aggressively and positively and that our actions at this Convention allow us to retain control of intercollegiate athletics within the framework of higher education and the NCAA.

News Fact File

Of 803 active member institutions in the Association in 1989-90, a total of 605 had participants in NCAA championships that year. Participation included 97.2 percent of all Division I-A members, 78.7 percent in Division I-AA, 56.6 percent in Division I-AAA, 75.1 percent in Division II and 73.1 percent in Division III, or 75.3 percent of all active members.

grams and institutions and the health, welfare, safety and education of the student-athlete, this Convention gives us an ideal opportunity to make a strong statement to that effect. In the last few months, many have referred to this as a landmark Convention, one of the most important in the 85-year history of the Association. If this is accurate, you have an opportunity to speak your mind and act on one of the most extensive reform packages in the history of the NCAA. A package that addresses, among other things, cost reduction, restructuring and time demands on student-athletes. While this package is not all inclusive, it represents an important step towards major change in college completed over two years ago for the Presidents Commission, exhaustive work by an amalgamation of conferences, and input from athletics directors, coaches, faculty and student-athletes. It is only coincidental that revenue distribution is being considered at the same time. Without a doubt, these proposals contain things that people will like and things that people will not like. It is important, however, to view these proposals as a total package. It is also very important that these proposals have strong universal support. There are numerous amendments to proposals that are very acceptable, and do a good job of fine-tuning. Amend them to strengthen and fine-tune, but not to destroy.

Some of the major concerns are the proposed limitations on practice and playing seasons, especially in individual sports. With the amendments that are proposed and supported, these are not as drastic as they might appear to be. I think it also is important, however, if this legislation is passed, to come back in 1992 and fine tune all of these proposals individually and on a sport-by-sport basis. I have discussed this with the Presidents Commission, the Council and the Collegiate Commissioners Association. They are in agreement that this should take place and be a major priority, and that a review committee should be established for each reform area, to review and correct any flaws that develop, including gender-equity issues.

We can argue about the appropriate role for the elite athlete or the preprofessional athlete in our colleges and universities. I think my position is clear on this. Our No. 1 responsibility is to educate and have good, well-balanced programs. However, it is also my opinion that we still need to be in a position to provide programs that will serve the needs of the preprofessional and elite athletes. It is because of this that I firmly believe that all of these proposals should be fine-tuned, not delayed or voted down. Cost reduction is necessary for the majority of our institutions, and the only effective means is national regulation. The proposals are reasonable and present a major first step in reducing and controlling costs. Consistent athletics philosophies and commitments to those philosophies are essential if the Association's federated membership structure is to be effective, so steps to refine and redefine that structure also should be approved. The Council has not

Colleges confront problem drinking

Boston College has an assistant dean for alcohol and drug education. Rutgers University, New Brunswick, sets aside dorm rooms for recovering student alcoholics. The University of Nevada, Las Vegas, bars students from leaving school sports events to make alcohol runs.

Increasingly, colleges are confronting problem drinking by providing education and rehabilitation programs, alternatives to the campus bar scene and stricter regulation of on-campus parties.

But some say more needs to be done.

"I think institutions have come around to recognize and are attempting to deal with the issue, but it's by no means resolved," said Bob Hockstein, spokesman for The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, which issued a report last April saying colleges were sidestepping the problems.

"The campus should be a place of discipline. You're not going to have much discipline if people are rip-roaring drunk on weekends. Laws have to be enforced where there are violations of underage drinking," he said. "If you can't have a civil campus community, how can you expect the larger society to be civil?"

Once considered a normal rite of passage, campus drinking has grown more serious as drug use has decreased. The problems have gone beyond the good-natured rowdiness of a beer-filled fraternity party.

At a fraternity party at the University of Rhode Island last October, an 18-year-old woman who acknowledged being "very drunk" was allegedly raped while several other students watched, and later was unable to identify her attacker because she said she had gone "blank."

At Hofstra University, a student broke almost every bone in his body when he fell out of a fifth-story window after drinking beer for 90 minutes as part of a fraternity pledging ritual.

And people living near some colleges have come to describe their neighborhoods as battlefields of slashed tires, public urination and smashed windows.

Scott Ashley lives in the Fenway, an area of Boston heavily populated by Northeastern University students, and is a self-described "war-torn veteran of 28 years in the neighborhood."

"After the bars close, it becomes an actual zoo. They say this is a national situation. Kids are just drinking until they drop," Ashley told Nancy Rabinowitz of the Associated Press.

At nearby Boston College, there has been a sharp increase in hospitalizations of students with blood-alcohol levels as high as 0.3 percent; the legal level of intoxication is 0.1.

A study conducted by Henry Wechsler, a professor at Harvard University's school of public health, found that use of tobacco, marijuana and cocaine on college campuses has declined, while alcohol consumption has shot up.

Of 1,669 freshman at 14 colleges in Massachusetts, about one-third of the men and one-fourth of the women drank more than once a week, Wechsler found. More than half the men and one-third the women had five drinks consecutively at least once in a two-week period.

"It's something that develops when you come on campus as a freshman to get in with the social crowd, with seniors and juniors," said Patrick Moran, 22, a history and political science major at Boston College and vice-president of the undergraduate student government.

As the number of incidents grow, administrators at colleges across the country are attempting to take the matter in hand.

Officials at Rutgers established The New Jersey Collegiate Substance Abuse Program for students, as well as an inpatient drug and alcohol program. University officials were moved to develop the program after a drunken student fell off a platform and was seriously injured at a football game.

The university also has reserved dormitory space for recovering alcoholic students.

Boston College officials recently appointed a dean to increase students' awareness of the problems of excessive drinking.

"They're young adults making their own decisions. They need to clarify what their values are," said Judy McGuire Robinson, assistant dean for alcohol and drug education.

Editor's note: The NCAA is providing staff members of Association schools access to the Betty Ford Center for special training to provide assistance in establishing programs to control alcohol and drug abuse on campuses. The program is being funded by ABC Sports and American Airlines. In addition, The NCAA Foundation, assisted by $2.5 million from Anheuser-Busch, is establishing an alcohol-education program.

Fullback goes for 'extra yardage' in The Second Mile program

Sam Gash doesn't ask what the specific problems are. "There's really no need to," he said.

Instead, the Pennsylvania State University fullback simply tries to help the children who make up The Second Mile program.

"If they want to talk, go into deep detail about a problem, that's fine," Gash said. "Otherwise, we just try to have fun and maybe make things easier for them."

The Second Mile, funded through individual, corporate and foundation contributions, was founded in 1977 by Penn State assistant football coach Jerry Sandusky. The idea, said Sandusky, who adopted five children and became a foster parent to three more, "was to provide a home with a family-type setting for children who were having problems. We wanted to give them a second chance."

In 1982, The Second Mile started a foster home for six children. The program provides services to 51,000 children statewide who have been battered and abused, lack parental encouragement or lack a foundation to make positive choices.

The Second Mile has eight programs, including a summer camp, the Better Chance program, which provides housing for gifted minorities, and a set of trading cards featuring 16 Penn State football players who write on the back of their card about today's problems.

Gash learned about The Second Mile his freshman season.

"I knew I wanted to become more involved with young people," he said. "When I first got here, I heard some older guys talking about the program. I attended a few functions and really got involved in it," Gash told Dave Joseph of the Ft. Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel.

Gash, said Hank Lesch, the pro-

His message to the program's children is on the back of his trading card. He writes about his inability with a personalized banner, commemorating his visit.

Just eight days earlier, the Nittany Lions played a Blue-White intrasquad game at Danville (Pennsylvania) High School, with the proceeds directed to Geisinger Medical Center's capital campaign fund for construction of a new children's hospital.

"So when your sneakers aren't the greatest, remember, it's not what you have or wear but who you are and what you do."

The Penn State University basketball team also has had occasion this season to reflect on goodwill and helping others.

Bruce Parkhill's squad played the Dr. Pepper Invitational played at Barlor University's Ferrell Center in December. The Penn State team visited with children at Hillcrest Baptist Medical Center in Waco. The Lions were well received by the hospital staff and made a big hit with the children. Staff personnel presented each member of the team

According to Cathy Simpson, public affairs director at Geisinger, the project cost is $30 million. Gifts and pledges received to date have totaled more than $10 million. The hospital will be the first children's hospital built in the Commonwealth in more than 100 years and the first to be constructed in rural Pennsylvania.

Brother, can you spare some time?

The Southwest Texas State University football team has received recognition from Big Brothers/Big Sisters for its efforts with the youth of San Marcos, Texas. Once a week, the players go to local elementary schools to eat lunch with their little brothers and then join the students on the playground for recess or to just simply talk.

"The purpose of the program is to develop friendships between the student-athletes and our elementary students," said Carol Garrison, elementary-school counselor. "They encourage the students to stay in school, stay off drugs and simply serve as great role models."

The little brothers were on the sidelines during football practices and in the stands during Bobcat contests and other football-related activities.

"It is our opportunity to put something back into the community for all the community has done for our programs," coach Dennis Franchione said. "I feel it is good for our players to understand their role as ambassadors for the university and that they are role models for these young kids."

The success of the Big Brothers program has given other Bobcat athletes the chance to see how important they are and enticed them to get more involved in community activities.

Recently, several volleyball and football players traveled to Austin to volunteer with Operation Blue

Santa. Blue Santa provides toys to youth in the Austin area who otherwise may not have had a gift on Christmas.

"We can't be big brother or sisters to every child who needs us," said Bobcat all-America running back Reggie Rivers. "But we can do activities like this, which will allow us to indirectly reach many of them. It also shows the community that student-athletes do more than run and block; the majority care about their role in society."

Period of adjustment

When Rudolph Pringle Sr. took his four children to the steel company where he worked, he drove home a point that was sharper than an iron spike.

Because he didn't want his children to do the type of work he did, he wanted them to see first-hand the importance of a college education. The lesson was not lost on Ohio University senior defensive back Rudy Pringle.

"My ultimate goal is to get my degree, and I'm just thankful God gave me the opportunity to use football as a means to get an education," Pringle said. "There were a lot of times I could have fallen by the wayside and been right back home with all the others who had given up. But I didn't. I just tried harder and harder," he told Brad Wright, sports information assistant.

Pringle, a criminology major, will graduate in June or after the first summer session this year. After graduation, he plans to take the LSAT and possibly attend law school. Either way, he is determined to pursue a master's degree.

The Pringle family is a close unit and very athletic. Rudy's brother, Tim, was a standout strong safety at Ohio University. Tim played four years (1985 to 89) for the Bobcats and was a two-year starter. His younger sister, Gloria, is playing college basketball.

"My family has given me a lot of support," Rudy said. "We're a tight-knit family that sticks together through thick and thin. I've had successes and failures, but I've always had my family's support."

Pringle lends the same kind of support to others. He has worked at the Butler County Board of Mental Retardation during school breaks for nearly two years.

Last summer, he worked one-on-one with an autistic person who couldn't work around other individuals and would often get violent. Pringle said it was a challenge, because several people had failed to make progress with him. Yet, before Pringle returned to school, the two grew closer and closer together and developed a bond, Pringle said.

"A lot of people wouldn't want to work with the mentally retarded because they would feel uncomfortable," Pringle explained. "But put yourself in their shoes. Would you want somebody to help you if you were in their position. I would."

Pringle has learned that hard work can pay off.

After a year of football at Georgetown College in Kentucky, he transferred to Ohio and tried out for football as a walk-on. His efforts resulted in a scholarship.

Last season, injuries forced him to switch from wide receiver to defensive back. But Pringle took that in stride and earned a starting role.

"It feels good to get something after working so hard for it," he said. "Things didn't exactly go my way, but I stuck with it."

Wright State University opened its new Ervin J. Nutter Center last month for a basketball game with Tennessee State. The arena, which is on campus, seats 10,632. The Boston Pops orchestra performed in the arena in mid-December.

NCAA rejects Upsala appeal for reduction of penalties

The NCAA Division III Steering Committee voted January 6 to decline an appeal by Upsala College for a reduction in penalties that were imposed upon the college in August 1990 by the NCAA Committee on Infractions.

The Committee on Infractions placed the college on probation for a five-year period and banned postseason play in men's basketball for three years (i.e., the 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 academic years). The penalty also reduced the college's 1990-91 men's basketball schedule to 22 games (rather than the normal 26 for a Division III member) and prohibited outside athletics representatives from participating in the recruitment of prospective student-athletes in men's basketball for two years. The college also disassociated two outside athletics representatives who were involved in the violations.

The violations in the case involved the provision of cash, checks and other benefits to student-athletes from 1984 to 1988 by a representative of the college's athletics interests. The case also involved the receipt of institutional compensation for work not actually performed by two student-athletes, and several recruiting violations. The college also was cited for a failure to ensure institutional control of and NCAA rules compliance in its men's basketball program.

The college did not appeal the findings of the Committee on Infractions, but contended that a three-year postseason sanction was too severe primarily because of its effect on current and potential basketball team members, the anticipated financial impact upon the college, and concern that postseason sanctions are inappropriate for Division III member institutions.

Following is the complete text (with names deleted) of the Committee on Infractions' expanded infractions report, which was prepared in response to the college's appeal.

I. Statement of the Case.

Although Upsala College raises several issues in its appeal, none of the Committee on Infractions findings of fact has been appealed. The institution is appealing only two portions of the penalty set forth in Infractions Report No. 47, dated August 7, 1990: (a) the third year of a three-year prohibition on postseason play for the college's men's intercollegiate basketball program, and (b) the prohibition of all representatives of the college's athletics interests from involvement in recruiting contacts with prospective student-athletes.

The college submits the recruiting prohibition on college representatives unjustly penalizes the entire athletics program at the college for findings of violations only in the men's basketball program. The committee agrees that the prohibition against recruiting contacts by representatives of the college's athletics interests with prospective student-athletes, as set forth in Part III-H of this report, shall apply only to prospective student-athletes in the sport of men's basketball. Thus, there is no disagreement on the second part of the college's appeal concerning the involvement of representatives in recruiting.

The college also requests that, because it is not appealing the five-year probationary period, the official starting date for the probationary period begin with the date the college accepted the sanctions with the exception of the matters under appeal. The college was advised that the committee's penalty provided that it begin on the date established by the Division III Steering Committee upon consideration of the appeal in this case. Accordingly, the committee concurs with the request of Upsala College that its five-year probationary period begin with the date it notified the NCAA executive office of its appeal (i.e., September 7, 1990). This is a matter, however, within the jurisdiction of the steering committee.

Therefore, there is only one primary issue in dispute in this case—the third year of the three-year prohibition of postseason competition by the men's basketball team [reference: Part III-C of this report]. Upsala College believes that this penalty is excessive for a Division III institution in view of the violations found, the college's cooperative attitude and the actions it took in replacing athletics staff members. The Committee on Infractions believes that the full penalty, including the three-year postseason sanction, is fair and just in view of the extensive violations in the case, the length of time over which the violations took place, the involvement and awareness of these matters by former members of the administration (including a member of the governing board), and the absence of institutional control in any meaningful sense, all of which provided exceptional recruiting and competitive advantages in a Division III environment.

There are three procedural points that should be noted. First, the express language of NCAA Bylaws 19.3.3 and 32.6.5.6 allows the Committee on Infractions to find a violation on the basis of information developed or discussed during the committee hearing, even though the violation was not alleged in the letter of official inquiry. Second, the 1985 special Convention adopted prescribed minimum penalties as set forth in Bylaw 19 to be assessed for major violations and that are applicable to all institutions, regardless of whether they reside in Division I, II or III. Third, although the steering committee may modify any Committee on Infractions penalty, the committee believes that such action is appropriate only upon a showing that the penalty was grossly disproportionate to the offenses found.

II. Origin of the Case.

This case began August 26, 1987, when the enforcement staff received a telephone call from a former Upsala College men's basketball student-athlete who provided information regarding possible violations of NCAA legislation in the conduct and administration of the institution's men's basketball program. The enforcement staff then conducted a preliminary inquiry into the men's basketball program that resulted in a letter of official inquiry, which was sent to Upsala College in January 1990.

In April 1990, the college responded in writing to the allegations contained in the letter of official inquiry. In this response, the college admitted to many of the major allegations and acknowledged that it had failed to maintain institutional control over its intercollegiate athletics program. Separate prehearing conferences were held with institutional representatives and a former head men's basketball coach June 12, 1990.

On June 22, 1990, representatives of the institution, including the president, the faculty athletics representative, the director of athletics, the head men's basketball coach and the former head men's basketball coach involved in the case met with the NCAA Committee on Infractions. At the hearing, the president and college representatives shared with considerable candor and cooperation the full extent of the nearly total lack of appropriate institutional control during the years from 1984 through 1988, a by-product of the collapse of administrative authority within the college generally as the institution teetered on the brink of financial insolvency. The college admitted and the committee found that: a representative of the college's athletics interests, who also was a former member of the college's board of trustees, had given over $11,000 in cash, checks and other benefits to several prospective and enrolled student-athletes; two student-athletes received institutional compensation for work not actually performed; a variety of recruiting violations related to prospective student-athletes and limited extra benefits to enrolled student-athletes—all of which indicated a lack of knowledge and appreciation for NCAA legislation and the absence of a rules-education or compliance program within the athletics department; a failure to collect tuition from many students, including a number of members of the men's basketball program, which caused members of the team to believe that they would not have to pay tuition beyond their New Jersey state scholarships, Federal grants and institutional needs based scholarships; a system that permitted members of the basketball team to reenroll year after year, although their arrearages reached thousands of dollars (in several cases exceeding $10,000 and in one case approaching $20,000). Most seriously, then administrative staff members, a former member of the governing board and other responsible officials of the college, including the then president, were aware of these violations and may even have condoned them while the men's basketball team was enjoying considerable success.

The effect of these violations was that many members of the men's basketball team were receiving de facto athletics grants-in-aid at an NCAA Division III school where no student-athletes are permitted to receive such assistance under NCAA rules. The committee found that these violations gave the institution extraordinary recruiting and competitive advantages, and the competitive environment of Division III heightened the seriousness of this case. Moreover, the violations occurred throughout the period 1984 to 1988, and, by institutional admission, for a number of years preceding 1984 that were not the subject of the committee's findings.

III. A statement of the Committee on Infractions' penalties.

The committee considered this to be a very serious case, and Part III of this report sets forth the penalties the committee determined to be appropriate. The penalties are discussed further in Part IV-B of this expanded report. In short, the committee found that this case involved major violations of NCAA legislation. Because this case involved major violations of NCAA legislation that occurred after September 1, 1985, NCAA Bylaw 19.4.2.2, as adopted by the Association's membership, requires prescribed minimum penalties, "subject to exceptions authorized by the Committee on Infractions in unique cases on the basis of specifically stated reasons." These minimum penalties include: (a) a two-year probationary period (including a periodic, in-person monitoring system and written institutional reports); (b) the elimination of all expense-paid recruiting visits to the institution in the involved sport for one recruiting year; (c) a requirement that all coaching staff members in the sport be prohibited from engaging in any off-campus recruiting activities for one recruiting year; (d) a requirement that all institutional staff members determined by the Committee on Infractions knowingly to have engaged in or condoned a major violation be subject either to termination of employment, suspension without pay for at least one year or reassignment of duties within the institution to a position that does not include contact with prospective or enrolled student-athletes or representatives of the institution's athletics interests for at least one year; (e) one year of sanctions precluding postseason competition in the sport; (f) one year of sanctions precluding television appearances in the sport, and (g) institutional recertification that the current athletics policies and practices conform to all requirements of NCAA regulations. These penalties may be adjusted by the committee in appropriate cases for specifically stated reasons.

As noted in the introduction to this report, the committee has found some of the prescribed minimum penalties to be inappropriate for this case, and it has found that some penalties greater than the minimum penalties should be imposed. The committee's penalties are as follows:

A. The college shall be publicly reprimanded and censured, and placed on probation for a period of five years from the date these penalties are imposed, which shall be the date the 15-day appeal period expires or the date the institution notifies the executive director that it will not appeal, whichever is earlier, or the date established by NCAA Council subcommittee action as a result of an appeal by the college to the Council, it being understood that should any portion of any of the penalties in this case be set aside for any reason other than by appropriate action of the Association, the penalties shall be reconsidered by the Committee on Infractions. Further, Upsala College shall be subject to the provisions of NCAA Bylaw 19.4.2.3 concerning repeat violators for a five-year period beginning on the effective date of the penalties in this case.

B. During this period of probation, the institution shall: (1) develop and implement a system for administrative control and monitoring to ensure compliance with NCAA legislation; (2) design and implement a comprehensive educational program (e.g., seminars and testing) to instruct coaches and athletics department personnel regarding NCAA legislation; (3) submit a preliminary report to the committee by January 1, 1991, setting forth a schedule for establishing the college's compliance and educational programs, and (4) file annual progress reports concerning the college's control, monitoring and educational programs by July 1 of each year during the probationary period and prior to the end of the probationary period.

C. The institution's men's basketball team shall end its 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 seasons with the playing of its last regularly scheduled, in-season contest and shall not be eligible to participate in any postseason competition following any of those three seasons. In addition, the men's basketball team may not participate in a foreign tour in the summer of 1990 or following the 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 seasons; further, the men's basketball team may not play any of its regular-season contests outside the continental United States during the 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 seasons. Moreover, the men's basketball team may not take advantage of any exceptions to the limitation in the number of basketball contests that are provided in Bylaws 17.3.3.1, 17.3.5.4 and 17.3.5.5 regarding preseason contests (or contests outside of the continental United States) during the 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 seasons.

D. During the 1990-91 academic year, the college's men's basketball team may compete in 22 contests only, rather than the 26 contests otherwise allowed for Division III men's basketball programs by Bylaw 17.3.5.1-(b). [Note: If the college demonstrates to the Committee on Infractions that it cannot comply with this penalty during the 1990-91 academic year, this penalty will be deferred to the 1991-92 academic year (it being understood that the college's basketball team would be limited to four fewer contests than would otherwise be allowed for Division III schools during that academic year).]

E. The committee found that, at least in part due to the college's failure to exercise institutional control over its men's basketball program, student-athletes who were ineligible to represent the college (and student-athletes whom the institution's coaching staff knew or should have known were ineligible) represented the college in the 1986 NCAA Division III Men's Basketball Championship. Therefore, under the terms of Bylaw 31.2.2.4, the records of the individuals' and the team's performances in that championship shall be deleted, and the team's place finish in the final standings shall be vacated.

F. The committee adopts the colleges action in disassociating a representative of its athletics interests who was involved in violations found in this case. This disassociation shall be in accordance with Bylaw 19.4.2.6 and shall be for a minimum of five years.

G. The institution shall be required to show cause why it should not be subject to additional penalties if it does not disassociate (in accordance with Bylaw 19.4.2.6) a second representative of the institution's athletics interests who was involved in this case for a period of five years.

H. During the 1990-91 and 1991-92 academic years (until September 1, 1992), the college is prohibited from allowing any representative of its athletics interests (as defined by Bylaw 13.02.10) to be involved in recruiting contacts with prospective student-athletes. (This penalty includes, but is not limited to, the prohibition of representatives being used during official visits to the campus—a practice that would be otherwise permissible for a Division III school under Bylaw 13.6.1.1.)

IV. Violations of NCAA requirements. How serious is this case?

The committee found that the institution's men's basketball program committed numerous major violations of NCAA legislation in the period beginning with the 1984-85 academic year continuing through the 1988-89 academic year. Upsala College has admitted to most of these violations and has acknowledged the failure of institutional control. Although the college in its appeal does not question the validity of the findings, the college does argue that the length of the sanction imposed regarding postseason play for the men's basketball program is excessive and should be reduced from three years to two years. Accordingly, it is necessary, first, to review the admitted violations to understand the significance the Committee on Infractions attributed to them in determining both the range and the fullness of the penalties imposed by the committee.

A. Violations found by the Committee on Infractions and admitted by Upsala College.

The admitted violations fall into four categories. It is the view of the committee that each category, standing alone, constitutes a major violation. Further, it is the committee's view that these admitted violations, in any one category, fully warrant the penalties placed on the college's men's basketball program by the committee.

1. Violations relating to improper inducements to prospects and payments to enrolled student-athletes.

On a number of occasions between 1984 and 1988, a representative of the college's athletics interests gave well in excess of $11,000 by personal check and cash to five different members of the men's basketball team. Further, this representative was an alumnus of the college, a major contributor to the college and a former member of the college's governing board.

The committee was particularly concerned by these actions because the representative routinely gave money on request, did it by check, and his actions apparently were well-known to members of the basketball team. The fact that he was a member of the colleges governing board further compounds the problem.

The competitive advantage gained in giving large amounts of money as an extra benefit is obvious. To give such amounts of money at a Division III institution where student-athletes may not be provided athletically related financial assistance of any kind compounds this advantage in competition over other Division III programs that are in full compliance with NCAA legislation. In brief, throughout the years violations occurred, Upsala College men's basketball team members benefited significantly, and the team enjoyed considerable success on the basketball court.

2. Violations relating to wages paid for work not performed on the college campus.

A former head men's basketball coach was in charge of the work-study program for student-athletes, including members of his basketball team, during his employment at the university. He was aware of and permitted at least one member of his basketball team to receive wages for work not performed. Such an extra benefit, known to and administered by the head coach, cannot be tolerated. The violation hardly could be considered inadvertent, and it certainly provided a significant financial advantage to the student-athletes, and in turn to the college, through their participation on the basketball team.

The committee also found that on other occasions, this same head coach provided cash loans and gifts ranging from $10 to $75 to enrolled student-athletes and various articles of clothing, including T-shirts, shorts and sweat suits, to prospective student-athletes.

3. Violations of the principles of institutional control relating to failure to collect tuition and fees from enrolled student-athletes.

Throughout the period 1984 through 1988, one of the most substantial benefits received by enrolled student-athletes derived from the failure of the college to collect tuition and fees from many of its students and student-athletes (including a significant number of the members of its men's basketball team). Over time, the failure of the college to enforce the collection of tuition and fees led student-athletes to believe that they did not have to pay for their education, that it "would be taken care of" either by the "booster" referred to in Part IV-A-1 of this expanded report, or that "you [student-athlete] would never have to pay" because the college would not take disciplinary action to force payment if bills were not paid. The result was that prospective student-athletes and their parents were told by enrolled student-athletes or former student-athletes who were recruiting them that "you won't have to pay" and "I didn't have to pay." This information was correct, in effect, because prior to the arrival of President Robert Karsten, there was little or no attempt to exercise control over the financial operation of the college. Many student-athletes, and especially members of the men's basketball team, received the equivalent of a full athletics grant-in-aid.

The college in its appeal contends that this was not a special benefit to student-athletes, because "the student tuition collection system at Upsala College, during the period under investigation, was so lax that virtually no students were required to pay their tuition." Possibly this was so (and the college repeatedly notes that it was in dire financial straits as a result of the inconsistency in its financial operations). Nevertheless, it is the committee's position that nothing in Bylaw 15 dealing with permissible institutional financial aid, and particularly Bylaw 15.4 [Division III Financial Aid], contemplates or permits such circumstances to be interpreted as anything other than the awarding of impermissible aid. Further, this violation demonstrated a grave lack of institutional control that resulted in an enormous competitive athletics advantage while in competition with other Division III institutions to recruit student-athletes. Whether intended or not, the effect was clear. Upsala College had a substantial number of its men's basketball team members competing during the period 1984 to 1988 while not paying their full tuition and fees costs.

4. Violation of institutional control relating to failure to monitor its athletics programs, to provide rules education or to provide administration oversight within and without the athletics department.

The wide range of violations, many major, many secondary but in such profusion to hardly be isolated or inadvertent, attest to the gravity of this situation. President Karsten in his response to the committee put it most succinctly:

"The fact is that the allegations in the official inquiry touching upon men's intercollegiate athletics describe only a small percentage of what had gotten out of control at Upsala College. The institution was all but in a state of administrative anarchy by November of 1988. There was virtually no coordination of work. Student receivables were not being collected. Admissions criteria were indistinguishable from open admissions.... The Middle States Association had deferred accreditation.... And, the alumni association had voted to quit giving money to the College... what needs to be understood by the Committee is the context of the allegations described in the official inquiry. The inquiry, one might say, almost describes a fundamental characteristic of a malfunctioning college headed, clearly, for extinction."

As sympathetic as the committee was about the general circumstances of the college, it also recognized that these same conditions existed for some years and resulted in very serious violations of NCAA legislation that went unchecked and undetected and that provided the college with recruiting and competitive advantages that the committee could not ignore in imposing penalties.

B. The penalties adopted by the Committee on Infractions.

Based on the investigation by the NCAA enforcement staff, the admitted violations by the college as set forth in its response to the official inquiry and the information presented during the seven-hour hearing, the Committee on Infractions found that the case involved major violations of NCAA legislation. As required by Bylaw 19.4.2.2, adopted by a nearly unanimous vote of the Association in June 1985, the committee is required to impose the penalties contained in that bylaw. The Association did not make any distinction between or among divisions when it adopted Bylaw 19.4.2.2. Therefore, the required minimum penalties apply to all members of the Association regardless of division. In cases where the committee votes not to adopt any of the prescribed minimum penalties, it must explain the reasons.

In this case, some prescribed minimum penalties in Bylaw 19.4.2.2 were not imposed by the committee either because they did not fit the nature of the violations or because they did not appear meaningful to a Division III program. Among the penalties that were not applied were: elimination of all expense-paid visits for prospects in men's basketball, prohibition regarding live television for one year in men's basketball and a requirement that if the head coach who was involved in the violations had remained at the college, action would be considered against him directly.

Contrary to the college's assertion, in reaching its decision in this case, the committee was not attempting to impose penalties that were designed for Division I upon a Division III program. Rather, as it does in all major cases, the committee tried to adjust the minimum penalties required by Bylaw 19 to fit the scope and nature of this particular case. The head coach was no longer employed by the college, so no show-cause penalty involving him appeared necessary. Abuse of official paid visits was not an issue in this case, but abuse in the recruiting process by representatives of athletics interests was, so the committee opted to omit the restrictions on official visits but to impose firm controls on recruiting contacts by representatives. A penalty related to live television for one year would have been meaningless to Upsala College (and in fact such a penalty is sometimes meaningless in cases involving Division I programs).

The committee firmly believed and still believes that the types of violations that occurred, the number of violations, the magnitude of the violations, the length of time over which the violations were committed, and the competitive and recruiting advantages gained warranted more than the prescribed minimum penalties. This was a very serious case, one of the most serious in recent years in any division. It was made more serious because it involved substantial extra benefits and improperly administered financial aid in Division III where no athletically related aid is permitted. As sympathetic as members were with the financial plight of Upsala College and as impressed as they were by the efforts of President Robert Karsten to correct the imbalances throughout the college, the committee could not ignore the seriousness of the violations. Therefore, it was determined, as the committee has in other infractions cases, that more than the prescribed minimum penalties should be imposed.

The penalties adopted were:

1. A five-year probationary period. It is the committee's position that this probationary period is an appropriate monitoring period that the committee believes will be necessary for the college to establish institutional patterns strong enough to overcome the nearly 15 years of administrative lassitude, which preceded the present administration.

2. A three-year sanction regarding postseason competition in men's basketball (the primary point at issue in this appeal). This penalty was imposed because the committee believed strongly that the serious violations in this case that occurred over a substantial period of time required very serious penalties. The prohibition against postseason competition is a fundamental penalty of the Association. The Presidents Commission and the Association's membership at the special convention in June 1985 emphasized that penalties for major violations should be "broad and severe." The three-year postseason sanction is consistent with this principle, as well as consistent with penalties adopted in other serious infractions cases. It also should be noted that the college's overall record in men's basketball from 1984-85 to 1987-88 was 68-35; including one appearance in the NCAA Division III men's basketball tournament in 1985-86. It also should be noted that the college has reported abuses that occurred earlier than 1984. The college appeared in NCAA tournament play in 1981-82, 1982-83 and 1983-84, placing fourth overall in 1984. Additionally, the college competed in the Eastern College Athletic Conference tournaments in 1984-85 and 1988-89.

3. A one-year reduction in the number of men's basketball games from 26 to 22. The committee considered at length canceling one full season, but did not do so in view of the efforts of President Karsten to bring the case to a conclusion and in view of the apparent efforts of a new athletics staff, which he had brought on board. However, the reduction of some games was considered appropriate due to the severity of the violations.

4. The disassociation of one representative of its athletics interests who was involved in the violations. The committee adopted this action and required the college to show cause why it similarly should not disassociate another representative. The college has so done.

5. The elimination of representatives of athletics interests from involvement in recruiting contacts with prospective student-athletes for a period of two years. This was the natural consequence of the improper involvement of representatives in the recruiting process as set forth in the committee findings in this case. The committee agrees with the college that this penalty should apply only to the recruitment of prospective student-athletes in the sport of men's basketball and has so informed the college.

V. Appeal by Upsala College.

Upsala College contends that a three-year postseason sanction is excessive in comparison to other infractions cases. Moreover, the institution believes that the committee did not give sufficient consideration to the college's lack of involvement in previous infractions cases, its cooperative posture in this case and its decisive actions against the involved coaching staff members. Further, the college asserts that the committee placed inappropriate emphasis on the benefits the institution may have received as a result of recruiting violations. The college also contends that it suffered the loss of about $60,000 in tuition costs from several student-athletes who either left the team and the college or who chose not to enroll after the penalties in this case were announced. The college believes that such a financial loss warrants consideration in reducing the postseason penalty. Finally, there is the contention that the committee has judged the college by Division I standards and is trying to impose Division I penalties on a Division III institution.

The Committee on Infractions recognized the cooperation of President Karsten in this case, as well as his candor before the committee and his commitment to bring the college into compliance with NCAA rules and regulations. The committee took this posture into consideration by not canceling an entire season of basketball competition, an action the committee believed would be warranted. In its initial infractions report, the committee might have expressed its praise of President Karsten's actions more fully, but it chose to write a terse and tight report because it did not want to go into extended and excruciating detail about the nature of the violations, the awareness of a previous administration and the inappropriate role of a former member of the governing board in collegiate and athletics affairs as discussed during President Karsten's appearance before the committee. There should be no question, however, that in not canceling a season, and in choosing instead to allow 22 games in one season, that the committee took into consideration the actions of President Karsten. However, the committee does not believe that a further reduction in the penalties is appropriate.

The college believes that the committee has overemphasized the advantages gained by the violations. The committee disagrees and believes that the college fails to recognize, for example, the degree to which its faulty institutional administrative procedures gave it a competitive advantage over other Division III institutions that require the regular payment of tuition and fees. The practical effect was that many members of the men's basketball team received impermissible financial assistance. Those violations, unintentional though they might have been, when combined with the recruiting violations and the extra benefits accorded a number of enrolled student-athletes, meant that in some years, several men's basketball team members were competing while ineligible. The committee firmly believes these violations accorded the college tremendous competitive advantages that warrant severe penalties.

The contention that the committee was trying to impose Division I penalties on a Division III school is without merit. The committee looked at this matter entirely as a Division III case. The committee recognizes that it is charged with the responsibility for imposing meaningful and fair penalties when member institutions are found in violation of NCAA legislation. The committee designed the penalties to fit the competitive and recruiting advantages that were gained in a Division III environment.

VI. Summary.

It is the position of the Committee on Infractions that it has examined fairly all the evidence presented to it, made findings of numerous and serious violations, most of which Upsala College has acknowledged and none of which it is contesting in these proceedings, and adopted severe but fair penalties consistent with the rules of the Association and past practices of the committee. The committee believes that the full three-year postseason sanction is warranted based upon the seriousness of violations that provided extensive recruiting and competitive advantages within the context of Division III philosophy and which were a fundamental abuse of the guiding principles of the Association generally.

Former student-athlete fighting life-threatening opponent

Ten years ago, Michael King was a freshman member of West Virginia University's men's basketball team—struggling, as do all first-year college students, with the adjustments inherent in leaving home for the first time.

Then, King fought for good grades and playing time. Now, he's fighting for his life.

"Because of my athletics background, I probably took the news better than everybody around me," said King, 28, of the discovery of cancer in a body that had seen him through four seasons of Division I basketball (including three trips to the NCAA postseason tournament and one to the National Invitation Tournament) and three years of professional ball in Australia.

"Through basketball, I got to play some major opponents," King recently told Paul Sunyak of the Uniontown (Pennsylvania) Herald-Standard. "We played UNLV when they were (ranked) No. 1 in the country, and we dusted them in Morgantown."

"I know what it's like to be nervous about an opponent. But because of all the training I've had in overcoming that fear, I knew I could beat this."

King, living in Georgia and raising a family, initially thought swelling and pain he began experiencing in his groin were due to playful roughhousing with his two oldest sons, 4-year-old Jeremy and 2-year-old Justin. A trip to the doctor, however, revealed much more serious trouble.

Two days after King's wife, Katrina, gave birth to the couple's third son, Julian, Mike underwent mation director Rondi Payne and assistant trainer Shelley VanDover went for a walk on the beach. They had stopped at one of the streetside vendors when they heard someone yell, "Somebody help this man."

A man, between the ages of 60 and 65, had collapsed on the sidewalk while jogging. VanDover and Payne rushed over to the man.

VanDover immediately felt for his pulse and, finding none, administered CPR until a paramedic unit arrived. The paramedics, who thought the man probably suffered a heart attack, said VanDover saved his life with her quick reaction. VanDover is in her first year at Missouri.

"She saved someone's life," Payne said. "I thought that was kind of a neat way to start the new year."

up—literally—the University of Georgia's Henry Field Stadium, home of the Bulldog tennis program. Georgia officials announced last month that Basinger, an Athens native who watched her father and brother win local titles on the courts, had donated funds for use in erecting lights at the facility.

"Lights will further enhance our outstanding tennis facility," said Georgia athletics director Vincent J. Dooley. "We greatly appreciate Kim's generosity."

Oberlin College senior Jesse Malkin, a four-time letter-winner in cross country, recently became the school's first Rhodes Scholar in more than 15 years. Not bad for someone who wasn't always a good student.

"In junior high school, I was a horrible student," Malkin said. "I was getting a lot of Cs."

He said his grades began improving when he started running competitively and setting academic priorities.

Tom Ellis has been giving away a lot of fried chicken lately, thanks to the defensive efforts of the University of Evansville men's basketball team.

Ellis, owner of the franchise for four local chicken restaurants, agreed to provide free chicken meals to every ticket holder attending a home game in which Evansville held its opponent under 50 points—something that hadn't happened in 54 consecutive contests.

Twice, however, between December 10 and Christmas, Evansville turned the trick—the first time before 10,052 fans, the second in front of 9,119.

"I think everyone in the fast-food industry promotes to a certain extent," Ellis told writer Doug Sword of the Evansville Courier. "It just seemed like this was a fun way to do that."

surgery for removal of what proved to be a cancerous testicle. Tests also revealed that the cancer had spread to a lymph node in his stomach.

King now is a patient at the M. D. Anderson Cancer Hospital in Houston, where he is given a 98 percent chance of a complete recovery with no lasting side effects.

"Wherever I've gone," King told Sunyak, "my philosophy has always been, 'I'm going to treat you the way I think you want to be treated—and if you don't want that, I'll just leave you alone.'"

"I think that's paid off," he added. "I'm getting cards and letters from people all over the world—from Fairchance (his southwestern Pennsylvania hometown) to Australia. And I don't plan to let any of them down."

Luther College women's basketball players are wearing yellow shoelaces in their right shoes this season as a show of support for teammate Audra Ross, who recently was diagnosed with leukemia. She will complete chemotherapy treatments this month and intends to return to Luther for the spring semester, but her treatment and recovery schedule will force her to miss the rest of her senior basketball season.

Ross' teammates, however, have seen to it that her No. 45 is on the roster of every game program, and they've been sending her videotapes of each game. And all her visitors have been wearing yellow shoelaces.
