Women in Sports Day events planned February 7

Although "Passing the Torch" is the theme for this year's celebration of National Girls and Women in Sports Day, "picking up steam" arguably would be just as appropriate.

In only four years, the event has grown from a memorial to honor the memory of Flo Hyman to a nationwide celebration and promotion of the achievements of girls and women in athletics competition and administration.

This year, February 7 has been declared National Girls and Women in Sports Day. Organizers of the celebration include Girls, Incorporated; the National Association for Girls and Women in Sport (NAGWS); the Women's Sports Foundation (WSF), and the YWCA of the USA.

As has been reported in previous issues of The NCAA News, 1991 also marks the 10th anniversary of several NCAA women's championships, and special events are being held in conjunction with many of them.

And in a related development, it was announced last fall that the Sara Lee Corporation has become the first NCAA corporate partner to earmark support specifically for women's athletics programs.

"Young women must be encouraged to enter sports careers and to run for offices in sports organizations," said Lyn St. James, Women's Sports Foundation president, in discussing the "Passing the Torch" theme. "We have to recruit and prepare young women to be a part of the next generation of sports leaders. Otherwise, women's sports will suffer for the lack of female role models and leadership."

Born in death

The concept of a day to honor women's achievements in athletics was born shortly after the January 1986 death of Hyman, an American Olympic volleyball great who was stricken while competing in Japan. Republican Sen. Robert Packwood of Oregon suggested to WFS officials the creation of a national celebration to remember and honor Hyman.

Joined by Sen. Bill Bradley (D-New Jersey) and Rep. Olympia Snowe (R-Maine), Packwood introduced a bill declaring February

4, 1987, as the first National Women in Sports Day. During ceremonies that day on Capitol Hill, Packwood presented the first Flo Hyman Memorial Award, which has gone annually to an athlete who captures "Flo's dignity, spirit and commitment to excellence."

Honorees have included tennis stars Martina Navratilova and Chris Evert and track athletes Evelyn Ashford and Jackie Joyner-Kersey. President George H. W. Bush has presented the past three awards at the White House.

Sen. Packwood and Rep. Snowe again have introduced a joint resolution calling for official recognition of the 1991 celebration, and several events have been planned in Washington for the day.

Many local events

"Many local events on the day will recognize women who have made great contributions to women's sports," said NAGWS President Darlene Kluka. "By honoring women who have been leaders, we provide role models for young women and challenge them to give back to sports."

Celebrations also have been planned in all 50 states, although not all of them will take place February 7.

Following are some of the special activities planned around the country, according to organizers:

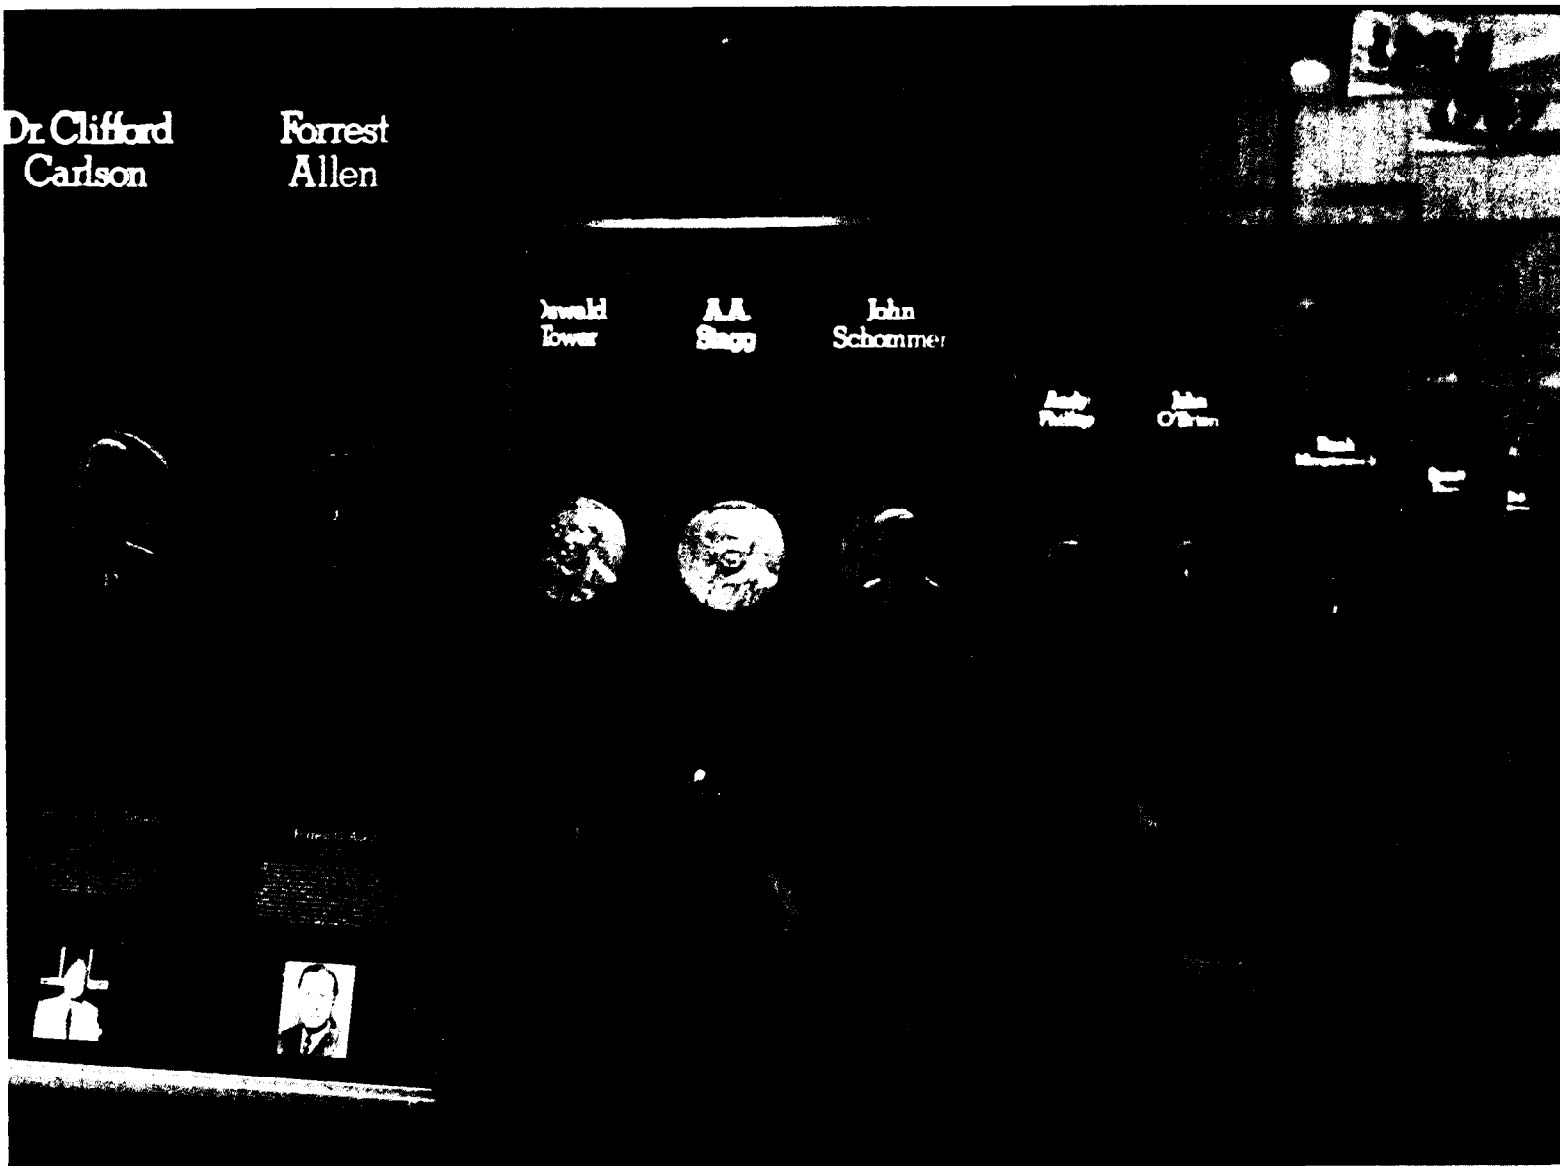

Colorado—New NCAA President Judith M. Sweet of the University of California, San Diego, will deliver the keynote address March 10 during the 17th annual Sports-women of Colorado awards banquet and gala in Denver.

Delaware—Among those set to be honored at a February 9 statewide awards luncheon is former Villanova University star and NCAA champion Vicki Huber.

Georgia—NAGWS President Kluka will deliver the keynote address February 1 during a recognition dinner for women student-athletes at West Georgia College.

Iowa—Luther College will recognize outstanding women athletes who live within 70 miles of the campus during half time of a February 8 game against the University when the 100th anniversary commemorative stamp was unveiled. University of Notre Dame head men's coach Richard "Digger" Phelps took part in the ceremony.

Observance of basketball centennial is under way

The theme of the 1990-91 basketball season is "99 Going On 100" as "the American game" looks forward to its centennial anniversary.

Basketball's second century got under way where it all began—Springfield, Massachusetts, where Dr. James Naismith put up his first peach baskets in December 1891.

Basketball's centennial—a 20-month international observance—began Sunday, January 6, with two special events in Springfield, "Basketball City, U.S.A."

Postmaster General Anthony M. Frank unveiled the U.S. Postal Service's commemorative basketball centennial stamp at a city brunch.

He was assisted by coach Richard

"Digger" Phelps of the University of Notre Dame, a member of the Citizen's Stamp Advisory Committee. The stamp is scheduled to go on public sale August 26 at the Basketball Hall of Fame and the next day throughout the nation.

Notre Dame hosted the U.S.S.R. national team January 6 in a basketball game in the Springfield Civic Center. The Soviets won, 92-76.

Joe O'Brien, executive director of the Basketball Hall of Fame, said, "It was fitting that the opening centennial event was an international basketball game, in that basketball is played in 170 nations throughout the world. The game's popularity is proven by the fact that from the time it was first played in December 1891 until the turn of the century, the game was played in 20 foreign countries. It was taken around the world through the influence of the YMCA movement."

The national observance is a combined effort of the NCAA, National Basketball Association, USA Basketball and the National Federation of State High School Associations.

Committee members are Russ Granik, deputy commissioner and chief operating officer, NBA; Thomas W. Jernstedt, associate executive director, NCAA; David R. Gavitt, executive vice-president, Boston Celtics, and president, USA Basketball; Brice Durbin, executive director, National Federation; Dick Boushka, a past president, Naismith Memorial Basketball Hall of Fame, and O'Brien. Boushka chairs the committee. International events will be coordinated by the International Basketball Federation (FIBA), whose secretary general is Boris Stankovic of Munich. He is a trustee of the Basketball Hall of Fame. With the exception of O'Brien, each national committee member is a trustee of the Basketball Hall of Fame.

Communications Diversified of New York City has been selected by the centennial committee to develop and market the centennial program. Adrian DeGroot, executive vice-president and general manager, sports, of Communications Diversified, said, "The 100th anniversary will be an ongoing celebration throughout the 1991-92 basketball season."

DeGroot, former president of NBA Properties, outlined some of the centennial projects:

- Official centennial logo: the unifying symbol, which will receive exposure over the course of the celebration. It will be used extensively throughout the basketball community.

- Patch program: The program represents a unifying link to all levels of the game. A special embroidered patch with the centennial logo will be worn by active players through all tiers of basketball in 1991-92, including the NBA, NCAA, U.S. Olympic basketball team, National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics, National Junior College Athletic Association and National Federation, as well as other amateur teams. Basketball officials at amateur, collegiate and professional levels will also wear the patch.

• Sponsorship programs: Communications Diversified is approaching corporate America to lend support in maximizing the anniversary's potential. There will be only five major sponsors—the Centennial's Starting Five. This will ensure corporate partners greater value by virtue of exclusive association.

• Gala celebration: In January 1992, the cornerstone event of the centennial will be a major gala. This is the high-point celebration that will be orchestrated by Radio City Music Hall Productions. One of the primary components will be a network TV special featuring the game's outstanding moments, achievements and achievers. Included will be a wide variety of entertainment celebrities who are associated with basketball. A black-tie dinner will be held in conjunction with the TV special in New York City and possibly other cities.

• Sports Illustrated insert: Over 17 million readers will see a special basketball centennial insert in Sports Illustrated before the opening of the 1991-92 season that will feature the history of "the American game" as well as highlights of the 100th anniversary. It also has been learned that Street & Smith is planning a 100th anniversary salute in its preseason basketball publication next season.

• Official centennial stamp: Following the leadership of the postal service and its basketball commemorative stamp, at least 35 foreign nations are planning to issue commemorative stamps.

• Centennial decal: Major games conducted during the centennial season, including the NBA all-star game in Orlando and championship series, NCAA Final Four and regional championships, as well as state high school championships, will place the official centennial logo on the basketball courts. The Springfield Civic Center January 6 unveiled its centennial court as designed by Horner Flooring of Michigan.

• "How-to" manuals: Communications Diversified will provide ideas as well as thought-starters on how to capitalize on the centennial in a local market. It will contain promotional ideas, feature stories, a preparation checklist, special events, public-address announcements and logo slicks. The manual will be mass distributed throughout the basketball world and to appropriate civic groups.

• Public-service messages: An entire public-service message campaign (both TV and print) will be executed throughout the course of the centennial season. The announcements will also air at the major tournament level, including NCAA championships, NBA play-offs and championship games.

• Licensing program: The centennial organizers are planning an extensive licensing program to include apparel (sportswear, outerwear, caps, etc.), sporting goods, gifts and novelties, and coins and medallions. These will be made available for retail, direct-mail and premium use.

• Vignettes: Several local television stations are showing an interest in sponsored TV and radio vignettes, which will be made available.

• Videos: Special centennial videos, for both retail and premium use, will be produced as part of the anniversary program. One example of what's being planned is "100 Greatest Players, Moments, Games."

• Publishing: The official centennial book will be published by The Sporting News and edited by basketball analyst Billy Packer, who is a trustee of the Naismith Memorial Basketball Hall of Fame. Additionally, Pindar Press will publish the official centennial soft-cover version, allowing for promotional and merchandising opportunities at the corporate-sponsor level.

• Grass roots: A national program, allowing for local fan participation and involvement, will be pursued during the centennial season. Some of the events under consideration are dribble across America (sort of a dribble-a-thon), three-on-three tournaments culminating in a national final, hot-shot competition and a fan balloting program.

• Commemorative license plate: Massachusetts Sen. Brian P. Lees has sponsored legislation to create a commemorative license plate in Massachusetts, designated "Birthplace of Basketball."

Some centennial events are being planned to include the National Association of Basketball Coaches, Women's Basketball Coaches Association, National Junior College Athletic Association, Amateur Athletic Union, Young Men's Christian Association and the NAIA.

The Atlanta Tipoff Club will commemorate the 100th anniversary of the first public game (March 11, 1882, in Springfield) with its annual banquet. The committee plans to invite all recipients of the Naismith Award as guests.

The city of Springfield will celebrate the invention of the game December 19-21. The official opening ceremonies will include an NCAA Division I women's basketball game between Texas and Tennessee December 19, international recognition ceremonies at the Basketball Hall of Fame December 21, an appearance by the Harlem Globetrotters, and a black-tie international gala. The three-day event in Springfield will coincide with the annual meeting of the central board of FIBA.

Plans are being made to have at least one reenactment of the first game as played in December 1891, by the students of Springfield College.

New era begins in Olympic basketball

By David R. Gavitt

In April 1989, FIBA, the international governing body in the sport of basketball, held an extraordinary world congress in Munich. At this congress, the 85 or so nations represented voted overwhelmingly for "open competition," in effect making all basketball players in the world eligible for international competition, including the Olympic Games.

In reality, FIBA ended decades of discrimination against the United States as our NBA players had heretofore been barred from playing, while players in many other countries, despite being paid substantial moneys by their club teams, still were able to play on the teams representing their nations.

Following the vote, FIBA Secretary General Boris Stankovic attempted to calm the fears of the few countries worried about the historic change. He said, "You should not worry; essentially, this is an American problem." At this writing, some 20 months later, I'm very pleased to be able to report that our basketball community in the United States has chosen to focus on implementation of this change as an opportunity, rather than a problem.

As a result, with everyone working together, we have emerged as a stronger national governing body with an overall program committing greater resources to all players—female, male, juniors and developmental—designed to keep the United States out front in international competition at all levels of play.

In October 1989, the NBA became a constituent member of our federation, and we changed our name from the Amateur Basketball Association of the United States of America (ABAUSA) to USA Basketball. Our new name and new logo truly reflect what we are, encompassing all levels and phases of USA involvement in international competition.

The NBA appointees include some of the most respected names in the game and have been fully integrated with the strong school, college and amateur representatives at every level of our governance structure: officers, council and games committees. The marriage has been a smooth one with very positive interaction at every level throughout the past year.

The results of the successful grouping of all segments of our basketball family will be seen positively at every level of our involvement in international competition. None, however, will be more obvious, or receive greater exposure, than our men's Olympic team, which will compete in Barcelona in 1992. This team, by the way, not only will be the first USA basketball squad to include professionals, but also will be the first to have to qualify as a result of another new FIBA rule change.

In this regard, we may already have won our first big game—through a series of administrative battles and negotiations, we have been successful in changing the qualification tournament from a South American venue in April, when we would have had no access to any of our best players (amateur or professional), to a U.S. site (to be determined) in late June and early July of 1992.

So what can we expect to see from our U.S. team in 1992? It has been determined that it will be a team that will reflect both the amateur and professional elite players and coaches in the United States.

In this Olympiad of transition, we are committed to an Olympic program putting forward the best of our talent in the professional arena, generally agreed to be the game at its highest playing level, and the best of our amateur talent, who have been in our program developmentally since 1988 and who historically have carried our USA banner successfully in international and Olympic play.

We are committed to a roster that

1991 NCAA Convention Proposal Nos. 70 and 71—developmental training expenses

Member institutions should note that with the adoption of 1991 Convention Proposal No. 70, it is permissible for an individual, prior to initial full-time collegiate enrollment, to receive actual and necessary expenses to cover developmental training, coaching, facility usage, equipment, apparel, supplies, comprehensive health insurance, travel, room and board, without jeopardizing the individual's eligibility for intercollegiate athletics, provided such expenses are approved and provided directly by the U.S. Olympic Committee (USOC) or the appropriate national governing body in a sport. Please note that subsequent to collegiate enrollment, the receipt of expenses during the academic year must be consistent with the requirements set forth in NCAA Bylaws 12.1.2 and 16.11.1.4.

In addition, the adoption of 1991 Convention Proposal No. 71 permits an individual to receive actual and necessary expenses for developmental training programs conducted and supervised by the USOC or the appropriate national governing body, even if such programs include no competition, provided the programs are conducted during the individual's summer academic vacation period.

During its pre-Convention meeting, the NCAA Council reviewed 1991 Convention Proposal Nos. 70 and 71 and determined that such proposals also would permit foreign student-athletes to receive authorized pre-enrollment training expenses and/or summer developmental training expenses from the appropriate national sports governing body in the student-athlete's country.

Division I women's basketball evaluations—state of Virginia

In accordance with Bylaw 13.1.3.2(s), to date, Division I coaches in the sport of women's basketball have been permitted to evaluate prospective student-athletes in the state of Virginia only during permissible contact periods and between July 8 and July 31 and between November 2 and November 22. This legislation was enacted at the 1989 Convention to accommodate states that conduct high school basketball seasons in periods other than the traditional winter season. In the state of Virginia, two classifications (A and AA) conduct high school basketball in the fall and the AAA classification conducts a traditional winter season (December through March).

At the 1991 Convention, the membership adopted Proposal No. 6, which moved the recruiting calendars from the operating bylaws to the administrative regulations. The NCAA Administrative Committee, at the request of the Council, amended (effective immediately) the dates for permissible evaluations in the state of Virginia to allow Division I coaches in the sport of women's basketball to observe prospects who participate in the AAA classification during the dates that currently are applicable to states that conduct traditional winter seasons.

Thus, Division I women's basketball coaches may continue to evaluate prospects who participate in classifications in Virginia that conduct a fall basketball season (A and AA) during a permissible contact period and from July 8 through July 31 and November 2 through November 22; further, Division I coaches may evaluate prospective student-athletes in Virginia's AAA classification during the dates permitted during the traditional winter season (see Bylaw 13.1.3.2). Please note that this change would allow Division I women's basketball coaches to evaluate prospects participating in the AAA classification during the upcoming February 8 through February 28 evaluation period.

Players with brothers in gulf get support from teammates

While the Lock Haven University of Pennsylvania women's basketball team digs into the heart of its Pennsylvania State Athletic Conference Western Division schedule, reality has dug into the heart of the team itself.

Three of the Lady Eagles have brothers who are with Operation Desert Storm in the Middle East.

Senior Angie Murphy, sophomore Marijo Martini and freshman Geri Vota share this burden.

Murphy is a story in herself. Not only is she very emotional about the deployment of her brother, Greg, but she is playing in pain. On January 16, the night that Operation Desert Shield became Operation Desert Storm, Murphy had to deal with yet another dose of reality. In the early stages of Lock Haven's game at Clarion, Murphy got caught in the middle of a struggle for a loose ball. In the melee, Murphy took a direct shot in her ribs, breaking one, chipping two and tearing cartilage. Murphy sat on the bench but returned to play most of the second half.

Forty minutes before the Clarion game began, the United States launched its attack on Iraq. None of the players knew of this, and it was not until coach Frank Scarfo told them in the locker room that the gravity of the situation took hold of the players.

Scarfo said, "We had just won a crucial road game, and the team was on the brink of celebration. But when I walked into the locker room, somber with the weight of what I had to tell the girls, they knew that something was wrong."

"After I informed them that we had launched an all-out attack on Iraq, they were obviously upset. But what I saw in that locker room was a very touching thing. The three girls directly affected were quite upset, and I saw the comradeship of the team take over. The players, sensing the hurt in their teammates, sort of dispersed themselves, with a few going to comfort each girl. There was a lot of sharing of emotions that night. But in the end, it was the comradeship of the team that, I believe, helped to get Angie,

In the hour between, 75 of the best college football players in the country came to know a little bit about life in the slow lane, far from the fields where their strong legs and straight backs let them do things others can only imagine.

Carrying gift teddy bears, players from the East and West teams for the January 26 East-West Shrine game visited sick and handicapped kids at Shriners Hospital for Crippled Children in San Fran-

Geri and Marijo through that evening.

"Each and every athlete, at some point in their lives, has to come to grips with reality," said Scarfo. "We as coaches must remember that a player's life as an athlete is only a tiny part of their daily lives. The personal life encroaches on the team concept. That is the nature of the amateur athlete."

"But at times like this, it is a positive thing that players can depend on teammates to rally around them and support them. Being part of a team can be crucial in getting through the tough times. I think that is what we are doing as a team now. We will support our teammates, and we will help them deal with their emotional strains until their brothers come home."

Lessons learned in the slow lane

Teddy bears were the icebreakers on the way in. Hugs cemented the bond on the way out.

cisco—the beneficiaries of the charity game at Stanford Stadium.

As usual, it was a different kind of experience for everyone involved, reported Gary Swan of the San Francisco Chronicle.

"One little girl said to me, 'You're a big boy,'" said 5-foot-11, 185-pound Dennis Arey, a wide receiver from San Diego State. "I told her I could bring in someone twice my size. She said, 'Oh no, that would scare me.'"

Chris Green, an Illinois defensive back who had just joined the injury-depleted East team, leaned over the bed of Gabriel Cortez, a 15-year-old with withered limbs who has spent much of his life in hospitals, and told him about the last 24 hours of his life.

Ken Spore, a brawny 17-year-old from Napa, looked like he was a football player hiding under the sheets.

"I only wish I could get up and play," said Spore as he played checkers with defensive lineman Shane Curry of Miami (Florida) and placed the captured pieces on his wide chest.

Spore had just had surgery for spina bifida, a defective closure of the spinal column. "This was the third time," he told Curry and Paul Vajda from Concordia University of Montreal. "The first two didn't work."

Jennifer Young, 16, of Pleasanton was talking to defensive back Kevin Scott of Stanford about how pins had been placed in her hip because it had started to come apart when she grew too fast.

"I get hit in the hip quite a few times," Scott said. "You never think about injuries like that. I know it's part of the game. But you don't think it's going to happen to you."

It all added up to a sobering lesson on life for gifted young athletes.

Lineman makes life-saving catch

A West Virginia University football player broke the fall of a man who jumped from the third-floor window of a burning apartment building.

Ron Bunofsky, a 6-4, 255-pound offensive lineman, said he was playing cards with his roommates across the street when fire broke out January 27 at the residence of Ernest L. Wallace in Morgantown.

"I was able to catch him under the chest and he landed on all fours," said Bunofsky, a sophomore.

Wallace, 21, of Camp Springs, Maryland, was in serious condition January 28 at Ruby Memorial Hospital, a nursing supervisor told the Associated Press.

Wallace could have been killed by the fall if Bunofsky had not been there, fire officials said. "He probably would have broken his neck," fire Capt. Rick Hill said.

Smoke alarms alerted residents on the first and second floors, but there was no alarm on the third floor to awaken Wallace, who was asleep, Hill said.

Others living in the house and Bunofsky began yelling and throwing rocks at Wallace's windows to rouse him, authorities said. By the time Wallace became aware of the fire, flames had already engulfed the first two floors of the residence, authorities said.

"He was hanging out of the window, head first, and we yelled for him to wait until we could get near to try and catch him," Bunofsky said. "He didn't wait and let go, and I just tried to break his fall."

reflects the elite of both the professional and amateur games. There are no quotas and no numbers. We simply are committed to putting forward the best Olympic team we can, but we want representation from both games. Every top player in professional, collegiate and amateur games will be screened and evaluated during the 1991-92 season.

This season of play will be, in essence, the Olympic trials as we have known them. The criteria for selection will be, as always, talent, integrity, team commitment, unselfishness, team chemistry, and commitment to play. While our polling at this point has always been informal, every indication is that there is a high level of interest in participating among the top 30 players in both the professional and collegiate games.

Our Olympic coaching staff will also reflect both the professional and amateur games in this transition year of 1992. The head coach will be someone who is at present, or has been, an NBA head coach in the three years prior to selection, sometime in 1991. One assistant will come from the NBA ranks and two from the collegiate, or amateur ranks.

The feeling there is that with an expected majority of professional players on the team, the head coach and an assistant should be from the NBA ranks, given their expertise, service and knowledge of the professional player/coach relationship. Equally important is to have two assistants from the collegiate ranks, based on their expertise, service and knowledge of the international game and competition.

We believe this Olympic team of players and coaches, both to be selected by the 12-man subcommittee of enormous expertise and experience, is the right mix to bring home the gold in 1992. It will be a team that will commit to the qualification tourney in late June through the Barcelona Games, beginning in late July. It will be an historic U.S. Olympic team, the first ever open to all our citizens, a right historically open to all other nations, but denied to the United States.

I believe it will be an Olympic team that we will all take great pride in and long remember.

Black conferences should profit from legislation

Southwestern Athletic Conference Commissioner James Frank says he is pleased with reforms governing intercollegiate athletics that were passed at the 1991 NCAA Convention.

"I believe the SWAC and the MEAC (Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference) fared well at the Convention. Our programs should improve and grow as a result of the approved reforms," Frank said.

The SWAC and the MEAC, the two historically black Division I leagues, won what is considered a major victory when NCAA Division I-AA delegates passed Proposal No. 113, granting a football bowl game between the champions of the SWAC and MEAC. This contest will be named the Heritage Bowl and will be played after the Division I-AA play-offs at a site to be determined.

James Frank

The Heritage Bowl proposal was voted down at the 1990 Convention.

"Last year, members said it (the Heritage Bowl proposal) was too restrictive," Frank said. "They felt that other conferences should have the opportunity to have a bowl game as well."

"Some said the game would be a threat to the Division I-AA playoffs. That's not the case, because the game would be played after the play-offs."

Frank attributes passage of Proposal No. 113 to the conference's early lobbying efforts.

"We wrote letters, made phone calls and did whatever we could to get it passed," Frank said. "The passage of this proposal should be a financial boost for both conferences. It should provide additional revenue for the schools and the operations of the conference offices."

Following are other proposals adopted at the Convention that significantly affect SWAC schools, accompanied by Frank's comments.

Proposal No. 44—scheduling, Division I: Requires Division I member institutions to schedule and play 100 percent of their contests used to fulfill Division I sports-sponsorship requirements, and at least 50 percent of their contests beyond that number, against Division I opponents.

"This should not adversely affect our schools," Frank said. "The geographical location of our institutions should enable us to meet this requirement without too much difficulty."

Proposal No. 45—sports sponsorship: Requires all Division I members to sponsor a minimum of seven sports for both men and women.

"Our schools shall meet this requirement, and it should not impose too much of a hardship," Frank said.

Proposal No. 46—Division I financial aid: Establishes minimum financial aid requirements as components of Division I membership criteria.

"Our member schools will qualify for Division I status with the passage of Proposal No. 46-2 (this provision applies to an institution if the average per student allotment of Pell Grant dollars for undergraduates reported to the U.S. Department of Education is more than one standard deviation above the mean for all reporting Division I member institutions; this would be done on a yearly basis). It won't be necessary for our schools to come up with an additional amount of approximately $200,000 to $300,000," he said.

Frank added that none of the cost-cutting proposals, such as the elimination of athletics dormitories, cutting of coaching staffs and scholarships, and decreasing the time allotted for student participation in athletics, should adversely affect the conference.

Letter to the Editor

To the Editor:

At the 1991 NCAA Convention, we witnessed a great deal of confusion in Division III due to honest and concerted efforts to fix something that really wasn't broken.

Fortunately, much ill-conceived legislation was defeated or withdrawn. One such proposal was No. 75, which sought to "preclude a student-athlete who has competed in a sport at another collegiate institution during the same academic year." Such legislation is clearly contrary to the spirit of the Division III philosophy statement.

An example of behavior consistent with our philosophy statement occurred recently when an outstanding women's basketball player, for personal, nonsports reasons, chose to transfer to the University of St. Thomas (Minnesota) from rival Gustavus Adolphus College.

When the two teams met shortly thereafter at Gustavus Adolphus, student behavioral problems were anticipated. Instead, understanding and respecting the young lady's decision to transfer to St. Thomas (Minn.), the captain of the Gustavus Adolphus team presented her with a bouquet of flowers upon the team's arrival. A closely contested game ensued with no signs of rancor on the part of players or fans.

As a firm believer in deregulation, students' rights and the Division III philosophy statement, I was delighted to see manifestations of all of these concepts in this episode.

Coaches want fixed format for games despite TV lure

Big Ten Conference basketball coaches, complaining of helter-skelter scheduling, say they would like to get back to a more fixed format, even at the expense of television time.

Most would like a format with games on Wednesdays and Saturdays, they told the Associated Press.

"Let's make a schedule and then alter it as little as possible," said Jud Heathcote of Michigan State University. "There has to be a fine line with television, some give and take. I don't think anyone wants to give up any ESPN games."

Games have been spread through the week with various teams playing Mondays, Wednesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays. At one time or another, some teams play three games in one week and then have layoffs up to nine days.

"I don't expect a perfect schedule," said Lou Henson of the University of Illinois, Champaign. "My main complaint is playing three games in six days. We'd like two games in a week and we don't want big breaks."

The University of Wisconsin, Madison, just played three conference games in five days against Minnesota, Michigan State and Ohio State—and that was after a nonconference game with Portland two days before Minnesota.

"I don't think that's fair," said coach Steve Yoder of Wisconsin.

"You can't prepare for your next game. And we were dumb enough to schedule a game before Minnesota. I would prefer a Wednesday-Saturday schedule to give you time to prepare for Saturday's game."

"I don't know how you can get away from TV," said Yoder. "You have to be flexible if that's the way it has to be."

"Most programs are concerned about finances. As long as you have programs and conferences that depend on TV, you have to be flexible enough to deal with it."

Northwestern University's Bill Foster, who had four games in eight days, said, "We want to have our cake and eat it, too. It's all a matter of finances."

"We have serious scheduling problems," said Purdue University's Gene Keady.

Clem Haskins, head men's basketball coach
University of Minnesota, Twin Cities

"It sounds corny, but (last season) I realized it's more important than ever for me to get away, to get recharged, to relax myself from the mental strain. But while I say that, I haven't found a way here in Minnesota to get away, and I've got to. It's scary."

"Now, when I do get away from the game physically, mentally I'm still here."

"Since my little breakdown at Kansas State (he collapsed from hyperventilation), other coaches and friends keep telling me I've got to get away, and I know it's more important than ever. I've got to turn more responsibility over to my assistants. I'm going to take a month out of the office after the season and take a long cruise with my wife and go down to the farm."

"If I don't do something about the stress, someone else will be coaching here, because I won't be around anymore."

Rick Majerus, head men's basketball coach
University of Utah
The Washington Post

"I'm certainly not the same guy (after heart bypass surgery). Facing up to your mortality does that to you. I don't think I ever exactly believed the world revolved around basketball, but I guess my world kind of did. Now, I don't need to make a joke to smile about things. I smile just because I'm alive."

"If I'm over on the sideline about to yell at someone or feeling myself turning red in the face, I just sit down on the bench and reevaluate my priorities a little bit. Basketball is a wonderful thing, but it's not worth killing yourself over."

Rich Herrin, head men's basketball coach
Southern Illinois University, Carbondale
The Associated Press

"I'll play anybody, anywhere, any time to be on national television. I'll be the first to tell you I'd rather play every game at 7:35 p.m., but I'll do anything for the recognition (by playing late games for television)."

Richard D. Schultz, executive director
NCAA
Des Moines Register

"I hope the commission's (Knight Foundation Commission on Intercollegiate Athletics) report will take into account what has happened (at the NCAA Convention)."

"The view from here should be that the presidents are willing to deal with the flaws of college athletics in a responsible and reasonable manner. They know that the flaws have to be dealt with."

Bruce Corrie, director of athletics
Northwestern University
Chicago Tribune

"This (NCAA legislation) will be a reduction in the philosophy of keeping up with the Joneses: 'They have one extra coach, I'd better get two extras; they're giving extra scholarships, we have to have more; they practice for an extra hour, we'd better work an extra hour and a half."

"The advantages we'll see are primarily in football. The reduction from 95 to 85 scholarships is a savings of $200,000 for the university, a major impact financially."

"It's also creating more players in a pool from which we potentially can recruit. Ten fewer scholarships means 500 players that presently go to the top 50 schools will potentially be available. We've achieved one element of parity right there."

Tom Penders, head men's basketball coach
University of Texas, Austin

"I think it's (reduction of coaching staffs) ridiculous. Fifteen years ago, I had the same size staff as I do now, and I had one-tenth the duties. Now, school presidents want you to go out and speak to alumni groups and get involved in the community. Those are things I'll probably have to cut back on, because I'll have to be in the office more."

"I'm not going to let the kids suffer academically."

Dale Brown, head men's basketball coach
Louisiana State University
The (Nashville) Tennessean

"I think we've been overstaffed for years. You see more guys on the bench with suits and ties than (you see) players."

"I think it's (grant-in-aid cutback) an excellent idea. We will have more parity around the country."

Scoring at 19-year high, but shooting accuracy dips

By James M. Van Valkenburg
NCAA Director of Statistics

The three-point shot, now in its fifth year, is helping Division I scoring to a 19-year high, but it is just part of the story.

Players are shooting more three-pointers than ever, but they simply are shooting more often from all ranges.

At midseason, the country's Division I players are averaging 155 points per game (both teams combined, all games involving at least one Division I team)—highest since 1972's 155.3. It was 155.4 in 1971, the record—and 155.1 in 1970. Those are the three highest scoring averages in history. Last season's final average was 149.8.

Players are averaging 124.32 field-goal attempts per game—highest since 1978. That is 5.46 above last season's final figure, but get this—two-point attempts increased 3.09 per game vs. a 2.37 increase in three-point attempts.

Accuracy down

Field-goal-shooting accuracy is down to 45.6 percent from all ranges—lowest since 45.4 in 1974. The main reason is the increase in three-point use. As the use of the three-pointer goes up, its accuracy goes down.

One of every 4.4 shots is a three-pointer so far this season, vs. one of every 6.4 in 1987, first season of universal use (there were conference experiments prior to that). In 1987, successful three-pointers averaged exactly seven in 18.25 attempts per game; in 1988 it was 7.97 in 20.84 attempts; in 1989, 8.87 in 23.60; in 1990, 9.42 in 25.67, and so far this season, 10.07 made per game in 28.04 attempts—35.9 percent.

This season's increase in two-point attempts has brought a tiny decrease in two-point accuracy—48.5 percent at midseason vs. last season's final 48.6. Free-throw accuracy is 67.9 percent vs. last year's final 68.9.

Big Eight leads

The Big Eight Conference, the perennial scoring leader, is doing it again. It is averaging 87.66 points per game per team to 87.19 for the Atlantic Coast Conference.

The Big Eight also leads in field-goal accuracy at 50.19 percent to 49.99 for the Big Ten Conference, which leads in three-point accuracy at 40.5 percent.

Record women's scoring

Scoring reached a record high at midseason in women's Division I basketball and nearly all the increase came from more use of the three-pointer, now in its fourth season of universal use in the women's game.

Scoring reached 140.6 points per game (all games involving at least one Division I team). That is up 2.5 per game over last season and above the record 139.4 in 1984. Scoring via three-pointers is up 2.46 points per game.

Use of the three-point shot has been increasing at a much faster pace in the women's game, compared to the men. One of every 14 shots was a three-pointer four seasons ago; now it is one of every eight.

The average Division I women's game is producing 5.21 successful three-pointers in 16.07 shots (both teams combined) at midseason. In the 1990 season, it was 4.39 in 13.22; in 1989 it was 3.71 in 10.89, and in 1988, the first year, it was 3.03 in 9.02.

The greater the frequency of three-pointers, the lower the national field-goal accuracy from all ranges, so it is no surprise that accuracy is at a record low of 41.8 percent at midseason. The same rule holds true for three-pointers, where accuracy is at a record low of 32.4 percent.

At the free-throw line, the national percentage is 66.4, down from last year's final 67 percent.

The average game now is producing 128.4 field-goal shots, equaling the record set in 1984.

Women shoot more often than men, probably because they have a 30-second shot clock to 45 seconds for men.

ACC leads

The Atlantic Coast Conference leads the nation in scoring at 83.96 points per game per team and in field-goal accuracy at 48.55 percent at midseason.

The Pacific 10 Conference is second in scoring at 77.52 and the Southeastern Conference is second in field-goal accuracy at 45.75 percent.

In three-point accuracy, the Sun Belt Conference is on top, 36.85 percent to 36.74 for the SEC.

Three-point exploits

Colby-Sawyer freshman Jim Durrell set an all-divisions NCAA record by making all nine of his three-point shots vs. Southern Vermont College (breaking eight-for-eight by several players). Making this even more remarkable, Colby-Sawyer is

Felicia Sutton, Northeast Missouri State, is among Division II rebounding leaders three-pointers scored with 202 (the Division III record is 263). (Mickey Curtis, Westfield State SID)

Some believe the current three-point line is not a stern enough test for the talented players of today. Oregon's Kevin Mixon is proving that in his own way. Amazingly, 41 of his last 44 shots from the field have been three-pointers. For the season, 73 percent of his attempts have come from "long" range. He is was possible. Harris, whose up-bringing is far from rural, responded: "I'll tell you how. I'm 2,000 in the classroom and 4,000 on the streets. By my calculations, that makes me about 3,500 in life. Definitely smarter." (Al Langer, Montclair State SID)

St. Rose coach Brian Beaury on the tragic death of his former player, Mack Mondora, a 1990 graduate: "When I recruit kids, I go into their homes and tell them I'm going to be their mother, father, brother, sister, roommate and possibly the worst person they've ever met—maybe all in the same day. We have lost a member of our family."

Beaury after a 2-4 downslide (making his team 10-5): "The players need some time to get lunch by themselves. When I'm tired of them, I know they're tired of each other." (Keith Ryan, St. Rose SID)

Mississippi State coach Richard Williams, contrasting the national rebounding leader, 7-1, 290-pound sophomore Shaquille O'Neal of Louisiana State, with his own Greg Carter, a distant second to O'Neal in the Southeastern Conference: "Greg is the leading SEC rebounder among the normal-sized people." (David Rosinski, Mississippi State associate SID)

Milestones

Pittsburgh-Johnstown coach Jodi Gault got her 200th career victory by beating Philadelphia Textile, 75-

46. This is her ninth season at the school, and her career won-lost record is 200-34 for an .854 percentage—second in Division II to .872 by Delta State's Lloyd Clark. (Deb Yesenasky, Pittsburgh-Johnstown assistant women's coach and SID)

Grand Valley State's men defeated Oakland, 77-65, to give coach Tom Villemure his 358th career win. That gave him the most all-time wins of any college coach (four-year level) in the state of Michigan. He passed Kalamazoo's Ray Steffen, who was 357-348 from 1956 to 1987. Earlier this season, Grand Valley got its 400th win since the varsity program began in the 1966-67 season. (Don Thomas, Grand Valley State SID)

Colorado Mines coach Jim Darden, a former Wyoming standout and player-coach of the original Denver Nuggets, recently got his 400th career win. (Brian Bain, Colorado Mines SID)

Illinois State women's coach Jill Hutchison, in her 20th season, got her 350th career victory by defeating Drake on the road. She leads all 26 Division I coaches in Illinois, male and female, in wins at their current schools. "I won't forget this game because of the way the team played," she said. "It took a big-time effort." Said senior forward LuAnn Robinson, who had a career-high 24 points: "Now we want to get her 20 more this season." (Maria Shinn, Illinois State assistant SID)

La Salle recently got its 1,000th all-time victory in only its 61st season of men's varsity basketball. More than 70 Division I teams have reached 1,000 wins, but only 12 outrank La Salle in winning percentage, at .654 entering the season. (Don Vetrone, La Salle assistant SID)

73 straight

West Texas State's women have won 73 straight home games at WTSU Fieldhouse, commonly known as "The Box." Their last home loss came in early December 1986. The Lady Buffs have lost only three games at home in the last eight seasons—to Southern Methodist, Oklahoma and Wayland Baptist. West Texas State holds the Division II record, but the NCAA all-divisions record of 88 was set by Division III Rust from 1982 to 1989. (Scott Robinson, West Texas State women's SID)

a first-year program made up entirely of freshmen. Durrell scored a season-high 51 that night and has other games of 41 and 28, helping the team to an 8-6 record. (John Lemieux, Colby-Sawyer head coach)

After his team hit 12 of 13 three-pointers in a victory at Southeastern Louisiana, Texas-Arlington coach Mark Nixon said: "That is great shooting, even if there is no crowd and nobody is guarding you." (Jim Patterson, Texas-Arlington sports information director)

The Clarion women's team scored 18 three-point goals, a Division II record, in a 106-73 victory at Point Park. (Richard Herman, Clarion SID)

Cincinnati's Keith Starks, a 6-7 senior post player, has hit eight of 15 three-pointers the last three games compared to just three of eight in the previous 97 games of his career. Said coach Bob Huggins: "Keith is always on the court an hour before practice, working on that shot." (John Bianco, Cincinnati assistant SID)

Chicago junior guard Kim Burke is 23-for-60 from three-point range this season, but she is 0-for-15 inside the three-point arc. Can anyone top that? (Chuck Sadowski, Chicago SID)

Eight different Central (Iowa) men scored three-point goals in a 118-70 win over Iowa Wesleyan. That tied a Division III record. (Larry Happel, Central (Iowa) SID)

Bates and Thomas scored 34 three-pointers in 65 attempts, both Division III men's records, in a 120-108 Bates victory. (Rick Denison, Bates SID)

Alabama State's Lisa McMullen, the national Division I leader in scoring and three-pointers made, set a division record with 26 three-point attempts in a loss to Alcorn State. (Jack Jeffery, Alabama State SID)

Westfield State senior Jim Bruno already has broken the New England Division III career record for

44-for-117 from three-point range and 20-for-43 from two-point range. (Steve Hellyer, Oregon assistant athletics director)

Quotes of the week

Webster coach Randy Kriewall put this message on his answering machine after Webster's women beat Principia, 60-57, for their first victory in the program's history, after losing 63 straight games since the start of the 1986-87 season: "We won and I'm not quite sure how to act. I may be looking for counseling." (Bob Delaney, Webster SID)

After his 10-4 team rallied to score 13 of the game's last 15 points to beat Akron, 74-66, Illinois-Chicago coach Bob Hallberg commented: "I hate the thought of playing 28 games like this. Every game for us is a coronary."

Said starting forward Brian Hill: "I keep telling coach if it takes us winning ugly, well, that's just what we'll have to do." (Dave Mateer, Illinois-Chicago SID)

After Gary Brokaw's Iona Gaels were embarrassed by a 19-point loss to Manhattan on television in their first Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference game, they rebounded for a first-place 4-1 league record. En route, they ended La Salle's 30-game MAAC winning streak, 77-74. What's more, they did it at La Salle, which had won 54 of its last 57 league games. Said Brokaw: "This is my biggest win since I was at Notre Dame and we snapped UCLA's (all-time NCAA) winning streak (71-70 at South Bend in 1974)." (Dave Torromeo, Iona SID)

During Montclair State's trip to play Rutgers-Newark, talk turned to grades and players started kidding senior center Chris Albertson, who had earned a perfect 4.000 grade-point average for the semester. Leading the charge was Ernie Harris, who said, "There is no way you can have a 4.000, because I'm definitely smarter than you." Albertson, who is from a rural New Jersey community, replied that he didn't think that

Auburn professor's work directed toward saving GIs' lives

If a ground assault is launched to dislodge the Iraqi army from Kuwait, an Auburn University professor will watch intently because a helicopter-based missile system he helped design is likely to be used to minimize casualties among U.S. and allied troops.

Action in the Persian Gulf will be the first major wartime use of the helicopter-launched, laser-guided "smart" missiles developed in the 1970s, said Joseph S. Boland, an engineering researcher who was involved in the design and testing of the missile system's fire-control mechanism. Boland is Auburn's faculty athletics representative.

Boland, now an associate dean of engineering, worked on the project for the Army Missile Command from 1972 to 1985 as a member of the Auburn department of electrical engineering.

"The same technology we developed to confront Cold War threats will be used now to save American lives in the Persian Gulf," Boland said. "These high-precision systems can knock out targets with fewer missiles, thereby saving many of our troops' lives."

Helicopter gunships armed with the smart missiles will play a large role in countering the threat Iraq's 4,000 tanks will pose in ground warfare.

The development of laser-guided missiles for Army helicopters influenced development of the jet-launched missiles and bombs that are being used so effectively in the air war against Iraq, Boland said. The principles behind the systems are basically the same.

After a laser beam is used to pinpoint the target, fire-control computers lock it in place. Smart missiles and bombs are guided by the laser beam to home in on the illuminated spot, Boland explained.

"If you keep the laser spot trained on the target, the missile will hit," he added. "That's why these things are so accurate."

Boland's contribution to the helicopter missile system was in helping to develop mathematical algorithms that allow the fire-control computers to keep the laser beam pointed at the right spot, despite the copter's movement and extreme vibrations in the optics used to designate the target.

Boland worked on the system during and after the Vietnam War when many university faculty members across the nation refused to conduct military research.

"There was considerable feeling that it wasn't honorable work to devote your skills and intelligence to the development of instruments of destruction," he said. "But I felt that the survival of the West would depend on us having sophisticated weapons technology."

Cold War tensions have eased now, but high-tech weapons apparently still have a role to play in ensuring world security, Boland added.

"When you absolutely have to have these weapons, it's worthwhile to have the most sophisticated ones possible," he said. "I feel very satisfied with the relatively small contribution I made in this effort."

GM signs for Final Four

General Motors will be the exclusive automobile advertiser during coverage of the Final Four by CBS Sports for the next seven years, The New York Times has reported.

The terms are reported to be almost $400 million, and the contract is believed to be the largest deal ever made involving advertising and sports, the Times said.

"We're delighted to have their participation," said Susan Kerr, director of communications at CBS. "It's a deal that's unequaled in its stature and length for one sports event."

The Chevrolet division of General Motors has been the only domestic automobile advertiser for the Final Four for several years.

Sites selected for Olympic women's basketball team trials

Sites have been selected for the 1991 U.S. Olympic Festival women's basketball trials, set for April 19-21. Trials will be held at the University of Nebraska, Lincoln (North); Georgia State University (South); Robert Morris College (East), and California State University, Long Beach (West).

Any woman born on or after January 1, 1971, is eligible to participate, and applications are available through USA Basketball, 1750 East Boulder Street, Colorado Springs, Colorado 80909. Pauley Pavilion at the University of California, Los Angeles, will host the Olympic Festival women's basketball competition July 13-16.

Stetson University's entire baseball team (including coaches - 30 people in all) recently participated in the school's annual winter-term blood drive, boosting the total blood donated to a record of more than 120 pints.

"We appreciate their efforts and thank coach (Pete) Dunn for getting the team to support the drive," said Mitchell Reddish, a Stetson faculty member and chair of the drive. "We had a few pale faces," Dunn said, "but in general it was a great success."

Hartwick College's new fitness center, located in the Binder Physical Education Center, opened January 21. Construction was made possible by funds generated through Hartwick's comprehensive Campaign XXI.

Included in the two-level center are 14 aerobic-equipment stations, a 12-station set of Nautilus floor equipment, a free-weight deck with more than 3,000 pounds of free weights, and personal-fitness-evaluation facilities.

Through games of January 21, Carnegie Mellon University's women's basketball team was ranked No. 12 in the Association's Division III poll - the first ranking ever for the program. It came on the heels of the Tartans' 60-58, come-from-behind road upset of Washington University (Missouri).

"It was the sweetest win in my seven years here," said head coach Gerri Seidl. "We beat the third-ranked team in the country on their floor and snapped their 19-game home and 20-game University Athletic Association winning streaks."

Although the victory boosted the Tartans' record to 14-2 overall (7-0 in the UAA), as recently as 1987-88, Seidl's team finished the season 12-13. But since the start of the 1988-89 season, Carnegie Mellon has an overall record of 51-18.

"We had our sights on building a national program when we started to recruit our first class in 1984-85," Seidl said. "Recruiting is the first step to building a national program."

Harry Perretta earned career victory No. 250 January 16 when his Villanova University women's basketball team defeated Boston College, 63-54. Named head coach in 1978 at age 21, his teams have posted winning records 10 times in 12 seasons. Three of his squads have won Big East Conference titles.

In his 20th year of coaching in Division I, Fordham University men's and women's swimming coach Don Galluzzi recorded his 200th collegiate victory when his men's team outpointed squads from Lafayette College and Bucknell University in dual meets January 18 at Easton, Pennsylvania.

"I'm real proud of getting 200 wins because I believe that longevity and consistency in any endeavor are what make a coach good," Galluzzi said. "If a program, school, athlete or coach is consistent, good things will come to them. I preach that to my athletes all the time."

Galluzzi, who is in his fourth year at Fordham, also has coached at

The coaches got those milestone victories in Franklin and Marshall's win over the University of Pittsburgh and Brown's win over Rutgers University, New Brunswick. Then, Faller's and Amato's matmen faced each other. Brown won, 23-11.

fall term, half of the University of Florida's women student-athletes earned grade-point averages of at least 3.000 (4.000 scale). With a team GPA of 3.170, the Lady Gator gymnastics squad earned an award given each fall and spring to the women's team with the highest overall GPA. The award is named in honor of Ann Marie Lawler, associate athletics director. Florida's women's tennis team also posted a combined GPA above 3.000 (3.040).

Ten of the 38 Grambling State University student-athletes named to the fall 1990 honor roll or dean's list were football players - tops among the school's athletics teams. Women's basketball player Alecia Roberson led all student-athletes with a 3.940 GPA.

Playing a Division I opponent is unusual enough for the men's basketball team at Kenyon College, but it wasn't the most unusual thing about the Lords' game January 28 at Youngstown State University.

When Kenyon senior Matt Alcorn took the court for the game, he found himself playing against his brother, Mike Alcorn, a freshman at Youngstown State.

Both brothers excel as shooters from behind the three-point line, hitting at least 40 percent of their shots this season. And Kenyon's Alcorn pretty much knew what to expect from his younger brother in the game. "He is an outstanding athlete and will be more difficult to guard against than most people, but I know the way he plays. Neither one of us is known for our defense. I'm sure I can score against him."

It took overtime January 12, but when Merrimack College's men's basketball team defeated St. Michael's College, 88-84, Warrior head coach Bert Hammel became the most successful in school history. That victory, his 153rd since being named head coach in 1980, moved Hammel past William LaRochelle on Merrimack's all-time victory list.
