Commission approves strategic planning process

Revenue-distribution report, coaches also get attention

The NCAA Presidents Commission has adopted an ongoing planning process that will establish the primary topics to be considered by the Commission for at least the next three NCAA Conventions.

During its fall meeting October 1-2 in Kansas City, Missouri, the Commission adopted the recommendations of its Subcommittee on Strategic Planning, chaired by Thomas K. Hearn Jr., president of Wake Forest University.

In other key actions in the fall meeting, the Commission:

- Adopted the recommendations of the Commission's Subcommittee to Review NCAA Revenue-Distribution Principles, chaired by Chancellor Gene A. Budig of the University of Kansas.

- Affirmed its sponsorship of Commission proposals for action at the 1992 NCAA Convention, including all of the previously announced amendments designed to strengthen academic requirements for initial and continuing athletics eligibility.

- Agreed to oppose more than 30 amendments submitted for the 1992 Convention that would rescind or weaken the reform actions successfully supported by the Commission at the 1991 Convention (see story on page 3).

- Listened to the views of seven coaches who were invited to meet with the Commission at its October 1 dinner and agreed to continue to consult with appropriate coaching groups regarding legislative issues and to do so as early in the legislative process each year as possible, probably in April.

Strategic planning

The strategic-planning approach developed by Hearn's subcommittee calls for a rolling plan of work for the Commission that always will span at least three NCAA Conventions. The Commission voted to establish the strategic-planning group as a standing Commission committee to continue this exercise.

Specifically, the Commission adopted a plan that will have the Commission focus on the following issues for the 1993, 1994 and 1995 Conventions:

R. Gerald Turner (right), chair of the NCAA Presidents Commission, leads a discussion during the meeting. NCAA Executive Director Richard D. Schultz also attended the October 1-2 meeting in Kansas City, Missouri.

- Between now and the 1993 Convention, the emphasis will be on presidential authority and institutional responsibility.

Included will be certification or accreditation of athletics programs, simplification of the Association's legislative process, the structure and authority of the Commission itself, the role of institutional chief executive officers in the NCAA, means of strengthening the relationships between CEOs and other constituent groups in athletics, and the overall area of institutional control and integrity and strengthening of the CEO's role in those matters.

The Commission will sponsor a resolution at the coming Convention to authorize the study of those

Lack of trust threatens reform, panelists say

By P. David Pickle
Editor-in-Chief, The NCAA News

Coaches and athletics administrators participating in a roundtable discussion said a lack of trust among NCAA member institutions could short-circuit the progress of academic reform in the organization.

"There's a fear that the other guy is going to get the edge," said NCAA Presidents Commission member Joseph N. Crowley, University of Nevada, Reno. "We legislate to contain the other guy."

In the September 30 program in Kansas City, Missouri, Duke University men's basketball coach Mike Krzyzewski echoed the concern about trust and said the NCAA does not function as a team legislatively. Although presidents, faculty, athletics directors, coaches and players are all components of the NCAA, Krzyzewski said coaches and players have little input in the formation of rules. "All voices are not heard," Krzyzewski said. "There's definitely not the idea of trust.... Rules are made by people who don't have to live by them."

University of Southern California men's basketball coach George Raveling said coaches need to be heard. "There is a path for the president, the athletics director and the faculty representative," he said, "but there's no path for the coach. A coach can't even serve on the NCAA Council. It's such a fundamental issue, it's almost insulting to have to discuss it."

Corporate partners offer more than sponsorship

By Jack L. Copeland
Assistant Editor, The NCAA News

Some of America's most visible corporations are members of one of college athletics' most powerful teams.

And as participants in the NCAA's corporate-partner program, those firms are part of something that is unique among corporate-sponsorship programs in athletics, according to its administrators.

"It's our intent to promote a team concept," said Robert C. Khayat, president of the NCAA Foundation, which recently assumed responsibility for overseeing the program. "That's why we call them partners rather than sponsors. We want them to have a vested interest in college athletics."

Of course, the members of that team provide dollars, which are used primarily to support the Association's youth programs, drug-education programs, and promotional activities for various men's and women's championships. By doing so, corporate partners make it possible for the Association to pursue such activities without diverting funds from mandated programs.

But unlike other sponsorship arrangements, the NCAA program asks more.

The corporations also invest time and expertise. Twice a year, representatives of the firms gather as a group to meet with officials of the Foundation and Host Creative Communications, which runs the program for the Association and is responsible for signing partners and licensing NCAA logos and marks for their use.

"It's our responsibility to meet with representatives of those corporations on a regular basis and share our ideas and aspirations with them," Khayat said. "The purpose is to get them to buy into supporting the positive goals and initiatives of college athletics."

Alcohol messages set for TV

Three public-service announcements suggesting that college students don't need to drink to have fun have been produced by the NCAA.

The 30-second PSAs, which will air this fall during network telecasts of NCAA football games and in the television packages of six major Division I-A conferences, were produced in conjunction with the Techniques for Effective Alcohol Management (TEAM) coalition.

TEAM, which operates in conjunction with the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, includes representatives from the National Football League, the National Basketball Association, Major League Baseball, the National Hockey League and the NCAA. The organization met September 25-26 at the NCAA national office, at which time the NCAA premiered the spots.

Much of the TEAM effort is directed at facility alcohol management, said NCAA Director of Sports Sciences Frank D. Uryasz, who represents the Association along with Director of Communications James A. Marchiony. Working with TEAM, the professional leagues have trained stadium personnel on how to deal with alcohol consumption by fans and have established systems to have in place if problems arise.

"The NCAA is just beginning to find its place in all that," Uryasz said.

Although alcohol is not sold at NCAA championships and is not sold at most regular-season events involving member institutions, the question of whether "tailgating" is getting out of control now is being raised, Uryasz said.

"It doesn't make any difference if it's a day game or not," Uryasz said. "Fans are showing up at 9 a.m. to barbecue and drink. If there's a problem in the parking lot, nine out of 10 times it's related to drinking."

Adding to the problem is the widespread practice of fans smuggling alcoholic beverages into stadiums and drinking more in their cars after the game.

Besides the fact that the NHTSA is concerned that such fans are driving, Uryasz said college students are noting a mixed message from their institutions: College students should control their drinking, but graduates are permitted to drink excessively.

In some cases, institutions have strict policies regulating alcohol consumption on campus, but those policies may be ignored widely Saturday mornings, Uryasz said. In any case, he said many schools do not have written alcohol-management policies. The NCAA itself has no policy stated on the tickets to championships events, nor does it convey consistently any alcohol-related messages through signage at any of its 76 championships.

The NCAA also is participating in TEAM's media efforts. Marchiony said that in addition to the public-service announcements, the Association also has produced print messages that address the question of alcohol consumption by young people. They will be carried in NCAA championships programs and distributed to the membership as part of the program series.

Among the members of a coalition known as TEAM (Techniques for Effective Alcohol Management) who met September 25-26 at the Association's national office were (from left) Jerry Sachs, president of the Centre Group; Jim Small, Major League Baseball's manager of public relations; Linda Pantell, manager of Major League Baseball's West Coast facilities, and Al Lauersdorf, traffic safety specialist for the National Safety Council

NCAA Bylaws 14.8.1 and 14.8.2—participation on outside team during the academic year

Divisions I and II member institutions should note that in accordance with Bylaw 14.8.1.1, a student-athlete in any sport other than basketball who participates in competition during the academic year as a member of any outside team in any noncollegiate, amateur competition, except while representing the institution in intercollegiate competition in accordance with the permissible playing season in that sport as specified in Bylaw 17, becomes ineligible for intercollegiate competition in that sport for the remainder of the year and for the next academic year. During its January 6, 1991, meeting, the NCAA Council determined that it would be permissible for student-athletes (other than partial qualifiers or nonqualifiers serving an academic year of residence) to practice as a member of an outside team without jeopardizing eligibility for intercollegiate competition in that sport. A Division I or II student-athlete may compete as a member of an outside team during the academic year only if the student meets one of the exceptions or waivers set forth in Bylaws 14.8.5.1 and 14.8.6.1.

In Division III, per Bylaw 14.8.1.2, a student-athlete in any sport other than basketball becomes ineligible for intercollegiate competition for the remainder of the season in his or her sport if, following enrollment in college and during any year in which the student-athlete is a member of an intercollegiate squad or team, he or she competes or has competed as a member of any outside team in any noncollegiate, amateur competition (e.g., tournament play, exhibition games or other activity) during the institution's intercollegiate season in the sport. A Division III student-athlete may compete on an outside team during the institution's playing season if the student qualifies for any of the waivers set forth in Bylaws 14.8.5.1 and 14.8.6.1.

Finally, in all divisions in the sport of basketball, a student-athlete who participates in any organized basketball competition, except while representing the institution in intercollegiate competition in accordance with the permissible playing season specified in Bylaw 17.3, becomes ineligible for any further intercollegiate competition in the sport of basketball. A student-athlete may participate in such outside competition only in accordance with the exceptions set forth in Bylaw 14.8.5.2 (e.g., summer league) or the waivers set forth in Bylaw 14.8.6.2.

Correction, Division I Operating Manual—NCAA Bylaws 13.1.8.2.1 and 14.8.3.3

Division I member institutions should note that the provisions of Bylaws 13.1.8.2.1 and 14.8.3.3 are no longer applicable in Divisions I and II. The 1991 NCAA Division I Operating Manual incorrectly indicates that such provisions are still effective. The provisions of 13.1.8.2.1 and 14.8.3.3 will be deleted from the 1992-93 Division I Operating Manual.

NCAA Bylaw 14.6.1.1—Division III transfers

Division III member institutions should note that in accordance with Bylaw 14.6.1.1, a student who has not previously participated in intercollegiate athletics and who transfers from a two- or four-year collegiate institution to a Division III member institution shall be immediately eligible, under the Association's transfer regulations, to compete for the Division III institution, including NCAA championship competition. If the student has ever participated in intercollegiate athletics, the student must have been academically eligible had he or she remained at that institution.

During its September 17, 1991, telephone conference, the NCAA Interpretations Committee determined that a student-athlete who was transferred previously from one four-year institution to a two- or four-year institution that does not sponsor the student-athlete's sport would be immediately eligible upon transfer to a Division III institution, provided the student-athlete is considered to have been in good academic standing at the institution that does not sponsor the sport. The committee noted that good academic standing is determined by the academic authorities that determine the meaning of such phrases for all students enrolled at the institution.

issues and to develop legislation for the 1993 Convention.

• From January 1992 to January 1994, the focus will be on financial conditions and issues.

Included in this area are financial integrity and the general financial condition of college athletics; financial aid for student-athletes, including aid based on need and the actual cost of attendance; financial implications of providing equitable programs for men and women; the activities and influence of athletics foundations and booster organizations; the financial implications and influence of media-related revenues; coaches' compensation, and a review of previous cost-reduction and cost-containment actions to determine the need for additional such steps.

The Commission is sponsoring a resolution at the 1992 Convention to authorize the study of these topics. At the 1993 Convention, a resolution will be presented to mandate development of legislation for the 1994 Convention.

• From mid-1992 to January 1995, the Commission will work on topics relating to the welfare of student-athletes.

Listed as ingredients in this area are a review of the effects of 1991 legislation to reduce time demands on student-athletes; a review of the effects of legislation to strengthen academic requirements for athletics participation; a review of progress toward gender and racial equity in college athletics; the safety, health and well-being of student-athletes, including injury situations and drug abuse; institutional involvement in career and life planning by student-athletes, and opportunities for degree completion after athletics eligibility has been exhausted.

The Commission will identify these issues further in the last half of 1992 and present a resolution at the President Stanley O. Ikenberry of the University of Illinois makes a point during the Presidents Commission meeting 1993 Convention authorizing a study of the issues so identified. A resolution at the 1994 Convention then would mandate development of legislation for the 1995 Convention.

Hearn emphasized that it was not his committee's role to suggest the substance of the issues involved. "This document provides a procedure," he explained, "not a substantive answer to any of the issues." Hearn also noted that the Commission can add other issues to the schedule at any point.

Commission Chair R. Gerald Turner, chancellor of the University of Mississippi, strongly commended the Hearn subcommittee for what he termed "its significant work." He said the strategic-planning document "will provide a great deal of continuity through the years as the membership of the Commission itself changes."

In a press conference after the Commission meeting, the group's Division III chair, President David L. Warren of Ohio Wesleyan University, declared that chief executive officers "are in this for the long run, and the best evidence of that is the strategic plan. The plan does provide access for all interested groups to come in and state their views to the Commission," Warren said.

NCAA Executive Director Richard D. Schultz expressed pleasure with the strategic plan. "I think it's a good piece of work," he said. "This gives everyone involved in intercollegiate athletics a road map of what the issues are going to be."

The complete text of the strategic-planning subcommittee's report and an accompanying chart depicting the timetable involved will appear in the October 14 issue of The NCAA News. Copies also will be mailed to all NCAA presidents and chancellors.

Revenue distribution

The approved report of Budig's revenue-distribution subcommittee commended the work of the Special NCAA Advisory Committee to Review Recommendations Regarding Distribution of Revenues.

Specifically, the report praised the advisory committee "for conducting an open, effective, comprehensive and broad-based process and especially for successfully altering the previous system of distributing revenues based solely on winning and losing in a given year's basketball championship."

The Commission agreed to forward to the NCAA Executive Committee the following recommendations:

- That the amount set aside as a "membership trust" (i.e., the endowment or reserve account) be increased from the one percent of revenues approved for 1991-92 to two percent for 1992-93 and three percent for 1993-94. Then, when the distributions for 1994-95 through 1996-97 are determined, consideration should be given to increasing the amount placed in the reserve by one percent per year, escalating to six percent in 1996-97.

Proposals unchanged

The NCAA Presidents Commission has reaffirmed its sponsorship of all of the legislation that it previously had voted to submit for action at the 1992 Convention, emphasizing the proposals that would stiffen academic requirements for initial eligibility and for continuing eligibility.

"They (Commission members) still feel very strongly about that package," NCAA Executive Director Richard D. Schultz said after the meeting. "There has been no change in those proposals."

The group also voted to oppose most of the proposals submitted by the membership that would alter the reform actions taken at last year's Convention and affirmed its earlier position that it would not oppose the "fine-tuning" adjustments recommended by the Council subcommittee established for that purpose.

As a result of those decisions, the Commission, or one of its division subcommittees, will oppose the following proposals, with the numbers referring to the proposal numbers in the Second Publication of Proposed Legislation: Nos. 14, 15, 16, 22, 24, 26, 28, 29, 31, 33, 37, 40, 41, 66, 70, 71, 79, 81, 82, 89, 96, 103, 104, 112, 113, 115, 118, 119, 120, 121, 140 and 144.

Commissioner Chair R. Gerald Turner, chancellor of the University of Mississippi, noted that the Commission has stated throughout the year that it would not look kindly on any attempts to rescind or weaken the reform proposals adopted at the past two Conventions. "We accept or support the proposals that the Council is forwarding through the work of its fine-tuning subcommittee," he said, "but we are opposing the proposals that were not approved in that process because we believe that, collectively, they erode the reform agenda."

The Commission also agreed to announce its support for Proposal Nos. 45, 95, 107 and 135.

The group considered opposing or supporting several others but officially took no position on any other than those identified.

- That the concept of the "membership trust" be broadened to deal not only with the "rainy day" approach (i.e., protection against loss of revenues in future years), but also to advance the Commission's reform agenda, with such areas as certification and academic enhancement mentioned as possible considerations in that regard.

- That the distribution plan be subject to continual review and annual readjustment; that the Presidents Commission be involved in some manner in that review process, with that involvement continuing to focus on principles, rather than specific plan components or dollar allocations; that there be review of basing distributions on numbers of grants and numbers of sports to assure that the plan does not contradict the interests of both large and small Division I institutions that are facing reductions in sports and in athletics grants, and that there be further review of the principles to determine if there is some feasible way of affording additional recognition to the differences in budget commitments and philosophies among Division I members.

The report of the Budig subcommittee also will be printed in its entirety in the October 14 issue of The NCAA News and copies will be mailed directly to all CEOs in the NCAA membership.

Coaches

Coaches who spoke to the Commission members October 1 were George Raveling, University of Southern California; Grant Teaff, Baylor University; Jody Conradt, University of Texas at Austin; Gene McArtor, University of Missouri, Columbia; Beverly Kearney, University of Florida; John Mackovic, University of Illinois, Champaign, and Mike Krzyzewski, Duke University.

The coaches' primary message was that the Commission should find a more effective means of receiving advice from coaches, and that should occur earlier in the legislative process than it has in the past.

"I think the discussion was very productive," Schultz said after the Commission meeting. "The important thing that came out is that the Commission agrees that coaches are an important voice to be heard, in addition to the athletics directors, faculty representatives and others."

"We probably will have a better interchange in the future as a result of this," Schultz said, adding that "the coaches did not come in and ask to turn back the clock—to get this coach back or that grant back. They said they want to be able to have input at an earlier time."

Other highlights

Other actions taken by the NCAA Presidents Commission during its October 1-2 meeting in Kansas City, Missouri:

- Approved the text of a first-ever handbook on athletics for chief executive officers, first recommended nearly 2½ years ago by a special advisory committee to the Commission. That booklet will be printed and distributed to all CEOs in the membership within the next two months.

- Approved a slate of candidates for January 1992 vacancies on the Commission, as recommended by the Presidential Nominating Committee chaired by Stephen Joel Trachtenberg, George Washington University. Balloting on those candidates will be conducted between now and the 1992 Convention, at which the new members of the Commission will be announced. Candidates are not announced publicly in NCAA elections.

Drinking more prevalent than drugs

A nationwide high-school survey conducted in 1990 has found that one student in three has gone on a drinking spree, but few are smoking marijuana and only one in 50 is using cocaine.

Fourteen percent of high-school students included in the survey said they had smoked marijuana in the preceding month, the U.S. Centers for Disease Control reported September 26. Only two percent said they had used cocaine in the preceding month.

That compares with 37 percent who reported having five or more drinks on at least one occasion in the previous month, and 59 percent who said they had one drink.

The data come from a comprehensive survey of 11,631 students in grades nine through 12 nationwide. Comparable data from previous years are not available, but the findings are similar to previous studies, particularly a survey of 1990 high-school seniors. That study found 57 percent had taken a drink in the previous month and 14 percent had smoked marijuana.

The CDC also reported 1990 surveys from 21 states and five cities, again showing similar findings. For instance, among states, students reporting five-drink sprees ranged from 19 percent in Utah to 47 percent in Oklahoma. Reports of pot smoking ranged from seven percent in Alabama and Kansas to 17 percent in Massachusetts and West Virginia.

"The state data helps us understand that high-school kids in particular are using drugs throughout this country, in cities and states all over," said Dr. Laura Kann, chief of surveillance research with the CDC's adolescent health division.

"It's not just some other kids, somebody else's problem," she told The Associated Press.

The national survey asked students about their behavior in the preceding 30 days to better gauge their actual habits, not just whether they ever had experimented with booze or drugs, Kann said.

"This really gives us a handle on the problems we have right now," she said.

Hearn: Work of commission is only beginning

By Doug Tucker

The Presidents Commission is going to expand its power over the rules and policies of the NCAA and start planning for long-term results, says Wake Forest University President Thomas K. Hearn Jr.

"The reform movement is not winding down, it's winding up," Hearn said in an interview before opening a two-day meeting of the Presidents Commission October 1. "In the last couple of years, the movement has established itself.

"The Presidents Commission is lengthening its look at what a reformed intercollegiate system would look like. I think we have a ways to go."

Hearn said the 44-member Commission is going to take a suggestion from the Knight Foundation Commission on Intercollegiate Athletics that studied college sports and figure a way to ensure that every president will be in complete control of his school's athletics department.

"In general terms, the next issue is the issue of institutional control and presidential control," he said. "The Knight Commission said presidential control was the most important ingredient in ensuring the integrity of college athletics. We want to take a look at that issue as it relates to the relationship of presidents to their booster organizations, governing boards and relations with conferences.

"We've got to get away from enforcement at the NCAA level and encourage more and more institutional responsibility," Hearn added. "That really means that the president has to be in position to have the information and authority to deal with problems in the athletics department."

Since it was formed in 1984, the Presidents Commission has pushed wide-ranging and sometimes controversial reform legislation through the rule-making process, most notably cost-containment and time-reduction proposals and the death penalty for repeat violators.

So firm was its control of the NCAA Convention last January that one frustrated opponent described himself as "road-kill on the highway to reform."

Hearn, chair of the Commission's Subcommittee on Strategic Planning, said the group will begin planning its action up to four years in advance instead of working year-to-year as it has been doing.

Another subcommittee, chaired by University of Kansas Chancellor Gene A. Budig, has reviewed the NCAA's principles of revenue distribution. This is an area in which the Commission has never before been involved. It has the potential of stretching its power far beyond the original scope of the 44-member body.

"We've been working on these projects since last spring," Hearn said. "Now when we get ready to act on something, we'll have a reliable body of data."

A similar outcome is expected at January's Convention in Anaheim, California, where the presidents will put forward several far-ranging academic proposals. These will set up more stringent freshman eligibility standards, as well as establish more clearly defined criteria for continuing eligibility.

"There is confidence that they will be adopted," Hearn said. "We need to be certain, so we will continue to get the message out as to what the proposals are and why they are important."

A SUCCESS STORY

California running back White fights his way to the top

By Lowell Cohn
San Francisco Chronicle

Russell White was admitted to the University of California, Berkeley, as a Proposition 48 student, which means he did not meet academic requirements and could not play intercollegiate sports his first year. He was in football exile, could not go to practice or sit in on team meetings.

For the first time in his life, the superstar running back, who says he had an ego that could fill Memorial Stadium and spill over the Strawberry Canyon, was just a plain student.

Not a good one, either. He overslept classes because he didn't think he'd be missed. He moped because he wasn't playing football. He had tutors, but sometimes he'd stiff them, just not show up. At Christmas, he went home and talked things over with his mother. She told him not to blow this chance.

White

When he returned for the second semester, he saw a tutor in every subject at least once a day. He worked at school from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and then from 7 to 9 at night.

Did he miss football?

"No, I learned to get excitement out of school. Instead of 40,000 people yelling for me, it was me yelling for myself."

He still sees tutors, and he works with his girlfriend, Tori Scruggs, who takes some of the same classes. At first, he always limited himself to 12 units.

"You can take more. You can do it," Scruggs would encourage him. "I'm scared," he'd reply.

Last year, he took 16 units and did well. "I'm damn proud of myself. I jumped through a lot of hurdles," he said.

Back home in Pacoima, California, his friends were skeptical of his success. They thought he'd be back after one semester. "If I didn't come here, I might have ended up selling drugs," he said. "It's what a lot of my friends did just to get closer to the American dream."

White got up to meet with a camera crew from a local TV station. When he was done with them, he did an interview for another station. He's big news these days.

Scruggs followed him with her eyes. "We depend on each other," she said. "When I first met him, I didn't know who he was. I remember the first time I saw him, he came into my dorm room. I was sitting in bed with curlers in my hair and wearing a bathrobe. When he left, I told my roommate, 'I like this guy.' My roommate said, 'I heard he has the mind of a vegetable.'"

"I was really upset. I thought I should defend him. 'But isn't he the Proposition 48?' I was torn.

"Then I started to talk to him. He was not what everyone was saying. I helped him with a paper, and he had good ideas. He couldn't put them down. Either it was his dyslexia, or he wasn't trained. I learned to respect him."

Scruggs glanced at White. She shook her head. "I know nothing about football," she admitted, smiling. "I finally figured out what a down is. It's a try. You have to get so many yards in so many tries."

She laughed a young, innocent, happy laugh. From where he was sitting, White looked at her, caught the mood, and then he laughed, too.

Baseball season unfair to players

I recently read coach Hill Denison's letter to the editor in the September 9 issue of The NCAA News regarding the scheduling of college baseball's season. I totally agree with the content of his letter, and I believe many other college baseball coaches would concur as well.

A point I find most interesting is that the University of Southern Mississippi plays in a warm climate. For a coach of a Southern school to endorse a move of the playing season certainly lends more credibility to the proposal.

However, the most important element being disregarded is the players themselves. It is a great disservice to them to force participation in their sport during a nontraditional time of the year. Every other college athlete has the opportunity to play his or her sport during its natural time element. Baseball players, however, are forced to endure cold, wet weather during their playing seasons. During the best weather conditions, the players find themselves participating on summer teams.

Letter to the Editor

Gene Stephenson (Wichita State University coach) and Gary Ward (Oklahoma State University coach) went to great lengths to provide proposals to move the college baseball season. I assume their proposals should give an indication that many college baseball coaches feel hindered by the current schedule arrangement. Obviously, a number of college programs do not have to deal with poor weather conditions. Unfortunately, a larger number suffers from the current season.

College basketball programs are allowed to play 27 regular-season games. I assume each school plays its quota. College baseball programs are allowed to play 56 games. I doubt every college baseball program, under the current arrangement, is able to play its allotment. Even if a school in the Northeast does play its total allotment, many of those games are played during unbearable conditions. Not only are the conditions not conducive to playing the games, players are risking injury. The players are the ones who suffer.

In my opinion, the NCAA has been a governing body that has approached college athletics with an open mind. Rules have been passed for the betterment of the student-athlete. I hope the NCAA will look at the situation with baseball and rule for the betterment of those student-athletes.

Tar Heels' top foe may be U.S. team

By David D. Smale
The NCAA News Staff

After eight NCAA titles in nine years, there finally may be a women's soccer team that can defeat the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. The team won't be at this year's championship, but it could have a lot to do with any North Carolina loss. It is the U.S. national team.

Not only is the national team a collection of the nation's best women soccer players, but the Tar Heels' coach, Anson Dorrance, and his two best players, Kristine Lilly and Mia Hamm, are leaving North Carolina for a trip to China for the 1991 Women's World Cup, November 16-30. The Division I championship is November 24.

"I don't think me not being there will be a problem," Dorrance said. "Soccer is not like basketball or football. Coaches are not puppeteers, pulling strings from the sideline. Coaching is done in practice, and I will be here through most of the practices. And Bill Palladino (who will coach the Tar Heels in Dorrance's absence) has been my assistant since the inception of the program. I have great faith in him, as do the players."

"The biggest loss will be Kristine. She's a franchise player. Losing a player of her caliber is an enormous loss. We also lost Rita Tower and Jill Jakowich this summer with anterior cruciate (knee) ligament tears."

But before you shed a tear of concern for the Tar Heels, consider this. After six games, five against ranked teams, the Tar Heels are 6-0. They have defeated the University of Virginia and the University of Connecticut, both of which were rated No. 2 at the time. Through six games, freshman goaltender Shelley Finger has allowed one goal. A great freshman class (Finger, Angela Kelly, Tisha Venturini, Keri Sanchez, Roz Santana and Danielle Egan) pick up where the other classes have left off. All but Egan start and she is one of the first players off the bench. Venturini and Sanchez are possible World Cup participants, but probably not both. And there is plenty of experience to complement the freshmen.

"Louellen Poore is a cocaptain and a senior sweeper," Dorrance said when asked if he was leaving any talent behind. "Left midfielder Pam Kalinoski is another senior. Stacey Blazo was a left back and now is a right wing."

Do the Tar Heels still have a chance to win with Dorrance and crew leaving right before the playoffs? "Sure, this is an excellent defensive team," Dorrance said. "We may not score a lot of goals, but it will be tough for other teams to score on us."

The same can be said for Dor-

Tar Heel coach Anson Dorrance calls Kristine Lilly a franchise player

rance's other team. Made up of eight or nine (depending on late selections) current or former Tar Heels, and coached by Dorrance and Virginia head coach Lauren Gregg, also a former Tar Heel, the national team will take on a definite "Carolina blue" hue.

Besides Gregg, April Heinrichs, Carla Werden, Shannon Higgins, Wendy Gebauer, Tracey Bates, Lori Henry and Linda Hamilton played for Dorrance in Chapel Hill. Dorrance will plan on using the same style that made him so successful in intercollegiate soccer. "No question about it," he said. "It's my coaching style—an incredibly aggressive style, offensively and defensively. We go to the goal with as many players as possible and as quickly as we can, and when we lose the ball, we try and get it back as quickly as we can."

TV/Radio

Raycom to produce, sell ABC games

NCAA regular-season basketball games on ABC will be sold and produced this season by Raycom.

Industry sources said Raycom will pay ABC $1.5 million for the package, according to Advertising Age, which quoted Raycom Senior Vice-President Ray Warren as saying: "They've been losing a lot of money doing it their way. This is the shape of things to come at the networks. Where there are losses, they're going to get out. They want to get out of the risk business, and sports is the first (segment) that had significant problems."

The games will continue to be aired on ABC stations. The deal is not related to the NCAA Division I Men's Basketball Championship, which is on CBS.

Grambling network expands

The Grambling State University football radio network now covers the top 10 urban markets and 18 of the top 20.

TBC Sports Inc., headquartered in Chicago and Champaign-Urbana, Illinois, has assembled the network, the largest in the nation featuring the athletics program of a predominantly black institution. In the largest markets, Grambling football is available on WJPR in New York, KWNK in Los Angeles and WJPC in Chicago. All are AM stations.

CCHA games on cable network

Pro-Am Sports System will produce 18 regular-season Central Collegiate Hockey Association games and four playoff contests as part of a CCHA game of the week package this season. The package begins October 25 with the University of Michigan at Michigan State University game and ends with the CCHA tournament championship game March 22.

Academic all-Americans highlighted

Former GTE academic all-Americans Jeff Hostetler, Mark Kelso and Joe Theismann are featured in a Super Bowl highlight video GTE has produced. Narrated by sportscaster Dick Enberg, spokesman for the company's academic all-America recognition program, the video soon will be available to the public.

Bowl announcement show on radio

Selections for the 1991-1992 college football bowls will be announced during a live nationwide radio show on November 17.

The show will air at 6 p.m. EST and will last 90 minutes. TBC Sports, Inc., of Chicago and Champaign-Urbana, Illinois, will produce and distribute the program. All 19 bowls will be highlighted, and 13 of the executive directors have committed to participate in the program.

The live announcement of each bowl's participants will be followed by a review of the teams and comments from a panel of sports journalists.

"Half the excitement of anything is the anticipation," said TBC President Will Tieman, "and basically that's what this show has done. It's put the excitement back into the selection process."

After defying death on high wire, college football is not very scary

By Bill Stieg

College athletes talk about balancing studies and sports. Dave Klukow has to laugh. That's no balancing act.

Ten years with the Flying Wallendas, making your living on a high wire 35 feet off the ground without a net now that's a balancing act.

"I've always been intrigued by things that are difficult to do," said Klukow, Temple University's third-string punter and former high-wire artist.

Klukow is no longer a daring young man in the circus. He's a married, 35-year-old sophomore with a 3.800 grade-point average thinking about a career in physical therapy.

He hasn't kicked yet in competition, but his mere presence is remarkable, considering his age and lack of experience. His high-school sports were track and field and circus.

In Sarasota, Florida, where Ringling Bros., Barnum & Bailey Circus used to spend winters, they're serious about circus. Klukow was a tumbling terror as a kid, jumping off a neighbor's one-story roof just to see how far he could go.

He tried out for the school circus, readily walking a three-foot wire. "I'm quick to pick up all kinds of things, like windsurfing—I got up the first time and never tipped over," he said.

Klukow's circus coach was Gunter Wallenda, Karl's nephew. He performed in one show, but the coach said he had to choose: track or circus. He chose track, and was named most-valuable performer.

He went straight from high school—15 feet with a net—to the professional act, 35 feet with nothing below but cement, or maybe a wood floor or the ground. Nothing soft.

For 10 years he toured the country, performing at circuses, sporting events, fairs, doing three-person pyramids, juggling, riding bikes and unicycles across the wire.

He never fell.

"I had a couple of close calls," he said, like the time someone on the ground bumped a guy wire while Klukow was bicycling above. The wire swayed—but he stayed up.

Klukow got off the wire four years ago and tried the real-estate business. While watching an NFL game, he became intrigued by punting. He started practicing because of its physical therapy program, its proximity to his brother's home and its Division I football program. He wrote to coach Jerry Berndt for a tryout.

He made the team last year and was redshirted.

Temple's regular punter is Trent Thompson, a senior who ranks among the top 10 punters in Division I-A. Klukow said working on receiving the snap is his top priority.

"Taking a snap has a lot of similarities to the high wire," he said. "You're not going to get the ball off if you're not concentrating."

In a sense, Klukow said, punting is more difficult than the high wire.

"On the high wire, you have more motivation to succeed because your life is at stake," he said. "Your life isn't at stake on the ground, so you might tend to concentrate less."

Concentration is the key on the wire or on the ground, he said.

"The circus helps tremendously in concentration. You have this rush coming at you and you have to stay focused," he said. "The rush doesn't affect me as much as it might others."

"I was talking to him one day and I asked if he could imagine punting in front of 85,000 people," Berndt said earlier this year. "Coach," he said, "I don't think that will bother me. After performing on a high wire in front of 20,000 people and knowing that if you fall, you're going to die... I think I can stand the pressure."

Stieg is a writer for The Associated Press.

Winning streak halted

Duquesne University's men's cross country team defeated Carnegie Mellon University on September 28, 25-30, ending the Tartans' national-record 108-meet winning streak.

Duquesne freshman Darby Reed won the 8,000-meter race in 25:17. For his efforts, Reed was named Atlantic 10 Conference cross country freshman of the week—the third time this season he has been so honored.

Duquesne's triumph is the first any team has managed over Tartan cross country runners since the 1979 season.

Volleyball officials are comparing notes

By Laura E. Bollig
The NCAA News Staff

As the nationally ranked University of Nebraska, Lincoln, prepared to meet defending national champion University of California, Los Angeles, in an early-season women's volleyball match, coaches from the teams did not meet to swap game plans and share strategies. It just wasn't in their best interests.

One group closely associated with Division I women's volleyball, however, believes that comparing notes will only help the sport.

While most Division I conferences have supervisors of basketball and football officials on the staff, within the last five years at least seven conferences have added a supervisor of officials specifically for volleyball. Throughout the last two years, these supervisors have met regularly to swap stories and share ideas with one goal in mind—to improve the quality of volleyball officiating.

Pete Dunn, the Big Ten Conference's supervisor of volleyball officials, has been involved in each of the group's meetings. What started as a free-for-all is evolving into a productive organization, according to Dunn.

Pete Dunn

"At our first meeting in May of 1990, we basically tried to define the purpose for us getting together. Most of the meeting was spent talking about the assigning process and what you pay officials," Dunn said. "We just went around the table and Tom (Slaymaker) was taking notes with everybody chipping in."

Slaymaker is in his second year as the Big Eight Conference's supervisor of volleyball officials. He and Dunn have counterparts at the Western Athletic, Southwest Athletic, Pacific-10, Mid-American Athletic and Gateway Collegiate Athletic Conferences.

Supervisors from these conferences have met three times, twice in conjunction with the United States Volleyball Association's convention and once at the Division I Women's Volleyball Championship. The group will reconvene at this year's championship in December.

"What we're talking about is an attempt to upgrade officiating and also to standardize a lot of things," Slaymaker said. "Any time you have that as an objective, you have to find out where you are going. That's what we talked about mostly. You have to at least get to the point where you are headed toward a common goal."

Consistency, Dunn believes, will be a positive result of regular meetings.

"If we can all come together and decide what's acceptable and what's not, I think that would make it easier for teams. We have in the past been little islands of rigidity. You can't do this; you can't do that. It's important for me and my peers to know if one is walking, or if one is running or if one is standing still. It's tough for officials. I think it's just healthy for folks to know how someone else is operating."

A collegiate volleyball official since the early 1970s, Dunn said credibility for the sport comes when supervisors and officials understand the same concepts and arrive at acceptable rules interpretations. In addition to making the game more predictable for players and coaches, consistency in officiating makes the sport less confusing to spectators. By sharing information and philosophies, what's acceptable play on the West Coast becomes acceptable in the Midwest and vice versa.

One direct offshoot of the meetings is that supervisors will take a more active role in selecting officials for postseason competition.

Christine Hoyles, chair of the Division I Women's Volleyball Committee, was instrumental in gathering the supervisors together at the 1990 championship.

"The reason we got started down the path was to improve the quality of officiating in the national championship," Hoyles said. "The committee was trying to obtain a way to evaluate officials. Since those evaluations already existed in the conference offices, we thought we should tap into that resource."

Conference supervisors will submit a form to the NCAA rating officials at the beginning of the season and midway through the season. Input from the supervisors will be used by the committee to make its postseason assignments.

"What it does for the championship is that it charges the people involved in the evaluation of officials on a day-to-day basis with assisting the committee in assigning quality officials," Hoyles said. "The committee members are not as involved with evaluating officials throughout the year, and so we are trying to involve the people we know who are experts in the field."

Dunn is looking forward to increased participation at upcoming meetings. He hopes that conferences that have staff members only for assignment purposes will perceive a need for a supervisor with evaluation responsibilities in the near future. In the meantime, Dunn and his peers continue sharing ideas and coming up with solutions to similar problems.

Division I conference supervisors responsible for the evaluation of officials should contact Hoyles at the Pacific-10 Conference if they are interested in attending the supervisors' meeting at the NCAA Division I Women's Volleyball Championship December 19-21.

Questions/Answers

Readers are invited to submit questions to this column. Please direct any inquiries to The NCAA News at the NCAA national office.

Q Why does the NCAA not recognize the title doctor as it applies to those who have earned doctoral degrees?

A The NCAA follows the lead of The Associated Press and most major publications (including the Chronicle of Higher Education) in not using the title of doctor except with medical doctors or except where required by context. Most institutions, we believe, also do not use the title in correspondence and printed materials. In most educational circles, materials would be laced with "Dr." references because so many individuals in education hold one or another of the various types of academic doctorates. Other considerations: The NCAA would have no way of knowing, in many cases, which individuals do and do not hold doctorates. Some chief executive officers do not have doctorates; similarly, some faculty representatives do not. On the other hand, a number of athletics directors and some coaches do hold doctorates. The Association would have difficulty being correct and consistent in its usage of the title. Finally, as The Associated Press Stylebook states, the public frequently identifies Dr. only with physicians, so the title can be misleading if not used in a specific manner.

Irish apply to rejoin CCHA

The University of Notre Dame said September 27 it will apply to rejoin the Central Collegiate Hockey Association beginning with the 1992-93 season.

Athletics director Richard A. Rosenthal told United Press International that the decision to seek CCHA membership is based "on the desire to be part of a viable Midwest league with an automatic NCAA tournament bid, as well as scheduling considerations."

He said an NCAA cutback of permissible contests would make it difficult for various conferences' teams to find room on their schedules for an independent Notre Dame.

"The visibility of the league in college hockey circles is tremendous," he said, "especially with Michigan State, Bowling Green and Lake Superior State all having won NCAA championships in recent years."

News Fact File

In the NCAA revenue-distribution plan for 1990-91, all Division I institutions were given credit for the number of sports that they sponsored in excess of the minimum 12 required for Division I classification (and such sports had to meet the minimum-participants, minimum-contests requirements). On those bases, fully 12.8 percent (38) of the 295 Division I members sponsored only the minimum number of sports (12) and thus were granted no funds in that portion of the plan. Of the 38, nearly two-thirds (24) were members of Division I-AAA, representing nearly 25 percent of that subdivision. Twelve were in Division I-AA and, perhaps to their surprise, two were classified in Division I-A, which requires sponsorship of 14 sports. (The two are pursuing available waiver opportunities.)

Graduates

Former Auburn University student-athletes Harvey Glance (left) and Byron Franklin went back to school after their on-field exploits and earned undergraduate degrees. "Completing my degree means I've obtained the ultimate goal any individual can obtain to survive in today's society," said Glance, one of America's all-time great sprinters and a gold medalist in the 1976 Olympics. "My role model has always been Harvey Glance," said Franklin, who played professional football with the Buffalo Bills. "I wanted to carry myself in the same manner as Harvey. Academically, he always kept up with his studies, and as a person, he always has class." Glance is Auburn's track coach, and Byron has been named assistant director of athletics development with the school's alumni and development office.

Minority conference is set

A conference on "Critical Issues Facing Minorities in Higher Education" will be conducted October 16-17 at the Hyatt Regency Crown Center in Kansas City, Missouri.

The conference, sponsored by the Community Relations Service of the U.S. Department of Justice, will feature representatives from colleges and universities in the Midwest, including deans, presidents and athletics directors.

Among those scheduled to speak are Michael L. Williams, assistant secretary of the Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights;

Rudy Washington, president of the Black Coaches Association, and representatives of the NCAA, the Knight Foundation Commission on Intercollegiate Athletics, the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics and the National Junior College Athletic Association.

Topics will include:

- Recruitment and retention strategies for minority students, faculty, staff and administrators.
- College athletics.
- Institutional programs and policies.
- Campus climate.

SEC roars to impressive lead for best non-conference record

The Southeastern Conference, once the perennial leader, is back on top in the national Division I-AA non-conference rankings, with a strong lead over the 1990 champion, the Atlantic Coast Conference.

The SEC had won the title six times in seven years before the ACC broke through. A five-year SEC title streak was ended in 1988, when the Pacific-10 Conference compiled a remarkable .794 (27-7) — highest in the 1980s.

The Big East Conference's new football league, combining seven former Eastern independents and unbeaten Miami (Florida), is a strong third. Bowl results could decide the champion. Some conferences have plenty of non-conference games left, while others are nearly finished with outside games except for the bowls. Here are the standings through October 5 (games vs. Division I-AA opponents are deleted):

Football notes

Vs. Div. I-AA Foes:

I-AA Conference	W	L	T	Pct.
Southeastern	17	6	0	.739
Atlantic Coast	10	6	1	.618
Big East	17	11	0	.607
Big Ten	16	12	1	.569
Pacific-10	14	11	0	.560
Southwest Athletic	14	11	0	.560
Big Eight	14	12	1	.537
Western Athletic	11	13	0	.458
Mid-American	9	11	0	.450
Big West	6	19	0	.240
All independents	19	35	1	.355

Why delete I-AA opponents? Because I-AA teams win a high percentage of such games (30-6 so far this season and 55-9-1 last year), and the number of such games varies widely among conferences.

A year ago, the ACC ended up at .708 (20-8-1) after going 3-1-1 in bowls, the SEC .593, Big Eight .578, Southwest .574, Pacific-10 .528 and the WAC .500.

Gateway, Southern lead

It is a two-conference race between the Gateway and Southern in Division I-AA, counting only games between I-AA teams.

The Big Sky Conference, the non-conference champion last year, and the Patriot League, second a year ago, are tied for third place.

Games against Division I-AA foes are deleted because some I-AA conferences play several such games, some few, some none. Games vs. teams in Division II or the NAIA also are deleted for the same reason.

Rick Mirer of Notre Dame ranks fifth in Division I-AA in passing efficiency

Here are the standings through October 5:

Vs. Div. I-AA Foes:

I-AA Conference	W	L	T	Pct.
Gateway	10	1	2	.846
Southern	8	2	0	.800
Patriot	10	8	0	.556
Big Sky	5	4	0	.556
Mid-Eastern	6	5	0	.545
Southwestern	5	5	0	.500
Yankee	6	9	0	.400
Southland	5	8	2	.400
Ivy	5	10	0	.333
Ohio Valley	5	15	0	.250
All independents	15	13	0	.536

A year ago, the Big Sky's winning .737 (14-5) included a 6-3 record in the I-AA playoffs. Next were the Patriot at .696, OVC .567, Gateway .526 and Yankee .500. All independents, including I-AA champion Georgia Southern and semifinalist Central Florida, were .534.

Top QB rusher

Wofford junior Shawn Graves became the Division II record-holder in career rushing by quarterbacks at 3,375 yards with his 203-yard game October 5 in a 42-24 victory over Presbyterian.

His third touchdown of the day, a 72-yard dash with 4:12 left in the game, put him above the former Division II career record of 3,313 by North Dakota State's Chris Simdorn, whose career ended in 1990.

Graves, 5-8 and 160 pounds, needs only 238 more yards to break the all-time NCAA collegiate, or all-divisions, record for career rushing by quarterbacks — 3,612 by Doc Dowis, whose career at Division I-AA Air Force ended in 1989.

In fact, with six games left this season, plus all next season still to go, Graves seems likely to become the No. 2 career rusher in Division II history, trailing only tailback Johnny Bailey of Texas A&I. Bailey also is the NCAA collegiate, or all-divisions, record holder with 6,320 yards in 1986 through 1989. Graves is averaging exactly 135 yards per game for 25 career games. If he plays 17 more games and maintains that average, he would finish with 5,670. That would put him third on the all-divisions list behind Bailey and Pittsburgh's Tony Dorsett, who had 6,082 in 1973 through 1976.

Lack of trust

was cosponsored by The Sporting News and adidas footwear. Others on the panel were Ferdinand A. Geiger, director of athletics at the University of Maryland, College Park; Richard Lapchick, director of the Center for the Study of Sport in Society at Northeastern University; NCAA Executive Director Richard D. Schultz, and Iowa State University football coach Jim Walden.

Krzyzewski said that although most coaches applaud the NCAA Presidents Commission, they are concerned that they are not asked for advice on proposed legislation and that they are not participating in meetings in the early stages of the process.

Maryland's Geiger, however, did not believe coaches associations should act as lobbying groups, saying instead that ideas should develop vertically from within institutions and conferences before finally being considered by the NCAA.

Krzyzewski said that although the theory may be sound, in practice "some coaches don't know who their faculty rep is."

Although the coaches and administrators endorsed the philosophy of enhancing the academic development of student-athletes, they expressed varying opinions on how to quantify success in that area. Several said relying on graduation rates as a barometer of academic success could place excessive pressure on coaches, who ultimately are only one part of the team responsible for the athlete's education.

"You say: 'The coach isn't graduating his players,'" Raveling said.

"What does that mean? That's a heavy load for a person who doesn't admit or teach that student. The professors aren't held responsible if he doesn't graduate. The admissions people aren't responsible. The president isn't responsible. God knows the kid isn't responsible. The Catholic church doesn't issue absolution as quickly as we do for students who fail to graduate...."

"You say you want to graduate a certain percentage of athletes? Fine, as long as it's the same for everybody—English, history, engineering and so on."

"Is the president going to be removed if his university isn't in the top echelon of graduation rates?" Walden asked. "Has it been determined that we're failing if we're not graduating our athletes?"

Some of those on the panel were concerned that the perception of academic deficiencies among athletes was at least as big a problem as the reality. Crowley said that once the perceived need for academic reforms is in place, the idea is "reinforced by stories of young men who play ball and can't read. That's a powerful symbol. So reform begins as an attack, and coaches end up as targets."

Krzyzewski illustrated how he believed athletes sometimes face a no-win situation regarding the way they are perceived. Television viewers, he said, might form a negative image of a student-athlete if he or she performs poorly in a broadcast interview after a game. Although the athlete is young, excited and often inexperienced in such matters, the public seems ready to judge the lack of polish as a lack of education,

Participating in the panel discussion on "Academics and Athletics: Is Reform Possible?" were (from left) Mike Krzyzewski, head men's basketball coach at Duke University; Joseph N. Crowley, president of the University of Nevada, Reno, and a member of both the NCAA Council and the NCAA Presidents Commission, and Ferdinand A. Geiger, director of athletics at the University of Maryland, College Park. NCAA Executive Director Richard D. Schultz also participated in the panel discussion September 30 in Kansas City, Missouri.

Krzyzewski said. He added that one of the most satisfying elements of coaching is helping the players overcome such problems and develop socially.

Others on the panel agreed that the social education of athletes is not given enough attention.

Geiger said there isn't "enough emphasis on the whole person," adding that colleges need to develop programs that will challenge athletes rather than force them through required courses. Athletes have a certain kind of intelligence, he said, in the same sense that drama students have a unique intelligence that enables them to succeed in their specialty. Athletes have much they could carry into a career, Geiger said, if colleges could channel their interests and abilities.

Schultz acknowledged that the NCAA legislative process may be too broad at times. "You make a rule and have it impact on 21 sports, and that's impossible to do," he said.

He said he hoped that at some point the Association could legislate intent as the first stage of the process and then work with constituencies such as coaches associations to establish the specifics. Eventually, he said, the result could be an NCAA federated on a sport-by-sport basis.

Coaches rally for Gamecock softball

The National Softball Coaches Association is lobbying the University of South Carolina, Columbia, in hopes of persuading the school to retain its women's softball program.

South Carolina announced recently it will drop the program to add a women's indoor and outdoor track team, although it will honor the grants-in-aid of softball players who choose not to transfer. The school is joining the Southeastern Conference, where no other schools sponsor women's softball.

But the NSCA is asking the school to reconsider and also will ask attorneys to study whether the move is in violation of Title IX, according to The Associated Press.

Higher Education

Educators get high marks

College presidents who feel unappreciated can take solace in a survey that ranks their occupation second in a listing of 740 jobs in terms of prestige. The presidents ranked just below doctors and just above astronauts.

The University of Chicago's National Opinion Research Center asked 1,166 adults to rank the occupations in terms of prestige. Tom W. Smith, survey director, said the occupations that ranked the highest were those that took the most education and training, according to The Chronicle of Higher Education.

College professors ranked seventh. Reporters were in the middle. At the bottom were prostitutes, drug dealers, fortune tellers and panhandlers.

Need for more collaboration cited

More collaboration is needed between two- and four-year colleges to entice students at junior and community colleges to continue their educations, a higher education group reported.

The American Council on Education said students who attend the two-year institutions—especially important gateways for minorities—are discouraged in several ways from transferring to four-year institutions:

- Schools may not adequately value each other's work, affecting perceptions of student performance. "Community-college transfer students are too often viewed as less capable than their four-year counterparts," the council said.

- Big colleges and universities are heavily bureaucratic, and students are often discouraged by confusing and conflicting rules, regulations and requirements.

- Students may not have the financial resources to move from a two-year to four-year school and available financial aid may be inadequate.

The report, "Setting the National Agenda: Academic Achievement and Transfer," called for increased collaboration between administrators and faculties at two-year and four-year schools. That, it said, is "the central, essential element in successful transfer efforts."

Interpretations Committee minutes

Acting for the NCAA Council, the Interpretations Committee:

Membership/sports sponsorship
1. Counting multiseason sports for purposes of satisfying the one-sport-in-each-season requirement. The committee expressed concern regarding the April 1 date currently being utilized to separate an institution's winter season from its spring season for purposes of sports sponsorship. The committee noted that the April 1 date for dividing the winter and spring season is not realistic, inasmuch as many winter championships are concluded prior to April 1. Further, institutions located in warmer climates that conclude the academic year in advance of spring championships may wish to conduct a majority of the institution's contests in a traditional spring sport prior to April 1. The committee recommended that the NCAA Council establish different dates for determining institutional sport seasons for purposes of NCAA Bylaw 3.2.4.9.1 based on institutional academic calendars. (References: 3.2.1.4, 3.2.4.9.1)

Travel expenses
2. Travel expenses for student-athlete remaining at site of competition after team departure. A student-athlete who remains at the site of an institution's regular-season competition that occurs during an institution's official vacation period may receive expenses from the institution to return to campus at any time during the vacation period. The committee noted that there are different standards governing the return from regular-season competition that occurs during the vacation period [Bylaw 16.8.1.2.1.1-(b)] and return from NCAA postseason championship or postseason bowl competition [16.8.1.2.1.1-(c)]. The committee also noted that 16.8.1.4.1 governing travel to special events during a vacation period is not applicable to regular-season contests and, thus, could conflict with the provisions of 16.8.1.2.1.1-(b) if a student-athlete resides in the locale where the regular-season contest is being conducted. The committee recommended that the Council review the difference in standards to determine if it wishes to propose legislation to place identical limitations governing an institution's (or student-athlete's) return from regular-season competition that occurs during the vacation period and an institution's (or student-athlete's) return from NCAA championship events or postseason football games. [References: 16.7.1.1; 16.8.1.2.1.1; Council 4/15/91, Item No. 9-a-(12)]

Advertising/endorsements
3. Third-party distribution of commercial items with names or pictures of enrolled student-athletes related to charitable or educational promotion. It is not permissible for a third-party distributor (e.g., commercial establishment) to sell commercial items (e.g., trading cards, posters, calendars) with the names or pictures of enrolled student-athletes with eligibility remaining in conjunction with a charitable or educational promotional activity. The charitable or educational organization may sell commercial items with names or pictures of enrolled student-athletes with eligibility remaining only at outlets controlled by the charitable or educational organization (e.g., location of the charitable or educational organization, site of charitable event) or the member institution at which the student-athlete being utilized in the promotion is enrolled. (References: 12.5.1.1; Council 10/8/90, Item No. 11-b; IC 8/6/91, Item No. 3)

Advertising/endorsements
4. Third-party distribution of commercial items with names or pictures of enrolled student-athletes related to Olympic Games promotions. The Olympic Games governing structure (e.g., national governing body) is permitted to utilize third-party distributorships for the sale or distribution of commercial items involving the names or pictures of enrolled student-athletes in conjunction with Olympic fund-raising promotions, provided the name or picture of any student-athlete with remaining eligibility is not utilized by the distribution company or retail store on any poster or other advertisement to promote the sale or distribution of the commercial item. (References: 12.5.1.1; IC 12/2/87, Item No. 1-d)

Practice/out-of-season practice
5. Conditioning activities in the sport of basketball prior to on-court practice. In the sport of basketball, permissible preseason conditioning activities that may be conducted prior to the date for permissible on-court practice activities are limited to eight hours per week for each student-athlete, regardless of whether the institution begins such activities prior to the institution's academic year. (References: 17.1.5.1; 17.3.2.1.1; IC 8/6/91, Item No. 5-a)

Awards
6. Established regional, national or international awards. It is not permissible for an outside organization to provide actual and necessary expenses for a student-athlete to return to the student's home locale to participate in a parade designed to recognize the individual's accomplishments as an athlete, unless the sponsoring organization is presenting the student-athlete with an established regional, national or international award (permitted by NCAA legislation). (References: 16.1.7.1, 16.1.7.2)

Evaluations
7. Contests between two high schools conducted at another high school. An institution whose coaching staff member attends a contest between two high schools that is conducted on the grounds of a third high school would be charged with an evaluation for all prospective student-athletes participating in the contest, but not for prospective student-athletes who attend the high school at which the contest is being conducted, provided the institution does not evaluate any prospective student-athletes who attend the high school where the contest is being conducted. (Reference: 13.02.5)

Printed recruiting materials/stationery
8. Athletics-department stationery. The restrictions related to institutional stationery would be applicable to any department or office at the institution that reports to the athletics department. The restrictions related to institutional athletics department stationery would not be applicable to other athletics department items (e.g., ticket brochures, alumni brochures, summer-camp brochures), except as stipulated in Bylaw 13.4.1 (i.e., media guide, recruiting guide, student-athlete handbook). ## CORRECTIONS

Due to a production error, two paragraphs were deleted from a feature on former NCAA President J. Neils Thompson that appeared in the September 30 issue of The NCAA News. The missing material included a quote from Thompson noting that most coaches are honest, but that student-athletes who play for dishonest coaches may be more inclined to accept extra benefits. He suggests that paying stipends to athletes in Division I would reduce such abuses.

Corporate partners

Since 1984, when Gillette became the first partner to make that investment, firms producing a variety of products and services have "bought into" those aspirations. As diverse as those corporations are, however, they share at least a couple of things in common—all enjoy national or even international visibility, and all are able to provide a benefit of one kind or another directly to NCAA member institutions.

"One of our major goals is to see that as many benefits as possible itself is a positive benefit for the Association and its member institutions.

"For instance, partners such as Oldsmobile and Pizza Hut run popular promotions surrounding the Final Four, and the NCAA benefits, because these are positive promotions," Khayat said.

"The promotions of corporate partners can be easily and naturally designed to generate not only favorable publicity, but also funding for NCAA-approved programs," he added.

For example, sales of a variety of products produced by the Sara Lee Corporation—the exclusive sponsor of NCAA women's athletics—and its subsidiaries result in funding for scholarships (see accompanying story on the Sara Lee sponsorship).

The Association's youth programs—the Youth Education through Sports clinics and National Youth Sports Program—are prime beneficiaries of the corporate-partners program. Every partner makes a monetary contribution to support those activities.

But other NCAA programs receive support as well. Championships are a notable example.

"We try to utilize to the fullest extent products and services of corporate partners in support of championships hosted by member institutions," Khayat said. Also, corporate involvement supports the production of game programs at 34 championships and funds banquets for championships participants at some events.

The potential for obtaining such benefits is a major factor in the recruitment of new corporate partners.

"It's our intention to have one quality corporate partner representing a particular area of business and to strive to attract only those companies that can provide direct benefits to the membership," Khayat said.

The arrangement is advantageous not only to the Association but to the partners as well—each of which enjoys the "exclusivity" of being the only firm in its area of business that can call itself an NCAA corporate partner.

"Involvement with the NCAA is a really positive experience for corporations," Khayat said. "They like being identified with the NCAA and our member institutions and with our championship events."

NCAA corporate partners

Firms offering a variety of services and products are members of the NCAA's team of corporate partners. In some form or another, each provides benefits to the Association and its member institutions. Following is a list of the corporate partners and some of the contributions they make to the Association:

American Airlines

American Airlines offers substantial discounts to member institutions for travel in conjunction with NCAA championships. The firm also recently issued travel cards that can be used by member institutions to reduce air travel expenses.

American also frequently becomes involved in other corporate partners' promotions as the provider of free airline trips for contest winners.

Coca-Cola provides complimentary soft drinks for various championships.

It also prepares a national promotion involving the Final Four for use by local bottlers of Coca-Cola products.

Gillette, the first corporation to become involved in the NCAA program, is a visible supporter of the NCAA through annual promotions in conjunction with the Final Four. As a part of those promotions, which offer tickets, trips and cars as contest prizes, the firm runs an advertisement on Selection Sunday offering consumers discounts on Gillette products.

Hyatt Hotels offers discounts on hotel accommodations to NCAA member institutions and to Association committee members and staff attending meetings or traveling on Association business.

Kodak provides copying machines for use at designated NCAA championships and elsewhere.

Kodak also has a significant presence in the NCAA Visitors Center, which has enjoyed photographic support in the creation of exhibits.

Under its contract with the Association, Host Creative Communications is responsible for seeking and signing up new partners. As a result, the corporate partners sign contracts with Host, rather than with the NCAA.

However, the Foundation works closely with Host.

Particular attention is paid to balancing the benefits gained from corporate involvement in cham-

National Car Rental offers discounts to NCAA member institutions and conducts promotions for its frequent-rental program.

The firm currently is developing a discount card for use by member institutions.

THE POWER OF INTELLIGENT ENGINEERING

Oldsmobile frequently provides complimentary cars for use by host committees at the site of NCAA championships.

The company also conducts the popular "Final Four Sell-A-Thon" promotion, in which customers who visit dealers for a test drive are entered in a drawing to win tickets or cars. Among the giveaways offered by Oldsmobile in conjunction with the promotion is a videotape of Final Four highlights.

Pizza Hut possibly is the most active corporate partner in the area of NCAA-related promotions. The firm supports college athletics through television commercials and other advertising.

In its best-known promotion, the company has distributed 7½ million minibasketballs during the past two years to promote the Final Four.

SARA LEE CORPORATION

Sara Lee Corporation is in its first year as exclusive sponsor of NCAA women's athletics. The firm's Hanes Her Way division sponsor the NCAA Woman of the Year Award, which provides scholarships to the award finalists' institutions, and Sara Lee provides financial support for all women's championship banquets (see related story on this page).

The corporation also is becoming involved in a program to assist member institutions in administering additional Youth Education through Sports clinics.

US Sprint offers special discounts to NCAA member institutions that utilize the company as their long-distance telephone service.

Sara Lee Corporation

As the exclusive sponsor of NCAA women's athletics, the Sara Lee Corporation is a highly active corporate partner. In addition to sponsoring the NCAA Woman of the Year Award through its Hanes Her Way division, Sara Lee is becoming a visible promoter of the Women's Final Four and also is a sponsor of all banquets at women's championships.

The corporation also is creating promotions utilizing many of its brand name products to provide more visibility for women's athletics.

It is a role that is very consistent with the Foundation's own mission, he believes.

"There is a natural affinity between the mission of the Foundation and the mission of the corporate-partners program. Both were created to benefit student-athletes, promote education, promote social responsibility and support youth programs."

Facilities

Cincinnati back home at last

The University of Cincinnati finally played a game at its home stadium after an absence of almost two years.

The Bearcats played Miami University (Ohio) in Nippert Stadium on September 28. It was their first game on campus since November 18, 1989.

Since then, the 67-year-old stadium has undergone Phase I of a $10.1 million renovation, which is part of a $13.5 million upgrading of the overall athletics facilities. The first phase consisted of structural reinforcement and new bleacher seats. There is also a new three-tiered press box and a new artificial playing surface. Seating capacity for this year is about 23,000.

Phase II, expected to be complete for next season, will include a new, extended upper deck that will enlarge seating capacity to 35,000. A new scoreboard also is planned.

Sport Summit focuses on facilities

The 14th International Sport Summit will be conducted at the New York Marriott Marquis January 14-15.

"The Summit attracts only the upper echelon of management in sports-related fields with an emphasis on events and facilities," said Monica de Hellerman, executive director of the event.

For more information, contact Sport Summit, 372 Fifth Avenue, New York, New York 10018. The telephone number is 212/239-1061.

Princeton plans to combine men's and women's golf

In response to the growing interest in women's golf by Princeton University undergraduates, the department of athletics will combine the men's and women's golf programs beginning with the 1991-92 season, Princeton Director of Athletics Robert J. Myslik announced recently.

"The number of women undergraduates participating in golf has increased during the past several years," Myslik said. "In order to accommodate this growing need, the department believes it is a natural progression for women to compete at the varsity level."

Eric Stein will assume the head-coaching position for the women's team, and he will be assisted by Paget Berger. Stein, an associate director of athletics, will continue to coach the men's team and be assisted by 1985 Princeton graduate Armond Hill.

Senior Barbara Armas has been elected captain of the women's team for the 1991-92 season. Armas and her teammates will compete in four events this fall as they prepare for a full schedule of competition in the spring.

Princeton supports 34 varsity teams—18 for men and 16 for women.

Teenage gang member is straight with sports

Billy Dunn recently told Richmond (Virginia) Times-Dispatch writer Overton McGehee he considered himself an "at-risk youth." Soon, Dunn will call himself a college graduate.

After teenage years spent as a member of gangs in Lynchburg, Virginia, and New York City, Dunn turned to sports as an alternative and to Longwood College for its major in therapeutic recreation. According to McGehee, Longwood is team, which is one step away from a berth in the 1992 summer Olympics.

"I'm having a good time," he said. "School is tough, soccer is great—I couldn't ask for anything more."

Record crowd at Nebraska

When the women's volleyball team at the University of Nebraska, Lincoln, hosted the University of California, Los Angeles, September 14, a record 11,032 fans turned out.

No intercollegiate women's volleyball match—including NCAA championships competition—has drawn as large a crowd, according to the American Volleyball Coaches Association. Unfortunately for the Cornhusker fans, the visiting Bruins won the match in four games.

Tailgating of a different sort

Wyatt Smith, a starting cornerback at Duke University, says Londoners treat a visit to the theater as a social event, like American tailgaters treat a football game: "Their shows start at seven, but the lobbies of the theaters are packed at five o'clock."

A senior English major, Smith took a six-week English drama course in London last summer. It gave him a new appreciation for William Shakespeare: "It's difficult to understand, just reading it. But watching the plays being produced by the best production companies, actors and actresses in the world, it's fascinating."

After discussing the plays in class, he says, "I'd see tons of things, a depth I never knew was there." Smith thinks he will never forget his summer in England: "I went by myself. I had never been that far from home. I left my world behind."

Briefly in the News

the only college in the country offering an undergraduate degree in the major.

"I participated in some small thefts and some vandalism," Dunn said, "and I've been around where people were stealing cars. I've tried every drug out there."

"I had something to prove," he said, of his turnaround. "I was considered a kid with an attitude problem. I wanted to prove I was a team player and not a renegade."

"In the long run, sports and my mom kept me straight."

Sparks everywhere

Pennsylvania State University student-athlete Nigel Sparks is tough to catch up with. He isn't, however, hard to find.

"If I'm not at the library," he said, "I'm home eating and sleeping. If you don't find me there, I'm at the (soccer) field. That doesn't leave time for much else."

A biology major who plans to go into medicine, Sparks' soccer time is split—between the Nittany Lions and the under-23 Canadian national Attendees are asked to bring their NCAA Guide to Financial Aid. Legislative assistants at each site will provide a general overview of the legislation governing the application of NCAA financial aid principles and will address specific interpretive questions regarding financial aid legislation, then hold a question-and-answer session.

Interested NASFAA members should contact their regional coordinators to receive the complete agenda for each meeting.

AACRAO

Topics to be presented by the national office staff include updates on test-score validation, initial-eligibility software, graduation-rates disclosure, general compliance issues and selected proposed legislation.

Dates and sites of the regional AACRAO meetings are: Upper Midwest—October 27-29, St. Cloud, Minnesota; Pacific—November 3-6, Salt Lake City, Utah; Carolinas

November 3-6, Hilton Head, South Carolina; New England—November 7-8, Danvers, Massachusetts; Middle States—December 3-5, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Southern—February 9-12, Birmingham, Alabama.

Interested participants should contact their regional coordinators to receive the complete agenda.

The national office also will have representatives at the national meetings of both organizations.

NCAA seminars are set

Sportsmanship targeted

Fight sports organizations have banded together in the "Be a Sport" campaign, which is designed to encourage sportsmanship at all levels of competition.

"I think a number of years ago, sportsmanship was important to everybody," NCAA Executive Director Richard D. Schultz said when the program was announced October 2 in Kansas City, Missouri. "As crowds became larger, then TV came in, you had an atmosphere that put players and coaches on edge."

"We've had problems with taunting and fighting. I think that's something that's been passed down from the pros to the other levels, but I think we're getting better at changing it."

Schultz was joined at the press conference by National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics Executive Director James Chasteen, National Federation of State High School Associations Executive Director Brice B. Durbin and National Junior College Athletic Association Executive Director George Killian. The National Football League, Major League Baseball, the National Basketball Association and the National Hockey League also are participating in the program. The associations and leagues collectively form the National Sportsmanship Committee (NSC).

The "Be a Sport" logo is being distributed within each organization of the NSC and will be seen on television, at stadiums and arenas and in printed materials at every level of athletics.
