Survey shows progress with gender equity

An NCAA study designed specifically to analyze expenditures for women's and men's athletics programs indicates that while institutions of higher learning have made positive strides since the enactment of Title IX of the Educational Amendments of 1972 to enhance competitive athletics opportunities for women, additional work must be done to ensure gender equity.

NCAA Executive Director Richard D. Schultz said the study has prompted the NCAA to examine further its role in helping its members achieve gender equity in intercollegiate athletics.

He announced plans for a task force—made up of women and men from the membership who offer distinct points of view on the issue—to develop recommendations on how the Association should proceed.

The study indicates that more money is spent on men's programs than on women's programs—a fact in significant part explained by the report's finding that men's participation in intercollegiate athletics exceeds women's participation by a ratio of 2 to 1, with much of this due to football and the lack of a comparable sport for women.

The study represents quantitative averages, by membership division, of certain current conditions at reporting institutions, including expenditures for athletics scholarships, overall operating expenses, recruiting and coaches, as well as scheduling practices.

Since the enactment of Title IX, which prohibits discrimination on the basis of sex in education programs, NCAA members have had the responsibility to create equivalent men's and women's athletics programs. While this particular study was not designed to gauge Title IX compliance, the results could be used to determine trends for conformity with

Subcommittees to meet to discuss CEOs' roles

Two new subcommittees of the NCAA Presidents Commission will meet March 31 in Dallas to begin to deal with two of the major issues on the Commission's agenda for this year—the role of the Presidents Commission itself and means of strengthening the role of chief executive officers in general when it comes to athletics matters.

Commission Chair Gregory M. St. L. O'Brien, chancellor of the University of New Orleans, appointed the subcommittees and named Gene A. Budig, chancellor of the University of Kansas, and Eamon Kelly, president of Tulane University, to chair them. Each subcommittee includes a representative of each NCAA membership division and subdivision.

The new subcommittees:

- Subcommittee on the Role and Structure of the Commission: Kelly is chairing this group. The other members:

David G. Carter, president, Eastern Connecticut State University; Sheldon Hackney, president, University of Pennsylvania; Rodney C.

Kelchner, president, Mansfield University of Pennsylvania; Stephen Joel Trachtenberg, president, George Washington University, and Charles E. Young, chancellor, University of California, Los Angeles.

- Subcommittee on Strengthening the Role of the Chief Executive Officer: Budig is the subcommittee's chair. Joining him are:

Alice Chandler, president, New Paltz State University College; Samuel H. Magill, president, Monmouth College (New Jersey); Olin B. Sansbury Jr., chancellor, University of South Carolina at Spartanburg; William E. Shelton, president, Eastern Michigan University, and William W. Sutton, president, Mississippi Valley State University.

Both of the subcommittees are expected to present recommendations to the Commission this summer, in time for any legislation to be submitted for action at the January 1993 NCAA Convention.

No. 1 Duke University vs. No. 2 Indiana University, Bloomington, in the NCAA championship game. A packed house at the Metrodome in Minneapolis, Minnesota, cheers every move. With the score tied and five minutes remaining, Duke works a backdoor play and point guard Bobby Hurley lobs an alley-oop pass to Grant Hill, who grabs the ball and slams it with one hand.

Indiana's Alan Henderson grabs the ball as it falls through the hoop and launches a full-court pass to Calbert Cheaney, who strides to the hoop to return the favor when....
Tweeeeeet.

The official blows his whistle stopping the action. "Hold it, boys," he says. "We need to have a jump ball at center court after a made basket."

Ludicrous? Sure. But as recently as 1938, it was true. That rule change is the most significant change in the history of the sport, said some of the great college basketball coaches of all time when they were asked to compare today's game with the game from their eras.

"I don't think anything comes close to the impact of that change," said John Wooden, coach of 10 national-championship teams at the University of California, Los Angeles, from 1964 to 1975. "Almost immediately, for example, the scores doubled. It made it more exciting for the fans."

Change is constant

Change has been a constant in college basketball, which has been especially preoccupied with controlling the dominance of large players. In recent years, the jump ball was all but abolished and the three-point shot and the shot clock were instituted to enhance the role of the smaller player.

However, one of the first fundamental changes aimed at the big man was the widening of the lane in 1957. Henry Iba, who had his share of big men in his coaching days at Oklahoma State University, lobbied to stop the change, arguing that coaches should learn to deal with large opponents. But after the NCAA Basketball Rules Committee attended the 1957 championship game between the University of

Elimination of the center jump—like this one involving Elvin Hayes (front) and Lew Alcindor in the 1967 Final Four—after every basket may be the most significant change ever in college basketball

North Carolina, Chapel Hill, and the University of Kansas, which featured legendary big man Wilt Chamberlain, the committee unanimously approved the change from a six-foot lane to a 12-foot lane.

Nearly every rules change has been instituted to make the game more exciting for the fans. The 45-second clock and three-point shot certainly fall into that category. Requiring teams to cross the mid-court stripe within 10 seconds of possessing the ball was done to prevent a full-court delay.

Baseball teams keep signing rights for players who enroll in college

Major League Baseball owners have approved changes in the amateur draft and signing rules in an attempt to encourage qualified student-athletes to pursue a college education while not penalizing the clubs that draft such players.

"The history of this goes back to (late Commissioner) Bart Giamatti, who, when he came to baseball, became very concerned about Major League Baseball basically trying to talk kids out of going to college," current Commissioner Fay Vincent told United Press International. "We had long discussions on the subject. It was a very important subject to Bart."

The rule changes will allow clubs to retain signing rights to drafted high-school players who decide to attend college. Currently, clubs forfeit those rights once a player has enrolled in school.

Starting with this June's draft, any club drafting a previously undrafted player or a high-school senior who decides to pursue a college education will retain rights to that player throughout his college career and one year beyond.

"We have finally reached the point where we are trying very hard to begin to eliminate some of the pressure between the baseball interests who want kids signed and the college interests who want kids to go to college," Vincent said. "We think by permitting a club to retain the interest in the youngster, it takes some of that pressure off. The club will have less incentive to be as agitated if the young man goes to college."

In another change, players leaving school early will not be allowed to sign pro contracts until after the conclusion of their scholastic year.

The rule changes will be effective for all players who are 1992 high-school graduates and those who were not previously selected.

"We hope over the next three to five years, the entire relationship between Major League Baseball, college baseball and the NCAA is somewhat reconfigured," Steve Greenberg, deputy commissioner, said. "This rule change is a first step that will permit us to pursue top student-athletes somewhat less aggressively if they have the opportunity to go on to college."

Westhead dropped from suit

Former Loyola Marymount University men's basketball coach Paul Westhead has been dropped from all legal action stemming from the death of Hank Gathers, who died after collapsing during a game in 1990.

Westhead, who earlier had been dropped from a wrongful-death suit filed on behalf of Gathers' 8-year-old son, now has been dismissed from a similar suit brought by Gathers' mother, brothers and aunt.

Westhead left the university shortly after Gathers' death and now coaches the NBA's Denver

Nuggets. He maintained he was not at fault in his player's death.

Following a settlement conference, the university—the principal remaining defendant in the suits—agreed to pay Gathers' son $850,000, according to The Associated Press. The son, Aaron Crump, earlier received $650,000 in a settlement from Gathers' cardiologist, Vernon Hattori.

Another settlement conference is scheduled for March 30 involving the university and other family members, and a trial is scheduled in April.

Appetite for helping

Rather than going separate ways after the season ended, members of the Ohio Northern University football team banded together to help the needy as volunteers at a local food bank. Group considers allowing precollegians to direct promotional earnings to USOC

The NCAA Olympic Sports Liaison Committee will consider asking the NCAA Council to sponsor legislation for the 1994 Convention that would allow precollege athletes to earn pay for use of athletics skills in such promotional ventures as movies or for advertising purposes, subject to restrictions.

The U.S. Olympic Committee asked the committee to consider permitting participation in such activities by athletes who are not yet enrolled as student-athletes at NCAA member institutions.

Committee members agreed at their March 1-2 meeting in Kansas City, Missouri, to consider such legislation but agreed that funds earned in such activities by athletes should be directed to the USOC or a national governing body rather than directly to the athlete.

Legislation proposed by the committee probably would require that the pay be directed to the USOC or a national governing body only for "general utilization" rather than for the benefit of the specific athlete earning the pay. The athlete's participation in the activity also would be subject to the approval and control of the USOC or a national governing body.

Other highlights

In other actions at its recent meeting, the NCAA Olympic Sports Liaison Committee:

- Discussed the exemption to the requirements for continuation of a National Collegiate Championship that is described in Bylaw 18.2.11-(b) and recommended to the NCAA Council that the Executive Committee be asked to consider whether a meaningful formula can be created for determining the required minimum sponsorship of a sport for purposes of establishing or maintaining Association sponsorship of a championship in that sport.
- Offered the NCAA's help in identifying member institutions in the Atlanta, Georgia, area that could provide assistance for the 1996 Summer Olympics effort, including use of facilities for athletes' training purposes before the Games.
- Decided to consider a legislative amendment proposed by U.S. Swimming for the 1994 Convention to permit any number of student-athletes to practice or compete on outside teams during the summer in individual sports only. The committee will ask U.S. Swimming for assistance in clarifying aspects of that proposal.

The committee will resume its discussion of the matter at its next meeting. Meanwhile, the committee will ask the USOC and various national governing bodies to comment on its proposed restrictions.

At the USOC's request, the committee also agreed to recommend to the Council that it sponsor legislation at the 1993 Convention to expand the times during which an individual can receive certain expenses for participation in a developmental-training program that includes no competition without jeopardizing intercollegiate athletics eligibility.

The proposal would permit individuals to receive such expenses not only during the summer, as currently permitted by Bylaw 12.1.2.5, but also during institutional vacation periods, so long as participation in developmental training does not conflict with dates of institutional competition.

Financial aid committee to check compliance

The NCAA Committee on Financial Aid and Amateurism is preparing to fulfill its responsibilities related to Division I member institutions' compliance with new minimum financial aid requirements for that division in 1994.

Meeting February 24-25 in Tucson, Arizona, the committee made plans for collecting data and making calculations required by the enactment of Proposal Nos. 46 and 46-2 at the 1991 Convention. Adoption of the proposals, respectively, established minimum financial aid requirements as a component of Division I membership criteria and permitted institutions that depend on exceptional amounts of Federal assistance for meeting students' financial needs to provide only one half of the grants or expenditures required by Proposal No. 46.

When the legislation becomes effective in September 1994, one of the alternative standards set forth for Division I membership is a minimum aggregate financial aid expenditure in men's sports and in women's sports based on a minimum number of grants for the 1993-

94 academic year.

A section of that legislation, Bylaw 20.9.1.2-(b), provides for the NCAA Council to adjust annually the minimum aggregate financial aid expenditure to reflect inflation in average national tuition charges and to announce that figure each fall. Accordingly, the financial aid and amateurism committee is recommending to the Council that the first adjustment for inflation be made applicable to Division I institutions' financial aid expenditures during the 1994-95 academic year and that schools must be in compliance with the new minimum by September 1, 1995.

In a related matter, the committee informed the Council that it plans to identify by September 1993 all Division I institutions that will be eligible to provide only one half of expenditures or grants based on exceptional amounts of Federal assistance. To do so would permit schools to know while they are making financial aid commitments for the 1993-94 academic year whether they will qualify for the exception September 1, 1994.

Other highlights

In other actions at its recent meeting, the NCAA Committee on Financial Aid and Amateurism:

- Asked the NCAA Council to reconsider a recent revised interpretation of Bylaw 15.4.6.2. The revision permits a student athlete at a Division III member institution to receive an award that meets the criteria of that bylaw without consideration of the student-athlete's need if the award includes criteria in addition to the academic requirements, provided the additional criteria are not based on athletics ability or participation. The financial aid and amateurism committee will recommend to the Council that such an award be permitted only on the basis of meeting the criteria stated in that bylaw.
- Stated its desire to have input into development of the form that conferences will use beginning this summer to report expenditures from the Needy Student-Athlete Fund.
- Recommended that the Council resubmit for consideration at the 1993 Convention 1992 Proposal No. 72, which would have permitted a Division I institution to count only unearned, nonrepayable financial aid, awarded and administered by the member institutions (including the athletics department) and based on athletics ability, for purposes of meeting the minimum financial aid criteria for Division I classification. The proposal was defeated in a paddle vote in Anaheim, California.
- Asked the Council to authorize the committee to study cost-reduction issues in the area of financial aid, including the concept of a need-based system of financial aid, in conjunction with the Presidents Commission's announced intent to study financial issues before the 1994 Convention. It also proposed to study the Knight Foundation Commission on Intercollegiate Athletics' recommendation that schools offer five-year grants-in-aid to student-athletes.
- Recommended to the Council that out-of-state tuition waived by institutions as part of reciprocal tuition agreements among states be considered countable institutional financial aid. The committee believes that such agreements create inequities between institutions involved in such agreements and others that are not.

Appeals court limits range of Ross' suit

Former Creighton University basketball player Kevin Ross, who contends the university exploited his athletics ability but failed to educate him, may sue the school for breach of contract but not for negligence, a Federal appeals court has ruled.

"The court said if a university promises educational aid to a student and doesn't provide it, they could be held liable for that," said Marty Schwartz, Ross' attorney.

Ross was 36 credit hours short of graduation when he left the university in 1982 and enrolled at Westside Preparatory School in Chicago, Illinois. Westside educator Marva Collins said in 1989 that Ross was reading at only a second-grade level when he enrolled there.

The university said Ross did not attend classes or specially arranged tutoring sessions and was capable of reading at a seventh-grade level when he left.

"Our position all along has been that Kevin was given access and that, as the district court said, education is a two-way street. This decision doesn't change our position," university spokesman Jim Nolan told The Associated Press.

Ross sued the university July 24, 1989, contending he had taken courses that did not count toward a degree on the advice of university counselors. Ross also said that the athletics department employed a secretary to prepare and type his papers and that the university failed to provide sufficient tutoring.

The lawsuit also claimed educational malpractice, negligent admission and negligent infliction of emotional distress.

A U.S. district court judge dismissed the lawsuit, calling educational malpractice a theory "beloved of commentators, but not of courts."

The negligent-admission claim alleged that Creighton had a duty "to recruit and enroll only those students reasonably qualified and able to academically perform."

The lower court ruled that claim required the court to second-guess university admissions officers. The appeals court agreed.

"I thought I had a novel theory with the negligent-admission policy. I was actually hoping to get a favorable decision on that," Schwartz said.

Students vulnerable to dangers of illegal gambling

Gambling on college campuses is viewed more as a social event than a crime, so it's no surprise that a gambling scandal embroils two Rhode Island schools, the state police commander handling the investigation said.

"It starts with the classic football card that has been around campuses for 30 years," Capt. Brian Andrews said at a discussion on sportsmanship and gambling.

"We find college kids all over admitting they gamble, that there is gambling on their campuses and that everybody does it," he said.

In the past, the discussion March 1 at Providence College to mark National Sportsmanship Day probably would have attracted less notice. But a few days earlier, Andrews announced that detectives had broken up a campus-based gambling ring at the University of Rhode Island and Bryant College.

Matthew Zimmerman, a 21-year-old Bryant senior, was charged with bookmaking, racketeering, organized-crime gambling and conspiracy. Two other people also were arrested, according to The Associated Press.

Four Bryant basketball players and a former player were implicated, although police have not said if they will be charged. The University of Rhode Island investigated its sports programs because of the involvement of a former football player whose brother currently plays basketball at the school, but officials said they found no evidence of illegal gambling or violations of

NCAA rules.

The Providence discussion was scheduled before the gambling scandal broke.

"To most college kids, it's a social thing," Andrews said of gambling.

"They're really into sports. And it's a way of making some easy money, or what looks like easy money. Most of them are away from home and need a part-time job to have money to have a good social life, so they think if they gamble they can get that money," the detective said.

Most students don't know it's illegal to bet, he said. "I think there are a lot of adults who don't know it's illegal to bet football cards," Andrews said.

Almost all the college students implicated in the gambling ring began with football cards, he said.

"Matthew Zimmerman set up a football betting operation at Bryant and Rhode Island," Andrews said. "All he had to do was pick up a popular student or athlete to sell his cards for him. If that person was popular, he could make a lot of money because everyone would buy one or two cards from him."

But the $3 and $5 bets soon turned into larger wagers, he said. Police allege many were made through student bookies who recruited other students or recent graduates.

"They started losing and losing. One person lost $54,000, and he was being threatened that an organized-crime figure was going to pay him a visit," Andrews said.

"Illegal gambling, no matter how you cut it, is run and controlled by organized crime," he said.

Athletes who become heavily indebted to bookies risk being pressured to provide inside information on games, Andrews said.

He warned the approximately 100 people attending the seminar, mostly Providence athletes, that police surveillance has found organized-crime figures frequenting bars near the Big East Conference school who "would love to have athletes come in and strike up a friendship with them."

Multidivision classification was set in '91

I am writing in response to Joseph C. Bline's letter in the February 19, 1992, issue of The NCAA News regarding the defeat of Proposal No. 34 (I-AAA football) at the 1992 NCAA Convention.

Bline's assertion that Division II's defeat of Proposal 34 "fails to recognize its brothers' needs in Division III" is inaccurate. Division

Letter to the editor

II's defeat of the proposal did not recognize the needs of the 30-plus schools that were affected by the elimination of multidivision classification in 1991. It was simply a vote in the best interests of the Division II membership.

The defeat of Proposal 34 has nothing to do with the needs of Division III institutions. The schools that were eliminated from Division III football cannot go back to Division III simply because I-AAA football did not pass.

Their ability to play Division III football was eliminated at the 1991 Convention with the passage of Proposal 53. The former multidivision schools are now forced into Division I-AA or Division II, depending on the status of the rest of their programs.

Those schools probably will find a way to survive in a nonscholarship setting. But the defeat of Proposal 34 has nothing to do with Division III. The needs of Division III in relation to football have not been ignored—they were satisfied at the 1991 Convention.

Bline does not realize that most of the "multidivision" schools are small liberal arts schools and, with the exception of a few institutions, have not been factors in national championship competition.

On the fifth anniversary of the "death penalty" imposed against the football program at Southern Methodist University:

"There was concern that it (suspending play) would never happen. But to do it at least once is to make people believe."

"Institutions have redefined how they control athletics. This is true not only in Division I, but in Division III.... I don't think that people expected that an institution faced with major violations by its long-established star coach would take on its star coach."

... Welcomes new ventures, honors the successful

The introduction of five new pilot programs, orientation for new sponsoring institutions, a new workshop format designed for veteran personnel of sponsoring institutions and talks by government dignitaries highlighted the National Youth Sports Program (NYSP) National Workshop February 27-29 in Washington, D.C.

This summer, one of the pilot programs that will be tested will link five NYSP sponsoring institutions to the NCAA national office for the first time, enabling the institutions to send completed forms to the national office. Computers also will be used in the evaluation process this year, freeing up evaluators to assess program components on-site.

USA Today is sponsoring another pilot program in an attempt to develop a modern teaching style on issues relevant to the NYSP target population.

The Professional Golfers Association has pilot-program plans also, as does the United States Tennis Association. The PGA plans to distribute printed curricula and provide training and equipment to five NYSP sites, and the USIA plans to train NYSP professional staff on a national basis.

The workshop also gave the 28 institutions that will sponsor NYSP for the first time this summer the opportunity to meet with veteran NYSP administrators, some of whom have been conducting the program for 25 years.

Edward A. Thiebe, NCAA director of youth programs, said that having sponsoring institutions from both ends of the experience spectrum made the orientation a success.

In past workshops, the program for veteran NYSP institutions was strictly regimented. This year, institutional representatives were able to select from 15 specialized roundtable presentations on various topics, a feature Thiebe said was well-received.

Congressional focus

The workshop also gave the approximately 300 NYSP representatives from 175 campuses across the country an opportunity to solicit support for the program from their representatives in Congress and to honor last year's outstanding NYSP projects. The winner at NYSP's national poster contests also was honored.

Representatives of the seven outstanding NYSP projects of 1991 accepted the annual Silvio O. Conte Award during the workshop. The representatives are (from left) Norfolk State University's Thomas Morris; Betty Hayes of the University of Arkansas, Pine Bluff; Thurlis J. Little of Elizabeth City State University; the University of District of Columbia's Lucille W. Hester, Wilmer Johnson and Millicent Jackson; Thomas Robinson of California State Polytechnic University, Pomona; American International College's Robert Le Cours and Robert Burke, and the University of Wisconsin, Eau Claire's, Diane Gilbertson, Marilyn Burgess and William B. Harms.

Trish Nyeshia Brewington, a participant in the NYSP program at Fayetteville State University, won the grand prize in the program's national poster contest. All winning posters from the contest will be on display in the NCAA Visitors Center gallery through March.

13 research projects considered

USOC publishes three reports

The United States Olympic Committee and the International Center for Sports Nutrition have published three review papers: "Iron and Physical Performance," "Vegetarianism—Implications for Athletes" and "Protein."

"Iron and Physical Performance" takes a look at the effects of iron deficiency on performance, factors contributing to poor iron status of athletes, iron supplementation and iron overload.

"Vegetarianism" reviews the nutritional status of those practicing it and discusses its benefits, and compares those benefits with the potential risks of a vegetarian diet.

"Protein" examines the present knowledge of protein and physical performance. It covers protein requirements of endurance and weight-training athletes and examines the myth surrounding the use of protein and amino-acid supplements.

These reports are available for $4 per copy, including postage and handling, from Barb Connelly, International Center for Sports Nutrition, 502 South 44th Street, Room 3012, Omaha, Nebraska 68105-1065. The telephone number is 412/559-5505.

BEAT THE SMOKELESS HABIT

Book probes smokeless tobacco use

"Beat the Smokeless Tobacco Habit," a publication produced by the NCAA, Major League Baseball and the National Cancer Institute, is being distributed to all baseball student-athletes at NCAA member institutions.

The 16-page, full-color booklet provides extensive information on smokeless tobacco, including the dangers of use (with graphic photography of the potentially fatal damage created by the habit) and instructions on how an athlete can determine if he or she is addicted.

Also featured are the negative experiences that several major-league players have had with smokeless tobacco.

The last half of the publication includes a detailed "nine-inning game plan" on how to quit smokeless tobacco.

"Recent surveys have shown that 35 to 45 percent of professional baseball players are using smokeless tobacco," NCAA Executive Director Richard D. Schultz said. "Even higher proportions of college players, over 70 percent in some regions, are doing so. These high rates of use are unprecedented, and they are particularly disturbing because most players, college and professional, are dipping snuff—the most harmful and addictive form of spitting tobacco."

Schultz asked trainers to distribute the booklets in a setting so that baseball student-athletes, coaches and athletics staff will be encouraged to discuss tobacco-use issues.

Championship previews

Division I men's basketball

Defending champion Duke overcomes injury, losses

Event: 1992 Division I Men's Basketball Championship.

Overview: Defending champion Duke has maintained its position atop the wire-service rankings all season despite two conference defeats and the temporary loss of point guard Bobby Hurley to an injury.

Field: The Division I Men's Basketball Championship provides for a field of 64 teams. Thirty conferences receive automatic qualification.

Dates and sites: First-round games will be played March 19-20 with second-round action following March 21-22. Regional semifinals will be March 26-27. The regional championship games will occur March 28-29. All preliminary-round and regional games will be played at predetermined sites. The national semifinals and final will be played April 4 and 6 in Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Results: Scores and pairings from first- and second-round action will appear in the March 25 issue of The NCAA News. Scores from regional competition will be published April 1. Results from the Final Four will appear April 8.

Television coverage: All games during the tournament will be broadcast live by CBS Sports.

Championship notes: Basketball celebrates its 100th anniversary during the 1991-92 season.

What they are saying

Bobby Hurley, starting guard
Duke

Defending champion, currently ranked No. 1

"I just think the most important thing in the tournament is that you have five guys playing together. At that point of the season, you realize that if you lose one game, you're out. There's no one on your team looking for individual things. It's everyone coming together. If you come together at the right time, then you have guys on the same page looking to do great things, and that's how you win."

Damon Bailey, starting guard
Indiana

Currently ranked No. 2

"Preparation and organization—it's important to have these things in the tournament because in the first game of the week, you have three or four days to prepare, and the other team has more time to find an advantage over you. But in the second game of the week, you only have a day and a half to get ready, so being organized is very important."

Men's and women's fencing

Usual contenders, but no clear favorite Event: 1992 National Collegiate Men's and Women's Fencing Championships.

Overview: The balance of power has not changed; perennial contenders Penn State, Columbia/Columbia-Barnard, Notre Dame and Yale will be in the hunt for the overall championship. But no team can be considered the odds-on favorite. It should come down to the final event of the championships—the men's epee team competition—which generally is considered to be up for grabs. The surprise team of the tournament could be Stanford, which competes in relative obscurity in the West but has had strong showings against limited Eastern competition. The Wayne State (Michigan) women's squad appears ready to return to its prominence of the late 1980s. Defending men's foil champion Ben Atkins of Columbia will compete in epee this year.

Field: Eight three-man teams will compete for team titles in each of three men's weapon events: foil, epee and sabre. Twelve four-woman teams will compete for the team title in women's foil. Minimum fields of 24 fencers will compete for individual titles in women's foil and men's foil, epee and sabre. The NCAA Executive Committee has authorized a maximum of 154 fencers to compete in the combined-scoring championships.

Dates and sites: Notre Dame will host the championships March 20-24.

Results: Championships results will appear in the April 1 issue of The NCAA News.

Championships notes: This is the third year for a championships format in which nine titles are awarded: individual crowns in women's foil and men's foil, sabre and epee; weapon team titles in each of those four events, and an overall (men's and women's) team championship. Before 1990, separate men's and women's championships were held.

Penn State's Olga Chernyak is a favorite in the women's foil

What they are saying

Emmanuil Kaidanov, head coach
Penn State

Overall champion in 1990, 1991

"Epee is the least predictable weapon. In most cases, it depends on the athletics ability of the kids and how they feel on that day. In epee, first of all, the field is so even. And the weapon itself requires full concentration and tremendous mobility; hesitation for a split second can be enough for the opponent to win a touch."

George Kolombatovich, cohead coach
Columbia/Columbia-Barnard

Second place in 1990, 1991

"Our kids have a real desire to take first this year, and they've worked very hard. Our men are undefeated; and our women were 12-4, but a number of their losses came when Ann Marsh, our top fencer, was at the World Cup tournament trying to make the Olympic team."

Mike DeCicco, head coach
Notre Dame

Third place in 1990, 1991

"If we go in with a full contingent (qualify four weapon teams), we're going to be a team to be at least reckoned with. We may not have a shot at women's foil—Wayne State (Michigan) and Penn State are awfully strong there—but we hope to be right on their tails. Sabre looks like a war between us and Penn State, with Penn State having an edge with a returning national champion (Vitali Nazlimov). In epee, we could surprise and win there."

Division I wrestling

Dominating Iowa looks even better in '92

Event: 1992 Division I Wrestling Championships.

Overview: Defending champion Iowa, which missed tying its own record for points in a championship last year by one point on its own mats, returns its entire starting lineup. Six of 10 starters were 1991 finalists and two were champions. The Hawkeyes have the top-ranked wrestler in four of the 10 weight classes.

Field: A total of 330 Division I qualifiers from 12 conferences and two regionals will compete for individual championships at the following weights: 118, 126, 134, 142, 150, 158, 167, 177, 190 and heavy-weight (177-275). A team champion will be determined from the advancement points scored by wrestlers in the matches for the individual championships. No Division II or III wrestlers are eligible this year.

Dates and sites: The championships will be held at the Myriad in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, March 19-21. The hosts are Oklahoma, Oklahoma State and the Oklahoma City All Sports Association.

Results: Championships results will appear in the March 25 issue of The NCAA News.

Championships notes: Cohost Oklahoma State leads in all-time team championships with 29, the most by any school in any sport. The Cowboys also have claimed 110 individual titles.

What they are saying

Dan Gable, head coach
Iowa

Defending champion, currently ranked No. 1

"I've challenged this team to the point of seeing what it is capable of doing (in terms of) scoring more points and winning more championships than any other team I've had, basically because of the precedent they set last year in coming one point short of the record. Even though we have had a good dual-meet season, now is what counts."

Dave Martin, administrative coach
Oklahoma State

"Iowa has the upper hand. We had the potential to challenge them before we lost a few people to NCAA eligibility rulings. They're a big favorite, but anything can happen. Despite missing some dual meets, our individuals are ready to perform up to their capabilities."

Rich Lorenzo, head coach
Penn State

"I don't think there is any team that can beat (Iowa) head on head, but if enough wrestlers wrestle up to their ability and there are enough upsets, anything can happen (in a tournament). It's going to take a tall order. We're not going in with the idea that this is Iowa's tournament."

Division I women's basketball

Virginia contends again, but newcomers gain attention

Event: 1992 Division I Women's Basketball Championship.

Overview: Virginia, with only one loss, has been ranked first most of the season. Three relative newcomers to the top 25 poll are Southwest Missouri State, George Washington and Vermont.

Field: The Division I Women's Basketball Championship provides for a field of 48 teams. Automatic qualification has been granted to 23 conferences. The remaining 25 teams will be selected at large from the East, Mideast, Midwest and West regions.

Dates and sites: First-round games will be played at on-campus sites March 18. Second-round action is March 21-22 on the campuses of competing schools. Regional games will be played March 26 and 28 at predetermined sites. The semifinals and final will be played April 4 and 5 at the Los Angeles Sports Arena, Los Angeles, California.

Results: Scores and pairings from first- and second-round games will appear in the March 25 issue of The NCAA News. Regional scores will be published April 1. Championship results will appear in the April 8 issue of the News.

Television coverage: NCAA Productions will broadcast four regional semifinal games (double-headers in the East and West regions). ESPN will carry all four regional championship games. The semifinals and final will be televised live by CBS Sports. The starting time for the semifinal games is 12:30 p.m. Eastern time. The final begins at 4 p.m. Eastern.

Championship notes: Last year's 70-67 overtime win by Tennessee was the tournament's first overtime championship final.

What they are saying

Cheryl Burnett, head coach
Southwest Missouri State

"Last year we had a first-round game at home, then we went to the University of Tennessee. I think it just proved to our team that we could play with some of the top teams in the country. It didn't change our work habits, but it changed our mentality. We became a little more focused as to where we were in the national picture."

Joe McKeown, head coach
George Washington

"Last year in the tournament, we won the first game against Richmond and then lost to North Carolina State. I think that was great incentive for our players to want more—not only to get back to the tournament but to advance. What will help us is that we played a national schedule in the nonconference season."

Cathy Inglese, head coach
Vermont

"We're kind of new at this as far as having a winning record. Last year was the first time in a long time that Vermont has had a team above .500. We've taken a lot of people by surprise. What people need to understand is that the kids have always worked hard here, but we just hadn't been winning. A lot of people have been talking to us, saying they (the NCAA Division I Women's Basketball Committee) have to let us in (the tournament). We realize we're new, and it takes time to get there."

Division I women's swimming

Dominance of 'Big Three' threatened

Event: 1992 Division I Women's Swimming and Diving Championships.

Overview: Texas, Stanford and Florida have dominated the meet since its inception 10 years ago, claiming the top three spots at each of the past nine meets. That could change. A greatly improved field, led by Arizona, Southern Methodist and California, are capable of ending the trio's dominance. Texas vies for its eighth title in nine years.

Field: The maximum number of participants allowed is 230. All qualifiers who have met the "A" time standard in an individual event will be admitted into the meet; those who have met the "B" time standard in an individual event will be considered until the event is filled. No team shall be allowed more than 18 actual competitors (Note: An entrant who swims counts as one competitor; an entrant who swims and dives counts as one competitor, and an entrant who dives only will be counted as one-half a competitor in the total team limit).

Dates and sites: The championships will be March 19-21 at Austin, Texas.

Results: Championship results will appear in The NCAA News March 25.

Championships notes: Texas has hosted two previous meets (1988 and 1990). Both times, the Longhorns claimed the title.... The Big Three have won 168 of the 210 individual titles awarded. Florida leads the way with 66 titles.

What they are saying

Stanford

"It's a little hard to figure because we are just now entering the meet. Quite a few of our swimmers are on the bubble. I feel real good about the top 12 or 13 swimmers on our squad. But I am concerned about the remaining spots. We had three swimmers qualify for the Olympics (Summer Sanders, Jenny Thompson and Lea Loveless). Along with Janell Jorgensen, Lori Heisick and diver Eileen Richetelli, they will provide the strength for our team."

Mitch Ivey, head coach
Florida

"I think (the Olympic year) throws the meet open to a lot of new faces and a lot of letdown-type performances. It's tough to survive the season, go to (Olympic) trials and perform at NAAs. It will definitely be interesting."

Steve Collins, head coach
Southern Methodist

"Our goal is to try to improve on last year's performance (the Mustangs finished sixth). Obviously, we'd like to challenge for a spot in the top five. As for the top three, I really don't expect a change. It's going to be awfully tough for anybody to unseat any of those teams."

Division III men's swimming

Kenyon favored for 13th straight

Event: 1992 Division III Men's Swimming and Diving Championships.

Overview: A year ago, coach Jim Steen's Kenyon Lords crushed the field, registering a 313½-point triumph over runner-up Claremont-Mudd-Scripps in earning their 12th consecutive team title. This year's championship may not prove so lopsided, but all indications are that the Lords should have little trouble in claiming title No. 13. UC San Diego, Denison and Hope are solid contenders for a top-five finishes.

Field: The maximum number of participants allowed is 239. All qualifiers who have met the "A" time standard will be admitted; those who have met the "B" time standard will be considered for the field. No team shall be allowed more than 18 competitors (an entrant who swims counts as one competitor; an entrant who swims and dives counts as one competitor, and an entrant who dives only will be counted as one-third of a competitor in the total team limit).

Dates and sites: March 19-21 at Buffalo, New York.

Results: Championships results will appear in The NCAA News March 25.

Championships notes: Kenyon has claimed 12 of a possible 17 team championships.... Johns Hopkins (three titles), St. Lawrence (one) and Cal State Chico (one) are the only institutions aside from Kenyon to win a Division III men's title.... Claremont-Mudd-Scripps has finished second at six of the past nine championships.... Wisconsin-Stevens Point, an NAIA powerhouse, returns to the championships for the first time since 1984.... Kenyon's margin of victory has been 100-plus points at each of the last six championships.... The Lords have won eight consecutive 400-yard freestyle relays.... Hope's victory in the 800-yard freestyle relay at the 1991 championships ended Kenyon's 13-year reign in the event.... Steen has won 20 national titles at Kenyon—12 with the men's program and eight as head of the women's team.... Kenyon has claimed 41 individual championships in the past five years.

Kenyon's John Landreth returns to defend his championship in the 200-yard butterfly

What they are saying

Jim Steen, head coach
Kenyon
12-time defending champion

"There's no reason we shouldn't do as well as we have in the past. But we don't want to do as well, we want to do better...to do something different. We aren't trying to defend what we've done in the past or add anything to that. What we want to do is something that will set this team apart...that will make it different from past teams."

Mike Sutton, head coach
Claremont-Mudd-Scripps
1991 runner-up

"Getting your kids to perform well that's the key to being successful (at the championships). If you can get your kids to do that and put all those performances together, then you have a chance to compete for the national championship. That's what we're going to try to do—to perform at our highest level."

Lynn Blair, head coach
Wisconsin-Stevens Point

"We're happy to be back. I really don't know what to expect other than a very fast and exciting meet. Our top goal is for our kids to perform well and represent the school well."

Gregg Parini, head coach
Denison

"We're bringing in a quality-oriented team. We have some people who have a chance to post some pretty good swims. Hopefully, those swims will score some points. Our main goal is to be in contention and let the points take care of themselves."

Vermont cross country skiers come through for title

Vermont saved its best until last, scoring well in both the men's and women's diagonal cross country events on the final day of competition to win its third NCAA National Collegiate Men's and Women's Skiing Championships team title in four years.

The Catamounts, trailing New Mexico by 10 points going into the last day, captured the individual championship in the men's diagonal on Trond Nystad's 57:17.6 performance and scored well enough in the women's event to hold off the Lobos for a 693.5 to 642.5 margin.

"It was an amazing championship," Vermont coach Chip LaCasse said. "No team from the West came in dominating, which produced the most balanced meet I have ever seen."

Only 15 points separated the top four teams after three days of competition. Colorado, the defending champion, was only 4½ points behind Vermont, and Wyoming trailed Colorado by only half a point. Utah, fifth after the third day, finished the meet in third place, and Dartmouth moved from sixth to fourth place on the final day.

Other national champions for Vermont were Sally Knight in the women's giant slalom and Einar Bohmer in the men's slalom. Utah's Kristen Vestgren won the women's diagonal cross country event and the Utes' Katja Lesjak won the women's slalom. Annette Skjolden, in the women's freestyle event, was Colorado's lone national champion. Wyoming's Bernie LaFleur was a surprise winner in the men's freestyle cross country event.

Central Oklahoma pins first crown

Runner-up the past two years, Central Oklahoma made the third time a charm when it claimed its first team title in school history at the Division II Wrestling Championships.

The Bronchos scored 91½ points to hold off North Dakota State and Portland State, which tied for second with 78½ points during the championships March 6-7 at Northern Colorado.

Central Oklahoma, which finished second to Portland State in 1990 and Nebraska-Omaha in 1991, got individual titles from Randy Zellner (118 pounds), Keith Cunningham (158 pounds) and Howard Moore (167 pounds) in becoming the 10th team in the championships' 30-year history to win the team trophy. The Bronchos and Portland State, which claimed two individual titles, were the only schools with more than one individual champion.

Trailing Portland State, 29½-29, after the first day of competition, the Bronchos surged ahead with 62½ points on the final day.

Host Northern Colorado totaled 59 points to finish fourth. Southern Colorado, with 51¼ points, rounded out the top five.

Moore, the No. 1 seed at 167 pounds, became the Bronchos' first repeat champion, defeating Lance Koenig of North Dakota State, 9-6, to win his second title in three years. Moore outscored his opponents, 26-15, in four matches.

Zellner, who was seeded fifth at 118 pounds, claimed a 6-3 decision over Larry Hohman of Pittsburgh-Johnstown to give Central Oklahoma its first-ever 118-pound title. Zellner advanced to the final by edging No. 1 seed Brian Kapusta of North Dakota State, 3-1, in overtime.

Cunningham, the No. 2 seed at 158 pounds, outlasted Cheyney's Kendall Southerland, 6-4, in overtime. Cunningham's title also was the first for the Bronchos in that class.

Aside from its three champions, two Central Oklahoma wrestlers earned third-place finishes—Todd Drake, who outlasted Eric Roberson of Southern Illinois-Edwardsville at 142 pounds, and Travis Moman, who edged Eric Bowser of Pittsburgh-Johnstown at 126 pounds.

Northern Colorado claimed coach-of-the-year and outstanding wrestler awards during the championships. Jack Maughan earned the coaching honor while Mike Leberknight who ended the three-year reign of Portland State's Tony Champion in the 177-pound class, was honored as the outstanding wrestler.

Ann-Marie Pfiffner claimed her second consecutive individual air-rifle title and Tim Manges captured the smallbore title to lead West Virginia to its fifth consecutive National Collegiate Men's and Women's Rifle Championships team title March 6-7 at Murray State.

Paced by Pfiffner and Manges, the Mountaineers posted an aggregate score of 6,214 (4,672 in smallbore and 1,542 in air rifle) to claim their eighth title in the championships' 13-year history. West Virginia's total was the third highest ever recorded and the highest since modified air-rifle targets were approved for use during the 1989-90 season.

ACC, Big Ten and Pac-10 rank as top leagues in men's tourney

By James M. Van Valkenburg
NCAA Director of Statistics

The Atlantic Coast Conference leads in all-time victories in men's NCAA tournament play, while the Big Ten Conference is on top in total Final Four appearances and Pacific-10 Conference teams have won the most championships.

The above comparisons use only the actual conference lineups each season that competed for the conference title. Using current lineups projected back to the beginning produces the same leaders but otherwise presents a vastly different picture. More about that later.

The ACC enters this tournament with a one-victory edge, 176-175, over the Big Ten. In Final Four teams, though, the Big Ten's 30 is well ahead of the Pac-10's 25. The ACC is next at 24 but its first season was 1954, while the other two go back to the first tournament. The Pac-10 has 13 championships (10 by UCLA) to the Big Ten's nine (five by Indiana). The ACC has won five crowns, as has the Southeastern (all by Kentucky). Here are all those with at least 17 all-time tournament wins:

*Includes former Skyline 8 (Mountain States) Conference.

Regional second place, or one win from Final Four.

Note that the Big East Conference, now in just its 13th season, has 101 victories, eight Final Four teams and two champions. It may be a surprise (although not to old-timers) that the Missouri Valley Conference ranks fifth with four champions and 16 Final Four teams, just two behind the fourth-place Big Eight Conference. The Valley's four titles were won by Oklahoma State (1945 and 1946) and Cincinnati (1961 and 1962).

Many of the oldest current conferences had different names in the past and slightly different lineups. For instance, Oregon and Oregon State had NCAA teams in the early 1960s when not in a conference for a few years, after the old Pacific Coast broke up in 1959. The Western Athletic Conference numbers include the old Mountain States, or Skyline Eight, the home of former champions Wyoming (1943) and Utah (1944), although the WAC was a new organization.

The other way

The other way of ranking conferences, and just as legitimate from a current-day view, is to use each current member's all-time tournament record. This cuts the independents from 304 all-time victories, six champions and 45 Final Four teams to virtually nothing and spreads their numbers among newer conferences.

For instance, the new Great Midwest leaps all the way up to seventh place with 76 tournament victories, 10 Final Four teams and three titles (Cincinnati two, Marquette one). The Southwest moves down one notch to eighth while the Atlantic 10 leaps to ninth, going from 23 victories to 55. The WAC stays at 53 for 10th.

The Big Ten and Pac-10 do not change their Final Four numbers, but the ACC takes second with 27 and the Big Eight fourth with 23 (and four titles). The ACC extends its lead with 189 wins and the Big East jumps to third at 156 (with 14 Final Fours).

Vermont women close

The 26-0 Vermont women, undefeated entering the North Atlantic Conference tournament, could become only the third undefeated entrant in the history of the women's Division I championship tournament that started in 1982.

The other two were Texas, 1986 champion, finishing 34-0, and Louisiana Tech, which lost in the 1990 national semifinals to finish tied for third.

Thirteen entrants were once-beaten and only two of those won the title — Louisiana Tech in 1982 and Stanford in 1990. Two finished second — Louisiana Tech in 1983 and Auburn in 1989. Two finished tied for third — Northeast Louisiana in 1985 and Texas in 1987. Thirty-five entrants had two losses.

Short takes

The Delaware men, 25-3 entering the North Atlantic Conference tournament after winning the regular-season title in their first season in the league, have the first 20-game winning season in school history. The Blue Hens did it with great balance — six players averaging in double figures.... The 22-5 Hawaii women boast even greater balance, with no player averaging more than 23 minutes or 9.5 points.... Montana's Shannon Cate has raised her career scoring total to 2,037 entering the Big Sky Conference tournament — more than any man or woman in Big Sky history.... Two Maryland-Baltimore County seniors — Anne Wellington (21) and Angel Webb (20) — out-rebounded the entire Navy team, but Navy won, 82-63, with Angie Dobbs scoring 38.... Even though the Northeastern Illinois women had only six players available the last 14 games, they won nine games vs. seven victories the last six years combined.

Three men's coaches have reached milestones and a third is close — Cal State Northridge's Pete Cassidy got his 300th win, Eckerd's Jim Harley his 350th and the next victory for Kansas' Roy Williams will be his 100th in just four seasons — a total surpassed by only four Division I coaches in history (the record is 107 by North Carolina State's Everett Case in 1947 through 1950).... Earlier this season, Duke got its 500th victory at Cameron Indoor Stadium, built in 1940. Using current arenas, that put Duke sixth on a list led by Washington in Edmundson Pavilion (built in 1927) at 660 wins.... Arkansas State players had no idea it was coming, but it worked — the team manager handed out new red suits (instead of black) the night of a recent game. They responded by winning at New Orleans for the first time ever. "We tricked 'em, kind of like Notre Dame did once (in football vs. Southern California)," said coach Nelson Catalina.

Diemer works hard to keep dream alive

By David D. Smale
The NCAA News Staff

Brian Diemer grew up dreaming about running in the Olympics. But it was something he never really thought was possible.

Then, in 1984, Diemer found himself in Los Angeles, California, where he won a bronze medal in the 3,000-meter steeplechase at the XXIII Summer Games.

Four years later in Seoul, South Korea, Diemer finished 15th. He had injured his hamstring the previous year and was unable to start training until May, less than two months before the Olympic Trials. He made the team "by the skin of my teeth, but I couldn't get over the hump and start feeling good because of a lack of base (training)," he said. "I got into the semis but didn't have any zip left."

Diemer didn't give up. He regained his strength and finished fifth at the World Championships in Tokyo last August.

"I look at that as very encouraging," he said. "It was a very big step up. It shows that I can run with the best in the world. In an Olympic year, anything is possible."

Middle of the middle

Diemer is 30, right in the middle of the prime for a middle-distance runner. With continued training, he is confident of once again being a medal contender at the Olympics in Barcelona, Spain, this summer.

"I expect to make the team, but I realize that there are a lot of other good runners out there," he said. "It would be pretty naive to think they would play dead. Just like I came out of the woodwork in 1984, there will be somebody else coming out of the woodwork this year. I do know that it will be awfully hard to keep me off the team if I am healthy."

But this is not just a story of a runner who overcame an injury to regain his place in the world standings. Diemer is not a high-profile athlete who commands big money just to appear at a competition. He holds down two jobs to support his wife and two daughters.

Every morning at 7 a.m. he arrives at the family business, Everett's Landscape Management, where he is in charge of the landscape department. "If I didn't have the deadline of getting to practice, I would stay at work too long," he said.

Calvin assistant

Ah, practice. That is his other job. He is the assistant track coach at Calvin College. He arrives on campus at 3:30 p.m. to train his distance runners, and he gets in his own training as well. "Actually, the way it works out is that coaching has been a blessing," he said. "This way, I get my workouts in."

Diemer has turned the Calvin distance runners into a formidable group. Patrick McNamara and John Lumkes won back-to-back Division III titles in the 3,000-meter steeplechase in 1989 and 1990. "The biggest attribute that Brian gives to our team is that he is a world-class runner, but he still relates to the kids," said Calvin head men's track coach Ralph Honderd. "He is very humble about his accomplishments and is a tremendous role model. A couple people have come here because of Brian."

"The nice thing about having Brian here is that a student doesn't have to give up a good, Christian, liberal arts education to get training with a world-class runner. This school is well-known academically. To get to train under Brian is the best of both worlds. The runners have really improved under Brian."

Diemer is not sure how much longer he'll keep up the lifestyle of a competitive athlete. His training and competing take him away from his family. He says he'll probably continue at least through the World Championships in 1993, but then he will take it one year at a time.

In the meantime, he's holding on to that childhood dream of running in the Olympics once more. "It's a great feeling to be in the Olympics. It's kind of like a huge dream come true."

Olympic bronze medalist Brian Diemer is a Calvin College track aide

Administrative Committee minutes

1. Acting for the Council, the Administrative Committee:

a. Took the following actions regarding committees and committee appointments:

(1) Appointed Roy Kramer, Southeastern Conference, to serve as chair of the Division I Men's Basketball Committee until his term on the committee expires September 1, 1992, replacing Thomas J. Frericks, deceased; advanced the effective date of the Convention election of C. M. Newton, University of Kentucky, to that committee from September 1 to March 1, thus replacing Frericks as a member; directed the committee to pay special attention to Division I-AAA representation in its next recommendations.

(2) Approved a recommendation by the Professional Sports Liaison Committee that Charles Theokas, Temple University, be permitted to serve as a consultant to that committee for one year after his term as a member and as chair of that committee expires September 1, 1992, with the understanding that a replacement as chair will be recommended to and named by the Administrative Committee prior to the September 1 date.

(3) Appointed the executive director of the National Association of Basketball Coaches (subject to annual review) and Judith R. Holland, University of California, Los Angeles, as additional representatives on the board of directors of USA Basketball, noting that James E. Delany, Big Ten Conference, and Thomas W. Jernstedt, NCAA, continue as representatives.

(4) Appointed Sandra R. Weeden, State

University of New York at Stony Brook, as a new Division III representative on the Special Advisory Committee to Review Implementation of 1990 Convention Proposal No. 24, effective immediately.

Conference No. 2

mittee action in regard to the voting status of the Big East Conference; i.e., to be a voting conference on football issues, the conference must determine a football champion via regular season competition on the playing field.

c. Took the following actions on requests for waivers of the transfer residence requirement for reasons of health per Bylaw 14.9.1.2 (a):

(1) Denied a request submitted by the University of the Pacific (California) on behalf of a student-athlete now attending California State University, Dominguez Hills.

(2) Granted a request submitted by The Citadel on behalf of a student-athlete now attending the University of Tennessee at Martin.

d. Denied a request by a member institution for a waiver per Bylaw 16.13.1 to permit the institution to reimburse a student-athlete for property stolen from his automobile while he was on campus for practice in his sport during a vacation period.

e. Took the following actions regarding amendments to NCAA legislation:

(1) Amended Bylaw 22.2.3 under the provisions of Constitution 5.3.1.1.1 to specify that exceptions can be granted by the Executive Committee on an annual basis.

(2) Amended Bylaw 30.9.7.4 to delete the reference to Monday in that provision and substitute the word "day."

f. Agreed in concept to a possible revised format for the 1992-93 Division I Graduation-Rates Disclosure Form, noting that the actual form would be reviewed by the Administrative Committee in a future telephone conference.

2. Acting for the Executive Committee, the Administrative Committee:

Granted a request by several member institutions for an exception to the championships transportation policy to permit skiers and their coaches to remain at the site of the 1992 National Collegiate Men's and Women's Skiing Championships in order to participate in the Intercontinental Cup Series, noting that the exception is available only because it involves international competition at or near the NCAA championships site and approval was requested in advance.

3. Report of actions taken by the executive director per Constitution 4.3.2. Acting for the Executive Committee:

Approved a recommendation by the Women's Softball Committee that the University of Central Oklahoma be realigned from the South region to the Midwest region for the 1992 Division II Women's Softball Championship.

appropriate campus officials, accompanied by other supporting information including the institution's rationale for believing the circumstance involved was athletically related.

e. Reviewed a draft of a proposed covering document to accompany the mailing of the summary of institutional graduation rates, as well as several modifications in the draft proposed by the chair of the Special Advisory Committee to Review Implementation of 1990 Convention Proposal No. 24; approved the document with the proposed modifications and noted that the Administrative Committee would review the graduation-rates form in its March 25 telephone conference.

f. Reviewed a draft of the proposed coaches certification test and related procedural recommendations; approved the test and the procedures with the understanding that all elements of the project would be subject to revision after the first year of use; concluded that the test could be administered any time after it is available rather than waiting until the third week in April as originally recommended, with the understanding that appropriate materials are available (e.g., the previous year's NCAA Manual, the Convention Official Notice, reports in The NCAA News of the Convention actions, and a summary of changes in recruiting legislation) to obviate concern regarding the fact that not all coaches will be able to obtain copies of the revised NCAA Manual in March.

g. Authorized the executive director to act for the Administrative Committee in selecting and appointing a special committee to review the penalty structure in the Association's current enforcement procedures, noting that the special committee will be composed primarily of representatives of member institutions.

2. Acting for the Executive Committee, the Administrative Committee:

a. Approved a recommendation by the Division I-AA Football Committee that Marshall University be the site of the 1992 and 1993 Division I-AA Football Championship games.

b. Appointed Michael M. Gilleran, West Coast Conference, and Laurence C. Keating Jr., Seton Hall University, to the Special Committee to Review Recommendations Regarding Distribution of Revenues, replacing David M. Gavitt, no longer in college athletics, and Thomas J. Frericks, deceased.

c. Deferred action until the May Executive

Interpretations Committee minutes

Acting for the Council, the Interpretations Committee issued the following interpretations:

Tryouts

1. Coach's involvement in local sports club that includes prospects who reside outside the 50-mile radius. It is not permissible for an institution's coach to be involved in activities with a local sports club or team that includes prospects who reside outside a 50-mile radius from the institution's campus. The committee noted that in club programs involving multiple teams (e.g., 16 and under, 18 and under) or multiple sports, the 50-mile radius is applicable only to the team with which the institution's coach is involved, provided the coach does not assign a prospect outside the 50-mile radius to another coach's team. Further, a coach may be

Evaluation/tryouts

4. Coach's involvement in local sports club—effect on evaluation limitations. If an institution's coaching staff member is involved with a local sports club during the academic year, the institution does not use one of its four evaluations for any prospect participating in any competition against the local team the individual coaches. The committee noted that any other contests observed by the coaching staff member involving prospective student-athletes (e.g., scouting future opponents for the club team) must count as an evaluation for each prospect participating in the contest. [References: 13.1.6 (limitations on the number of evaluations—all sports); 13.12.2.4 (local sports clubs); IC 3/19/91, Item No. 3-c]

1992 Convention Proposal No. 43

5. Use of scrimmages and exhibitions in determining the first half of the institution's season. An institution must exclude scrimmages and exhibition contests in calculating the first half of the institution's season for purposes of the hardship waiver. [References: 14.2.5 (hardship waiver); 14.2.5.2.2 (first half of season calculation)]

Scouting

6. Definition of "on one occasion" when scouting opponents. In the sports of basketball, football, lacrosse and women's volleyball, an institution's coaching staff member (whose team is not participating in the competition) may not receive expenses to scout more than one contest or match involving an opponent, even if the opponent is involved in a multi-competition event (e.g., tournament). [References: 11.6.2.1 (basketball); 11.6.2.1.1 (regular-season or post-season tournaments); 11.6.2.1.3 (designating the opponent)]

Coaching—restricted earnings

7. Restricted-earnings coach employed by institution's coach. An institution's restricted-earnings coach may not be employed by a private company owned by another of the institution's coaching staff members without including such compensation in the limits established for the restricted-earnings coach if the business is operated by the athletics department or relates to the coaching activities of the owner (e.g., directing coach's show, scheduling coach's speaking engagements). [Reference: 11.02.3 (restricted-earnings coach)]

Coaches

8. Definition of "combined" sports program. A member institution that conducts a combined program (i.e., sports program in which all coaching staff members are involved in practice activities or competition with both the men's and women's teams on a daily basis) may employ the total number of coaches specified separately for the applicable men's and women's sport. [Reference: 11.7.4 (coaching limitations—sports other than football)]

1992 Convention Proposal No. 60

9. Issues related to volunteer coach. The committee reviewed the provisions of 1992 Convention Proposal No. 60 (effective August 1, 1992) and determined the following:

d. Supported the concept of appointing an ethnic-minority representative to the Special Advisory Committee for Women's Corporate Marketing, noting that the committee will identify one or more candidates for consideration at a later time.

3. Report of actions taken by the executive director per Constitution 4.3.2.

a. Acting for the Council:

(1) Granted requests by the University of Colorado, Boulder, and Ohio State University to replace on a temporary basis countable coaches in women's basketball and in football, respectively, under the provisions of Bylaw 11.7.1.1.1.2.

(2) Granted a waiver per Bylaw 14.8.6.1-(b) to permit a student-athlete from one institution to participate in tryouts leading directly to qualification for participation in the Olympic Games (ice hockey).

(3) Granted waivers per Bylaw 14.8.6.1-(c) to permit student-athletes from seven institutions to participate in competition involving national teams in basketball, field hockey, rifle, swimming, tennis and water polo.

(4) Granted waivers per Bylaws 14.8.6.1-(d) and 14.8.6.2-(b) to permit student-athletes from various institutions to participate in the 1992 Prairie Rose State Games (North Dakota and Minnesota), North Carolina State Games, Utah Summer Games, Bay State Games (Massachusetts) and Keystone State Games (Pennsylvania).

(5) Granted waivers per Bylaw 16.13.1 to permit institutions to provide incidental expenses in these situations:

(a) To student-athletes to attend funerals of members of the student-athletes' families.

(b) To a student-athlete to return home to be with a seriously injured family member.

(c) To student-athletes to attend recognized events at which the student-athletes would be honored.

(d) To permit a student-athlete to return to campus by airplane after a vacation period due to a medical condition that prompted the student-athlete's physician to indicate that he should not travel by automobile for an extended period.

(e) To permit the institution's diving team to travel out of state to a site at which the team could practice platform diving inasmuch as the team's own facility was being used for national swimming trials.

(f) To a student-athlete for temporary living expenses until the student-athlete's spring-semester subsistence payment arrived, noting that the tardy check was due to an institutional error and there was no other entity from which the student-athlete could receive such temporary financial assistance.

b. Acting for the Executive Committee:

(1) Granted waivers for championships eligibility per Bylaw 31.2.1.3 to the University of Bridgeport, Bucknell University, Eureka College, Jackson State University, Kentucky State University and St. Louis University. The institutions failed to submit various required NCAA forms or reports by the specified deadlines.

(2) Approved a request by the Division II men's tennis subcommittee for a waiver of the requirement that admission be charged per Bylaw 31.1.11 for the Division II Men's Tennis Championships, noting that the expense of selling tickets would exceed any revenue generated.

(3) Approved a recommendation by the Division III Baseball Committee that Lackawanna Stadium, Scranton, Pennsylvania, serve as the site for the Mid-Atlantic regional in the 1992 Division III Baseball Championship, May 14-17.

Facilities

Vandiver Hall opens at Citadel

The Citadel has dedicated a multipurpose athletics complex featuring facilities for each of the school's sports except football and basketball.

The 21,645-square-foot building, called Vandiver Hall in honor of Thomas C. "Nap" Vandiver, includes such features as dressing rooms for track and field, cross country, wrestling, golf and soccer teams. In addition, there are golf, track and wrestling offices; a conference room, and storage space.

The second floor of the facility houses two full regulation batting cages, a wrestling practice area and two golf cages for indoor practices.

The total cost of Vandiver Hall was nearly $2.1 million, financed through private donations.

Rutgers-Newark gets pool and more

After using the lack of a campus swimming pool as a fund-raising enticement, Provost Norman Samuels of Rutgers University, Newark, said he is going to have to use a new pitch.

That's because the school broke ground for a $6 million addition to its athletics facility, the Golden Dome. The addition will house an eight-lane, 25-meter pool; four racquetball courts; an auxiliary gymnasium; a student lounge and a conference room, and more locker rooms. Completion is scheduled for early 1993.

Players file suit against NCAA

Players for the University of Nevada, Las Vegas, men's basketball team have filed a suit against the Association in which they seek the right to participate in the 1992 NCAA Men's Division I Basketball Championship.

However, Nevada-Las Vegas President Robert C. Maxson has said the university will decline any invitation that could be offered as a result of the suit.

"UNLV made a promise to the NCAA," Maxson told The Associated Press, referring to a November 1990 agreement in which the NCAA permitted Nevada-Las Vegas to participate in the 1991 tournament if the university consented to sit out the 1992 event as punishment in an extended infractions case involving Nevada-Las Vegas men's basketball coach Jerry Tarkanian.

"Jerry Tarkanian made a promise to the NCAA," Maxson said. "We should keep that promise."

The suit was filed March 6 in a Nevada state court.

Meanwhile, Tarkanian, who had said he would retire at the conclusion of this season but announced a change of heart February 23, remained in his office. AP reported that athletics director Jim Weaver met with Tarkanian March 5 to discuss a transition of coaches. Weaver said Tarkanian "didn't really respond."

some of the regulations.

Schultz said the current study can be evaluated from a variety of perspectives, "including the view that gender equity in intercollegiate athletics represents a moral and not just a legal imperative." Schultz added that Title IX is only a piece of the gender-equity puzzle.

"This issue is complex," he said. "Also at play are factors that range from the state of the economy to supply and demand. I hope the study will serve as the cornerstone for a long-term strategy designed to identify effective solutions and to increase understanding of the challenges and pressures facing administrators in today's economic climate.

Update on status of Title IX requirements

Title IX

Title IX represents the principal legislative statement on gender equity that is applicable to the conduct of intercollegiate athletics. This statute, enacted by Congress in 1972, prohibits discrimination on the basis of sex in any education program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance.

In 1988, reacting to a Supreme Court decision limiting application of the statute to those education programs actually receiving Federal assistance, Congress passed a further law making it clear that Title IX applies to all operations of a higher education institution, any part of which receives Federal financial assistance.

Basic requirements

The regulation and policies of the U.S. Department of Education implementing Title IX require (1) that athletics financial assistance be allocated in proportion to the numbers of male and female participants in intercollegiate athletics; (2) that all other benefits, opportunities and treatment afforded participants of each sex be equivalent, and (3) that the athletics interests and abilities of women be accommodated to the same degree as those of men with respect to the number of participation opportunities, team competitive levels and selection of sports offered. Departures from these requirements are permitted if justified by factors determined by the Department's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) to be nondiscriminatory.

Athletics financial assistance

With respect to athletics financial assistance, the test of compliance is financial proportionality. The total amounts of athletics aid awarded to the members of each sex must be substantially proportionate to the numbers of participants of that sex in the intercollegiate athletics program.

If the percentage of athletics aid awarded to each sex is not the same as the percentage of participants of that sex, the determination whether substantial proportionality has been achieved is made by performing statistical tests. If the amounts awarded are substantially proportionate, or if any disparity can be explained by nondiscriminatory factors, the institution is found in compliance. Only aid based wholly or partly on athletics ability is included in the proportionality calculation.

Other athletics program areas

For all athletics program components other than financial aid, the basic test of compliance is equivalence—the availability, quality and kinds of benefits, opportunities and treatment afforded the members of each sex must be equal or equal in effect, unless disparities are justified by factors determined to be nondiscriminatory. Although financial measures are used as a means of assessing equivalency in many areas, expenditures and budgetary allocations, in and of themselves, do not determine whether an institution is in compliance.

The following factors have been identified by OCR as nondiscriminatory considerations that may justify departures from equivalency: unique aspects of particular sports (but not including the capacity to produce revenue), special circumstances of a temporary nature, special event management needs of spectator sports and voluntary affirmative action.

Accommodation of athletics interests and abilities

In assessing compliance with respect to accommodation of interests and abilities, OCR examines whether an institution (1) provides participation opportunities (positions on teams) to male and female students in numbers substantially proportionate to their respective enrollments, or (2) can show a history and continuing practice of program expansion to the developing interests and abilities of the "underrepresented sex," or (3) can demonstrate that the athletics interests and abilities of its students of that sex have been equivalently fully and effectively accommodated. The participation opportunities provided must be at equivalently advanced competitive levels, or the institution must be able to demonstrate a history and practice of upgrading competitive opportunities as warranted by developing abilities.

Treatment of football

Football is not treated separately from other parts of the intercollegiate athletics program. With respect to financial aid, the large number of athletes needed for a football team normally increases the number of male participants in the overall program and therefore increases the amount of financial aid to be allocated to men under the proportionality test.

With respect to other athletics program components, certain special requirements of particular sports, including specifically football, are recognized as nondiscriminatory differences justifying departures from equivalency in such areas as medical services, equipment, facilities required for competition, maintenance of those facilities, special event management needs related to crowd size and special publicity requirements.

With respect to accommodation of interest and abilities, offering football ordinarily increases the number of participation opportunities provided to men and therefore also is likely to increase the number that must be offered to women to accommodate equivalently their athletics interests and abilities.

Program-wide assessments

The appraisal of whether an institution has satisfied the requirements of Title IX is made on a program-wide basis. This is true of both the financial aid compliance determination and the assessments of whether (1) interests and abilities have been accommodated, and (2) other benefits and opportunities have been provided, equivalently. The comparisons that determine compliance are between the programs for male and female athletes, not specific sports, particular teams or specific classes of sports (such as "major" vs. "minor" or "revenue-producing" vs. "non-revenue-producing" sports).

Enforcement of Title IX by OCR

Since the 1988 clarification by Congress of the full application of Title IX to intercollegiate athletics programs, about 46 complaints involving 36 institutions have been filed with OCR. In 11 of these, violations were found and remedial action noted or ordered; in 24, no violation was found or the case was closed for other reasons. Eleven cases are pending.

Most recently, in a letter of findings related to Brooklyn College issued last month, OCR found that although the college was in compliance as to the award of financial assistance, it was not in compliance with several other aspects of the athletics program, including the required equal accommodation of interests and abilities of students of both sexes. Based on assurances by the college as to certain anticipated actions, however, OCR found the college "to be presently fulfilling its obligations under Title IX."

Beginning in September 1991, OCR began conducting compliance reviews of intercollegiate athletics programs as to which no complaint had been filed.

Private Title IX enforcement

Although the Title IX statute contains no provision for a private party to bring suit to enforce its mandate, the Supreme Court held in 1979 that such a right was to be implied. It was generally believed that available private relief would be limited to equitable remedies such as an injunction. Late last month, however, the Court issued a further decision to the effect that at least with reference to intentional violation of the statute, a private party could collect monetary damages resulting from such violations.

Application to athletics program reductions

Early in February, OCR circulated a draft memorandum to postsecondary institutions, warning of potential inadvertent violations of the Title IX statute that could result from budget-related reductions in the scope of the overall intercollegiate athletics program. Risks in this regard appear principally to relate to the requirement that the athletics interests and abilities of women students be accommodated to the same degree as those of men—a requirement that would apply equally both before and after the program reduction.

646 members responded in gender-equity study

The study: The gender-equity study, conducted by means of a confidential survey of NCAA member institutions in the second half of 1991, was authorized by the NCAA Council in response to a request by the National Association of Collegiate Women Athletic Administrators. The study was administered by the NCAA Committee on Women's Athletics.

Purpose: The principal purpose of the study was to analyze expenditures and opportunities for women's and men's athletics programs by institutions in each of the NCAA's membership divisions. The survey was not developed with a view to determining conformity by NCAA members with the Federal regulations and policies issued under Title IX. Some of the data may be useful, however, in attempting to assess compliance by NCAA member institutions on average to current Title IX requirements related to the subjects of the survey.

Data collection and compilation: Usable survey responses, relating to the academic year 1990-91, were received from 646 institutions. Response rates ranged from more than 92 percent in Division I-A to about 69 percent in Division III. Survey questions varied from division to division. Response data were compiled by the NCAA research staff.

Football: The sport of football had a dramatic effect on the ratios measured by the survey. It is a major revenue-producing sport for which no comparable women's sport exists. It generally generates revenues that provide a financial nucleus for all men's and women's intercollegiate programs.

The number of individuals who participate, salaries for a highly visible coaching staff, and the required equipment and maintenance to protect the participants and safely accommodate fans also require expenses that skew the ratios for recruiting and operating costs. Operating expenses, for example, substantially exceed average operating costs for all women's sports combined in Divisions I and II.

The number of athletics grants-in-aid permitted for this sport inflates the amount of money spent on scholarships for men. The ratio of scholarship expenditures for men and women, however, is comparable to the ratio of male and female participants in intercollegiate athletics.

Institutional enrollment: In Division I, average total enrollment was divided in 1990-91 almost equally between men and women students, but in Division II, average enrollment of women was proportionately slightly higher (53.5 percent). Enrollment data were not collected in Division III.

Athletics participation: The number of male participants in intercollegiate athletics programs exceeded female participants on average by 2.24 to 1 in Division I, 2.11 to 1 in Division II, and 1.87 to 1 in Division III.

Scholarships: Division I scholarship expenses for male student-athletes averaged about $849,000 per institution and for female student-athletes about $373,000, a ratio of 2.28 to 1. The ratio in Division II was slightly less (2.15 to 1), with male and female scholarship expenses averaging $320,000 and $149,000, respectively. In both divisions, the male/female scholarship expense ratio rather closely paralleled the male/female participation ratio as required by Title IX.

Scheduling: On average, Division I institutions scheduled about 10 contests per sport for their men's and women's teams. In general, a comparable number of contests on average were scheduled for sports such as basketball, fencing, lacrosse, skiing and swimming in which both men's and women's teams were sponsored. Similar data were reported for Division II, except that the average number of contests for men and women were proportionately fewer.

In Division III, for which data on number of contests were not collected, responses on average disclosed that practice times for men's and women's teams were scheduled between 3 and 6 p.m. with almost exactly the same frequency.

Operating expenses: In Division I, average operating expenses for men's sports exceeded those for women's sports by 3.42 to 1, which exceeded the male/female participant ratio of 2.28 to 1; in Division II, the ratio was 2.15 to 1, close to the 2.11 to 1 ratio of male to female participants. In Division III, the operating expense ratio was 2.00 to 1, somewhat greater than the male-female participant ratio of 1.87 to 1.

Review of average operating expenses by individual sports in all divisions indicates that to a major extent, non-revenue-producing sports were on average comparably funded between the men's and women's programs.

Recruiting expenses: In Division I, average recruiting expenses for male student-athletes exceeded those for female student-athletes by a ratio of 4.82 to 1. The comparable ratio in Division II was 3.08 to 1. These data were not collected in Division III.

Coaching: In Division I, the average percentage of male coaches for men's teams was 98.6 percent, whereas only 44.8 percent of coaches for women's teams were female. This information was not sought in the other divisions.

Average Division I ratio of participants to full- and part-time coaches was slightly better for women's teams than for men's teams: 11.56:1 for women and 12.29:1 for men. Average Division I coaching expense per participant favored the men's programs—$2,501 for men and $2,040 for women.

In Division III, 26.4 percent of head coaches for men's sports received salaries in excess of $35,000, whereas only 11.1 percent of head coaches in women's sports earned such salaries. Average data reported in Division III disclosed a narrower difference; 30.5 percent of male head coaches received salaries of $31,000 or higher, compared with 19.0 percent for female head coaches.

Subcommittees

general was established as a primary 1992 topic for the Commission as a result of last fall's report by the Commission's Subcommittee on Strategic Planning, which laid out a program of work for the Commission covering the next three years. That report was highlighted in the October 7, 1991, issue of The NCAA News and printed in its entirety in the October 14 issue.

It calls for emphasis this year on matters involving institutional responsibility and presidential control in athletics matters, with legislation to be proposed for the 1993 Convention.

The thrust for 1993, leading to the 1994 Convention, will be financial issues. And in 1994, pointing toward the '95 Convention, the Commission will revisit issues involving the welfare of the student-athlete, including many of the reform-agenda actions taken at the 1991 and 1992 Conventions.

The Subcommittee on Strategic Planning continues to be chaired by Thomas K. Hearn Jr., president of Wake Forest University. Other continuing members are Oscar C. Page, president, Austin Peay State University, and Chancellor Young of UCLA.

Newly appointed members of the planning committee are David Marker, president, Cornell College; Chancellor Sansbury of South Carolina-Spartanburg, and President Trachtenberg of George Washington University. They replaced Edward Coll of Alfred University and Margaret Preska of Mankato State University, both of whom completed their Commission terms, and Chancellor O'Brien, who resigned from the planning committee when he was elected Commission chair.

Other appointments

In an action designed to give the Presidents Commission a greater involvement in NCAA budget considerations, Chancellor Budig of Kansas has agreed to serve as a consultant to the NCAA Budget Subcommittee this year. Last year, Budig chaired a Commission subcommittee that reviewed plans for the first year of revenue distribution under the Association's seven-year contract with CBS.

Meanwhile, in another attempt to continue appropriate communication and cooperation among the various groups in the NCAA administrative structure, the NCAA Administrative Committee has appointed three chief executive officers serving on the Council to act as liaisons to the three Presidents Commission subcommittees.

Named to those positions were Robert A. Alost, president, Northwestern State University (Louisiana), liaison to the strategic-planning subcommittee; Robert G. Bottoms, president, DePauw University, liaison to the subcommittee on the role and structure of the Commission, and NCAA Division II Vice President Anthony F. Ced dia, president of Shippensburg University of Pennsylvania, liaison to the subcommittee on strengthening the role of the CEO.

The Commission will announce another subcommittee in the near future—the annual Presidential Nominating Committee that will select candidates to fill vacancies on the Commission in January 1993.

The full Commission and its Divisions I, II and III subcommittees will conduct their first meetings of 1992 April 1-2 in Dallas. Chairs of the division subgroups are William H. Cunningham, president, University of Texas at Austin, Division I; Arend D. Lubbers, president, Grand Valley State University, Division II, and David L. Warren, president, Ohio Wesleyan University, Division III.

cruiting, I was pleased to see that, on average, the colleges have substantially met the Title IX standard with respect to the proportion of scholarship assistance going to women."

In Division I, male participants in the athletics programs exceeded female participants by a ratio of 2.24 to 1. The ratio for recruiting expenses was much higher—4.8 to 1. For scholarship expenses, for which Title IX requires that expenditures closely parallel participation rates, the ratio was 2.28 to 1.

Schultz said he believed financial pressures were largely to blame for the lingering disparities in men's and women's programs.

"Financial studies indicate that almost 70 percent of the Division I institutions will not generate enough revenue this year to pay the actual expenses of their athletics departments," he said.

Budget cuts have resulted in reductions in scholarships, coaching staffs and off-campus recruiting.

Schultz said he hoped administrators would analyze the data and ask themselves if men and women student-athletes on their own campuses are indeed treated equitably.

In his "State of the Association" address at the NCAA Convention in January, Schultz asked the membership to take a leadership role in "guaranteeing gender equity in all that we do." In the past year, the NCAA Council and the NCAA Presidents Commission have identified gender equity as a key agenda item.

"We have to look for new, innovative ways to expand programs for women in an environment that is dictating overall cuts," Schultz said. "I continue to believe that those alternatives exist."

Swimmers' parents file suit

The parents of a University of Notre Dame swim-team member killed in January in a bus crash have filed a wrongful-death lawsuit against the bus company and driver.

Gordon and Kathy Beeler of Granger, Indiana, filed the lawsuit in circuit court on behalf of their daughter, Margaret "Mcghan" Beeler, according to The Associated Press.

Beeler, 19, was one of two students killed January 24 when the private bus transporting the swim team home from a meet at Northwestern University went out of control on the Indiana Toll Road near South Bend during a snowstorm.

Colleen Hipp, 19, of St. Louis, Missouri, also was killed in the crash. Another swim-team member, Haley Scott, 18, of Phoenix, Arizona, suffered severe injuries.

The lawsuit seeks unspecified damages for lost love and affection, as well as funeral, burial and administration expenses.

From grades to research to track, Prenni is doing it all

By Ronald D. Mott
The NCAA News Staff

Emory University student-athlete Anthony Prenni makes one wonder if there really are 24 hours in a day. His schedule makes it seem as though 29 or 30 hours would be needed to fit it all in.

Prenni, who is from Avonmore, Pennsylvania, stays plenty busy with his involvement in cross country and track and field at Emory, his community-service efforts and his work in the classroom.

So far, he sounds like the ordinary student-athlete, right? Here begins the separation:

- Prenni was recently named to the 1992 all-USA college academic first team prominently featured in USA Today.
- He is active in the Big Brother/Big Sister program.
- He serves as events coordinator for the Emory Coalition on Hunger and Homeless.
- He is a member of the Students for Racial Equality at Emory.
- He tutors elementary-school children with learning and speech impairments.

- He is involved in the People for Urban Justice, a political-action group that urges the city of Atlanta, Georgia, to provide low-income housing to impoverished people.

- He volunteers his time during the summer with Habitat for Humanity, a program that helps build homes for low-income people with a helping hand from members of the community.

- And, he carries a 3.760 grade-point average (4.000 scale) in chemistry as a senior.

"I keep busy," Prenni admitted. "I really enjoy everything that I do. It forces me to keep organized."

Prenni, along with 19 other college students, received a trophy and a $2,500 award at a ceremony at USA Today's Arlington, Virginia, headquarters in early February.

Some of his athletics accomplishments include NCAA Division III all-region cross country honors in 1990, when he was an eighth-place regional finisher; the record in the indoor mile at Emory; a second-place finish in the 1,500-meter race at the 1990 University Athletic Association indoor track championships, and selection as one of Emory's top five all-time competitors in three events in outdoor track.

His chemistry studies have led him to working on a system to chemically "fingerprint" oil, using fluorescence spectrophotometry, which could be used to identify the original owners of spilled oil. This, he said, would help in determining the guilty parties in major oil spills.

When he's not in the chemistry laboratory, Prenni likely can be found serving breakfast to homeless people in Atlanta, eating pizza or taking in a movie with his Little Brother, or helping answer phones at a local women's shelter.

The 21-year-old said he became active with community projects in the Atlanta area because he wanted to get more students involved in sharing time with those who could benefit from it.

"I felt there was a real need for people to get involved, especially students," he said. "As I became more involved, I would meet more people. I helped them when they were down, and now they're back on their feet. That's nice to see."

Prenni, who eventually would like to study for a doctorate in environmental chemistry, said he hopes to teach mathematics and science in Namibia through a program called World Teach.

"I think I'd like that," he said. "I need to see the world."

Committee changes review process

The NCAA Special Degree-Completion Program Committee will change the review process for awarding grants in the degree completion award program. The committee, at its March 2-3 meeting in Savannah, Georgia, reviewed the old selection process and made refinements designed to be more consistent in the evaluation.

The six categories used to determine recipients are income, a recommendation from the director of athletics, academic and athletics honors, community service and leadership, academic history, and priority points based on the number of terms remaining and length of time away from campus.

The committee will develop a grid to facilitate its consideration of the income variable. Factors that will receive emphasis are the student's past income, potential for income during the grant period and number of dependents.

Staff will review applications to assign points for academic and athletics honors and community service and leadership before submitting applications to the committee.

"The purpose of the changes was to ease the burden on the committee and assure consistency in awarding points," NCAA Director of Research Ursula R. Walsh said. "The process has been very effective. We have seen 86 percent of the awardees graduate during the first three years of the program. We just wanted to make things move even more efficiently."

In another action, the committee proposed slight changes in the application to reflect that those needing funding for less than full-time attendance (fewer than 12 hours per semester) would be funded for tuition, books and fees, but not for room or board.

Meyer never warmed to recruiting

Ray Meyer's favorite saying is, "I would like to buy players for what they are worth and then sell them for what they think they are worth."

It speaks well to his disdain for recruiting, the lifeblood and, at the same time, the bane of coaches.

It's a Catch-22 of sorts. Without great athletes, a coach is not going to be successful. If a coach is not successful, he runs the risk of not getting great athletes in his program. If the cycle is broken, the coach usually ends up looking for other employment.

But Meyer says he survived 42 years as head men's basketball coach at DePaul University without being a good recruiter. "I hated it," he said. "I always thought I was a teacher. I could never recruit. Whatever success I had came when Joey (Meyer, Ray's son and current DePaul coach) came as an assistant. He started recruiting and bringing in good ballplayers. Gee, I became a great coach when all these ballplayers came in."

From George Mikan to Mark Aguirre and Terry Cummings,

Meyer certainly had his share of talented players through the years. He gave credit for the latter pair to Joey, and he hardly can take credit for recruiting Mikan, at 6-10 one of the first dominant big men in college basketball. Meyer, who played at the University of Notre Dame, was an assistant for the Irish in 1942 when Mikan tried out for the basketball team at Notre Dame.

"George Keogan was coach there," Meyer recalled. "Keogan called him in his office and told him he ought to go to a little school where he would get more attention. Little did I know when I came to DePaul about a month or two later that George Mikan would be there. It was a happy relationship."

That relationship led the Blue Demons to the NCAA tournament in 1943 and the National Invitation Tournament in 1944 and 1945 (which they won in '45). In all, Meyer coached DePaul to the NCAA tournament 13 times. Though Meyer said he didn't like to recruit and didn't do a good job, he knew the value of a big man like Mikan.

"How do you stop a big man? With another big man," he said. "If you don't have a big one, what do you do? You have to play 'Chinese defense' or sink back. But the big man still has a tremendous advantage. And when you throw it in, they all run at him and he can throw it out to get a good shot anyway. The big guy gets more points by accident than the little guy gets on purpose."

Meyer took advantage of Mikan's height by using unusual training methods. He hired a dance instructor to give him rhythm. He had Mikan punch a boxing speed bag to quicken his hands. He had him jump rope to work on his foot speed. And he improved on Mikan's jumping ability by having him jump over benches.

Meyer's trademark was the ability to change with the times. He succeeded in the 1940s as well as the 1980s. He succeeded with the slow, methodical game as well as with transition. Just the fact that he coached in those two entirely different eras speaks to his ability to adapt.

Meyer acknowledges he was offered opportunities to coach in the Big Ten Conference and in the pros for "three times the money as I was making at DePaul." So why did he stay?

"I was happy here," he said. "The grass is always greener someplace else. I knew what I had here; I didn't know what I was getting into someplace else. So I felt, 'How many meals can I eat? How many cars can I drive? What do I need the money for? I'm never going to be wealthy, but I will always be happy.'"

Especially now, since he no longer has to recruit.

John Wooden

UCLA's Wooden stayed close to home

For all the accomplishments in John Wooden's basketball career—such as 10 national championships in 12 years, 620 wins and an NCAA-record (shared with Dean Smith) 47 victories in the Division I men's basketball tournament—the most remarkable may be that he did it all with a recruitment pattern that would astonish most coaches today.

Wooden never initiated contact with a potential recruit outside the state of California. Even Lew Alcindor (now Kareem Abdul-Jabbar), who was from New York, was referred to Wooden by his high-school coach. Also, Wooden says in 27 years as coach at the University of California, Los Angeles, he probably didn't visit more than a dozen potential recruits in their homes before they signed with the Bruins.

Wooden regularly picked the players he wanted from among the best in Southern California. And the best in the rest of the country regularly picked UCLA.

"I don't think it is necessary, even today, at UCLA or say at USC (to initiate contact with a recruit outside your area)," he said. "I think it would be necessary had I taught at Eugene, Oregon, or in Idaho or Arizona or many other places."

In Southern California, I think if concentration is made just on getting two or three of the top 10 graduating seniors each year who are going to meet your entrance requirements, then you are going to have the type of team that is going to do well. When you do well, you attract attention from athletes in other areas and they will be in contact with you, either directly or through their coach, principal, counselors or people of that sort."

Wooden said his assistants sometimes wanted him to initiate contact with out-of-state recruits. But he didn't give in. "There were many players I would have liked to have had," he said. "But it just wasn't my policy or my philosophy, so I didn't do it. To say I was tempted, I don't know. I was never tempted enough to do it."

The nucleus of possibly the greatest class in college basketball history was from Southern California. Bill Walton of San Diego, Jamaal (then Keith) Wilkes of Santa Barbara and Greg Lee of Reseda came to UCLA together in the fall of 1970. "They are three individuals who were all tremendous, outstanding students," Wooden said of the three who were academic all-Americans in each of their three years of playing for the Bruins. "Besides their playing abilities, they had the academic ability to do well anywhere. And they were all outstanding players."

Basketball

for a faster pace, increasing the excitement. The basketball used 50 years ago was laced and "had eggs all over it," former DePaul University coach Ray Meyer said. "With the ball being molded and round, you can shoot it much better. It's a little smaller in circumference so that you can dunk it and handle it better with smaller hands. Of course, now these guys have hands like toilet seats; they can handle anything. The ball goes in and they handle it like a little softball."

Fiberglass backboards and break-away rims make the high-flying game much easier to play and watch. The standardization of courts seems a given now, but Jack Gardner, who played at the University of Southern California in the late 1920s and early 1930s and has been involved in the game as a coach or scout for 60 years, recalls playing in gymnasiums with stoves in the middle of the court.

Players different

Despite all the changes in the rules and equipment, the most obvious change may be the players themselves. "Those guys are getting so big that you could put a lantern on their heads, and they could be beacons at the airport," Meyer said.

Wooden says players have become so athletic that team play may have suffered. "As the players have improved and become acrobatic showmen, I think the team play as a whole has been hurt," he said. "As a result, coaches have tended to let players do more on their own rather than working out of the team con-

Oklahoma State's Iba taught game with respect

Some are known by their first and last names. Others are known as Coach Whatsisname. A few are known simply as "Coach."

And then there is Mr. Iba.

More than 20 years after retiring as men's basketball coach at Oklahoma State University, Henry Iba is known to former players and assistants, as well as other coaches across the country, as Mr. Iba.

"I guess all the players who played for him still refer to him as Mr. Iba," said Eddie Sutton, who played for Iba from 1955-58 and currently is the men's basketball coach for the Cowboys. "We had great respect for him. He taught us not only how to be winners on the court but how to be winners off the floor as well."

Iba wasn't fancy. He didn't have elaborate offensive systems that were designed to trick opponents. He simply tried to outprepare his opponents.

Jack Hartman, who played for Iba in the 1950s and later coached Southern Illinois University at Carbondale to the National Invitation Tournament championship in 1967 and Kansas State University into the NCAA tournament seven times, said: "He had a system, and the system was adhered to at all times. There wasn't a great deal of room for freelance play. Defense was the basis of his system—dedication, discipline and defense."

Early in Iba's career at Oklahoma State (then Oklahoma A&M), defense consisted of putting Bob Kurland under the hoop and watching him swat away shots. But his attention to defense didn't end when that technique was outlawed.

Dean Smith, head men's basketball coach at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, who never played or coached under Iba yet credits Iba with molding his coaching style, said: "Iba was one of the great teachers of defense. People are still using some of the principles he brought about regarding defense."

Sutton said approximately 75 percent of what his team does came from what he was taught as a player. "Nobody worked harder as players than we did," Sutton said. "They called him the 'Iron Duke of Basketball.' He taught us discipline—learning one's weaknesses, one's strengths and knowing what you can and can't do. Discipline was a major part of what allowed him to be successful."

What Iba taught the most, however, may have been respect. Sutton believes the reason so many of Iba's former players and assistant coaches have succeeded is because they were treated with such respect when they were under him.

Hartman sums it up this way: "He was the most influential person I have ever been around. He gave me the foundation that I used throughout my career. He didn't teach anybody to be a coach. He worked with us because we were his players."

Henry Iba

"Several of us revered him so strongly we wanted to emulate him. He represented all those things we found appealing and desirable."

Smith cites need for perspective

"If you make every game a life-and-death proposition, you're going to have problems. For one thing, you'll be dead a lot."

Dean Smith said that several years ago as a joke. But he also still believes it. "I want my players to have other things they're interested in during their college experience," he said. "I want them to be a part of the student body. I think our players have done a pretty good job of it here."

A "pretty good job" may be an underestimation. Through Smith's 30 years as the head men's basketball coach at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, approximately 96 percent of his players have graduated.

While it is safe to say that Smith doesn't live and die with basketball, he has been able to mix the game into the recipe. He has led North Carolina to the NCAA tournament 21 times, including each of the last 17 years. The Tar Heels have been among the final 16 teams for 11 consecutive years. All of those marks are NCAA records. His 47 tournament wins ties him with John Wooden as the most successful coach in tournament history.

And, if he continues to pile up the victories at his career rate of 23.9 per season, some time in the 1996-97 season, Smith will become the all-time leader in victories, passing Adolph Rupp at 875.

While he said he has no plans to retire "I take a year at a time; I have said that for about 15 years" achieving coaching records is not one of his goals.

"That certainly never has been a goal, nor is it today," he says. "I think too much is said about coaches' records. I want to be a teacher. Each year,

I try to have the team do the best it is capable of doing."

Those opponents waiting for Smith to get out of the game may have to be patient. He still enjoys basketball. In fact, he said the worst part of his job is dealing with tasks unrelated to basketball.

He said the growth of the game is both great and not in the best interests of the student-athletes.

"We have become the national game because of television," he said. "The biggest change in my 31 years of coaching has been the interest in the Final Four. We went four out of six years—1967, '68, '69 and '72. Then we didn't go back until 1977, and I couldn't believe the change. It has to be from television. It was a media event. In 1972, we played Florida State. I don't even think it was televised in every market. And then in 1977, it looked like a Super Bowl weekend."

"Television makes basketball almost too big. We are still colleges and universities. But we (basketball programs) have become the public relations arm of the university without meaning to."

Despite the new lines on his job description, Smith said he would not choose a different career if he had the opportunity. His father was the person who encouraged him to go into coaching. His college coach, the legendary Forrest "Phog" Allen of the University of Kansas, who was a doctor of osteopathy besides being a coach, told Smith to go into medicine. "He said coaching had too many heartaches, too many ups and downs," Smith said.

For Smith, it has been mostly ups. For the fans of North Carolina, too.

cept."

While team play may have been hurt by the individual exploits of players, the sport's popularity continues to rise. The NCAA regularly receives far more ticket applications than it has seats available for the Final Four. For example, for the 1991 Final Four in Indianapolis, Indiana, 143,000 applications (usually for two tickets apiece) were received for the 24,000 tickets available to the general public.

So the game has changed dramatically. The game of the high-flying, rim-rattling, fast-breaking, ball-palming behemoths bears little resemblance to that of their counterparts a century ago, right?

Not if you listen to the same coaches who discussed the differences.

Three basics

"I think there are three basic things that were true when I played and all through my days of active coaching (and that) remain the same, and will continue to remain the same," Wooden said. "Those three things are getting in the best possible condition, properly and quickly executing, and (learning) the importance of team play."

Even more basic in his assessment of the similarities of the game was former California State University, Chico, coach Art Acker. Acker was taught the game of basketball at the age of 8 by James Naismith, the inventor of the game, fewer than 10 years after Naismith nailed the first peach basket to the wall. Shortly before his death in December 1990, Acker summed up his 91 years of basketball this way:

"It's a game of pass, pass, pass. Basketball was invented as a passing game. It hasn't changed one particle since the day it was invented. Good shooters are nothing but good passers to the backboard or the basket. You'll notice, the good shooters are good passers, too."

What about the defenses? North Carolina coach Dean Smith said those who think unrelenting full-court pressure is a recent phenomenon are wrong. "The pressure man-to-man defense was started by Dick Harp and Forrest 'Phog' Allen (at Kansas, where Smith was a player in the early 1950s)," Smith said. "You play between the ball and your man instead of playing between your man and the basket. That man-to-man pressure really began late in the 1952 season and then all of 1953. It is still being done at the college level."

"The four participants in the Final Four last year—Kansas, North Carolina, Duke and Nevada-Las Vegas—all used pressure man-to-man defense. Even though there have been changes, the idea still is taking away the passing lanes."

Easy but difficult

Naismith once was asked by Allen, one of his most famous pupils at Kansas, why basketball was so popular. Naismith responded, "The appeal of basketball is that it is a game easy to play but difficult to master." Allen asked, "You mean just like life?" Naismith responded, "Yes, just like life, Forrest."

So what does the future hold for this reflection of life? That is where the veteran coaches differ.

Meyer doesn't believe the game can get much bigger. "Television drew so many fans all over the country," he said. "But now, every night of the week there are three or four games on TV. People will get tired of watching it all the time. You have ESPN, WTBS, WOR, WGN—they are almost all national hookups. It's amazing how you can go down the street, and people will recognize you in the various towns. You have never been there, but through television, they know you."

"It is exposure. I don't know how much bigger the game can get."

Gardner says the National Basketball Association will expand to other countries in the near future. With expansion, Wooden believes everybody soon will be playing by the same rules. He sees the use of the trapezoid-shaped lane, rather than the rectangular-shaped lane used in the United States; a 30-second shot clock, and possibly even a change to 12-foot baskets.

"There is no progress without change," Wooden said. "But you don't make a change just for the sake of change. All change isn't progress, but there is absolutely no progress, whether it be in sports or business or anything else, without change."

Jack Gardner

Gardner keeps the string alive

Every college basketball fan's dream is to attend the Final Four.

And while Jack Gardner is more than a fan, he has fulfilled his dream 53 straight times. He will make it 54 later this month when he returns to Minneapolis, Minnesota, for the first time since he coached in the 1951 championship game.

Gardner believes he is the only coach—and perhaps the only person—to have attended all 53 championships. It is an enviable streak, although he didn't intend to start any kind of string when he attended his first in 1939. He just wanted to get his fill of basketball.

"I was just a basketball nut, and that's why I did it," Gardner said. "I didn't want to miss anything, especially since I had just taken a job at Kansas State University. I wanted to pick up and follow the game the best I could."

Gardner got help in extending the string when he attended four Final Fours as a coach. He is the only coach to take two different schools to the Final Four twice. Each time he went home without a trophy, and Gardner says his biggest disappointment in coaching was not winning the national title.

In 1948, his Kansas State team lost to Baylor University in the semifinals. Three years later, the Wildcats reached the championship game and led the University of Kentucky, 29-27, at half time, before 7-foot Bill Spivey took over the inside game and gave Adolph Rupp his third championship in four years. Gardner left Kansas State in 1953 and moved to the University of Utah. The Utes reached the Final Four in 1961 and 1966, losing in the semifinals both times.

But Gardner's memories of the Final Four are not filled with "what-ifs." Fifty-three championship games, 106 semifinal games and 36 third-place games run through the still-sharp mind of the 80-year-old Gardner. Like any fan, he has his favorites.

"I think my favorite Final Four, and certainly it was one of the most exciting, was the one that Michael Jordan won (Jordan hit a jump shot with 18 seconds remaining to lift the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, to a 63-62 victory over Georgetown University in 1982)," Gardner said. "The reason I name that game is because of the closeness. I love basketball, and it is just a thrill for me to see a game go down to a final shot in the national championship."

"As far as favorite players (in the Final Four), I would have to name Bill Walton. He was 21 of 22 (in 1973 against Memphis State in the final). That was a game where you just sat there and said 'This is not possible.'"

DEATHS

W. W. "Bill" Kethan, former president of the Amateur Softball Association, died March 1 in Jacksonville, Texas. He was president of the ASA from 1964 to 1965 and was a driving force behind the organization's relocation from Newark, New Jersey, to Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, and construction of the ASA national office and the National Softball Hall of Fame, where the NCAA Division I Women's Softball Championship currently is staged.

Jack S. Gray, former Texas men's basketball coach, died March 7 at age 81. During 12 years as coach, from 1937 to 1942 and 1946 to 1951, Gray compiled a record of 194-97. In 1935, as a basketball player, he became the Longhorns' first all-American and is credited with developing today's standard one-handed jump-shot. Gray also lettered in football at Texas.

5 Bryant players suspended

Five basketball players from Bryant College have been suspended and another dismissed following allegations they were involved in a gambling ring, according to college officials.

The college also announced the creation of a six-member blue-ribbon task force to study the problem of student gambling. The Associated Press reported.

State police have said that players on the team had bet on college sports, and some players allegedly collected debts for the ring.

College officials have not named the players, nor specified what year of college they were in.

Bryant President William E. Truehart said he was optimistic the task force, whose work would be separate from police investigations and college disciplinary processes, would develop "model programs" to combat student gambling.

"We can ferret out what things can be most effective, and that's what we're determined to do," he said. "We're serious about solving this problem, and that's what we're going to do."

Elsewhere in the state, officials at the University of Rhode Island said an internal investigation uncovered no illegal gambling or violation of rules by basketball team members at that institution, clearing the team to compete in the Atlantic 10 Conference basketball tournament.

The school also plans to examine other sports teams and also will explore problems with gambling in on-campus and off-campus housing, she said.

Southeastern Conference signs football deal

The Southeastern Conference announced February 27 an agreement with Jefferson Pilot Sports to televise SEC football games for the next four years.

JP Sports holds rights to televise 12 or 13 games annually throughout the nine-state SEC on a syndicated basis beginning this fall. Turner Broadcasting System has aired SEC games for the last eight years.

"As a new era in SEC football begins with a 12-team race, it is certainly fitting that our member institutions will be featured on the nation's foremost sports syndicator," said SEC Commissioner Roy F. Kramer.

Razorback competes in two sports, studies in Fulbright honors program

The current best-selling book, "The Jordan Rules," easily could be about University of Arkansas, Fayetteville, student-athlete Chrysti Jordan. It wouldn't be difficult to substitute her story for the parts about that guy named Michael.

The 5-foot-9-inch freshman wonder from Irving, Texas, hasn't just adjusted to her new college life; she's taken control of it, more so than some students who are just a few weeks shy of accepting their diplomas.

Jordan not only is a basketball player at the institution, she's a starter on the Lady Razorbacks' women's soccer team. And to top that, she also is a student in the distinguished Fulbright Honors Program.

She is only the second athlete in women's athletics at Arkansas to compete in two sports and the first to do so in team sports.

"If there is anybody who can handle two sports academically, athletically and personally, she can," Razorback women's basketball coach John Sutherland said. "She's a rare kid in that she took on an extra load in athletics and is still able to be competitive at a high level of academics."

With the rigors of her schedule, Jordan said she still finds time to be like most college students.

"I still procrastinate," she said. "Everybody thinks it's hard for me, but it's not too bad. It keeps me busy all the time, so I'm never bored."
