Progress noted with Gender-Equity Task Force

The NCAA Gender-Equity Task Force made "significant progress" at its January 19-20 meeting in Palm Springs, California, according to cochair James J. Whalen, president of Ithaca College.

"The task force members have started to develop consensus on some key issues, and I sense a greater optimism among task force members that we can present a meaningful report for the consideration of the NCAA membership," Whalen said.

The task force tentatively has planned to have a preliminary report to present to the membership by May or June. "The task force does not want to set an arbitrary deadline for completing its work but we are very conscious of the need to proceed in a timely fashion," said cochair Phyllis L. Howlett, Big Ten Conference.

The task force discussed the need for hearings on the preliminary report to give the membership an opportunity for comment before the final report is issued. In addition to comments from the general membership, the task force will seek input from particular constituencies within the membership.

The complete task force heard reports and accepted recommendations from its two subcommittees, the subcommittee on NCAA standards and the subcommittee on institutional standards.

Subcommittee on institutional standards

This subcommittee, chaired by

Carla H. Hay, Marquette University, focused on how to measure accurately the interest in athletics among female students. The task force members debated the appropriate measure of such interest and discussed the need to recognize the historical discouragement of female participation in athletics

IRS proposes new approach for sponsors

The Internal Revenue Service recently issued proposed regulations purporting to distinguish between payments for "advertising," which would be taxable as unrelated business income, and mere "acknowledgements" of sponsorships, which would not.

The IRS was following up on hearings held last summer on the treatment of corporate sponsorship payments in connection with tax-exempt sporting and cultural events.

The proposed regulations are viewed as representing significantly more liberal corporate sponsorship rules than expressed by the IRS in the immediate past, specifically including its position

Life-skills speaker

Student welfare panel set for first meeting

The NCAA Special Committee to Review Student-Athlete Welfare, Access and Equity will conduct its first meeting February 4-5 in Dallas.

The meeting is expected to be organizational, with the 17-member committee evaluating such matters as its charge, the availability of research and data, and how to involve student-athletes in the process.

The issue of student-athlete welfare, access and equity is the primary topic for the third year of the NCAA Presidents Commission's strategic plan. A resolution at the 1993 Convention, Proposal No. 58, directed that a study of all welfare, access and equity issues that affect student-athletes be concluded by June 1994 so that any appropriate legislation might be presented to the 1995 NCAA Convention.

The first topic in the Presidents Commission's strategic plan was presidential authority and institutional control. An athletics certification plan was the centerpiece of that legislative package, which was enacted at the Convention in Dallas earlier in January. The topic for the second year of the plan is financial conditions in intercollegiate athletics; legislation on that subject is expected to be considered at the 1994 Convention.

James D. McComas, president of Virginia Polytechnic Institute, will chair the student-athlete welfare committee, which is charged with studying anything that affects the welfare of student-athletes. Among the specific matters identi-

With McWhorter, candor carried the day

SPECIAL TO THE NCAA NEWS

The nicest thing you can do for Boyd McWhorter is to call him loyal.

Especially if you use his definition.

"To me, loyalty is saying what you believe when called upon to say it, regardless whether you think that is what the other person wants to hear," said McWhorter, the former commissioner of the Southeastern Conference. "You always learn more from people with whom you disagree. You never learn much from people who agree with you all the time.

"I learned a lot from the people around me. I guess I was teachable."

And he was loyal.

Those who worked with and for McWhorter during his days at the University of Georgia or at the Southeastern Conference or during his tenure on NCAA committees and the NCAA Council call him "most valuable," "fun to work for," "full of integrity" and "one of the outstanding administrators

Certification

Implementation begins for new program

The NCAA Administrative Committee is expected to appoint a Committee on Athletics Certification at its January 27 meeting in Overland Park, Kansas.

The duties, structure and composition of the certification committee are set forth in new Bylaw 23.1, part of the certification program that was adopted at the 1993 Convention in Dallas (Proposal No. 15).

Between February and July, the Committee on Athletics Certification will prepare certification materials, determine the certification schedule, establish a pool of peer reviewers and refine administrative procedures.

By August, all Division I institutions will be informed of the initial five-year certification schedule.

For more detail, see the January 20, December 16 and December 7 issues of The NCAA News.

Next meeting: To be determined.

Gender equity

Task force has productive meeting

NCAA Gender-Equity Task Force cochair James J. Whalen, Ithaca College, and Phyllis L. Howlett, Big Ten Conference, noted progress in the group's most recent meeting.

At its January 19-20 meeting in Palm Springs, California, the group discussed the possibility of having a preliminary report ready by May or June.

The task force heard reports from the NCAA Executive Committee and the NCAA Special Committee to Review Financial Conditions in Intercollegiate Athletics.

As is its usual practice, the group worked largely in two subcommittees, one examining institutional standards and the other NCAA standards. A complete report appears starting on page 1 of this issue.

The subcommittees agreed to meet separately before the next full meeting of the task force. Both will meet in Chicago, the NCAA standards subcommittee February 10 and the institutional standards subcommittee February 16.

Finances

Financial-conditions group sets meeting

The next meeting of the NCAA Special Committee to Review Financial Conditions in Intercollegiate Athletics has been scheduled for February 10-11 in Dallas.

The membership has received a package of 17 "legislative concepts" from the committee and has been asked to respond by March 1.

For more detail, see the December 23

(concepts listed) and November 9 issues of The NCAA News.

Next meeting: February 10-11 in Dallas.

Championships

Division I members considering proposal

Division I members are in the process of considering the NCAA Executive Committee's proposal to enhance the Association's championships program.

A detailed description of the plan was mailed to Division I members January 11. An April 1 deadline has been set for responses.

Divisions II and III member institutions discussed the proposed revisions at the Convention.

The Executive Committee's plan would base field sizes on sponsorship and would deemphasize the revenue potential of a championship. Per diem, traveling parties and committee structure also would be affected.

After reviewing the response from the membership, the Executive Committee hopes to approve a final plan at its May meeting.

For more detail, see the December 16, November 30 and October 26 issues of The NCAA News.

Next Executive Committee meeting: May 3-6, Monterey, California.

Student-athlete welfare

First meeting scheduled for special committee

The first meeting of the Special NCAA Committee to Review Student-Athlete Welfare, Access and Equity has been scheduled for February 4-5 in Dallas.

James D. McComas, president of Virginia Polytechnic Institute and a member of the NCAA Presidents Commission, will chair the special committee.

Student-athlete welfare is the primary topic for the third year of the Commission's strategic plan. The timetable calls for the special committee to have legislation for the 1995 Convention.

For more detail, see page 1 of this issue. Also, see the November 9 issue of The NCAA News.

Next meeting: February 4-5 in Dallas.

Health issues

Blood-borne treatment guidelines mailed

Guidelines for treating blood on uniforms and equipment were mailed to athletics directors and trainers at NCAA member institutions in December.

The guidelines, which were developed by the Committee on Competitive Safeguards and Medical Aspects of Sports, represent the latest in a series of efforts dating back to 1988 to provide guidance to the membership on the issue of blood-borne pathogens.

For more detail, see the December 30 issue of The NCAA News.

Next competitive-safeguards committee meeting: February 8-10 in Kansas City, Missouri.

Betting amendment stalls in New Jersey Legislature

New Jersey casino interests suffered a serious setback earlier this month when the New Jersey Legislature adjourned its 1992 session without the General Assembly taking action on a proposed sports-betting constitutional amendment.

In order for the proposal now to be placed on the ballot in New Jersey in 1993, it must be approved relatively early in the 1993 session in each house of the legislature by a three-fifths majority. The proposal passed the Senate last year by only one vote and became stalled in the assembly when the appropriations committee of that body failed to report the bill out.

Sponsors conceded that they did not have sufficient votes to gain passage in the assembly even if it had been brought to the assembly floor.

The NCAA and several of its New Jersey member institutions joined the professional leagues in vigorously opposing passage of the proposal, which would have authorized casino-based sports betting on both professional and college games, except those college games involving New Jersey institutions.

Both the Rev. Thomas R. Peterson, chancellor of Seton Hall University, and that institution's head men's basketball coach, P.J. Carlesimo, testified in hearings on the bill late in 1992.

Pete Carril, head men's basketball coach at Princeton University, testified earlier in Senate hearings, and numerous chief executives of NCAA New Jersey members contacted legislators to express their strong opposition.

Local newspaper reports indicate that the sponsors of the proposal now are considering dropping college sports events from the authorization, but casinos—fearing loss of substantial revenues—are reported to be resisting this suggestion.

A major effort from the casinos can be expected in 1993 to gain sufficient votes in the legislature to permit the proposal to be placed on the November ballot.

Under the terms of Federal legislation adopted last fall, New Jersey has only until January 1, 1994, to approve the measure.

League set

Six schools, including two Big East Conference members, will participate in a new Division I-AA low-cost football conference next season.

The Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference football league will include the Big East's Georgetown University and St. John's University (New York), along with four MAAC members—Canisius College, Iona College, St. Peter's College and Siena College.

Briefly in the News

Player's spirit inspires team

In 1971, Gerry Citro was looking forward to doing big things as a freshman on the men's basketball team at the University of New Hampshire. Then, suddenly, it was all gone.

Citro was hit by a car on his way home from practice one evening and suffered a severe injury to his right leg. He remembers that doctors were close to amputating the leg, and then they predicted that he would be fortunate to walk on his own again.

The injury left him distraught and depressed. That is when he turned to alcohol, and it was a long time before he turned away from it. Fifteen years of persistent drinking came to an end for Citro September 9, 1986.

"I lost everything," Citro, now 39, told the North Jersey Herald & News. "I disgraced my family. I was stealing from my friends. There was no escape from what I was. Alcohol couldn't help me any more. I had hit rock bottom."

Citro checked into a treatment center and later joined Alcoholics Anonymous. His life soon turned around, and he opened a real estate business that brought in $100,000 per year.

But an urge to continue what he started back in 1971 remained. He quit the business and enrolled part-time at Montclair State College in the summer of 1991. With eligibility remaining, Citro became a full-time student, tried out for the basketball team this year and made it.

"He made the team on his own," Montclair State head coach Nick DeTulfo said. "It wasn't a charity case."

Citro has one year of eligibility remaining after this season and said he hopes to spread his message of inspiration to another crop of Montclair State players.

"At age 37, I started my life all over again," he said. "I see so many people who live life going through the motions. That's not living life. That's not enjoying life.... I'm now living my life to the fullest and

Clearing the way

Just as he cleared the way for teammates as a blocking football fullback in the early 1980s, Wagner College graduate John Chiofalo (right) provided a bulldozer and an operator to clear ground for a practice field for new varsity women's soccer and club lacrosse teams at the school. The donated work, which saved Wagner nearly $25,000, will help the school begin competition in women's soccer next season. accepting everything it has to offer."

Whitney's a winner

The Colgate University men's basketball team ought to begin thinking about signing pop singer Whitney Houston to sing the national anthem at its home games.

Every time in Reid Center that the team has heard Houston's stirring recorded version of "The Star Spangled Banner," which she initially performed live at the 1991 Super Bowl, the Red Raiders have won. That totaled six victories through January 18.

However, when an engineer on duty mistakenly cued the rendition sung by the university's vocal group, the Swinging Gates, in a game January 11, Colgate lost to Manhattan College.

Milestones

Tennessee Technological University's women's basketball program claimed its 500th victory with a 66-65 overtime win over Southern Illinois University at Carbondale December 7... The College of the Holy Cross men's basketball program earned its 1,000th victory with a 92-72 decision over Harvard University December 1.

Andy Piazza, men's basketball coach at Indiana University-Purdue University, Fort Wayne, earned his 100th career coaching victory December 19 in a 116-106 victory over Quincy College... University of Missouri, Columbia, men's basketball coach Norm Stewart won his 500th game at the school in a 66-65 win over the University of Illinois, Champaign, December 23. He also recorded his 600th career victory in Missouri's January 3 win over the University of North Carolina, Asheville.

Indiana University, Bloomington, men's basketball coach Bob Knight registered his 600th victory January 6 when his Hoosiers defeated Iowa, 75-67... North Dakota State University women's basketball coach Amy Ruley won her 300th game as the Bison defeated Bemidji State University, 99-51, December 21.

Fact file

In 1971-72, the Association conducted 26 championships—seven for which all members were eligible, 10 for University Division institutions and nine for College Division members.

This year, the number of championships climbs to 79, including 42 for men, 34 for women, and three for both men and women in combined competition. Of the 79, nine are National Collegiate Championships for which all member institutions are eligible, 23 are for Division I institutions, 23 for Division II members and 24 for Division III colleges.

New Administrative Review Panel acts quickly after Convention adjournment

Within five hours of the adjournment of the 1993 NCAA Convention, the Administrative Review Panel that was created with the adoption of Proposal No. 53 in Dallas issued its first decisions.

Approved by a 772-16 vote (with six abstentions), the review panel is intended to provide increased flexibility in the application of NCAA legislation. It has the authority to review actions by NCAA committees—except the Eligibility Committee and the Committee on Infractions—and the national office staff.

In anticipation of the adoption of Proposal No. 53, which was sponsored by the NCAA Council, a five-member panel was formed prior to the Convention. As a result, panel members were prepared to meet immediately after adjournment of the Convention and were able to act quickly on five requests for review.

All of the cases involved student-athletes who compete in sports currently in season. The panel ruled in the student-athlete's favor in each case. The actual cases will be reported in a future issue of The NCAA News.

Procedures

The five requests also were made under procedures that were developed by the panel for use by institutions seeking reviews.

Under those procedures:

- A member institution wishing for the Administrative Review Panel to consider a decision of an NCAA committee or the staff shall submit to the national office a written request for such a review. The request shall be signed by the institution's chief executive officer, faculty athletics representative and director of athletics. It also shall set forth the background of the involved situation and the reasons the institution believes relief from an application of legislation, an interpretation, and/or a decision is warranted.

- The involved NCAA committee and/or the staff shall submit to the panel and to the involved institution a written report concerning the matter.

- The panel shall consider the written materials and may conduct a telephone conference if it is deemed necessary or if the involved institution requests it. If the institution participates in the conference, it shall be represented by its chief executive officer, faculty athletics representative and/or director of athletics. Other institutional representatives, including a directly involved student-athlete, also may participate in the conference. The institution and involved individuals also may have legal counsel.

- In reaching a decision, the panel is to consider the purpose and intent of any involved NCAA legislation, the welfare of involved student-athletes, possible competitive or recruiting advantages, and other relevant factors. The panel also is to strive for consistency in treating issues involving similar circumstances.

- Once the panel makes its decision to grant or deny the request, the decision shall be communicated to the involved institution in writing. A summary of the decisions of the panel will be provided to the Council on a regular basis.

- All actions of the panel are final and are not subject to appeal

See Panel, page 12 ►

Committee notices

Member institutions are invited to submit nominations to fill vacancies on NCAA committees. Nominations to fill the following vacancies must be submitted in writing to Fannie B. Vaughan, executive assistant, in the NCAA office no later than February 10, 1993.

Infractions Appeals Committee: The 1993 Convention approved legislation establishing a new committee of five members, the Infractions Appeals Committee. At least one member shall be from the general public and shall not be connected with a collegiate institution, conference, or professional or similar sports organization, or represent coaches or athletes in any capacity. The remaining members shall be currently or previously on the staff of an active member institution or member conference but shall not serve concurrently on the NCAA Council, Executive Committee or Presidents Commission.

These positions were publicized earlier, but the Council has asked that additional nominations be submitted. In particular, the names of Divisions II and III candidates who meet the requirements are desired.

Men's Lacrosse Committee: Replacement for Carl Ullrich, retiring as commissioner of the Patriot League. Term of appointment would begin September 1, 1993, or effective with Ullrich's retirement.

Minority Opportunities and Interests Committee: Replacement for Earl W. Edwards, formerly at the University of California, San Diego, no longer at a Division III institution. Appointee must be from Division III.

Special Events Committee: Replacement for Shirley A. Walker, Alcorn State University (Division I-AA). It is necessary to replace Walker because the 1993 NCAA Convention adopted legislation specifying that this committee must be made up of Division I-A representatives; accordingly, appointee must be a woman from Division I-A.

Men's and Women's Tennis Committee: Replacement for Scott McCain, University of California, Berkeley. The Administrative Committee granted a waiver to permit McCain to serve until September 1, 1993, even though there is another person on the committee from the same institution. He must be replaced, effective September 1. Appointee must be from Division I.

Money, not race, affects test data

By Bill Hogan
UNIVERSITY OF SAN FRANCISCO

Here we go again.

After the publication of the graduation rates for NCAA Division I student-athletes, the dismal academic record of black participants was loudly trumpeted. USA Today reported that only 35 percent of black athletes graduate within six years of entering college, compared with 58 percent of white athletes and a 51 percent rate overall.

One of the key issues that is consistently overlooked when comparing statistical information is how graduation rates are tabulated. The significant figure should be the percent of student-athletes who graduate after completing their eligibility.

The fact that a number of athletes start school and then either transfer or drop out is bothersome but not of itself catastrophic. If the percentages are consistently low over a number of years, that should be a clear indication that a school's recruited student-athletes cannot compete academically, for whatever reason. This is one of the strongest points of the Knight Foundation Commission on Intercollegiate Athletics report: "Student-athletes should be representative of the student body."

However, when football and men's basketball players complete their eligibility and a large percentage do not graduate, there is a very serious problem with the priorities of the institution. This is quite different from the situation in which a student-athlete simply changes his or her mind after a year or two and transfers to another four-year institution.

The "non-graduating" jock feels used, abused and undereducated. Though there may be some legitimate professional career possibilities that encourage one to leave after the junior or senior year, the vast majority of athletes appear to drop out because they have run out of easy courses and are not close to completing their degrees. Basically, these student-athletes majored in "staying eligible," and the black athlete is more susceptible to this type of abuse.

Sen. Bill Bradley, D-New Jersey, has called for "more research, not limited to the athletics arena, about why Blacks are not finishing college and whether the obstacle is shrinking financial aid or deteriorating race

Lift risks are a weighty matter

By Ken Mannie
UNIVERSITY OF TOLEDO

Strength-training programs have assumed an important role in the overall physical conditioning process of collegiate athletes, especially during the past 15 to 20 years.

Research by the scientific community has heightened our awareness of strength training's physiological benefits in addition to the increased potential for enhanced performance. However, it is strength training's role in decreasing the incidence of serious injury that not only has made it attractive to coaches but also has stamped it as a necessity.

Much of the old-school thinking associated with strength-training programs (for example, loss of flexibility, loss of athleticism, detriment to skill development, etc.) has been debunked by both research and practical application.

Along with this acceptance, however, has arisen the inevitable "how to" controversy. Numerous philosophies abound in the strength-training community regarding the types of lifting movements to be incorporated into a program. Discussions on this topic can become very heated. Unfortunately, little is settled when the smoke clears.

Do no harm

Collegiate strength coaches, athletics trainers and the coaches of the various sports, in conjunction with athletics directors, need to engage in a bit of trouble-shooting before implementing any type of conditioning procedure. This is particularly true of weight lifting.

Obviously, there are safety concerns with any mode of resistance training. Nevertheless, the incidence of injury can be significantly reduced when

Perspectives on choosing movements

When selecting strength training movements, consider the following:

- Do you have a comprehensive program that will emphasize the major muscle complexes?
- Are the movements you have selected safe and relatively easy to perform in terms of technique?
- Has an assessment been made on each movement regarding inherent dangers?
- Are you fully aware of the risk-benefit factors involved in performing the so-called "explosive" movements (Olympic lifts, power cleans, etc.)? Do you believe that those lifts are absolutely necessary in the development of athletes, regardless of the risks involved? Or are you willing to incorporate safer alternatives that will yield similar, if not better, results?

— Ken Mannie

those who are responsible for the design, implementation and supervision of these programs have completed a risk-benefit analysis on the procedures the athletes are asked to perform.

When it comes time to choose and evaluate the lifting movements to be executed in a strength-training program, one question remains paramount: What are the inherent dangers involved in the execution of a particular lifting movement?

This question steers the discussion to the so-called quick or explosive lifts. My opinion is that several lifting movements—specifically the Olympic snatch, the Olympic clean and jerk, and a modification of the latter, the power clean—entail unnecessary risks for athletes and should not be part of the training regimen. Obviously, competitive weight lifters whose sport dictates the training of one or more of these movements would be an exception.

These lifts might be considered high-risk movements for several reasons. They have been noted in scitific literature as applying high shear forces to the lumbar vertebrae (a shear force is one that acts parallel to the horizontal plane of the vertebral structure). These forces may result in any number of anomalies, including lumbar sprain, strain, disc injury or a condition known as spondylolysis (an injury consisting of a fracture of the pars interarticularis, which is an area between the superior and inferior articulating facet on a single vertebra). Two studies in particular note a high incidence of both low back pain (40 percent) and spondylolysis (30.7 percent) among two groups of competitive weight lifters.

In terms of physical development, performance enhancement or success in one's chosen sport, these lifts have not proven to be more effective, either scientifically or empirically, than safer, better-controlled movements for the same muscle groups. The bottom line on these lifts: At worst, they are potentially dangerous; at best, they are unnecessary.

Gender-equity attitudes depend on perspective

Nora Lynn Finch, associate athletics director
North Carolina State University

The Associated Press

"It all has to do with money and power and sex. People who have power do not want to give it up. As a woman, I can understand that. If I were a minority, I could understand it better. If I were poor, I could understand it better still...."

"There are people on both sides who would like to make it a bloody battle to the death. I don't think it has to be that way. But any time the have-nots, or those who feel discriminated against, want to move up, the people in power are going to do what they can to suppress it....I'm not afraid of a little bit of a battle."

Donnie Duncan, athletics director
University of Oklahoma

Des Moines Register

"I think we all know that gender equity is about fairness. We have to be fair."

"But it's also critical that we maintain our football earnings. Football, at least at our school, totally funds women's athletics. We have to be mindful of that."

Albert M. Witte, faculty athletics representative
University of Arkansas, Fayetteville

The Associated Press

"It doesn't matter to some... whether women want sports or not. There are some people who say we're going to see women's yachting teams in Montana and women's ski teams in Miami."

Charles M. Neinas, executive director
College Football Association

Des Moines Register

"Sixty-seven percent of the athletics income that goes to CFA members is football generated. All sports other than football and men's basketball contribute only 1.5 percent."

"Apparently, some people feel that the way you fund women's athletics is by taking away from football."

"What we have to do is sit down and determine where we can go in maintaining quality football. How many cuts can we take?"

Charlie McClendon, executive director
American Football Coaches Association

The Associated Press

"I don't think there's really any question that football is being threatened. If we go to a 50-50 split between men and women, you could see one-platoon football. You could see some schools just get out of varsity athletics altogether because they just won't be able to afford it."

"I never had the opportunity to be a varsity athlete, and when I talk to the female athletes and try to put that in perspective compared to the opportunities they have now, all I get are blank stares. That's positive because they can't relate to what I'm saying."

Race has nothing to do with academic achievement; socioeconomic status is key relations on campus."

Why are statements like that so dangerous? Simply, they continue to identify Blacks as being inferior academically and prolong misleading perceptions. Young black athletes are told over and over again by the national media that they, as a group, don't measure up. This perception is so strong that many won't even attempt the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) because they are not supposed to do well, according to the "statistics."

In reality, poor academic achievement has nothing to do with race. Scores on college entrance examinations depend primarily on the socioeconomic status of the family, regardless of race, religion, ethnic background or sex.

U.S. News and World Report published this information:

| Family income | Verbal | Math | SAT Totals |
|--------------------|--------|------|------------|
| Less than $10,000 | 353 | 415 | 768 |
| $10,000-$20,000 | 372 | 434 | 806 |
| $20,000-$30,000 | 404 | 452 | 856 |
| $30,000-$40,000 | 418 | 466 | 884 |
| $40,000-$50,000 | 430 | 480 | 910 |
| $50,000-$60,000 | 440 | 491 | 931 |
| $60,000-$70,000 | 449 | 500 | 949 |
| $70,000 or more | 469 | 528 | 997 |

The socioeconomic cycle can be a vicious one; a good-paying job provides a nice home in an upper-class neighborhood that has excellent schools where well over 80 percent of high-school seniors go on to higher learning. The academic environment is supportive and enriching. High achievement is considered the norm.

A major problem in many impoverished areas is that good grades are ridiculed, so all-important reinforcement not only is lacking, it is extremely negative.

An SAT score is not the perfect measure of future academic success, but it is the best single test available. A predictive index that combines the SAT or ACT score with the class rank and grade-point average into a combined average is a better forecasting device. However, it also is not 100 percent accurate. All institutions of higher learning must establish minimum standards for admission, and lower academic level high-school students will be "sacrificed" to uphold overall credibility. Those who are not selected tend to be minorities. Only four percent of the overall college population is black.

The issue of black athletes is not simple, and the last thing needed is another congressional investigation. The laws requiring exposure of graduation rates have been helpful, and the 1992 NCAA Convention passed many effective measures, most notably Proposition 16, which effectively increased the required grade-point average for athletics participation to 2.500 from 2.000. That Convention also established more stringent standards for progress toward a degree.

A few additional suggestions:

1. Do not identify student-athletes by race. Hispanics, Asians and American Indians are not singled out, so why should Blacks be?

2. Continue to promote the Knight Commission ideal that a student-athlete should be representative of the general student body.

3. Insist on at least an 80 percent graduation rate for student-athletes who complete their eligibility. Any program that does not should suffer a proportionate loss in scholarships. If the coach leaves for a new position while experiencing such a loss, scholarships also should be reduced at the next job.

4. If a nonqualifier attends a four-year school and is receiving aid not related to athletics, he or she must meet minimum progress toward degree standards, must pass the SAT or ACT before becoming eligible for intercollegiate athletics, and still must sacrifice one year of eligibility. This would eliminate the all-too-common practice of "hiding" nonqualifiers for a year and giving them an easy class schedule to retain eligibility, but not helping them graduate.

5. Now that the matriculation of student-athletes from high school has regained credibility, it is time to focus on the junior college fiasco. Under the current system, a student-athlete with an SAT score of less than 700 may attend junior college, possibly receive a bogus associate of arts degree and be immediately eligible at a four-year institution. This player typically graduates at a woeful 18 percent rate. A remedy would be to force the nonqualifying junior college player to retake the SAT. If he or she doesn't score 700, the athlete can attend the four-year institution on scholarship but must sit out one year before taking the SAT again. If he or she still does not pass, the student-athlete is not eligible to participate in intercollegiate athletics, period, as he or she has not proven to be "representative of the student body." To assume that two years of junior college will miraculously cure poor study habits and an inadequate educational background is extremely naive.

6. Use graduation-rate tabulations based on those student-athletes who complete their eligibility. The gross numbers are not accurate as a measure from school to school.

These suggestions should help all student-athletes, including Blacks. The current abuse is extremely disappointing, and it must be curtailed since university athletics departments across the country cannot absorb the continual deterioration of academic credibility.

Proposition Nos. 48, 42 and 16 all have been criticized at times because they appear to be culturally discriminatory toward Blacks. However, since their inception, the percentage of black athletes participating in intercollegiate athletics actually has increased. The "Academic Convention of 1992" has closed most of the loopholes and promises to have an even stronger impact in the future.

More government interference is not necessary. Rather, the first step in solving the problem is to identify it properly as socioeconomic rather than racial.

Hermann winners named for collegiate soccer

Brad Friedel, goalkeeper for the University of California, Los Angeles, and the U.S. Olympic team, and University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, forward Mia Hamm were selected January 21 as winners of the Hermann Trophy, awarded to the best college soccer players in the United States.

Friedel, a junior from Bay Village, Ohio, allowed 10 goals and had 10 shutouts as UCLA went 13-3-3.

The Bruins were knocked out of the 1992 NCAA Division I Men's Soccer Championship in the second round by the University of San Diego.

Hamm, a junior from Burke, Virginia, had 32 goals and 33 assists as the Tar Heels went 25-0 and won their seventh straight NCAA title and 10th in 11 years.

She also scored two goals as the United States won the inaugural FIFA Women's World Championship in 1991.

The Hermann Trophy, named after former North American Soccer League commissioner Robert Hermann, has been awarded annually for men since 1967 and for women since 1988.

Kent State University basketball players didn't stay completely away from the classroom during the school's recent semester break. Golden Flash players, including Rod Koch (left) and James Johnson, spent two weeks visiting schools, including the Longcoy Elementary School in Kent, Ohio. The players read to the children, talked about college and even showed the youngsters a few moves on the basketball court.

The NCAA Men's and Women's Swimming Committee is accepting proposed budgets for the 1995 NCAA Division I Women's Swimming and Diving Championships and the 1994 Division I Diving Zone Qualifying Meets. Representatives of institutions interested in hosting one of these events should contact Michelle A. Pond, NCAA assistant director of championships, at the national office. Proposed budgets are due March 1.

Risks

Trouble-shooting required in choosing strength-conditioning program

A few years back, one particular coach, in an attempt to defend the use of such lifts, commented to me that several teams in the top 20 of a final football poll used these movements in their programs. His point, albeit true, was moot, as there also happened to be numerous teams in the bottom 20 that also espoused these lifts.

I would dare to say that if you are going to bet on how a team will finish in the national rankings with little more information than what is being done in its strength-training program, you're going to lose.

Incidentally, year in and year out, there are several top-20 teams in a variety of men's and women's sports that do not incorporate these movements. My point: The "who's winning" argument is a ridiculous diatribe.

The physical preparation for competition is a vital component for both the health and the success of the involved athletes. It is our responsibility as coaches to provide the safest, most efficient and most productive means possible to attain these goals—with the emphasis on the safest.

Ken Mannie is strength and conditioning coach at the University of Toledo.

Division I shooters in free-throw slump

By Gary K. Johnson
NCAA ASSISTANT
STATISTICS COORDINATOR

Sometimes the phone calls received by the NCAA statistics department indicate a statistical trend across the country. For all those sports information directors and reporters who have called to find out if their schools ranked among the worst in free-throw percentage, well...it looks as if most of the nation has been bouncing it off the rim.

According to the national basketball trends for all games involving a Division I men's team through January 17, free-throw percentage is at 66.78 percent.

How bad is that? If the percentage doesn't improve drastically over the last half of the season, free-throw shooters will record the lowest accuracy since Dwight D. Eisenhower was in the White House. In 1958, the norm was 66.4 percent.

It also would be the biggest drop from one year to the next since the national trends first were kept in 1948. Over the last four years, free-throw percentage has steadily been dropping. In 1989, the nation shot 69.1 percent. The figures were then 68.9 in 1990, 68.5 in 1991 and 68.1 last year.

The other two shooting categories—field-goal percentage and three-point field-goal percentage—also show slight drops, but nothing close to what is happening with free-throw accuracy.

Three-point use keeps climbing as the shooting percentage keeps falling. Since the first year of the three-point in 1987, the number made per game for both teams combined has increased every year except for a slight decrease last season (from 10.0 in 1991 to 9.9 in 1992). At the midway point this season, 10.38 three-pointers are being made per game.

The following chart shows national trends for three-point field goals made, attempted and the percentage since its inception in 1987. All the figures are from the full season except for 1993, which of course, is midseason.

| Year | 3FG Made | 3FG Att. | 3FG Pct. |
|-----------|----------|----------|----------|
| 1987..... | 7.0 | 18.3 | 38.4 |
| 1988..... | 8.0 | 20.8 | 38.2 |

|-----------|------|------|------|
| 1989..... | 8.9 | 23.6 | 37.6 |
| 1990..... | 9.4 | 25.7 | 36.7 |
| 1991..... | 10.0 | 27.6 | 36.1 |
| 1992..... | 9.9 | 28.0 | 35.5 |
| 1993..... | 10.4 | 29.4 | 35.3 |

Three-point attempts have climbed every year from 18.3 in 1987 to 29.40 this season. In shooting percentage, three-pointers have dropped from 38.4 percent in 1987 to 35.31 this year. From 1987 to the present, the number of attempts is up 61.7 percent during that span.

Although the shooting percentages in every category have dropped, scoring per game has increased slightly over last season from 147.6 to 148.34. However, this category is one of the most likely to drop as the season enters the second half and the competition is stronger and more intense as the conference races heat up.

In the conference rankings, the Big Eight Conference leads in scoring at 84.37 per team per game, just edging out the Atlantic Coast Conference's 84.34. Meanwhile, the Ivy Group has been holding its opponents to just 66.54 points a game. The Big Eight also leads in field-goal accuracy at 49.38 percent, followed closely by the ACC's 49.16 and the Big Ten Conference's 49.08. Three conferences—the Big South, Ohio Valley and Southern—virtually are tied in three-pointers made per game at 6.08. The Southern has attempted the most at an even 18 per game. The Southeastern Conference's three-point accuracy is at 37.91 percent, which edges out the Colonial Conference's 37.72 and the Mid-American Athletic Conference's 37.69 percent. In free-throw percentage, a few conferences were above 70 percent last year. This year, however, the Great Midwest Conference is the leader at 69.56 percent, followed by the Missouri Valley Conference's 69.34 and the Colonial's 69.01.

Women's scoring down

It will take an offensive explosion the second half of the season to prevent women's Division I scoring from dropping to an all-time low, despite an all-time high in three-point shooting.

Through games of January 17, the women are averaging 136.07 points per game (both teams combined). The lowest season-end average was 138.0 in both 1987 and 1988. The all-time high is 140.9 established in 1991, and last year's final average of 139.1 was third-highest ever.

Three-point shooting continues its upward march, with the women on a record pace of 6.16 made in 19.59 attempts. The trend also is continuing with three-point percentage. The midseason accuracy is 31.45 percent, lowest ever. Since the three-pointer was introduced for the 1987-88 season, attempts and shots made have increased every year and accuracy has decreased. In that first season, the women averaged 3.0 made in 9.0 attempts.

Overall field-goal percentage also could be headed toward an all-time low at 41.19 percent.

Like the men, Division I women's players are having a problem hitting free throws. The 65.45 percent mark is the lowest since 1985.

As was the case last season, the Atlantic Coast Conference leads the nation in both points per game (77.33) and field-goal percentage (45.95 percent), while the Ohio Valley Conference is the premier three-point league, leading in average made (4.56), attempted (12.87) and accuracy (35.43 percent). The North Atlantic Conference leads both Division I men and women with a 69.78 free throw percentage.

After career of research, 'Jim Van' retires

By Ronald D. Mott
THE NCAA NEWS STAFF

Whatever task was at hand for Jim Van Valkenburg, he overwhelmed it with energy and style.

Whether the veteran statistician was assembling a media book for the Division I Men's Basketball Championship or preparing a routine report on football attendance, he made a career out of researching all the important angles.

"Jim Van," as he is known around the national office, retired January 1, ending an NCAA career that began in 1968 when the statistics office was operated out of New York City.

"It was an exciting and creative time—a nationwide effort directed from the New York office," Van Valkenburg said. "Many of the projects were one-time centennial things, but some major items endured. For instance, I started the weekly football notes and wrote annual football press kits after helping with the centennial kit."

Seven stories weekly

In those early days in New York, Van Valkenburg wrote seven stories every week, which were then sent around the nation via wire service. He remembered just how important it was for the courier to get the stories to the wire-service offices.

"We used to tell him, 'If you see a cab is going to run over you, toss it to someone on the curb. This is important stuff,'" he said.

In his weekly football and basketball notes, Van Valkenburg originated now-commonly used statistical comparisons such as toughest schedules and most-improved teams.

"I took pride in coming up with new historical and statistical comparisons every year in the press kits and weekly notes in both sports," he said. "It's amazing how much media space on college football and basketball has expanded since 1968 with the information explosion of the computer age. In the beginning, we had to beg the writers to use career tables from the records books."

Van Valkenburg said statistics have become more important in the sports world, especially in the selection of recipients for awards, such as the Heisman Trophy. However, he said he consistently made it a point to keep statistics in perspective, using them only as a measure of numerical performance and not wholly indicative of the true talents of players and coaches.

Wrote histories

In 1985, Van Valkenburg wrote the first comprehensive history of women's college basketball ever published, and in 1991 he authored the 100-year history of basketball for the centennial edition of the NCAA Basketball records book. He also was instrumental in the 1981 research that produced the ratings formula that helps the Division I Men's Basketball Committee annually select participants for the Division I Men's Basketball Championship.

Van Valkenburg earned a bachelor's degree in journalism from

■ Governmental affairs report

The following is a review of recent Federal activities affecting the NCAA membership. These reports are prepared by Squire, Sanders & Dempsey, the Association's legal counsel in Washington, D.C. This report was presented to the NCAA Council during its post-convention meeting January 16-17 in Dallas.

Antigambling legislation

On October 27, President Bush signed the Professional and Amateur Sports Protection Act of 1992 (S. 474), which prohibits the further spread of state-sponsored or state-authorized gambling schemes based upon the outcome of sports contests.

The act permits the continuance of sports gambling schemes already authorized by state law. At present, the only significant state-authorized programs now in operation are the Oregon sports lottery and casino-based gambling in Nevada. In addition, a handful of Western states authorize limited low-stakes sports betting in certain retail establishments. Delaware law authorizes a sports lottery, but the scheme has never become operational.

The law also permits the state of New Jersey until January 1, 1994, to approve a constitutional amendment authorizing casino-based sports betting in that state. On December 14, following an intensive lobbying effort by the New Jersey casino industry, the New Jersey Senate voted, 21-16, to approve a measure to legalize casino-based sports gambling. The measure is pending before two committees in the New Jersey General Assembly, and the casinos are pushing to have the assembly pass it before the legislative year ends. Proponents have two means of causing the issue to be placed on the ballot—obtain majority approval by both chambers in two consecutive legislative years (the strategy being followed), or obtain approval by three-fifths of both chambers in one year. (See update, page 2.)

Tax treatment of sponsorship payments and other income

Exemption of sponsorship payments from UBIT. On November 5, President Bush vetoed the tax bill (H.R. 11), one provision of which would have created a safe harbor from application of the unrelated business income tax to certain corporate-sponsorship payments made in connection with public sporting events staged by tax-exempt organizations, including football bowl committees. President Bush vetoed the bill for reasons unrelated to this provision. The agreement by the Senate and House on a corporate-sponsorship safe harbor suggests that the chances for adoption of a corporate-sponsorship provision in the next Congress are good.

IRS audits of seven universities. The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) reportedly has notified six universities—Michigan State University, Princeton University, St. John's University (New York), Stanford University, the University of Michigan, and the University of Nebraska, Lincoln—that they are being subjected to special audits. Vanderbilt University also was informed that it would be subject to an audit, but it was unclear whether it would be a special audit or a standard one. The IRS is reviewing a variety of issues relating to the institutions' sources of revenue, and UBIT appears to be one of the major issues IRS is examining.

IRS corporate-sponsorship guidelines. IRS still has not issued final guidelines outlining the factors it will consider in determining the taxability of certain types of sponsorship payments, and there is no target date for their publication. The IRS issued proposed guidelines in January 1992 and held hearings on them in July. (See update, page 1.)

Title IX and women's sports

Litigation. On November 2, a Federal district court ordered Indiana University of Pennsylvania to restore its women's gymnastics and field hockey teams to their former varsity status, and to provide funding and support to those teams on a basis equal to that provided during the prior academic year. The institution had dropped both sports, as well as men's soccer and tennis, due to budgetary constraints. Although the number of men's and women's teams remained the same, the court found that the cuts had exacerbated already disproportionate participation. In addition, scholarship assistance to female student-athletes was not proportionate to their participation. The court concluded that participation opportunities were not substantially proportionate to enrollment, and that the university had not met its burden of establishing a history and continuing practice of program expansion for female student-athletes, or full and effective accommodation of their interests and abilities.

This action is one of an increasing number of Title IX suits challenging decisions to drop women's intercollegiate athletics teams or seeking to have such teams elevated to varsity status. Title IX actions against Brown University, Colorado State University and the University of Texas at Austin are in various stages of litigation. A similar action against the University of New Mexico reportedly was voluntarily dismissed. Colgate University has appealed the September 28 decision requiring it to upgrade women's ice hockey to varsity status. In a somewhat different, but related, action, two female coaches at the State University College at Oswego reportedly filed suit against the institution for retaliating against them for assisting in the filing of a Title IX complaint.

Settlements. On October 21, in response to a threatened suit by female student-athletes, the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, agreed to reinstate women's lacrosse, tennis and volleyball at least through 1995-96. The sports had been dropped because of budgetary considerations, and the athletes claimed that elimination of the teams violated Title IX. The university also agreed to develop a five-year plan to bring the athletics program in compliance with Title IX. It subsequently announced plans to increase the number of athletics scholarships for women from 47 to 78 over the five-year period. The University of Oklahoma, the College of William and Mary and the University of New Hampshire are among other institutions that similarly agreed to reinstate women's sports after being threatened with legal action.

On the secondary-school level, a woman reportedly reached an out-of-court settlement in November with an Oklahoma school district after a jury had ruled that the district had violated Title IX by denying her the opportunity to be a football coach because of her gender. The jury also found that the school district's policy of requiring football coaches to have two years' coaching experience had a disproportionate effect on women, thereby barring them from the position, and awarded her $150,000 in damages.

Complaint investigations and compliance reviews. In November, the Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) issued a letter of findings in its investigation of the University of Maryland, College Park, in which it found several areas of noncompliance that the university agreed to correct. OCR currently is investigating Title IX intercollegiate athletics complaints against Northern Illinois University based on a decision to replace the field hockey team with women's soccer, and against the University of Southern California based on alleged inequities in the university's support of men's and women's crew.

OCR has been unable to provide further information regarding the status of Title IX intercollegiate athletics complaints filed or compliance reviews conducted.

Legislative developments. On October

28, President Bush signed H.J. Res. 546, which designates February 4, 1993, and February 3, 1994, as National Women and Girls in Sports Day.

Governmental activity regarding athletics

Probe of abuses in intercollegiate athletics. Rep. Cardiss Collins, D-Illinois, chair of the House Subcommittee on Commerce, Consumer Protection and Competitiveness, was reelected to Congress and reportedly has announced that she will continue her probe into abuses in intercollegiate sports when Congress reconvenes this month. The subcommittee conducted hearings on various topics concerning intercollegiate athletics over the last two years. Another member of the subcommittee, former Rep. Tom McMillen, D-Maryland, who actively participated in these hearings, was defeated in the November election.

Review of service academy athletics programs. The next meeting of the Defense Advisory Committee on Service Academy Athletics Programs, which is charged with reviewing the athletics programs at the three military academies, is scheduled for February 17-18, 1993. NCAA Executive Director Richard D. Schultz is a member of the committee.

World Scholar-Athlete and World University Games. On October 6, President Bush signed an appropriations bill (H.R. 5678), which includes an $800,000 appropriation for the World Scholar-Athlete Games, in which athletes ages 16 to 19 will participate, and a $2 million appropriation for the World University Games. On October 31, the President signed the Water Resources Development Act (H.R. 6167), one provision of which authorizes the Secretary of the Army to use available personnel and material resources to the greatest extent possible to support the logistical and minor construction needs of the organizing committee of the 1993 World University Games.

Other legislation. A variety of bills relating to intercollegiate athletics died when Congress failed to take action on them. These bills include (1) the "Sports Standards Act of 1992" (H.R. 5171), (2) the "Collegiate Athletics Reform Act" (H.R. 3046), (3) two measures (H.R. 3233 and H.R. 2243) to establish a National Commission on Intercollegiate Athletics, (4) a due process bill (H.R. 2157) and (5) a resolution (H. Con. Res. 119) expressing support for the Knight Foundation Commission on Intercollegiate Athletics recommendations.

National Youth Sports Program

FY 1993 appropriation. On October 6, the President signed the fiscal year 1993 appropriations bill for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education (H.R. 5677), which provides an appropriation of $9.424 million for NYSP, a decrease from the 1992 level of $12 million.

Public housing youth sports program amendment. Also on October 6, President Bush signed the fiscal year 1993 appropriations bill for the Veterans Administration and Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) (H.R. 5679). The law contains an amendment clarifying that institutions sponsoring NYSP projects are eligible for grants under the HUD public housing youth sports program.

Student-athlete graduation rates

The Department of Education is expected to issue final rules early this year implementing the Student Right-to-Know and Campus Security Act. The act requires institutions of higher education to disclose information about students' completion or graduation rates. The NCAA submitted comments on the proposed regulations in August.

Copyright and communications

Reregulation of cable television. On October 5, Congress overrode President Bush's veto of the "Cable Television Consumer Protection Act" (S. 12), which reregulates the cable television industry. Among other provisions, the bill allows broadcasters to charge cable systems to retransmit the local signals that previously could be retransmitted without charge. It also requires the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) to study, on a sport-by-sport basis, the problem of migration of sports to pay television. The FCC expressly is directed to study college athletics conference contracts that restrict the supply of local college sporting events for broadcast on local television stations. The FCC is to submit the results of its analysis to Congress with recommendations for legislation.

As mandated in the new law, on November 27, the FCC initiated a rule-making proceeding to establish regulations governing the exercise by broadcasters of the right to grant retransmission consent. The FCC solicited comment on a number of issues, including whether a broadcast station needs to obtain any permission from the copyright holders of programming it carries before granting retransmission consent to a cable system.

Cable copyright reform. In a related development, on October 5, Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Arizona, chair of the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Patents, Copyrights and Trademarks, introduced the Copyright Compulsory License Reform Act of 1992 (S. 3342). His purpose in introducing the legislation, which died when the Senate adjourned sine die on October 8, was to provide the public an opportunity to comment on the legislation, which he plans to reintroduce in the next Congress. DeConcini said that the cable act retransmission consent provision is incompatible with the compulsory license, and that reform of the cable and satellite compulsory licenses is needed. The bill would revise those licenses and establish a two-phase process for their termination. The compulsory license for cable systems would expire after three years, followed by a voluntary and arbitrated royalty rate structure and eventually free marketplace negotiation. A longer phase-out is provided for emerging technologies, including satellite carriers.

DeConcini expressed concern that a repeal of the compulsory license would promote greater migration from over-the-air sports broadcast and basic cable to pay-per-view. In order to prevent such "siphoning," the bill creates a cause of action for broadcasters or multichannel video programming distributors (a term that includes cable systems) against professional sports leagues for any unreasonable refusals to deal in negotiating for transmission rights to their sports programming.

No action was taken on H.R. 4511, the Copyright Broadcast Retransmission Licensing Act of 1992, which would phase out the cable compulsory license.

Broadcasting of sports events. No action was taken on the three pending measures relating to broadcasting of sports events, which were aimed at restricting the ability of sports teams to arrange for pay-per-view telecasting of their sports events and keeping sports events on free broadcast television.

Nor was action taken on S. Res. 172, which expressed the sense of Congress that baseball's antitrust immunity and the antitrust exemption authorizing professional sports teams to pool their telecasting rights should be limited or rescinded. On December 10, the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Antitrust, Monopolies and Business Rights held hearings on baseball's antitrust immunity.

1990 and 1991 cable royalty fees. The Copyright Royalty Tribunal has not yet begun proceedings to distribute the $185 million in 1991 cable royalty fees. At the

of all time." He evaluated situations thoroughly and then stuck by his decisions once he made them.

"He was strong on analyzing and getting to the heart of things," said Harry M. Cross, former faculty athletics representative at the University of Washington and NCAA president during most of McWhorter's time on the Council. "He could understand other points of view. He was very firm in his convictions when he arrived at something by way of some excellent thoughts."

'All for amateurism'

During McWhorter's four years (1968-71) on the Council, one of the hottest issues dealt with professionalism in intercollegiate athletics.

"One of the toughest things in the world was making that line of demarcation between professionalism and amateurism," McWhorter said. "I was, and am, all for amateurism. The SEC was the last conference to allow a professional in one sport to retain amateur status in others."

"To me, and it doesn't really matter what I think anymore, a professional is a professional. It doesn't make any sense that a baseball player can sign a $150,000 contract and be restricted with how much he can earn with regard to a scholarship (in another sport)."

There is another definition of professionalism that was put to the test when McWhorter became SEC commissioner. McWhorter had been a professor of English, assistant to the president, and finally the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at Georgia. As faculty chair of athletics during that time, his role was to push the agenda of the university. Then his role changed completely.

Lost prejudice

"The thing a guy gives up in the role of commissioner is the right to be prejudiced (for his institution)," he said. "Everybody else has that right. If you don't have to make judgments, you can pull for whomever you want. You also have to change your mind about officiating."

But those who dealt with McWhorter in this new role say that he made the transition smoothly when he took the job in 1972.

"Anybody who had the opportunity to work for him appreciated the way he went about the business of running the conference," said Mark Womack, who began at the SEC during McWhorter's years there and currently is the executive associate commissioner of the conference. "He kept a low profile and did things without fanfare, and there was never any question of his integrity. Everyone knew he treated situations fairly."

Cross added, "He was very valuable to his conference when they lured him away from Georgia to be commissioner. He did a good job there."

'Family atmosphere'

A teacher by trade, he taught those who worked under him. Meetings run by McWhorter were productive, but not just business. "He created a family atmosphere," Womack said. "He let you carry out your responsibilities without stepping in. He wants to give credit to everyone else, but he deserves more credit than he gets (for the success of the SEC)."

McWhorter is slowed these days by emphysema, which he attributes to being "a great cigar smoker" for many years. He spends a lot of time reading, though recent problems with a cataract have hindered that. Most of all, he says, he does "a lot of kibitzing." And he spends time with his family—wife Marguerite, four children and three grandchildren.

He says he misses working with the people involved in intercollegiate athletics. "There are great people running intercollegiate athletics," he said. "I've disagreed with a lot of people for whom I've had a great deal of respect. There are a few bad situations that smear the whole business. But I miss being able to go to some of the meetings and see all the people."

He still feels strongly about the professionalism issue. But he tempers his opinions just slightly.

"One thing I should say is that the most worthless advice you can get is from somebody who is retired and hasn't stayed in touch as well as he should. So my advice is worth what you pay for it—nothing."

Maybe true in some cases, but not when the retiree is Boyd McWhorter.

on the corporate-sponsorship fees paid in connection with the Mobil Cotton Bowl.

One example in the proposed regulations of mere "acknowledgment" refers to a detailed contract providing that the game will be broadcast, that the sponsor's name will be included in the name of the game, that the sponsor's name and logo will appear on the player's uniforms and throughout the stadium, and that the television cameras will focus on the sponsor's name and logo at various moments during the game.

The regulations also include in "acknowledgements" the hosting of a dinner for the sponsor's executives, complimentary tickets to the event, listings and value-neutral displays of the sponsor's products, and giving out free samples of the product.

"Advertising," on the other hand, includes payments with respect to a game that are contingent on television ratings or, in the case of statements as to the sponsor's products, "qualitative" or "comparative" language, price information, endorsement of the sponsor by the tax-exempt organization, or a "call to action" such as suggesting that listeners visit the sponsor's sales facility.

Comments on the proposed regulations must be submitted by April 30. A hearing on the proposal is scheduled for July 8.

fied in the charge are the following:

- Effects of earlier legislation designed to reduce time demands on student-athletes.

- Effects of earlier legislation designed to enhance the academic preparation of student-athletes, including academic progress and graduation rates.

- Status of gender and racial equity in college athletics, including consideration of those issues as they may be affected by the current efforts of the NCAA Gender-Equity Task Force and the special committee reviewing financial conditions.

- Effects of current recruiting practices on the prospective student-athlete.

- Factors involved in promoting safety, health and well-being of the student-athlete, including reduction of injuries, substance abuse, and other unsafe practices.

- Appropriate institutional in-

- Appropriate opportunities for degree completion after athletics eligibility has been exhausted.

The committee originally included five chief executive officers, two faculty athletics representatives and 10 athletics administrators. Since those individuals were appointed, however, the committee has expressed an interest in adding two student-athletes. Those appointments have not been made.

Looking back on his nearly 25-year career at the NCAA, Van Valkenburg said one moment sticks out as his most memorable. The pomp and circumstance surrounding the 50th anniversary of the Final Four in 1988 not only brought a host of legendary coaches to festivities in Kansas City, but Van Valkenburg's alma mater upset the University of Oklahoma to win the national crown.

"That was a high moment," he said. "It couldn't get any better than that."

In recent years, Van Valkenburg has struggled with diabetes, and among other symptoms, the disease caused deteriorating eyesight. He continued working, even though his responsibilities required considerable detail work. For a while, he used a magnifying glass for reading; later on, he acquired a special video terminal that greatly enlarged images, making them readable.

Since November, Van Valkenburg has been undergoing dialysis treatment, and he reports he feels better as a result.

On December 4, the tribunal ruled that the networks are not entitled to receive royalties paid for retransmission of superstations and public television stations, which reduces the potential claim of the networks from a share of the total $9.8 million in royalties paid for the three years to a share of the approximately $900,000 paid for carriage of network stations. The tribunal

Scholarships and student loans

As reported, Bush vetoed the tax bill (H.R. 11), one provision of which would have excluded from income amounts received as scholarships and used to pay for room, board or travel. The IRS currently is drafting final rules implementing the 1986 overhaul of the Federal income tax law to clarify when certain portions of scholarships or fellowships may be exempt from taxation. No timetable has been set for their release.

With the adjournment of the 102nd Congress, the 11 measures that would have restored the deduction for interest paid on student loans and the exclusion from taxation for scholarships, or otherwise would have provided tax benefits for interest paid on student loans, died.

Antidrug-abuse legislation

No action was taken on the series of measures to impose Federal standards regulating drug-testing programs. These bills included H.R. 33, a comprehensive bill dealing with drug-testing procedures; S.

2008, the "Quality Assurance of Drug-Testing Act." Similarly, no action was taken on the omnibus crime bill, which would have established criminal penalties for trainers and coaches who induce athletes to use anabolic steroids.

College Football Association compiles first team to honor community service

The College Football Association (CFA) announced it has selected its inaugural

"Good Works Team," recognizing student-athletes who have devoted themselves to exemplary community service.

The CFA asked its member institutions after the conclusion of the 1992 season to nominate student-athletes who are actively involved in and committed to working with charitable organizations, service groups or other community-service projects.

One of the players on the initial team is University of Pittsburgh senior quarterback Alex Van Pelt, who said having an opportunity to assist others gave him greater satisfaction than setting football records.

"Of all the athletics awards I was able to achieve over the last four years as Pitt's starting quarterback, my community-service projects are what I cherish the most," Van Pelt said. "Whether it was signing an autograph for a disabled veteran, visiting a sick child at Children's Hospital or advising a high-school kid on the dangers of drugs, these experiences were worth more to me than any rec-

Other players on the inaugural "Good Works Team":

Jason Allen, quarterback, University of Arkansas, Fayetteville; Troy Branch, linebacker, University of Nebraska, Lincoln; Russell Durham, linebacker, Boston College; Chip Hilleary, quarterback, University of Kansas; Alec Millen, offensive tackle, University of Georgia; Tommy Mordica, offensive guard, Wake Forest University; Doug Pelfrey, place-kicker, University of Kentucky; Chris Pezman, linebacker, University of Houston; Tony Rand, safety, Texas Christian University; and Derek West, offensive tackle, University of Colorado, Boulder.

ACE warns budget woes threaten minority gains

Rising tuition, state college budget cuts and financial aid uncertainties threaten to reverse recent gains in minority student enrollment, a consortium of universities and colleges warned January 17.

In its annual report, the American Council on Education urged Congress and President Clinton's administration to come to the rescue, arguing minorities will most certainly be hit by the current money pinch.

ACE, which has 1,500 member colleges and universities, said in its annual "Minorities in Higher Education" report that despite recent gains, Blacks and Hispanics are still far less likely than whites to attend college, according to The Associated Press.

But minorities made big gains in the last decade. The group said Hispanic enrollment jumped 65.8 percent, American Indian enrollment increased 22.6 percent and black enrollment rose 12.6 percent in the 1980s.

Irish bus crash victims remembered year later

Two members of the University of Notre Dame swimming team killed in a bus crash a year ago live on in the memories and daily experiences of the team and campus community, school officials said.

"Two irreplaceable people have left us... who taught us about competition, work and commitment," the Rev. Bill Beauchamp, the university's executive vice-president, said at a memorial Mass January 24. "Who and what we are today has been immeasurably shaped by their lives and by that fateful event a year ago."

Colleen Hipp and Margaret

"Meghan" Beeler were killed and 34 others were injured when a bus carrying the swimming team crashed on an icy stretch of highway near the Notre Dame campus early on the morning of January 24, 1992.

Hipp and Beeler "are not mere memories," Beauchamp said. "They are part and parcel of each one of us. They are inescapably built into our lives."

Prior to the service, the team marched in procession from the school's swimming building across campus to the Basilica of the Sacred Heart, the campus church where the service was held.

Task force

Gender-equity subcommittees continue to work with NCAA, institutional standards

as well as the expected positive impact that even modest encouragement might have on levels of interest among female students.

To begin addressing these concerns, the subcommittee recommended that a variety of methods for measuring interest in women's sports, including high-school participation data and participation on collegiate club and intramural teams, be examined.

In other business, the subcommittee:

- Discussed the development of a survey instrument to measure interest in response to a request from the Division III Steering Committee.
- Agreed to contact the Office of Civil Rights of the Department of Education to learn more about its methods for determining interest.
- Discussed the possibility of exit interviews to determine if women drop out of sports in greater proportion than men and, if so, for what reasons.
- Cited the Sara Lee Corporation's "Discover Women's Sports" campaign as a positive force for stimulating interest.
- Appointed a group to prepare a working paper on marketing strategies for women's athletics.
- Agreed to send a form to all member institutions to determine strategies that aid gender equity.

Subcommittee on NCAA standards

The subcommittee recommended the following to the full task force:

- That there be flexibility for local corporate sponsorship of NCAA championship events. Subcommittee chair Charlotte West, Southern Illinois University at Carbondale, noted that greater flexibility in allowing corporate involvement in championships could be a positive step in promoting women's championships.
- That member institutions use the newly formed NCAA Administrative Review Panel for granting relief from the application of legislation if an instance occurs in which NCAA legislation creates a hardship because of gender.
- That a minimum of 50 institutions sponsoring a sport for two consecutive years is an appropriate number for establishing a new championship (the NCAA Executive Committee has proposed 60 for two consecutive years).
- That if the number of sponsoring institutions falls below an average of 40 for the most recent three-year period, that championship should be discontinued in the next academic year (the Executive Committee proposal would discontinue a championship if it dropped below 40 in any one year).

A minimum of 50 sponsoring institutions would be required to reestablish the championship.

■ That for women's sports in which the NCAA currently does not offer championships, such as crew, women's ice hockey, women's water polo, badminton, sailing, team handball, squash, bowling, archery, figure skating, aerobics and dance, for a five-year period, there be a minimum of 40 sponsoring institutions required to sponsor a new championship.

■ That selected non-NCAA sports be acceptable for meeting membership requirements and that they be used in determining an institution's allowance under the NCAA revenue-distribution formula.

■ That championships not be continued where sponsorship falls below the required number, even if the institutions cover transportation and per diem costs.

■ That more qualified women eligible for NCAA committees should be identified and appointed. Appointing bodies such as the NCAA Council and the Administrative Committee should increase the ratio of female representation on NCAA committees with an Association goal of achieving significant and steady annual progress in the female participation ratio on committees on an annual basis. Such progress would be monitored by the Committee on Women's Athletics and reported to the membership.

■ That the need exists to educate the membership on the purpose of the senior woman administrator position.

■ That increased appointments of female faculty athletics representatives should be encouraged, along with an increase in the ratio of females on institutional athletics councils.

■ That the affirmative-action component of the NCAA conference grant program continue to be emphasized and that money now devoted to drug education might be used for affirmative action since both the NCAA and member institutions are otherwise involved in drug education.

■ That affirmative-action funds be used to inaugurate additional conference championships for women and for the establishment of conference gender-equity committees.

Finally, the subcommittee noted that no standards exist for peer-review teams to examine the equity component of the newly adopted athletics certification plan. Subcommittee members were asked to review the self-study questions formulated by the NCAA Special Committee on Athletics Certification and to make individual recommendations to the committee.

The recommendations of the subcommittees were accepted by the task force with the understanding that any final decisions of the task force will not be made until there has been input from the membership.

Other business

In addition to considering subcommittee recommendations, the task force was briefed on recent developments in related areas involving the NCAA Executive Committee (championships enhancement proposals) and the Special Committee to Review Financial Conditions in Intercollegiate Athletics.

Howlett, the task force's liaison to the Executive Committee, and former NCAA President Judith M. Sweet, University of California, San Diego, briefed the members on the Executive Committee's plan. James E. Delany, Big Ten Conference commissioner and chair of the financial-conditions committee and task-force liaison to that committee, briefed the task force on the activities of that committee. Task force members discussed the need for close coordination among all three areas—gender equity, championships and financial conditions. The financial-conditions committee's work was of particular interest to task force members because of their belief that at least in the near term, resources for gender-equity efforts will have to come from existing budgets.

Votes, interpretations from summary corrected

The following are corrections of errors in the 1993 Convention voting summary that appeared in the January 20 issue of The NCAA News.

The summary failed to note vote totals for three resolutions that were adopted in the Presidents Commission Grouping and for which roll-call votes were recorded.

It also failed to note revisions that had been made by the NCAA Council in interpretations for four proposals that were adopted at the Convention. The corrected interpretations for Proposal Nos. 15-G, 15-H, 51-A and 72 appear below.

The summary of actions at the 1993 Convention and the following corrections were provided by the NCAA legislative services staff. Any questions regarding the summary should be directed to that office.

Resolutions

The voting line for the following proposals should be corrected to read:

Proposal No. 56—Adopted (768-8-3)

No. 57—Adopted (771-6-4)

No. 58—Adopted (774-4-1)

Interpretations

The following adopted proposals included interpretations that were incorrect. Please insert the correct official interpretations for the following:

Constitution 5, Proposal No. 51-A

Interpretation: The NCAA Council reviewed the provisions of Proposal No. 51, which require all legislative proposals, regardless of their source, to be evaluated by an appropriate NCAA committee before they can be presented for action in an NCAA Convention, and adopted a policy statement mandating that each NCAA committee has an obligation to review prior to October 8 all proposals presented to it and to report the results of its review to the sponsors.

Bylaw 14, Proposal No. 72

Interpretation: The committee reviewed the provisions of Proposal Nos. 72 and 73 and determined the following:

a. A student-athlete who participates in a sport classified in Division III while enrolled in a Division I (or II) institution prior to August 1, 1993, and who remains enrolled in that institution may not receive athletically related financial aid, inasmuch as such a student-athlete is subject to Division III eligibility standards.

b. The duties of the Committee on Athletics Certification include the duty to review and recommend changes in the certification cycle if appropriate.

Bylaw 33, Proposal No. 15-H

Interpretation: The Interpretations Committee reviewed the provisions of Proposal No. 15, which require Division I institutions to complete a prescribed institutional self-study verified and evaluated through an external peer-group process, and determined the following:

The provisions of proposed Bylaw 33.2.3.1 allow an institution to review a list of potential peer reviewers for purposes of suggesting removal of one or more reviewers, but the authority for establishing the composition of review teams rests with the Committee on Athletics Certification.
