Planning committee looks back to look ahead

By Jasmine Hightower
THE NCAA NEWS STAFF

Some NCAA observers may believe that ideas such as need-based aid and gender equity are new to intercollegiate athletics. They are not.

The Association's Long-Range Planning Committee, which was replaced by the NCAA Committee on Review and Planning in 1987, first suggested looking into those issues in 1971 and 1970, respectively.

In fact, the Association has been discussing issues and anticipating trends affecting intercollegiate athletics for more than 30 years. Since 1964, the NCAA has had a long-range planning function. The Long-Range Planning Committee founded that year is believed to be one of the first formal long-range planning groups in an association in the United States.

The individuals on the Committee on Review and Planning and its predecessor continually have provided the type of foresight essential to the identification of important issues.

Extensive knowledge

One reason for the committee's insight is the committee members' extensive knowledge of intercollegiate athletics.

"The most important thing is that we have a lot of experience on committees, have been presidents or other officers of the NCAA and have been involved in various committees," said James J. Whalen, president of Ithaca College and a former Division III chair of the NCAA Presidents Commission.

The committee's chair, former NCAA President Alan J. Chapman of Rice University, echoed Whalen's sentiment. "Most committee members are former officers, so they have a devotion to it (the committee)," he said.

The committee members' devotion stems largely from the imporance of their work.

Judith M. Sweet, director of athletics at the University of California, San Diego, and former NCAA president, said, "I think long-range planning is essential to any organization."

It is especially essential to an organization charged with protecting the interests of more than 1,000 institutions, conferences, organizations and individuals devoted to

Women's interest should be measured in terms of potential

Opportunity first must exist, consultant says

Any study of women's interest in intercollegiate athletics participation will need to deal with potential, which is something that cannot be measured solely by a "snapshot" survey of how interest appears to be at the moment, a consultant to the NCAA Research Committee says.

Setting aside the fact that "interest" is difficult to define, University of Virginia sociologist Steve Nock said it is vital that any measurement acknowledge that women cannot express interest in that which does not exist.

Nock, who is assisting the Research Committee in devising an instrument to measure women's interest in sports, cited as an example the story of Olympic rower Anita DeFrantz.

One athletics director said in a recent focus-group discussion on the issue that DeFrantz knew nothing about rowing until she was in college. "She was walking across the campus one day at Connecticut College," the athletics director recalled, "when 'this man with a boat on his head' (as she later recalled) stopped her and asked if she had ever thought about rowing.

'Never in a million years'

"She's a big, strong-looking woman, which is why he stopped her instead of somebody else, and she ended up as an Olympic silver medalist. No, she had never in a million years thought about rowing."

"If Anita DeFrantz had been asked the day before about rowing," Nock said, "it is unlikely that she would have expressed much interest. But she surely had the interest when the opportunity was made available."

The Research Committee, at the direction of the Division II Steering Committee, is attempting to develop one or more instruments that member institutions can use to assess interest in intercollegiate athletics. Interest is the only part of the Title IX compliance test that will permit an institution not to have a male/female athletics participation Statistically speaking...

Scoring in Division I men's basketball is up this season by almost three points per game. But the offensive touch didn't carry over to the free throw line, where the 66.3 percent accuracy is the lowest since 1954. See related story on midseason scoring trends on page 8.

Kelly elected Division I chair of Commission

The Division I subcommittee of the NCAA Presidents Commission has selected Eamon M. Kelly, president of Tulane University, to serve as its chair in 1994.

Kelly succeeds Charles E. Young, chancellor of the University of California, Los Angeles, whose term as chair ended at the 1994 NCAA Convention in San Antonio. Young, who has been a member of the Commission since 1988, has been the Division I chair for the past two years.

Kelly

Kelly, who has been on the Commission since 1991, became president at Tulane in 1981. He also has chaired the Commission's Advisory Committee on Ethical Behavior in College Athletics and was a Commission representative on the NCAA Ad Hoc Committee to Study Enforcement Issues.

He received a bachelor's degree at Fordham University and earned his master's degree and doctorate in economics at Pennsylvania State University.

Kelly has served in several Federal government posts, including positions with the Economic Development Administration of the U.S. Department of Commerce and the Small Business Administration. He also has been a special consultant to the U.S. House of Representatives and the U.S. Secretary of Labor.

In addition, he has held positions with the Ford

Player battles against racism

University of Washington linebacker J.J. Hanson has had enough of the racism and prejudice that runs deep in this country. To attack it, Hanson said he is going into the area that he believes has the most potential for positive change—education.

The sophomore is in the process of creating Race Relations 2000, a secondary-school curriculum that will consist of seminars, pamphlets, assemblies and eventually a textbook that seek to broaden the racial outlook of junior high and high-school students.

"Racism is intertwined with everything—family, education, government....," Hanson told the Daily at the University of Washington. "When you solve racism, you solve so many other problems—poverty, welfare, gangs, homelessness."

Hanson, who is biracial and says he has experienced countless acts of discrimination, said he was inspired to create Race Relations 2000 because of an incident that occurred while he was a wrestler at Kentwood High School in Washington. During a tournament, Hanson said he overheard one of his teammates make a derogatory statement about black players on the opposing team.

"I heard that, I didn't (rebut) it at the time, but in my mind I thought 'not too many black folk wrestle, but the ones that do wrestle—they're champions,'" Hanson said. "...I saw this as an ignorance thing and what I need to do is not sit here and get my feelings hurt. This really changed the focus of where I'm at. It's just an ignorance thing and I need to do something about it."

Hanson has been joined in his effort by teammate Richard Thomas, a junior full-back for the Huskies. Both expect to coauthor a textbook on race relations that they plan to have published this summer.

To catch a thief

Let there be no doubt. On the basketball court, Lafayette College's Heidi Caruso holds a Ph.D. in stealing. To an opposing ball handler, Caruso's proficiency is scary.

Recently, the senior point guard became the NCAA all-time leader in steals, surpassing the record of 454 thefts held by former University of Virginia player Dawn Staley. She eclipsed the mark January 15 after nabbing an inbounds pass from a Bucknell University player.

Heidi Caruso is a woman of steal. The Lafayette College senior point guard recently broke the NCAA career record of 454 steals held by former University of Virginia star Dawn Staley.

"I'm definitely glad it's over," Caruso said of the pursuit of the record. "Now I can just put it behind me and concentrate on the team wins."

Caruso, who already is holder or coholder of three other NCAA all-time records (steals in season, 168; steals-per-game average, 6.0; steals in one game, 14), helped lead the Leopards to their best start in 16 years, opening the 1993-94 season at 11-2. She leads the team in assists, minutes and, of course, steals.

Brown vs. Brown

When Wittenberg University and Kenyon College met for a men's basketball game January 19, first place in the North Coast Athletic Conference (NCAC) race was on the line. Also up for grabs were bragging rights in the first matchup between coaches Bill Brown of Wittenberg and Bill Brown of Kenyon.

Wittenberg's Brown coached at Kenyon from 1983 to 1988, when he was succeeded by the other Brown. Both have won NCAC coach-of-the-year awards, although Kenyon's Brown leads in this race, two to one.

Kenyon's Brown played college basketball at Ohio University, where he was a teammate of Ohio coach Larry Hunter, for whom Wittenberg's Brown worked for the past four years as top assistant coach.

Wittenberg beat Kenyon, 86-72, giving Bill Brown—Bill L. Brown, more specifically—the Bill of Bragging Rights for now. Bill H. Brown must await the two teams' next clash February 16 to pull even.

What would we do without middle names?

Deadline nears

A February 15 deadline has been established for applications from candidates interested in the NCAA ethnic-minority and women's enhancement programs' postgraduate scholarships and NCAA national office internships. All applications must be postmarked by that date.

There are 20 $6,000 postgraduate scholarships (10 to ethnic minorities and 10 to women) awarded each year to those seeking careers in athletics administration. Each September, a new group of college graduates begins 12-month internships at the national office, working in various departments where they obtain a range of athletics administration experience.

Those interested in applying for postgraduate scholarships and internships may contact athletics directors or senior woman administrators at member institutions for applications. More information is available from Stanley D. Johnson, NCAA director of professional development, at 913/339-1906.

Almost perfect

When it comes to graduating student-athletes who have exhausted their athletics eligibility, Rollins College is nearly perfect.

Ninety-nine of every 100 student-athletes who complete their athletics eligibility at Rollins earn a degree and they are doing it in impressive academic fashion. More than 50 percent of the college's 250 student-athletes hold grade-point averages of 3.000 or better (4.000 scale).

Milestones

Sacred Heart University men's basketball coach Dave Bike recorded his 300th career victory with a 73-71 upset of Franklin Pierce College January 12. In 16 years at the institution, Bike has captured a Division II Men's Basketball Championship (1986), five Division II New England regional titles and four New England Conference crowns.

Frostburg State University men's basketball coach Oscar Lewis registered his 100th career victory with a 91-72 win November 29 over Wesley College. He is the second coach in the school's history to reach 100 victories. Lewis is in his seventh season as coach at Frostburg State, where he spent a brief portion of the 1978-79 season as interim head coach.

Susan Zawacki, women's basketball coach at the University of Chicago, posted her 200th career victory December 9 with a 63-46 victory over Judson College. In just her first season at Chicago, Zawacki spent the past 13 years as head coach at Amherst, where she compiled a record of 177-134. She began her career at Hamilton, where she was 18-10 in two seasons.

Yale University men's basketball coach Dick Kuchen recorded his 100th victory at the university with a 74-70 win over the University of New Hampshire December 8. He is in his eighth season at the institution.

Fact file

The NCAA absorbed expenses in 75 of its 79 championships in 1992-93, with only Division I men's basketball, Division I-AA football, Division I men's ice hockey and Division I men's lacrosse bringing in more than they cost. The five championships for which the Association absorbed the greatest amount of expense: Division I women's basketball, $1,217,759; Division I baseball, $905,801; Division I men's outdoor track, $472,378; Division III baseball, $463,530, and Division II baseball, $423,242.

Survey reveals painkillers as new trend in abuse

A survey of drug use and perceptions among collegiate student-athletes has found a surprising new area of potential concern—over-the-counter "painkillers."

In fact, some athletes describe the taking of Advil and other forms of ibuprofen—which they call painkillers—as "popping M&Ms."

"The most likely abusers are student-athletes who feel like they must take them to succeed," said Ray Tricker, associate professor of public health at Oregon State University and principal investigator for the study conducted under an NCAA grant to establish a pilot drug-education program for student-athletes.

"Some of these kids are in constant pain," Tricker said. "They (apparently feel) it's OK to use painkillers on the day of the game or to cope with pain when they're injured, as long as it gets them ready to play."

"That's very unsound. They could make the injury worse, and prolonged exposure to such drugs also can lead to other problems. What we really need to address, though, is the whole mindset of the student-athlete."

Michael Sandago, head trainer for Oregon State's athletics department, said athletes do not always comprehend subtle differences in medication.

"We generally don't give out 'pain' medication," he said. "We do give out nonsteroidal, anti-inflammatory medications when warranted—ibuprofen, acetaminophen, aspirin. Any time one of these agents is given out, it is done in an acceptable dosage; instructions are given verbally and on the package."

"Unfortunately, athletes may do things on their own," Santiago added. "Some may feel that 'if two is good, four is better.' We do try to educate them thoroughly. We don't allow that in the context of the training room, to the best of our abilities. But realistically, athletes can buy those over the counter and use them as they wish."

The Oregon State study of approximately 635 athletes from three NCAA Division I schools also looked at their use and perception of other drugs, including steroids, cocaine, marijuana, amphetamines and alcohol.

Oregon State athletics director Dutch Baughman said the survey was an "eye-opener" and should serve as a catalyst for further improvements in athletics departments around the country.

"We have discovered some trends and some danger signs about things that many of us have suspected for some time," he said. "When athletes call painkillers 'M&Ms,' it tells me that the drugs are readily available—which they have to be—but also that student-athletes may have the wrong perspective. Do they know where to draw the line?"

Committee notices

Member institutions are invited to submit nominations for vacancies on NCAA committees. Nominations to fill the following vacancy must be submitted in writing to Fannie B. Vaughan, executive assistant, in the NCAA national office no later than February 9, 1994 (fax number 913/339-0035).

Men's Basketball Rules Committee: Replacement for William M. Scanlon, Union College (New York), upon expiration of his term September 1, 1994. Appointee must be from Division III, District 3.

Set record straight about clearinghouse

By B. J. Skelton

UNIVERSITY OF TEXAS AT ARLINGTON

A recent article that appeared in USA Today contained a number of incorrect inferences and several outright mistakes concerning the NCAA Initial-Eligibility Clearinghouse.

As chair of the committee responsible for implementing this program, I can assure you that developing this clearinghouse is a large and difficult task. We acknowledge some confusion exists about the clearinghouse, although I believe that a certain amount of confusion is understandable given its scope and newness. Unfortunately, whatever misconceptions existed before must have been exacerbated by the USA Today article.

First, there is the headline: "High school coaches question scholarship program's worth." Obviously, the initial-eligibility clearinghouse is not a scholarship program. Without trying to ascertain how it could be mistaken for one, let me state what it is: It is a program that establishes whether a prospective student-athlete meets the minimum initial-eligibility standards established by the NCAA members to compete at a Division I or II institution in his or her first year of enrollment. This is based on transcripts, core courses from a high school and standardized-test scores.

The primary reason for the creation of the clearinghouse was to assure that interpretation and application of the NCAA's initial-eligibility legislation occurred on a more consistent basis. Beyond that, however, there was a major concern that an enormous amount of work was being duplicated not only by NCAA schools engaged in recruiting, but also by high-school guidance counselors who were meeting numerous and repetitive requests by member institutions for prospects' academic credentials.

The article cites coaches who criticize the program because the athletes themselves are required to pay $18 (although it also notes that waivers are available). Payment by the athlete is a point on which many of us could agree or disagree, but unfortunately, the author bolstered this part of his story with the comments of a high-school football coach who clearly does not understand the program at all.

That coach called the program "nothing

Mediation

Family counseling, not Federal intervention

By Cedric W. Dempsey

NCAA EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Representatives of the NCAA met recently with mediators from the Community Relations Service of the Department of Justice to discuss the concerns raised by the Black Coaches Association and the Congressional Black Caucus. The purpose of the meeting was to determine if the mediation process could be helpful in articulating, understanding and ultimately resolving issues that have led the BCA to threaten a boycott.

My first reaction to the suggestion that the Department of Justice become involved in these issues was less than enthusiastic. Historically, the NCAA's member institutions have been very protective of the NCAA's legislative process and have been leery of Federal involvement in intercollegiate athletics.

The NCAA takes great pride in a legislative process that some call "democratic to a fault" since virtually any issue of concern is guaranteed to be debated and voted on by the Association's membership. I was concerned that entering into the mediation process might be inviting Federal interference rather than helping.

As I have found out more about the mediation process, however, my initial concerns have been eased. The Community Relations Service is not a typical Department of Justice office. The office was created to provide conflict resolution assistance in matters involving race, color, ethnicity or national origin. It is not an investigative or an enforcement arm of the department.

Mediation is not a legal process or one that is driven by formal complaint.

The use of the Community Relations Service is wholly voluntary and the process of mediation is confidential. At our initial meeting with the three-person mediation team, I was impressed with their professionalism, their genuine desire to help and their enthusiasm for the mediation process.

We stressed the importance of all of the parties understanding what the mediation process can and cannot do. The mediation process, if it continues, cannot be a substitute for the regular legislative process of the Association. Mediation cannot result in a guarantee of a 14th grant in basketball or any other legislative result. The NCAA membership must make such decisions at the 1995 Convention.

What the mediation process can do is to help assure a frank discussion of the issues and give all of the parties guidance as to how the issues might be resolved. In fact, I consider this process to be more like family counseling than mediation. The Association does not need or want Federal intervention, but we do need better communication between and among the diverse constituencies of the Association. If this process improves such communication, it will have served us well.

The 1994 Convention, through passage and defeat of various proposals, has set the stage for the 1995 Convention. The passage of Proposal No. 174 calls for a complete review of new initial-eligibility standards, with particular emphasis on the impact of those standards on access to educational opportunity for minority students. In addition, the NCAA Council has directed a review of NCAA grant-in-aid limitations in all sports to assess their impact on educational opportunities, again with emphasis on minority students.

Recommendations arising from these two studies — combined with the work of the Special Committee to Review Student-Athlete Welfare, Access and Equity — will form the legislative foundation of the 1995 Convention.

No one can guarantee the results of the 1995 Convention. It is my hope, however, that the mediation process will help identify and frame certain issues to assure that they are addressed in the legislative process in an open, fair and inclusive manner.

In recent months, sensitivity and understanding within the NCAA about the issues of access and equity have been heightened considerably. Without arguing why or how the lines of communication became closed, they are opening now — between administrators and coaches and among the diverse constituencies of the NCAA. The momentum created by the National Association of Basketball Coaches Issues Summit, the boycott of the summit by the BCA, the debates at the 1994 Convention and, yes, even the coaches' strong disappointment with the vote on Proposal No. 42 can be channeled positively in the coming months.

It is in this spirit that we have approached the mediation process. All of us at times have tired of talking, but when so little talking has been done for so long, it is a vital and valuable first step.

□ Opinions

Tranghese: Level playing field a myth

Michael A. Tranghese, commissioner
Big East Conference

Houston Chronicle

"The reason we're talking about (restructuring) is because of (chronic cost-cutting legislation).

"One of the pieces of legislation was on travel limits. We said, 'Who supports that?' A bunch of people raised their hands. We threw our hands up and said, 'Why do you care if I want to travel 190 people to a football game?' It's not even a conference matter, it's an institutional matter.

"That's why we need restructuring. We don't need cost-containment on a national level. If Texas can afford to spend more money than us, they should spend it. Is that a recruiting advantage? Yeah, it is. But guess what? Life is not a level playing field.

"In football, Notre Dame has an advantage. They've got it. They've earned it. There's nothing I can do to make Notre Dame the same as other schools. My energy should not be wasted on taking Notre Dame to a level playing field. I should be trying to do the best I can with my schools."

BCA concerns

Michael Wilbon, columnist

The Washington Post

"Time for talk is over; it's time to make some people accountable. The Black Coaches Association isn't asking for a handout. Men's college basketball, which is 65 percent black, is paying the way. It's paying for baseball, track and field, swimming, lacrosse, volleyball, water polo, women's basketball, field hockey, you name it. The whole lot of them is on welfare. They can't pay their own way. Maybe this is a concept conservatives who don't understand what all the fuss is about can grasp.

"Men's basketball and men's football pay for college sports in this country. They make the NCAA possible. Everybody else is accepting a handout. Men's basketball pulls itself up by the bootstraps; everybody else (except football) is waiting for a lifeline.

"...The boycott is called off (for now) as the Department of Justice acts as a third party. I'm sure bringing anybody in to deal with the NCAA is a great improvement. But there's something about avoiding official channels and taking matters into your own hands that can scare the hell out of institutions like the NCAA.

"Maybe it's the fact that they see you're not weak and passive. Personally, I love it when institutions of that size and unyielding power and unflinching arrogance have to blink when they realize that people who have an almost invaluable vested interest can just say no, and mean it."

Basketball rules

Roy Williams, men's basketball coach

University of Kansas

"The elimination of the closely guarded five-second dribbling rule is making a farce out of trying to play pressure defense.

"One player dribbling for 15 to 20 seconds is not very exciting, and I don't think we should make rules because it's difficult for officials to count to five.

"James Naismith is buried here in Lawrence. I went by his grave site, and he had actually rolled over when he saw that team play was being eliminated by allowing all of this dribbling."

■ Initial pool of certification peer reviewers

The initial pool of peer reviewers for the NCAA Division I athletics certification program has been selected.

The individuals listed below have been notified by the NCAA Committee on Athletics Certification of their selection.

Campus visits by peer reviewers will begin in fall 1994. About February 1, approximately 175 individuals from the pool will be contacted to see if they can commit to participating in a fall evaluation visit and to attending a training session in the spring.

Another group of about 200 peer reviewers will be assigned to spring 1995 evaluation visits and most likely will receive training in fall 1994.

The certification committee will continue to accept nominations for peer-reviewers on an ongoing basis.

Central region helps boost future of NCAA skiing

By Martin T. Benson
THE NCAA NEWS STAFF

After dying in 1986 because of programs dropping or choosing to compete in a non-NCAA championship, the Central region for NCAA skiing is back and looking forward to continued growth.

That growth has helped solidify the future of the NCAA championships for skiing.

The rebirth began in 1991, when the University of Wisconsin, Green Bay, and St. Olaf College sent skiers to the National Collegiate Men's and Women's Skiing Championships. That same year, Bemidji State University; the University of Minnesota, Duluth, and Northern Michigan University sponsored skiing as an NCAA sport but participated in the United States Collegiate Ski Association (USCSA) Championships — a team event — rather than the NCAA's individual/team championships.

Wisconsin-Green Bay coach Butch Reimer, whose school sent its skiers to the USCSA in 1989, said the move to the NCAA was a smart one.

'Helped immensely'

"You had to pay for everything in the USCSA, and it's hard to ask your athletics director to do that," he said. "Now our administration has seen that joining the NCAA has helped us immensely. In fact, we're starting a women's team as a direct result of the move."

According to Robert L. Fisher of Williams College, who this year is in his first year as NCAA Men's and Women's Skiing Committee chair, the committee decided to increase the Central region's number of qualifying slots for 1992 in hopes that other teams would join Wisconsin-Green Bay and St. Olaf. In order to get those slots, however, the Central region needed six teams.

Because of fiscal restraints, the championships' total number of qualifying slots couldn't be increased, so they had to be taken from the East and West.

"The committee realized that the strength of skiing depended on attracting more teams," he said. "In order to attract those teams, we needed to give them qualifiers."

Five new teams

It worked. The University of Alaska Fairbanks, Carleton College, St. Mary's College (Minnesota), Michigan Technological University and Northern Michigan signed on for 1991-92. Northern Michigan coach and skiing committee member Sten J. Fjeldheim, who said he "recruited" some of the other schools to join, said the move was best for his school, which dropped the sport in the early 1980s, saw it reemerge as a club team and then gave it full varsity status in 1987.

Fjeldheim said that competing in the USCSA was getting too expensive because the school had to pay all the expenses; in the NCAA, if a team qualifies, its travel and per-diem costs are covered.

"The NCAA is traditionally accepted within the academic community," he said. "It's recognized as the premier group in college athletics. It's tough to explain the USCSA when you're recruiting."

Northern Michigan is traditionally the strongest team in the region, and Fisher said that once the Wildcats took the lead, others followed.

Nordic only

All Central region teams have only Nordic (cross country) squads in NCAA competition. Northern Michigan's Peter Vordenberg, who won the men's freestyle cross country championship last year and placed fifth in the diagonal event, was the only student-athlete from the region to place, but Fisher said he expects that to change in the near future.

"This year I expect the Central to be more of a factor, particularly Northern Michigan," he said. "Alaska Fairbanks (16th last year) also is a team that can score."

Team championship points are scored in both Alpine (downhill) and Nordic events. Northern Michigan finished 11th as a team last year without Alpine points. Fjeldheim said he hoped to add Alpine at Northern Michigan, a move that could make his team a legitimate contender for the national title.

Fjeldheim said that many Central region schools have Alpine teams competing in the USCSA, and that one of his goals is to recruit those teams into the NCAA. Another of his goals within the region is to revive discontinued programs at Lake Superior State University, Minnesota-Duluth and Bemidji

State and bring them into the NCAA.

Fisher said that another area of growth for NCAA skiing is New England, where many teams sponsor the sport as an NCAA counter but have opted to go to the USCSA championships. This year, those teams are able to go to NCAA Eastern regionals.

Paradox in growth

"The majority of the USCSA teams are clubs, but we want to encourage the USCSA teams that are varsity to come to regionals and try to qualify for the NCAA championships," Fisher said.

There is a paradox within this growth. Fisher said that the sport has the smallest number of qualifying slots in its history, but the most teams competing in the NCAA championships and more on the horizon. An NCAA Executive Committee cost-cutting measure will reduce those qualifiers from 160 to 148 for 1995-96.

Fjeldheim said that even though he is disappointed with the reduction, keeping the championships small has its positive aspects.

"The way we have to look at it is that the championship is something very special and not everyone should be able to go," he said. "It didn't mean anything to qualify for the USCSA and that hurt the championship. Making the NCAA is an honor and keeping it elite will make our regional competition more exciting."

Ups and downs

Points per game for I men increase, but free-throw percentage nears 40-year low

By Gary K. Johnson

NCAA STATISTICS COORDINATOR

Shave 10 seconds off the shot clock and things are bound to happen, such as players taking more shots and scoring more points. But turn the clock off and set those same basketball players at the free-throw line, and what happens? Apparently not much, as the trend to shooting bricks from the free-throw stripe continues.

According to national basketball trends for games through January 16 involving all 301 Division I men's teams, the rule change that reduced the shot clock from 45 seconds to 35 this season is having an effect.

The number of shots is up exactly five attempts per game for both teams combined over last season's final numbers. Three of those attempts are coming from beyond the three-point line, so that more than one of every four shots in a game comes from that range.

With all those extra shots, some are bound to find their way through the basket. Scoring is up almost three points per game for both teams combined.

Just three points? Yes, that's all. But those additional points times the number of games played this season, compared to the same time last season, means more than 11,600 extra points have been scored.

While scoring has gone up, free-throw accuracy continues to decline. At the midpoint this season, free-throw shooting is at 66.3 percent. If that percentage holds through the rest of the season, it will be the lowest since 1954, when the nation shot 65.2 at the line.

Last season's free-throw percentage of 67.7 was the lowest since 1960. Last year at midseason, the percentage was at 66.8, so the percentage did rise almost a full point the second half of the season.

The other two shooting categories—field-goal percentage and three-point field-goal percentage—also show drops of a full percentage point each.

Three-pointers use keeps climbing as the shooting percentage keeps falling. Since the first year of the three-pointer in 1987, the number made per game for both teams combined has increased every year except for a slight decrease in 1992 (from 10.0 in 1991 to 9.9 in 1992). At the midway point this season, 11.21 three-pointers are being made per game.

The following chart shows national trends for three-point field goals made and attempted and the percentage since the shot's inception in 1987. All figures are for full seasons except for this year's, which, of course, is midseason.

Year	3FG Made	3FG Att.	3FG Pct.
1987	7.0	18.3	38.4
1988	8.0	20.8	38.2
1989	8.9	23.6	37.6
1990	9.4	25.7	36.7
1991	10.0	27.6	36.1
1992	9.9	28.0	35.5
1993	10.5	29.8	35.4
1994 (midseason)	11.2	32.8	34.2

Three-point attempts have climbed every year, from 18.3 in 1987 to 32.82 this season. In shooting percentage, three-pointers made has dropped from 38.4 percent in 1987 to 34.15 this year.

From 1987 to the present, the number of three-point attempts has increased 79.2 percent. Also, the percentage of three-point attempts within the total number of field-goal attempts has continued to rise since the first year of the rule. In 1987, 15.6 percent of field-goal attempts were from three-point range. In 1994, 26.86 percent are from long-range. In other words, approximately one of every six shots from the field were from three-point range in 1987. This year, more than one of every four shots is a three-point attempt.

In conference rankings, the Big Eight again leads in scoring at 82.61 per team per game, just edging out the Big Ten's 82.32. Meanwhile, the Big East has been holding its opponents to just 67.96 points a game to lead all conferences. The Big Ten leads in field-goal accuracy at 47.77 percent, followed closely by the Big Eight's 47.14 and the Big East's 46.84.

The Great Midwest is tops in three-point shots made per game at 6.84, although the Ohio Valley has attempted the most three-pointers at 18.66 per game, just edging the East Coast's 18.63. The Mid-American Conference's three-point accuracy is at 38.90 percent, which beats out the Great Midwest's 37.51 and the Colonial's 36.84.

In free-throw percentage, if you shoot 70 percent or above, "Go West, young man." The Western Athletic Conference is the leader at 70.56 percent, followed by the West Coast Conference's 70 percent.

Record pace for women

The 292 Division I women's basketball teams are at a record-number pace for three-pointers and free throws, while also heading for all-time lows in shooting accuracy.

Through games of January 16, the women are averaging 6.79 three-point baskets per game and 28.78 free throws (both teams combined). Both marks would be all-time highs if maintained through the entire season. The record for three pointers is 6.3, established last year, and the most free throws made per game is 28.6, set in 1991-92.

This year's teams also are above record levels for three-point attempts (21.68 vs. 20.0 last year) and free-throw attempts (44.08 vs.

42.5 in 1991-92). More than one in every six field-goal attempts is a three-point shot in women's basketball (17.38 percent), compared to the men's one in four tries.

Despite those increases, points per game is at its second-lowest average ever, 137.99. Only last year's final average of 136.5 is lower. Shooting percentages may be the reason. The women are hitting just 41.06 percent of their field goals (the record low is 41.46 percent, set last year), 31.3 percent of their three-pointers (record low, 31.4 last year) and 65.3 percent of their free throws (record low, 64.7 in 1984-85).

Among the 33 Division I women's conferences, the Southeastern is the leader in points per game (78.49), field-goal percentage defense (38.81 percent), and three-pointers made and attempted (4.75 of 14.23).

Opportunities have to exist for interest rate that mirrors the overall enrollment of the student body (or to be progressing toward that goal).

Potential obstruction

Because those who seek aggressive Title IX enforcement believe interests tests have the potential to permit the status quo, they have tended to regard them as an obstruction to equity.

"I realize that there are very legitimate reservations about the possibility of creating a method to measure 'interest,'" Nock said. "I share those concerns; we are not interested in creating yet another survey that will justify the status quo."

Focus-group topics

In December, the Research Committee assembled 20 individuals to serve on two focus groups discussing interest in athletics. Nock said those involved discussed five topics:

- The role of athletics in higher education and where college athletics is headed.

- The meaning of the term "interest" and the various issues involved in that meaning.

- Whether a study of student interests would be of any value.

- If so, what type of method should be used.

- What such a study should investigate.

In addition, the sessions explored causal factors, such as how boys are exposed to sports at early ages while girls generally are not.

In fact, in one of the focus groups, an athletics director suggested that part of the problem is that young boys are overexposed to sport. She suggested that girls are presented with a number of nonacademic pursuits other than sports, but boys are given few options.

The report on interest was submitted to the NCAA Committee on Women's Athletics at its January meeting. The NCAA Council will hear a report on the topic at its April meeting and decide at that time whether it wants to continue to pursue the matter.

Planning

Committee attempts to stay ahead of events to help Association anticipate future issues intercollegiate athletics. Planning for challenges facing such a broad organization is no easy task.

'Crystal ball'

"We look in our crystal ball and see what the future holds," said William J. Flynn, retired Boston College athletics director and another former NCAA president. "We try to make plans to meet what will be coming in the future. We are also looking in the past and seeing the best road to take. We review what has happened in the past in planning for the future."

Sweet explained, "The committee operates in two ways: to respond to items directed to the committee, and to try to anticipate major issues and provide guidance to various committees."

Daniel G. Gibbens, professor of law and faculty athletics representative at the University of Oklahoma and a former NCAA Council member, said, "In doing NCAA committee work, this is the only committee I have been on that has the opportunity to step back and take an overview of the main purposes and goals of the NCAA and really try to pick out issues and problems that need attention. With the other committees' focuses, some issues never get attention."

"On other committees, there are particular tasks you are supposed to do—whether it's working on graduation-rates disclosure or meeting requests for initial-eligibility waivers. You are supposed to get tasks done in a timely fashion."

"This group is not focused on a particular job," Whalen said. "We can talk about a number of things. The committee is ahead of its time in that there's no restriction on what you can talk about and get carried forth to the Council."

"I don't think people have the foggiest notion the committee exists.... The ad hoc committees such as cost containment and gender equity are more well known. We're not as high on the radar screens."

■ James J. Whalen
NCAA Committee on Review and Planning

Sweet agreed. "Reviewing the work of the committee, it is interesting to note how many items have been realized by the Association," she said.

Accomplishments

For example, the committee discussed or recommended the following:

■ Increased, formalized involvement of chief executive officers in the NCAA (1970 and 1972). Occurred in 1984.

■ Mandatory institutional self-study (1978 and 1979). Realized in 1985.

■ Need for some type of forum or organization for faculty representatives (1980 and 1983). Organization formed in 1985.

■ Institutional commitment to the same division for all sports (1982 and 1983). Issues treated partially in 1991.

■ Appointment of a task force to address issues of minority opportunities in athletics (1987). This resulted in a Council subcommittee, then a special committee and now a standing committee working in this area.

Issues remain

Although the committee's efforts have led to the resolution of many issues, some issues have yet to be resolved to the committee members' satisfaction.

Despite the creation of a committee to deal with minority opportunities in athletics, Flynn questioned the impact initial-eligibility requirements have on minorities.

"With what the NCAA has done, academics have gone up," he said. "But in many ways, I agree with the black forum. Some kids did very well when they got into college even though they didn't have the academic background (to meet Proposition 48 requirements).

"Boston College didn't vote for Prop 48 because we felt people would be discriminated against."

Equity is slow process

While few would deny that women face discrimination, it took a long time for athletics administrators to work actively on the problem.

"The idea of being fair to women was brought up early in planning sessions," Whalen said. "Title IX taking 20 years is frustrating. Most college and university presidents knew from their armchairs that women were not being treated fairly, but there wasn't a groundswell of support."

"It takes time for people to rally around the flag and get things done. When the NCAA did a study and had experimental data, things moved."

Even though some movement has occurred at member institutions, Sweet said there is still room for improvement.

"More needs to be done to ensure equity in men's and women's athletics," she said. "That probably requires greater flexibility in how we approach the way we run programs. We need to ensure that resources are used to the optimum and with fairness to all participants."

"We've made moderate progress. In this economic climate, it's more challenging than it might have been if we had done the right thing 20 years ago when Title IX was instituted. I'm hopeful people will do the right thing."

Ahead of the times

Sweet offered an explanation for the delays in other people doing what the committee considers to be the right things.

"Timing is very important," she said. "Sometimes our ideas may be too far ahead and our suggestions may require dramatic change. It's a matter of easing into it."

Gibbens said, "Looking down the road is very difficult for busy people. They know it's important, but first things first. Taking the long perspective is difficult to get people to do because most of us are action-oriented."

"For example, the Division I-A football championship issue captures a lot of attention and has excitement to it. With the Special Committee to Review Financial Conditions in Intercollegiate Athletics, (Big Ten Conference commissioner and committee chair James E.) Delany got a lot done. That kind of thing captures people's attention."

The Committee on Review and Planning does not capture the attention of as many people.

"When people are busy about their own assigned tasks, they tend not to know much about what else is going on," Gibbens said. "There may not be a real good understanding of what other committees do. It's hard for people who are busy to know much about what other busy people do."

Not on 'radar screens'

Whalen agreed. "I don't think most people have the foggiest notion the committee exists. The more sophisticated people know. We're more well-known to the Executive Committee and the Council," he said.

"The ad hoc committees such as cost containment and gender equity are more well-known. We're not as high on the radar screens."

"That may be good in that no one's bothering you," Whalen joked, thinking of his time as cochair of the NCAA Gender-Equity Task Force. "With gender equity, everyone bothers you."

Even though the committee may not always get the attention its work deserves, members enjoy their roles in the Association.

"Athletics has been my life, and I want intercollegiate athletics to be on the right path," said Flynn. "I want to do things that are good for the student-athlete and the organization."

To make the organization better, Whalen said everyone should pitch in.

"People should spend some of their time making things happen," he said. "The NCAA is an important organization. It is the 900 colleges or universities who sign up to be in the organization. The organization is only as good as the people who try to make it work effectively."

■ Legislative assistance

1994 Column No. 4

1994 NCAA Convention Proposal No. 6 One-time transfer exception

Divisions I and II member institutions should note that with the adoption of Proposal No. 6 (effective immediately), it is permissible for a student-athlete who previously has used the discontinued/nonsponsored sport exception to the transfer residence requirement to subsequently use the one-time transfer exception to the transfer residence requirement, provided all other conditions of the one-time transfer exception are met. It also should be noted that the NCAA Council, during its January 7-8, 1994, meeting, determined that such legislation may be applied retroactively to any student-athlete who may benefit from the legislation. Thus, a student-athlete who currently is fulfilling a residence requirement may become eligible immediately to participate in intercollegiate competition at the certifying institution if he or she satisfies the provisions of the legislation.

1994 Convention Proposal No. 27 Restricted-earnings coach

Division I institutions should note that with the adoption of Proposal No. 27 as amended by Proposal No. 27-1 (effective immediately), a restricted-earnings coach in the sport of Division I basketball shall not have been employed previously as a head or assistant basketball coach in Division I. Further, such an individual must complete his or her period of employment as a restricted-earnings coach within five calendar years of the date of initial employment in such a position. It also should be noted that the Council, during its January 7-8 meeting, determined that such a requirement is applicable beginning with the 1993-94 academic year. Thus, an institution would not be required to immediately cease the employment of a restricted-earnings coach currently employed at a Division I institution in the sport of basketball who previously served as an assistant or head basketball coach. Also, the 1993-94 academic year would be considered the first year of the five calendar years, even if the coach was employed as a restricted-earnings coach at that institution during the 1992-93 academic year.

1994 Convention Proposal No. 72 Academic degree requirements—two-year college transfers

Divisions I and II member institutions should note that with the adoption of Proposal No. 72 (effectively immediately), at least 25 percent of the credit hours used to fulfill the academic degree requirements of a two-year college transfer student must be earned at the two-year college that awards the degree. Please note that this requirement will apply both to "2-4" and "4-2-4" transfer students.

1994 Convention Proposal No. 75 One-time transfer exception—Division II

Division II institutions should note that with the adoption of Proposal No. 75 (effective August 1, 1994), a Division II student-athlete who is using the one-time transfer exception is prohibited from competing at two four-year institutions during the same academic year in the sport of basketball. Thus, a student-athlete who transfers to a Division II institution at midyear after having competed in basketball at another four-year institution during the fall semester would be required to fulfill one full academic year in residence at the certifying institution prior to being eligible for competition, unless the student-athlete meets another transfer exception set forth in Bylaw 14.6.5.3.

1994 Convention Proposal No. 137 Recruiting—Division II tryouts

Division II institutions should note that with the adoption of Proposal No. 137 (effective immediately), it is permissible for a prospective student-athlete participating in a Division II tryout to participate against a member institution's team at any time during the academic year. Please note that required participation by student-athletes in permissible tryouts of prospective student-athletes is considered a countable athletically related activity per Bylaw 17.02.1.1-(c) and must be counted in the weekly or daily time limitations during the playing season. Further, if participation by student-athletes in tryouts of prospective student-athletes occurs outside the institution's declared playing season, it must be counted as part of the eight hours of athletically related activities per week permitted outside of the playing season. Please note that this legislation is not intended to permit an institution's team to engage in out-of-season practice.

1994 Convention Proposal No. 171 Camps and clinics—senior prospect prohibition

Member institutions should note that with the adoption of Proposal No. 171 (effective immediately), senior prospects are permitted to enroll or participate in a member institution's sports camp or clinic. It should be noted, however, that, inasmuch as the provisions of Bylaw 13.13.1.5.1 remain applicable, a Division I institution shall not employ or provide free or reduced admission to a high-school, preparatory school or two-year college athletics award winner. In addition, Divisions II and III institutions should note that, inasmuch as Bylaw 13.13.1.5.2 remains applicable, it is not permissible for a Division II or III institution, or members of its staff or a representative of its athletics interests, to employ or provide free or reduced admission to any individual who has started classes for the ninth grade.

Council actions regarding NCAA Interpretations Committee decisions

During its 1994 pre-Convention meeting, the Council reviewed and approved Interpretations Committee minutes from Conference Nos. 14 through 18 with the exception of the following revisions:

1. In regard to Minute No. 3 of Conference No. 15 (October 21, 1993), the Council suspended the interpretation and referred it to the NCAA Recruiting Committee to review the entire issue of noninstitutional publications making donations to an NCAA institution's athletics department.

2. In regard to Minute No. 7 of Conference No. 16 (November 17, 1993), the Council reversed the interpretation to indicate that for purposes of Bylaw 20.9.7.2.4 (geographical waiver—Division I-AA), in determining whether an institution offers fewer than 20 percent of the maximum allowable number of scholarships, an institution shall calculate the percentage using only athletically related aid. This method of calculation applies only when determining whether an institution has exceeded the 20-percent requirement when applying the geographical waiver.

This material was provided by the legislative services staff as an aid to member institutions. If an institution has a question or comment regarding this column, such correspondence should be directed to Nancy L. Mitchell, assistant executive director for legislative services, at the NCAA national office. This information is available on the Collegiate Sports Network.

Clearinghouse

New NCAA service will have its growing pains, but it has a clear, worthwhile purpose but another recruiting service" and also said, "Figure 300,000 kids are going to be recruited. Multiply that by $18. That's $5.4 million. Maybe 3,000 of those kids will get a scholarship. I understand the $18 fee can be waived, but that is not easy to do because of the paperwork and time. A very small percentage of kids are going to receive any benefit from this."

Of course the clearinghouse is no more a "recruiting service" than it is a "scholarship program." But the second part of the remark is much more problematic since it suggests the NCAA is collecting an enormous amount of money and delivering few benefits to the athletes. To the contrary, the NCAA is funding the program at an annual expense of about $500,000 and is paying the fee for students who receive a waiver.

Just so there can be no misunderstanding about this, the initial-eligibility clearinghouse provides no direct recruiting benefit for a prospective student-athlete. This is merely a much more efficient and fair way to determine eligibility. In the future, each institution recruiting a prospective student-athlete will be receiving the same initial-eligibility evaluation.

The $18 fee represents the cost of administering the program. There is no profit involved for the NCAA nor for American College Testing, which is the umbrella organization that is housing the clearinghouse and which, like the NCAA, is a nonprofit organization. Further, the 300,000 figure is a gross exaggeration, and therefore so is the figure of $5.4 million. We expect about 100,000 students to use the service this year.

Another concern in the story is that high-school coaches "don't know about this, or what the details are." I sympathize with them on this point, because I know it must be frustrating to be confronted with yet another program, the purpose of which may not be readily understandable.

It should be noted, however, that in April 1993, 26,500 high-school principals (each principal in the United States and each at United States-based foreign high school) were mailed information describing the clearinghouse in detail. Included in that mailing were 10 brochures (written for high-school students), two brochures for high-school counselors, two color posters about the clearinghouse, a fact sheet about new academic standards that are scheduled to go into effect in 1995 and a cover memorandum from then-Executive Director Richard D. Schultz. The memo requested each principal's assistance in distributing the information to the appropriate individuals at their respective schools.

However, the responsibility of advising prospects about the clearinghouse does not rest solely with the high-school coach and counselors. College recruiters also have an obvious interest and obligation to make certain that prospects understand the program.

I want to emphasize my belief that the NCAA Initial-Eligibility Clearinghouse is an ambitious project with a clear and worthwhile purpose. I am confident that with additional understanding, patience and cooperation, the clearinghouse will serve NCAA member institutions, high schools and prospective student-athletes well.

B. J. Skelton is director of athletics at the University of Texas at Arlington and is chair of the NCAA Special Committee to Implement the Initial-Eligibility Clearinghouse.

NACDA selects Copeland as third vice-president

In an interim action prompted by Cedric W. Dempsey's selection as NCAA executive director, officers of the National Association of Collegiate Directors of Athletics (NACDA) have selected University of Virginia athletics director W. James Copeland Jr. as that organization's third vice-president.

The position was opened when Dempsey, former athletics director at the University of Arizona, gave up his post as NACDA's first vice-president. Eugene D. Smith of Iowa State University has moved into the first vice-president's position and Warner Alford of the University of Mississippi has replaced Smith as second vice-president.

Copeland has been athletics director at Virginia since 1987. Before then, he served as director at the College of William and Mary and the University of Utah.
