Presidents show an interest in biennial voting Conventions

A broad range of topics — including the possibility of biennial legislative Conventions, student-athlete welfare, a possible Division I-A football playoff, initial-eligibility standards, minority opportunities and membership structure — were discussed in the March 31-April 1 meeting of the NCAA Presidents Commission.

The full Commission, meeting in Charlotte, North Carolina, conducted a straw vote that indicated an interest in further pursuing the concept of an informational or educational Convention in alternate years. The 1994 Convention in January, with the passage of Proposal No. 20, ordered an examination of the possibility of biennial legislative meetings.

The Commission expressed concern that such an approach might be perceived as an attempt to prevent the membership from altering previously approved legislation. However, it stressed that any examination of this issue was being done in good faith and noted that provisions could be built into the process for emergency legislation in nonlegislative years.

In other discussions:

■ A report from the NCAA Special Committee to Review Student-Athlete Welfare, Access and Equity was received by the Commission and forwarded to the Council for consideration at its April 18-20 meeting. The Commission emphasized the potential overlap between student-athlete welfare, the 1996

Division I partial qualifiers up

The percentage of partial qualifiers enrolling in the 1993-94 academic year increased slightly in Division I from the previous year, according to a survey conducted by the NCAA Research Committee.

The rate of partial qualifiers enrolled increased from 3.5 percent in 1992-93 to 4.1 percent this year.

Partial qualifiers in Division I are prospective student-athletes who did not meet the requirements of NCAA Bylaw 14.3.1 (core-curriculum requirement and/or test-score requirement) but earned an overall grade-point average of 2.000 or better (4.000 scale) in high school.

In Division II, partial qualifiers failed to meet either the core-curriculum or test-score requirement, but not both.

The percentage of partial qualifiers in Division II declined from the 9.9 percent figure of 1992-93 to 8.7 percent. However, the percentage of partial qualifiers in Division II has varied greatly in previous years, so the small change in that division represents some stability.

Ursula R. Walsh, NCAA director of research, said the committee monitors the partial-qualifier data to be aware of any changes in trends (and what might be causing them) and to note figures that suggest a possible problem.

Division I

A total of 216 of the 298 Division I institutions responded, and they reported 497 partial qualifiers in fall 1993.

Football again accounted for the largest reported number of partial qualifiers (190), while men's basketball had 32. Those two sports represented 44.7 percent of the partial qualifiers in Division I; men's and women's track and field accounted for another 25.2 percent.

Group drafts new version of III statement of philosophy

An NCAA task force created to study the Division III philosophy statement has drafted a revised statement and submitted it to the Division III subcommittee of the NCAA Presidents Commission for review.

The NCAA Task Force to Review the Division III Philosophy Statement met for the first time March 28 in Chicago.

The nine-member task force was created earlier this year to review the Division III philosophy statement before decisions are made regarding the NCAA membership structure as it relates to Division III. The deadline for submitting restructuring proposals is August 31.

The task force suggested that the revised philosophy statement include:

■ A reference about Division III not awarding athletically related financial aid to any student-athlete.

■ A reference, similar to that included in the Division II philosophy statement, encouraging sportsmanship and the development of positive societal attitudes.

■ A reference to placing primary emphasis on regional, in-season competition and conference championships. The current philosophy statement gives primary emphasis to in-season competition but states that exceptional teams and individuals may be encouraged through national postseason championships.

After review by the Commission's Division III subcommittee, the draft statement will be sent to the Division III Steering Committee for discussion. It is expected to be finalized for discussion at the Division III business session at the 1995 NCAA Convention.

Daniel Bridges, director of athletics at California Institute of Technology, is chair of the task force.

Division I-A football

Report being prepared; committee to be announced

Members of the Special Committee to Study a Division I-A Football Championship are to be announced soon.

That committee will recommend for or against a Division I-A football playoff. Its first meeting is scheduled for May 5-6.

Derrick Brooks, Florida State University, and Rob Zatechka, University of Nebraska, Lincoln, tentatively have been announced as student-athlete members of the committee. They were among 12 student-athletes who advised the research group studying the issue March 20.

The report of the research group is being prepared and will be ready soon for submission to the special committee.

Besides speaking with the student-athletes, the research group met with representatives from the three major networks, plus Fox, Turner Broadcasting and ESPN, and later met with Division I-A coaches and representatives from several organizations whose membership would be affected by a playoff.

For more detail, see the March 23, March 2 and February 23 issues of The NCAA News.

Revenues

Basketball fund checks will be mailed April 22

Checks will be mailed April 22 to Division I institutions for the basketball fund of the NCAA revenue-distribution plan.

The basketball fund is the first of six funds that will be paid under the terms of the revenue-distribution plan over the next five months. The dates on which checks from each of the funds will be mailed are:

Certification

More I-A administrators needed to serve as reviewers

The NCAA Committee on Athletics Certification continues to ask Division I-A athletics administrators — especially those representing large programs — to volunteer to serve as peer reviewers.

The committee's next meeting is May 11, and it would like to have as many volunteers as possible before then.

The lack of athletics administrators has caused the committee some difficulty in forming peer-review teams that are good matches for the institutions undergoing review.

To apply to be a peer reviewer, an individual must submit a candidate form to the committee. To be considered for placement in the pool, an individual must be from a Division I institution or conference (or have retired recently). Among the guidelines for selection is five years' campus experience, including three in Division I.

Candidate forms, along with other requirements and guidelines for peer reviewers, can be obtained by contacting David A. Knopp, director of compliance services, at the national office.

For more detail, see the March 16 and March 2 issues of The NCAA News.

Staff contact: John H. Leavens.

Next meeting: May 11 in San Francisco.

Regional seminars

Regional seminars planned for three sites in May, June

The NCAA membership services group will conduct three regional seminars in late May and early June in an effort to provide a continuing-education forum for Divisions I and II institutional and athletics administrators.

The resource center, a popular feature introduced at the 1993 regional seminars, will be open again throughout the seminars.

The seminars will provide information about NCAA legislation and interpretations and will address the roles of various campus constituents in establishing and maintaining institutional control of intercollegiate athletics programs.

The 1994 seminars will be conducted May 11-13 in San Francisco; May 25-27 in Arlington, Virginia, and June 1-3 in New Orleans.

Staff contacts: John H. Leavens, Nancy L. Mitchell, Stephen R. Morgan.

Applications being accepted for head of new office group

Applications are being accepted for the position of group executive director for the new education services group.

Advertisements for the position appeared in the March 23 and March 30 issues of The NCAA News.

The five operating areas contained in the education services group will be education resources, professional development, research, sports sciences and youth programs.

The new group will be formed using existing positions and will not compromise the staff's "no-growth" policy.

Sporting goods sales

Sports-apparel and sports-equipment sales have increased since 1991, but sales for athletics footwear have decreased slightly in the same period, according to the 1994 state of the industry report from the Sporting Goods Manufacturers Association.

With a continuing demand for exercise equipment, sales for sports equipment reached an all-time high in 1993 at an estimated $12.45 billion, up from $11.04 billion in 1991. Sports-apparel sales rose from $12.86 billion in 1991 to an estimated $14.35 billion in 1993, while sales of athletics footwear dropped from $7.63 billion to an estimated $7.52 billion in 1993.

Briefly in the News

Pair escaped quake rubble

Only weeks after escaping uninjured from an earthquake-shattered apartment complex in which 16 neighbors died, two California State University, Northridge, softball players are having the best seasons of their collegiate careers.

Pitcher Amy Windmiller and infielder Shannon Jones—both seniors—were at home in their first-floor apartment in the Northridge Meadows when a magnitude 6.6 earthquake January 17 brought the three-story building crashing down. Windmiller, who was awake and in the living room when the temblor struck at 4:31 a.m., recovered from the shock of her first earthquake experience in time to escape through the front door. Jones, who was asleep, escaped through a window after an inner wall collapsed against her bedroom door.

The pair—who were teammates in high school—found each other in a patio area, but were trapped there for three hours before climbing through rubble to safety.

The players found refuge with 10 other displaced team members at the home of teammate Jen Fleming's parents in Reseda, and soon after rented a house with four teammates. But even as they turned their attention to the beginning of softball season February 13, there were reminders of that tragic, frightening morning.

Jones told sportswriter Mike Glaze of Cal State Northridge's student newspaper, the Daily Sundial, that she twice saw funeral processions pass by her new home. "We know it was for people from Northridge Meadows," she said. "It could have been us."

But Jones also found humor in the calamity. "I guess our lease was up," she quipped.

As of March 28, Jones was the nationally ranked Matadors' leading hitter, batting .456 with four home runs and 19 runs batted in.

Windmiller was the team's leading pitcher with a 12-1 record (including five no-hit

Female role models

Indiana State University celebrated National Girls and Women in Sports Day in February by having some of its top female student-athletes discuss sports and academics at the local YWCA in Terre Haute, Indiana. Associate athletics director Andi Myers acted as moderator, and Indiana State student-athletes discussed their major fields of academic study and plans for their careers before fielding questions regarding both academics and athletics. Those student-athletes (pictured above with local children) who participated in the event included Tracy Swystun of the volleyball team, Hazel Olden of the women's basketball team, six-time NCAA track and field champion Holli Hyche, 1993 all-American discus thrower Julie Koebeke and Amy Vaira of the softball team.

ters) and an 0.15 earned-run average.

A barrier-breaker

When former University of Arizona basketball coach Fred Snowden died recently, national reports—including one that appeared in The NCAA News—said he was the first black coach to head an NCAA Division I program.

Northern Illinois University sports information director Mike Korcek correctly notes that while Snowden was a pioneer, the first black coach at a Division I or "university division" institution appears to have been Will Robinson of Illinois State University.

Robinson began his five-year tenure at Illinois State in the 1971 season, the same year the Redbirds were reclassified in the NCAA university division. He compiled a 78-51 career record at Illinois State and coached several top players, including Doug Collins.

"I always considered Will to be a mentor of mine," University of Southern California coach George Raveling said when the Will Robinson Endowed Scholarship was created at Illinois State. "I can't think of a coach I have been associated with who has been a more positive influence on me."

Employment program to focus on women, ethnic minorities

An employment opportunity program that is designed to aid in the recruitment, retention and promotion of women and ethnic minorities has been approved for the NCAA national office.

"The national office is committed to providing increased employment opportunities to women and ethnic minorities, groups that have been historically underrepresented in athletics administration,"

NCAA Executive Director Cedric W. Dempsey said. "In meeting this responsibility, we can make a positive, long-lasting contribution to intercollegiate athletics."

Michael S. McNeely, NCAA director of operations, said an important part of the process is the central coordination of the hiring process through the national office's human resources staff. Among other duties, the human resources staff will be responsible for advertising any vacancies through a variety of publications and other mediums.

For example, the new position of group executive director for education services is being advertised in The NCAA News, The Chronicle of Higher Education, Black Issues in Higher Education and The Hispanic Outlook in Higher Edu-

Diversity-training pilot workshop set

After months of planning, the NCAA Minority Opportunities and Interests Committee is prepared to conduct a pilot version of the diversity-training program.

The workshop will be April 11-12 in Kansas City, Missouri. About 50 people are expected to participate.

The goals for the pilot workshop are:

- To enhance the participants' understanding, sensitivity and appreciation for diversity;

- To foster an enthusiasm and become a catalyst for participants to promote diversity at their institution or office;

- To provide an implementation guide for participants about how to get started, what resources are needed, etc.;

- To review and refine the workshop, and

- To develop national and regional workshops.

The regional and national workshops will be designed to sensitize individuals at all levels of athletics participation to the importance of diversity. Participants will include chief executive officers, athletics directors and head coaches, among others.

The NCAA Executive Committee approved funding in May 1993 for

Looking back

5 years ago: The American Institutes for Research releases data from a study for the NCAA Presidents Commission that reports black student-athletes at Division I institutions are more likely to play football and basketball, are less well-prepared for college studies, and are from homes with lower socioeconomic status than their non-black teammates. The data also reveal a number of similarities between black student-athletes and their nonblack counterparts and to other black students. (The NCAA News, April 5, 1989)

10 years ago: The NCAA Council, meeting April 16-18 in Kansas City, Missouri, endorses a special committee's recommendation to create an NCAA-administered drug-testing program. The program would include testing for stimulants at championships and random testing in specified sports for anabolic steroids throughout the academic year. (The NCAA News, April 25, 1984)

30 years ago: Acting upon the request of women college sports leaders, the NCAA Executive Committee amended executive regulations to limit participation in NCAA championships to undergraduate male students. Also, the NCAA Council appointed a Special Committee on Women's Competition to serve as a liaison to organizations with an interest in women's sports. ("NCAA: The Voice of College Sports")

Fact file

The University of Arkansas, Fayetteville, was only the eighth team from west of the Mississippi River to appear in the final game of the Division I Men's Basketball Championship since 1975, when the University of California, Los Angeles, won its last championship. The University of Kansas won the 1988 title and the University of Nevada, Las Vegas, won in 1990. Runners-up from the West were UCLA (1980, later vacated), the University of Houston (1983 and 1984), the University of Oklahoma (1988) and Kansas (1991).

Presidents Commission's Perlman dies March 31

Daniel H. Perlman, president of Webster University since 1990 and a member of the NCAA Presidents Commission since 1993, died March 31.

Perlman, 59, had been ill with cancer for some time.

Perlman

During Perlman's tenure, Webster underwent a period of rapid campus expansion. He oversaw the acquisition of land that increased the size of the campus by a third, the building of a new university center, and renovations and additions to several other buildings.

Before coming to Webster, Perlman was dean and vice-president for administration at Roosevelt University from 1972 to 1980. From 1980 to 1989, he was president of Suffolk University.

In July 1989, he was president-in-residence for the Institute for Educational Management at Harvard University, and in 1989-90, he was a visiting scholar at the Harvard Graduate School of Education and a visiting fellow at the New England Resource Center for Higher Education at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

Among the survivors are his wife, Suzanne; a daughter, Julia Perlman, and a son, David.

Memorial contributions may be made to the Daniel H. Perlman Scholarship Fund, Webster University, 470 E. Lockwood Avenue, St. Louis, Missouri 63119.

Sports education missing from reform

By John Kilbourne
OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY

Problems have accompanied intercollegiate athletics since its beginnings in the mid-19th century.

Efforts to reform college sport also have been persistent from the outset, with major movements in intercollegiate athletics occurring regularly. While differences have existed among the various reform agendas, commonalities have been present. All of them have called for more faculty control and involvement in the governance of collegiate athletics; they have demanded a greater role from university presidents in promoting a reform climate, and, most importantly, they have insisted that athletes on college campuses be students first.

Kilbourne

Despite the noble efforts, the attempts to reform intercollegiate athletics have hardly succeeded in eradicating the problems. If anything, the difficulties appear to have worsened. The inability of honest people for more than 100 years to emerge with a solution makes it tempting for would-be reformers to throw up their hands and proclaim that the troubles with intercollegiate sport are unsolvable.

As an educator and someone who is directly involved with college and professional sport, I am compelled to reject the position that the problems in intercollegiate athletics are unsolvable. Rather, I maintain that the approaches offered have been flawed, particularly with respect to one critical oversight. All of the reform movements have used a top-down approach in which the needs of institutions have been deemed more important than the educational needs of the student-athletes.

Virtually none of the reform agendas have addressed the substantial and significant questions about what it means to be a student-athlete. What reformers have overlooked and what they never have really comprehended is that no change in college sport can take place that does not come to terms with the world of sport as experienced by performing student-athletes.

This perceived oversight prompted me to

Drug testing an essential intrusion

The California Supreme Court's laudable decision to uphold the legality of the NCAA's drug-testing program represents a solidifying cornerstone for this ultra-important service to intercollegiate athletics.

It is time that opponents to the NCAA's drug-testing mandate — be they coaches, administrators, athletes or constituents of the judicial system — realize that this policy is paramount for fair and ethical competition. More important is our commitment to the athletes (and their parents) to provide safeguards regarding present and future health concerns.

Drug abuse in our culture is recognized as a major issue by those who study youth. A recent report by C.E. Yesalis (1993) indicates that the abuse of the so-called performance-enhancing drugs (such as anabolic steroids and growth hormones) among the general population may, in fact, be on the rise.

Everyone involved in intercollegiate athletics must realize that this problem is not just going to magically disappear. It also is sad, but true, that educational efforts alone never will be enough since there always will be individuals who defy common sense.

Drug testing — while not a fail-safe assurance of 100 percent compliance — provides the best deterrent currently at our disposal.

Too many young people continue to discount the health risks propagated by illicit drug use and view their bodies as "machines" to be manipulated for what they perceive to be winning results. The "gym guru" with the 24-inch arms and big squat/bench press numbers many times overrides our well-intended educational efforts. Drug testing not only complements our educational labors, it reinforces them with sharp teeth.

Participation in intercollegiate athletics is, in my opinion, a privilege, not a right. And while the "right of privacy" argument certainly addresses a valid concern, the factors of credibility, ethics, fair competition and long-term health of athletes must supersede any picayune claims of "humiliation."

□ Opinions

College sports rediscovers its priorities

Ken Kraft, senior associate athletics director
Northwestern University
Chicago Tribune

"Forty years ago I was a freshman at Northwestern, and I also know some of the history of Northwestern athletics. Right now I'm probably as optimistic as I've ever been in my life about Northwestern athletics.

"I saw us go into a circumstance that occurred in the 1970s and 1980s where athletics became an extended arm or maybe beyond the arm of many institutions, where it became win just to win. Winning is extremely important, but I feel very strongly intercollegiate athletics got off base by trying to create winning teams and allowing essentially too many non-collegians to be a part of college sports.

"At this stage, in my opinion, we're coming back to college sports for college kids on college campuses."

Bob Duncan, chair
Northwestern University committee on athletics
Chicago Tribune

"Our feeling is there always are going to be students who have the academic ability to come here and do well and have the athletic ability to compete. Our general feeling is that, given the reforms in the NCAA, everything is moving in our direction. The encouraging thing is that the college presidents have really taken control of athletics and are generally interested in reform, so I think these reforms will continue.

"You have to work very hard at recruiting and really sell the opportunity that this place is. We play in the Big Ten, the premier league in the country, and you get a first-rate education so that when you're through you have a degree and are prepared to go out in life. If you're good enough to play pro sports, that's terrific. For the rest of them, sports ends and they have a good academic background and good connections and they can go on to a full and productive life."

Overemphasis of sports

Bob Ryan, columnist
The Boston Globe

"It might be wise to examine this monster we've created if it weren't so frightening to do so.

"The NCAA Division I men's basketball tournament is both the finest and worst moment in college athletics. Full of pageantry and great performances and smiling faces and youthful enthusiasm (even among octogenarian alums), it represents America at its playful best. 'March Madness,' viewed in this context, is a celebration of a sport and an affirmation that we Americans still know how to throw a good party for ourselves.

"If only people would view it in that context, things would be fine. But we in this country can no longer do that. We are forgetting how to glorify competition for its own sake. Merely having a 'good game' isn't enough. Let's cut the crap. Are you coming home with a W or an L?

"Teams and coaches are now being defined by what they do in the NCAA tournament. Even Bob Knight, probably the last person I'd have expected to endorse this premise, believes schools have a right to demand results, as long as the competition in question is being conducted on a level playing field. Whether or not a school has a good season now depends on how far it goes in the NCAA tournament."

Coaching

Barry Switzer, coach
Dallas Cowboys
United Press International

"I've missed coaching. I've missed the competition, and I've missed the day of the game. I haven't missed recruiting, and I haven't missed the NCAA."

Sports on campus

Hugh Witemeyer, English professor
University of New Mexico
The Associated Press

"Like slavery, athletics needs to be abolished because it is based on a false principle. I don't need to remind this audience (of faculty members) that universities exist to further learning, teaching and research and not to participate in the semiprofessional sports entertainment industry."

Virginia Shipman, family-studies professor
University of New Mexico
The Associated Press

"I'm glad the university can open its doors to students who have a particular talent. I hope we don't use the problems of the past to throw away the feeling of the culture of the university, which is more than just being in a library. It's also about being with other people...and getting the rest of the student body excited and interested."

Coaching women's basketball

C. Vivian Stringer, women's basketball coach
University of Iowa
Ebony

"The black female is caught in two situations. One, she doesn't get the job opportunities in the first place and then when she does, there's going to be the natural prejudices that take place in what we consider the frontier of male dominance — athletics."

Marian Washington, women's basketball coach
University of Kansas
Ebony

"We put in the hours, we work hard, we're committed, we expect the same things of our women athletes that we expect from our male athletes. Some institutions have made the change. They've done it because they realize it's right. Other institutions are going to be forced to do it (make the change)."

Legislator urges elimination of eligibility clearinghouse

An Oklahoma state legislator has introduced a resolution that, if passed, would encourage all state legislatures to urge Congress to eliminate the NCAA Initial-Eligibility Clearinghouse.

The resolution by Rep. Gary Bastin was passed March 31 by the Rules Committee of the Oklahoma House of Representatives. Bastin said he has discussed the issue with colleagues and believes the resolution will pass.

The resolution "encourages each state and territory of the United States to pass legislation memorializing the United States Congress to pass legislation prohibiting the NCAA and other athletic associations from requiring students planning to enroll in college as freshmen and wanting to participate in Division I or Division II sports to apply through their clearinghouse and pay for such service.... Copies of this resolution (are to) be distributed to each chief administrator of public education of the states and territories of the United States, and to the chairpersons of each state's and territory's legislative education committees."

Bastin said that the clearinghouse is not necessary and that he believes that prospective student-athletes should be permitted to establish their eligibility without registering with a central agency or paying the $18 registration fee.

'Way to make money'

He also believes the clearinghouse is financially motivated.

"It looked to me like it was one way for the NCAA and the clearinghouse to make a heck of a lot of money," he said.

The clearinghouse was created by a vote of the 1993 NCAA Convention. Proponents of the program have said it will eliminate duplication of effort for high-school counselors (who no longer will have to send copies of records to several colleges) and also will provide a single version of whether a prospective student-athlete is academically eligible as determined by grade-point average, standardized test scores and core courses.

Prospects who hope to compete in Divisions I or II in 1994-95 must be registered with the clearinghouse. The $18 fee, which may be waived for those with a financial need, helps offset some of the clearinghouse's operating expense.

However, the NCAA still spends $500,000 annually in support of the clearinghouse and also picks up the fee for those who are granted waivers.

Core-course disputes

Grade-point average and test-score requirements for initial academic eligibility are fairly straightforward, but differences of opinions about core courses have caused disputes among member institutions.

Bastin dismisses that concern, saying: "I think that dispute is a small number to the total (of all the athletes who are required to sign up with the clearinghouse)."

Currently, a prospective student-athlete is required to have completed 11 core courses; 13 core courses will be required starting in August 1995 unless 1992 Convention Proposal No. 16 is altered or delayed.

Bastin said he became aware of the clearinghouse through Lee Roy Smith, a school board member for the Mid Del School District in suburban Oklahoma City. Smith is the father of Arizona State University wrestling coach Lee Roy Smith, Oklahoma State University coach John Smith and Pat Smith, who recently became the first NCAA wrestler to win four individual championships.

Bastin's proposal is a resolution and would not create any new state law regulating the Association. For that reason, it does not call into question some of the Constitutional concerns that were at issue in the recent case involving a so-called "due-process" law in Nevada.

Schools celebrate student-athlete day with special events

Colleges and universities in all 50 states are sponsoring events in conjunction with today's seventh annual observance of National STUDENT-Athlete Day (NSAD).

The observance, which focuses on the achievements of student-athletes in the classroom and community, is cosponsored nationally by the National Consortium for Academics and Sports (NCAS) and NCAA and is coordinated by Northeastern University's Center for the Study of Sport in Society.

NSAD was established to honor student-athletes and the network of parents, teachers, coaches and school systems that makes it possible for young people to strike a balance between athletics and academics. The observance originally was organized in 1988 by NCAS members, which are committed to providing opportunities for former athletes to continue their pursuit of higher education. It now widely involves NCAA institutions.

In addition to events at campuses around the country, winners of the annual Giant Steps Awards (including NCAA President Joseph

Crowley among Giant Steps winners

NCAA President Joseph N. Crowley is one of eight winners of this year's Giant Steps Awards.

The awards are presented annually to individuals and/or organizations exemplifying the ideals of and providing support for academic and athletics excellence by student-athletes. The recipients, who also include two coaches and a student-athlete at NCAA institutions, will be honored November 2 at an awards banquet in Boston.

The awards are sponsored by Northeastern University's Center for the Study of Sport in Society, in cooperation with the National Consortium for Academics and Sports and the NCAA.

Joining Crowley, president of the University of Nevada, as award recipients are Tom Osborne, head football coach at the University of Nebraska, Lincoln; C. Vivian Stringer, head women's basketball coach at the University of Iowa, and Michele Leary, a swimmer at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

Crowley is being honored in the category of athletics administration, Osborne as a male coach, Stringer as a female coach and Leary as a courageous female student-athlete.

Leary suffered a heart attack during the fall semester of her senior year, then returned to the pool that winter to set New England freestyle records.

Other recipients of the awards are former heavyweight boxing champion Riddick Bowe in the category of civic leader; Rachel Robinson, president of the Jackie Robinson Foundation, civic leader; Willie Stewart, head football coach at Anacostia High School in Washington, D.C., male coach, and Felipe Lopez, a senior basketball player at Rice High School in Harlem, New York, courageous male student-athlete.

Lopez, who has announced plans to play at St. John's University (New York), immigrated from Puerto Rico during junior high school and has become a role model for Hispanic youth in New York City.

strated excellence in community service.

The certificates are signed by NCAA Executive Director Cedric W. Dempsey and by Richard Lapchick, NCAS president and director of the Northeastern center.

Dempsey said "the NCAA has been very pleased to again support National STUDENT-Athlete Day with the consortium. The continued efforts of the members of the national consortium, complemented by the strength of the NCAA, have truly increased the impact of NSAD nationwide."

Added Lapchick, "The student-athletes who we recognize in National STUDENT-Athlete Day give our country hope at a time when the lives of so many of our youth are mired in despair. These student-athletes have direction and purpose, and see there is reason to believe in themselves. America should be very proud of them."

Two major NSAD-related events were scheduled in conjunction with the NCAA Final Four and Women's Final Four.

Sports education

No change in athletics can occur without a change of perspective

ask the following questions. Has higher education created a sports culture that knows little or nothing about the role of sport and athletes in our society? Have colleges and universities overlooked their responsibility to teach those in sport about sport? Could this oversight be why athletics administrators, faculty and coaches have been unable to find meaningful and lasting agendas for the reform of intercollegiate sport?

To substantiate my hypothesis, I decided to survey and document the availability of courses and opportunities in sport studies at NCAA Division I-A institutions. Many of the abuses in college sport occur at that level. I intended to verify that, aside from their success in teaching the "X's and O's," colleges and universities have failed to teach those involved in sport about sports history, the socio/cultural significance of sport and other contemporary issues that affect student-athletes.

It was obvious from my study that the institutions responding (58 percent of Division I-A) are doing a poor job of educating student-athletes about the special issues that affect their lives. The data clearly demonstrated that student-athletes participating at the elite level of intercollegiate sport are not required to have even the most basic knowledge of sport.

Is it any wonder that the only image the sports establishment has of sport is that of a business enterprise?

The study also demonstrated that most institutions do not require student-athletes to learn about matters of particular concern to their lives. The percentages were extraordinarily high: race (98 percent not required), gender (98 percent), being a public figure (92 percent), study skills (76 percent), career planning (83 percent), sexual-behavior education (74 percent), eating disorders (83 percent), AIDS-prevention education (72 percent), antigambling education (89 percent) and time management (81 percent).

From the study, we can generalize that colleges and universities that compete at the elite level of intercollegiate sport have failed in their responsibility to require academic experiences related to sport for young men and women who participate in sport. The notion of empowerment through education and coming to terms with the meaning of sport for the student-athlete simply is not included in the educational experiences of student-athletes in higher education.

If those charged with the reform of intercollegiate sport are sincere about their efforts, they must reverse the direction of reform from top-down to bottom-up. As a first step, institutions need to consider the development and implementation of courses of study for athletes as students, courses that blend and incorporate who the athlete is with what he or she experiences in an academic environment.

Through the dissemination of knowledge and experiences related to sport, the courses can serve the student-athlete and act as a force to shape college sport and society for the common good.

Hammer time: New women's field event gets first shot

By Steven R. Hagwell
THE NCAA NEWS STAFF

Deb Aitken has waited nearly nine years to witness firsthand the women's hammer throw at the NCAA Division III Women's Outdoor Track and Field Championships.

That wait is about to end.

On May 26, the hammer throw will make its national-championships debut at the Division III women's meet when a minimum of 15 student-athletes compete in the event at North Central College.

"I've been trying to get (hammer) in for as long as I've been here," said Aitken, women's track and field coach at Colby College. "At times, it's been a real struggle."

In August 1993, the NCAA Executive Committee approved a recommendation from the Division III subcommittee of the NCAA Men's and Women's Track Committee to add women's hammer throw and adjust field sizes in selected events for the outdoor championships.

Those actions were made possible when the Executive Committee in May 1993 approved the allocation of 69 additional berths to the championships. The increased numbers were recommended by the Division III Championships Committee after a championships-wide study.

Allocation of the 69 berths increased from 246 to 315 the maximum number of women student-athletes at the outdoor championships. By comparison, men are allowed a maximum of 344 student-athletes. Also, the addition of competition in women's hammer increased to 20 the number of events contested at the women's championships; men contest 21 events. Women's triple jump was the last event to be added to the championships, in 1984.

Movement in Division I

Currently, Division III is the only championships to adopt women's hammer. The Division I subcommittee of the Men's and Women's Track Committee has forwarded a proposal to the Executive Committee recommending that the 20-pound weight throw and 4-kilogram hammer throw be added to the Division I indoor and outdoor championships, respectively, beginning in 1996.

The Division I recommendation includes a provision that the weight-throw and hammer-throw events be added only if additional berths are added to the women's championships. The Division I subcommittee's position is that the events should not be added at the expense of current events.

"The major reason we pushed for the hammer was that it not only ensures gender equity in terms of numbers of athletes, but it also gives more championship opportunities," said William Terriquez Jr., men's track and field coach at Carleton College and chair of the Division III outdoor track subcommittee of the Men's and Women's Track Committee. "It's been something people have pushed for a number of years. Given the gender-equity numbers, and the fact that coaches have been clamoring for it, we felt it was time to add (the event)."

Wasn't unexpected

The decision, while long in coming for some coaches, was not unexpected. Once viewed solely as a men's event, hammer — and its indoor counterpart, the weight throw — recently has gained popularity as a woman's event. Teams, mostly from the East Coast, have been contesting the events for years. In fact, women's hammer is annually contested at the New England Divisions I and III and Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference championships. It also is an open event at the USA Track and Field Championships.

"I think it's an event that is going to take off," said Marcia Thurwachter, women's track and field coach at North Central and a member of the Men's and Women's Track Committee. "In the past, a lot of teams have shied away from it because it wasn't a championship event. Now, I think it's going to catch on, especially in the Midwest."

Advocates say the recent surge in the event's popularity is because athletes realize success more rapidly than in other throwing events, such as the shot put or discus. Also, they say the hammer does not require the brute strength that other throwing events require, thus allowing more athletes to compete.

"Our top hammer thrower started throwing two years ago never having done anything in track and field; she was a soccer player," Aitken said.

Some growing pains

While the future of the event is bright, this year's event is likely to experience some growing pains. In fact, it is already happening.

The Division III subcommittee — hoping to avoid a repeat of what happened when too-lenient qualifying standards were set for the triple jump and more than 50 athletes qualified for the event — set stringent standards for the hammer throw. The result: fewer athletes than anticipated have attained the automatic (48.78 meters or 160 feet) or provisional (42.68 meters or 140 feet) qualifying mark thus far. Terriquez notes that the provisional standard has been lowered to ensure a minimum size field (15 competitors) at the championships.

Some coaches also say adding the event to this year's championships was premature. It is their contention that the event is primarily contested on the East Coast, and that the addition of the event should have been delayed to give teams time to train athletes and arrange proper facilities. They argue that adding the event to this year's championships all but guarantees that the championships field will be dominated by East Coast teams.

Answering the critics

"Coaches opposed are against it because they don't want to coach an additional event," Aitken said. "They say they're worried about safety because they don't have the facilities. My argument is if men are throwing it, you have to have some kind of facility."

As for East Coast teams dominating the event, Terriquez says that will change quickly.

"Historically, when men's hammer was added it was predominantly an East Coast event," he said. "If you look at what has transpired, you'll see that the rest of the country caught up very quickly. It might be that the East Coast might dominate (this year's event), but we suspect that won't happen very long."

"It's amazing, when you put an event in a national championship, how people see the opportunity to score points and try it."

And what about criticism that the subcommittee acted too hastily and that the sport would have been better served by delaying implementation?

"We felt adding another event was important," Terriquez said. "Coaches have told us that they wanted new events. With the additional numbers, and with the growing interest (in hammer), it just seemed like the perfect time to add the event."

Former Teddy winner Hamilton dies

Thomas Hamilton, winner of the NCAA's Theodore Roosevelt Award in 1976, died April 3 of pneumonia in Chula Vista, California.

Hamilton, 88, was executive director of the Pacific 8 Conference (now Pac-10) from 1959-71.

Hamilton was an all-American football halfback for the U.S. Naval Academy in 1926.

He graduated from Navy in 1927 and eventually reached the rank of rear admiral. In the Eisenhower and Kennedy administrations, he served on the youth-fitness programs. He also was the chair of the NCAA Youth Fitness Committee.

Hamilton was inducted into the National Football Foundation and Hall of Fame in 1956. For 16 years, he served on the executive board of the U.S. Olympic Committee.

Earlier in his career, he was football coach at Navy and was the school's athletics director in 1948-49. He later served as athletics director for 10 years at the University of Pittsburgh.

Hamilton is survived by his wife, Emmie, and two sons, Thomas Hamilton Jr. and William Hamilton.

Postgraduate scholarship must be mailed by April 26

Nominations for NCAA postgraduate scholarships in sports other than football and basketball must be mailed by April 26 to the appropriate district selection committee chair, as outlined in the instruction memorandum and nomination folder that was mailed March 18 to all NCAA member institutions.

The NCAA Postgraduate Scholarship Committee will award scholarships of $5,000 each to 68 varsity athletes (34 men and 34 women) in sports other than football and basketball in which the NCAA sponsors national-championship competition.

Of the winners, 12 men and 12 women will be selected from Division I and 12 men and 12 women from Divisions II and III, and the remaining 10 men and 10 women will be selected at large.

Following are the criteria for nominating a student-athlete:

■ The student-athlete must have an overall minimum cumulative grade-point average of 3.000 (4.000 scale) or its equivalent.

■ The student-athlete must be enrolled in the academic year in which his or her final season of eligibility under NCAA legislation occurs.

■ The student-athlete must have performed with distinction as a member of the varsity team in the sport in which he or she has been nominated. The degree of the student-athlete's athletics achievement will be weighed at least equally with the degree of academic performance.

■ The student-athlete should intend to continue academic work as a full-time graduate student within five years from the date of the award.

■ The student-athlete must have behaved, both on and off the field, in a manner that has brought credit to the student-athlete, the institution and intercollegiate athletics.

It is suggested that institutions nominate no more than two male and two female student-athletes for sports other than football and basketball. To nominate a student-athlete, the school's faculty athletics representative must coordinate the completion of five forms included in the nomination folder.

In Charlotte, North Carolina, 200 high-school student-athletes were honored at a ceremony that featured presentations on finding the balance between academics and sports by Division I men's basketball coaches Bobby Cremins of Georgia Institute of Technology; Jim Calhoun of the University of Connecticut; Jerry Pimm of the University of California, Santa Barbara, and Oliver Purnell of Old Dominion University.

The day was marked with the issuance of a proclamation signed by the mayor of Charlotte. The student-athletes also participated in a free-throw contest.

At the Women's Final Four, Virginia Commonwealth University honored more than 1,000 high-school student-athletes from the Richmond, Virginia, area at an assembly presided over by Virginia Gov. George Allen.

Other highlights were a slam-dunk contest with former University of Virginia and National Basketball Association star Ralph Sampson and a Heisman Trophy-posed contest judged by University of Michigan trophy winner Desmond Howard.

Hog wild: Late three-pointer lifts Razorbacks to first Final Four crown

As his Arkansas team and its fans—including President Clinton—celebrated a 76-72 victory over Duke in the national-championship game, coach Nolan Richardson's postgame thoughts turned to his daughter Yvonne, who died of leukemia during his second season at the school.

"As I walk out of here tonight, I'll say what I say to her every night after a ballgame: 'Baby, we got you another one.' And to me that's a great feeling because she was a great fan of college basketball," Richardson told a CBS reporter after the game.

What the Razorbacks got was the school's first NCAA Division I Men's Basketball Championship title. The final featured an Arkansas team that came up short in four previous trips to the Final Four against Duke, a two-time national champion.

Arkansas used tenacious defense and took advantage of several shifts in momentum to shut down the Blue Devils. Scotty Thurman's arching three-point shot with 51 seconds remaining in the game—and one second left on the shot clock—broke a tie at 70 and proved to be the game clincher. Arkansas hit three of six free throws in the last 28 seconds to secure the win.

"I saw the shot clock running down," Thurman said. "When I got it from Dwight (Stewart) with three seconds left, I had no choice but to put it up."

Richardson was able to relax only after he saw Thurman's shot.

"It was probably the biggest shot of his career," Richardson said. "From the timeout, we wanted to get a good shot. Of course, if any player is open, I told them to take a good shot. When that happened, I thought we were in control of the ballgame."

The game was tied four times in the first half before a three-pointer by Thurman gave Arkansas a one-point half-time lead, 34-33. Duke opened the second half with a 15-4 run to go up by 10 with 17 minutes left. Antonio Lang's layup gave Duke a 48-38 cushion and forced Richardson to call a timeout.

"Ten points with 17 minutes is not a big lead," Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said. "We used a lot of emotion during that run. That stuff happens. It was a possession-per-possession game."

The Razorbacks answered Duke's run with a 14-4 sput of their own, tying the game at 52 when Corey Beck converted one of two free throws at the 12:37 mark.

The Blue Devils trailed by five with six minutes left in the game but went ahead 63-62 on two consecutive three-pointers by Chris Collins. The game was tied at 65 and once more at 70 after Duke's Grant Hill hit a three-pointer from the top of the key with 1:29 remaining.

Arkansas got most of its offense from forward Corliss Williamson, the tournament's most outstanding player. Williamson scored 23 points and added eight rebounds. He also had three assists, two blocked shots and two steals.

Guard Corey Beck added 15 points and 10 rebounds for Arkansas. Thurman tallied 15 points and was three-of-five from three-point range.

Lang, one of five Blue Devils in double figures, had 15 points to lead Duke. Hill had 12 points and a game-high 14 rebounds.

Duke shot 44.6 percent from the field for the game and held Arkansas to just 39 percent shooting, but the Razorbacks' defensive pressure forced Duke into an uncharacteristic 23 turnovers. Hill was asked if the turnovers were a sign of fatigue.

"Turnovers are a sign of great play by Arkansas," he said. "You have to give credit to Arkansas.

They created a lot of turnovers. If I had to go out there and play another 15 minutes for a national championship, I would. You don't let yourself get tired in a situation like that."

Beck, Thurman, Hill and Lang joined Williamson on the all-tournament team.

The Razorbacks—who defeated Arizona, 91-82, to advance to the championship game—finished with a 31-3 record. Duke, which ended the season at 28-6, beat Florida, 70-65, to earn a berth in the final.

A second (.7 actually) chance: Tar Heels earn I women's title

Charlotte Smith's three-pointer with less than one second left in the game propelled North Carolina to a 60-59 victory over Louisiana Tech in the championship game of the 1994 Women's Final Four April 3 in Richmond, Virginia.

Smith's heroics capped a 20-point, 23-rebound performance in the final and secured her place as the tournament's most outstanding player. Her 23 rebounds was a championship-game record.

"I knew I had to do it," Smith said of her game-winning basket. "It was an order from the coach, and I had to keep confidence in myself. I want to commend my teammates for helping me keep my composure."

The stage was set for a thrilling finish as Louisiana Tech worked its way back from a seven-point deficit over a six-minute stretch in the second half. The Lady Techsters trailed North Carolina, 48-41, at the 11:11 mark. Pam Thomas scored six points during Louisiana Tech's 12-0 run. The Lady Techsters took a 53-48 lead on a layup by Thomas with 5:06 remaining.

The Tar Heels tied the game at 53 with 2:45 left on a layup by Smith. The game was tied again at 55 and 57 before a 12-foot baseline jumper by Thomas gave Louisiana Tech a 59-57 lead with 14 seconds left. North Carolina worked for the last shot, but Tonya Sampson missed a jumper with just under 10 seconds remaining.

Winning play

A scramble for the rebound resulted in a held ball with only seven tenths of a second left on the game clock. The possession arrow favored North Carolina, and after calling two timeouts, coach Sylvia Hatchell diagrammed the winning play.

"I tried to make it exciting for you guys," Hatchell told the media in the postgame news conference. "Can you believe that?"

The coach described the sequence of events leading to the play.

"We changed the play twice. They took the first play that we called away from us. I told Stephanie (Lawrence) if that happened to call timeout and she did. Then we changed the play in the huddle, and I told the team that we were going for the win, not the tie.

"Tonya Sampson was a decoy coming down, and the girl who was covering Charlotte had to cover Tonya, and Sylvia Crawley set the screen on the back side, and it was a tremendous pass by Stephanie Lawrence, and when it was left Charlotte's hand, I knew it was in. It was just a lucky call, I guess, but we were going for the win, not the tie," Hatchell said.

Smith, stifled by good defensive play, scored only one point on zero-

North Carolina's Stephanie Smith (left) goes to the floor to keep the ball away from Louisiana Tech's Debra Williams during the first half. for-six shooting from the field in the first half. Sampson carried the load for North Carolina in the first half, scoring 17 of her game-high 21 points in that period. The Tar Heels trailed by as many as five in the first half. Sampson's steal and layup at the buzzer sent the teams into the locker room tied at 32.

Thomas led Louisiana Tech with 15 points. Teammate Vickie Johnson added 12 points and 10 rebounds. Sylvia Crawley scored 14 points for North Carolina. All 60 of the Tar Heels' points were scored by the starting five. In the two-game tournament, the North Carolina starters accounted for all but 10 points.

The championship is the first for North Carolina women's basketball. It was the Lady Techsters' fifth appearance in the final game. Louisiana Tech has won two national championships.

Takes responsibility

"I'll take full responsibility for that shot and that loss," Louisiana Tech coach Leon Barmore said. "I had Kendra Neal on the ball (inbounds pass), and I took her off. We should definitely have had somebody on the ball. We thought they'd lob the ball in to Crawley. We should have switched out.

"I'm not ashamed at all of coming here and losing to North Carolina. I give them full credit," Barmore said. "They're the champions. I will not allow this team to leave here with their heads down."

The one-point victory margin was the smallest in Women's Final Four history. Three championship games have been decided by two points.

The Tar Heels finished with a 14-game victory streak and a 33-2 record. North Carolina advanced to the title game with an 89-74 victory over Purdue.

Louisiana Tech had its 25 game victory streak snapped and ended the year at 31-4. It gained a spot in the final with a 69-66 win over Alabama.

Although Louisiana Tech was no stranger to the Women's Final Four, the other three teams — North Carolina, Purdue and Alabama — all were first-time participants.

The Crimson Tide's Betsy Harris joined Smith, Thomas, Sampson and Johnson on the all-tournament team.

TV interest, attendance up again for women's championship

Interest in the NCAA Division I Women's Basketball Championship continued to grow in 1994 in terms of television and attendance, expanding beyond the historic 1993 event that broke all previous records.

Maintaining the television momentum from 1993 was an accomplishment, since the number of telecasts sold from the event last year more than doubled the number from 1992.

The new 64-team bracket, which resulted in 32 first-round games, contributed to a record number of first-round sales (12 over-the-air and two local cable systems). With a 48-team bracket last year, only 16 first-round games were played, six of which were televised.

Demonstrated growth

Second-round competition, however, demonstrated the consistent growth of interest in the event. Sales jumped to a record nine telecasts in this round in 1993, but they went up again in 1994 to 10.

This expansion of early-round interest in the women's tournament is especially impressive because the stations carrying the telecasts are responsible for production costs.

Regina L. McNeal, NCAA assistant director of broadcast services, said rights for a few more telecasts might have been sold except that the games in question failed to sell out 24 hours in advance, an NCAA requirement designed to protect attendance.

NCAA Productions produced the regional semifinals, and those eight games all were carried on cable on Prime Network. However, over-air rights also were sold for regional semifinals in Hartford, Connecticut, for the Lakers reign Superior with decisive 9-1 win in I ice hockey final

The fact that Lake Superior State won the NCAA Division I Men's Ice Hockey Championship is not a surprise. The fact that it won without needing overtime is a surprise.

The Lakers broke open a close game with three consecutive second-period power-play goals and cruised to a 9-1 victory over Boston U. in the title game April 2 in St. Paul, Minnesota.

The Lakers played 13 overtime games this year, including their first three games in the NCAA championship—a tournament first. But five second-period goals wrapped up the title and resulted in the most lopsided championship-game victory since 1961, when Denver beat St. Lawrence, 12-2.

"I didn't think we had the victory until there were only a few minutes left in the game," said Laker goaltender Blaine Lacher. "We haven't had many games like this, especially in the playoffs. A game like this was great on my nerves."

Lacher made 24 saves and finished with a team-record and nation-leading 1.98 goals-against average.

Lake Superior State's Rob Valicevic scored the only goal of the first period on a feed from Kurt Miller and Gerald Tallaire at 13:40. The Lakers set the tone for the game early as they outshot the Terriers, 12-2, in the opening period.

In the second period, the Lakers' Matt Alvey and Miller both scored for a 3-0 lead before Rich Brennan of Boston U. scored what would be the Terriers' only goal on a power play at 9:40.

The first of the power-play goals that closed the door on the Terriers came after the 13:50 mark, when Jon Pratt of Boston U. was called for holding. Twenty-three seconds later, Jay Ness beat Terrier goaltender Derek Herlofsky from the point with a wrist shot.

At the 17:21 mark, Brennan was whistled for cross-checking. Five seconds later, Steven Barnes connected on a slap shot that deflected off Terrier defenseman Kaj Linna.

Brennan then received a roughing penalty at 18:21, and Sean Tallaire, who was named the tournament's most outstanding player, scored on a rebound shot to give the Lakers a 6-1 lead.

In the semifinals and final, Sean Tallaire scored three goals and assisted on three others.

Said Boston U. coach Jack Parker, "We took stupid penalties. We lost our poise. That was not how we played the last two months; it was like we were in a haze."

"We were outdisciplined tonight, and that is what makes it 9-1 in a championship game. The difference in discipline and effort was remarkable."

It was the second championship in three years for the Lakers and their third title overall. Last year, Lake Superior State lost, 5-4, to Maine in the championship game.

After taking his team to three consecutive title games, Lakers coach Jeff Jackson has the best winning percentage (129-32-17, .772) of any active Division I coach.

"It was unbelievable and a tremendous team effort by the players and my assistant coaches," said Jackson. "I didn't expect us to perform as well as we did. The turning point was killing off the penalty with the score 3-1 and then scoring the goal."

Along with Sean Tallaire, other Lakers named to the all-tournament team included goaltender Lacher, defensemen Barnes and Keith Aldridge, and forward Clayton Beddoes. Boston U. forward Mike Pomichter also was named to the team.

Minnesota-Duluth's Marinucci is selected Hobey Baker winner

Chris Marinucci, a senior left wing at Minnesota-Duluth, is this year's Hobey Baker Memorial Award winner as the outstanding player in men's ice hockey.

The announcement of Marinucci's selection was made April 1 in St. Paul, Minnesota, site of the NCAA Division I Men's Ice Hockey Championship.

Marinucci, who earlier was named the Western Collegiate Hockey Association player of the year, finished the season with 30 goals and 31 assists and led the Bulldogs with 10 power-play goals and four game-winning goals. Marinucci led the WCHA in both points and goals, and became only the fourth Bulldog to score more than 30 goals in a season twice.

Marinucci collected 137 points over the past two seasons, more than any player in college hockey.

Other finalists for the award were Craig Conroy, Clarkson; Dean Fedorchuk, Alaska Fairbanks; Neil Little, Rensselaer; Sean McCann, Harvard; David Oliver, Michigan; Jamie Ram, Michigan Tech; Dwayne Roloson, Massachusetts-Lowell; Steve Shields, Michigan; and Brian Wiseman, Michigan.

St. Bonaventure denies sex discrimination claims by coach

St. Bonaventure University has denied accusations by a former women's basketball coach that the school discriminated against female athletes and coaches.

Mary Jane Telford filed a lawsuit in Federal court seeking to be reinstated as women's basketball coach, a job she resigned from last year after the St. Bonaventure women's basketball program was placed on probation for one year for violations of NCAA legislation.

Telford said the university forced her to resign as a scapegoat for the NCAA sanctions.

Robert Wickenheiser, who recently became president at St. Bonaventure, told The Associated Press that the university does not discriminate against women athletes and has taken steps in the past 18 months to upgrade women's sports programs.

"St. Bonaventure is committed to a well-balanced, successful athletics program for both women and men," he said.

Besides asking for her job back, Telford seeks back wages and for the court to order the university to upgrade its women's sports program.

"I believe that St. Bonaventure University is guilty of repeated blatant discriminatory acts against me, against female athletes and against female athletics programs," Telford said March 30.

Telford said the university gives preferential treatment to male athletes, budgets more for men's sports than women's and pays better salaries to male coaches.

St. Bonaventure also provides better facilities and staff for men's sports, she said.

When Telford resigned, she said it was a mutual decision between her and the university.

In the lawsuit, Telford said St. Bonaventure's athletics director threatened to fire her unless she quit.

Telford played basketball for St. Bonaventure in the early 1970s. She coached the women's team for 17 seasons.

cation. Beside that, the position will be posted at the career-resource center of the national conference of the National Association for Equal Opportunity, a higher-education group.

"We want people to know about available positions at the national office," McNeely said, "and then we want to identify the best candidates. We want qualified women and ethnic minority job candidates to know that if they apply for vacant positions at the national office, they will be fairly evaluated and considered like any other candidate."

To identify qualified candidates, the human resources staff will search for potential candidates from a number of sources, including sports administration degree programs, historically black institutions, former NCAA employees and interns, conference interns, the NCAA vita bank, and NCAA scholarship recipients.

Further, the human resources and professional development staffs will enlist the help of the rest of those in the national office. Specifically, staff members will be asked to provide the names of potential candidates, particularly women or ethnic minorities, for positions at the national office. Also, a revised expense form will provide space for NCAA employees to identify prospective candidates they encounter outside the office.

McNeely noted that although the national office has made significant efforts to employ more women and ethnic minorities, advancement opportunities have been limited because of low turnover in the middle to upper levels of the staff.

In the alternative, he said it is essential that professional growth alternatives be provided for all staff members.

For example, the staff's committee liaison structure has been revised. In some cases, committees will be double-staffed, which will provide growth opportunities for more employees.

A standing staff committee has been formed to monitor the progress of the new program. McNeely is chair of the committee, which includes Jacqueline Hudson, legislative assistant; Stanley D. Johnson, director of professional development; Janet M. Justus, director of eligibility; Suzanne M. Kerley, human resources manager (ex officio); Kevin C. Lennon, director of compliance services; Robert J. Minnix, director of enforcement; Bernard M. Muir, assistant director of the Division I Men's Basketball Championship; Donna J. Noonan, director of championships; Frank D. Uryasz, director of sports sciences, and Alfred B. White, director of promotions.

You Can Be A Part

is a free video available to athletic directors interested in adding a low-cost NCAA-level sport to their program slate.

The Video is produced by West Virginia University and the U.S. Shooting Team. Especially useful for viewers not familiar with rifle shooting, the video is a fine introduction to demands of the sport as well as to the steps in getting a program off the ground. Considerations such as cost, facilities/space needs, finding coaches, recruiting, equipment, transportation and other aspects of starting a rifle team are covered. The video is available in VHS format only. To obtain your free copy, call 304/296-1343, or write: Marsha Beasley, WVU Rifle Coach, P.O. Box 0877, Morgantown, WV 26507-0877.

Division I

Partial qualifiers up

Both football and men's basketball reversed three-year declines in the rate of partial qualifiers. In football, the percentage rose from 6.4 in 1992 to 7.1 in 1993, while the basketball increase was from 3.8 in 1992 to 4.8 in 1993.

The women's sport with the most partial qualifiers was track and field with 44. Women's sports accounted for 108 partial qualifiers, or 21.8 percent of the whole, down from 24 percent in 1992.

The percentage of 1993 partial qualifiers who are black remained steady at 64.6 percent. That figure has changed only slightly in the seven years of the study. Overall, 89.0 percent of black student-athletes qualified under Bylaw 14.3 in 1993, compared to 98.5 percent of the white student-athletes.

The test-score component — at a somewhat higher rate than in 1992 — again proved to be the major hurdle for most of the partial qualifiers. In 1993, 67.9 percent of all partial qualifiers failed to meet the test-score requirements; in 1992, the figure was 62.7 percent. Both percentages, however, are lower than in the first five years of the study.

Division II

In Division II, 148 of 233 institutions responded to the survey. As in Division I, football in Division II had the highest reported number of partial qualifiers at 193. The percentage was down significantly from 1992, 15.8 percent to 12.6 percent.

Men's basketball increased from 8.2 percent in 1992 to 9.8 percent in 1993.

The percentage of women partial qualifiers went up from 20.7 percent in 1992 to 23.6 percent in 1993.

By race, the percentage of partial qualifiers in Division II continued to differ from Division I. Black partial qualifiers in Division II decreased from 47.5 percent in 1992 to 39.0 percent in 1993, a five-year low.

Of those who are partial qualifiers, 61.5 percent were so because of test score requirements. That number is the low figure in the study and is similar to 1991 (63.7 percent).

Magazine honors schools

Athletic Management magazine has announced its 1994 Awards of Excellence for colleges and universities.

NCAA institutions won awards in eight categories. They are:

■ Community relations: University of Connecticut, for the work of its Captains' Council, an organization of the institution's student-athletes that raises money for and spends time with various charities around the state. In its five years of operation, the Captains' Council has raised more than $30,000 for — and spent countless hours with — the children it reaches.

■ Fund-raising and promotions: Texas A&M University-Kingsville, for its Porky's Pack program, a club for area youth that promotes the school's athletics teams in a personal way. An annual fee covers free admission to all of the school's athletics events, as well as special events such as birthday parties with Porky (the school's mascot), pregame autograph sessions with student-athletes and student-athlete photographs.

■ Equipment management: Montana State University, for a unique internship program in which a Montana State textiles-science student repairs the school's athletics uniforms. The mutually beneficial arrangement gives the student hands-on experience with the construction and design of uniforms while also saving the athletics department money by not having to send the uniforms out for repair.

■ Women's athletics: University of Tennessee, Knoxville, for the establishment of a highly competitive and well-funded women's golf program in less than three years. The school's commitment to backing the program led it to raise seed money for the first year's organizational efforts, $1.65 million for the program and endowments for all the team's athletics grants. The team finished the fall 1993 season ranked No. 6 in the nation.

■ Athletics training management: Wellesley College, for the athletics training department's success — with limited resources — in preventing injuries and cultivating an effective student-trainer program. The injury-prevention program, which includes mandatory preseason screening for all athletes and reconditioning programs for those predisposed to injury, has sharply reduced the number of athletics injuries at the school. The student-training program, almost nonexistent four years ago, has made the position of student trainer one of the most prestigious student jobs on campus.

■ Academic support: Northern Illinois University, for the success of its student-athlete-run P.A.W.S. academic-support program. With a core committee of 32 student-athletes, the program empowers Northern Illinois student-athletes to help themselves
