Football coaches get tough on taunting

By Ronald D. Mott

DALLAS — The increasing number of acts of unsportsmanlike conduct in football apparently is giving many coaches in the sport much cause for concern, judging from the topic's prominence in discussions at the fourth annual NCAA College Football Forum February 11-13.

On-field baiting and taunting of opponents and excessive displays of self-congratulation are prompting coaches to explore various avenues of controlling unsportsmanlike behavior. Perhaps the most notable potential measure is a videotape that the NCAA Football Rules Committee wishes to produce. The video — pending NCAA Executive Committee approval — would depict examples of unsportsmanlike conduct that coaches would like for officials to enforce more uniformly and for players to stop altogether (see page 6).

Fisher DeBerry, head coach at the U.S. Air Force Academy and a member of the Football Rules Committee, said the fighting rule adopted before the 1994 season has had a positive effect. He added, however, that coaches remain concerned about and feel responsible for the game's on-field image.

"We are very concerned about the image of the game today," DeBerry said. "We certainly are very concerned about the role models that our players demonstrate to young people throughout this nation. We as coaches feel a great responsibility for this.

"The implementation of the fighting rule last year curtailed disqualifications by half. I think we improved the integrity of the game with the fighting rule last year."

But DeBerry and other coaches say the problem is exacerbated by professional football players' demonstrations of unsportsmanlike conduct every Sunday during the fall on television. Many of those same acts find their way to college gridirons the following Saturday.

"The sportsmanship and ethical-conduct issue is big on our minds in terms of trying to redouble our efforts as coach-

Participation numbers narrowly miss record

Combined men's/women's total ends up just short, despite all-time mark by females

A total of 295,174 student-athletes participated in NCAA sports in 1993-94, the second-largest number in Association history.

The number of participants in 1993-94 fell just short of the record of 295,382 set in 1985-86.

A record was set with the number of female participants, which broke the 100,000 mark for the first time. A total of 105,190 women took part in NCAA competition in 1993-94 — a gain of almost six percent over 1992-93. It was the fourth consecutive gain for women, and it was a faster rate of growth than the 3.5 percent increase recorded in 1992-

In 1993-94, women accounted for 35.7 percent of all student-athletes. In 1992-93, the figure was 34.8 percent.

The number of men's participants also increased, although some of the gain was an aberration related to the application of an NCAA rule regarding multidivision classification. The 1993-94 academic year was the first in which a Division I member was required to maintain all of its sports at the Division I level. A number of

The number of student-athletes participating in NCAA sports in 1993-94 was 295,174, just short of an all-time record. A record number of women — 105,190 — also participated. Men's participation was 189,642.

Proportionality meets interest

Title IX debate focusing on two key compliance elements

By Ronald D. Mott
THE NCAA NEWS STAFF

There generally are two buzzwords that are tossed about in discussions of Title IX compliance in intercollegiate athletics programs — proportionality and interest.

On one level, they are viewed simply as two components of the three-part Title IX compliance test administered by the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR). But on another level, those components may be on a collision course that could shake intercollegiate athletics during the coming year.

At the heart of the debate over Title IX compliance is whether institutions are fully and effectively accommodating the interests and abilities of the under-

III restructuring task force looks at governance issues

The Division III Task Force to Review the NCAA Membership Structure continued to focus on governance matters when it met February 6-7 in Dallas.

It was the task force's third meeting, and in each case, it has placed the most emphasis on a general view of how the Association will be governed rather than proposing specific structural models. The Divisions I and II task forces both have made specific structural proposals.

The task force reviewed the Divisions I and II proposals and also discussed the comments that were made about restructuring during the Division III business

Restructuring

Division III group keeps governance focus

The Division III Task Force to Review the NCAA Membership Structure continued to focus on governance matters when it met February 6-7 in Dallas.

The task force reviewed the Divisions I and II restructuring proposals and also discussed comments made about restructuring during the Division III business session at the NCAA Convention in January. It also reviewed the results of a survey on restructuring that was conducted at the Convention.

Eventually, the committee expressed continued support for the concept of greater federation, but not complete federation, in governance of the Association; reinforced commitment to the concept of one institution/one vote related to Division III legislation; continued to express its concern that the continued growth of the membership in Divisions II and III has Association-wide ramifications and should be addressed as part of any restructuring plan; and acknowledged the importance of diversity as part of any new governance structure.

The next meeting of the Division II restructuring task force will be February 21, while the Division I task force will meet February 23.

Apparel

Committee considers limits on manufacturers

A special NCAA committee is considering a proposal to regard manufacturers that have contractual relationships with NCAA institutions as representatives of those institutions' athletics interests.

The committee is considering the action in hopes of curbing potential abuse of the influence of apparel manufacturers.

The NCAA Special Committee to Study the Relationship of Apparel Manufacturers to the Intercollegiate Athletics Community — which met February 8 in Clearwater, Florida — is requesting feedback on the concept from three NCAA committees.

Committee on Financial Aid and Amateurism will be asked to provide feedback regarding the issue of apparel manufacturers and their relationship with athletics programs at NCAA colleges and universities.

In determining the involvement of apparel manufacturers in college athletics, the special committee became increasingly concerned that the potential existed for manufacturers to steer prospective student athletes toward universities where those manufacturers have written contracts to provide apparel and/or equipment — either with the school or one of its coaches. In addition, the committee was concerned with manufacturers' involvement with professional agents.

Football rules

Committee plans special sportsmanship meeting

The NCAA Football Rules Committee has agreed to hold a special meeting late this spring to address sportsmanship issues and help coaches, players and officials reach a clearer understanding of which actions should be penalized for unsportsmanlike conduct.

The committee proposed the "sportsmanship summit" at its annual meeting February 5-7 at Amelia Island, Florida. It is subject to the approval of the NCAA Executive Committee.

The committee also took steps to bolster existing unsportsmanlike-conduct rules. It voted to prohibit players from removing their helmets on the field, an action that has come to be considered a form of showmanship, and to eject players after their second unsportsmanlike-conduct foul in one game.

After reaching agreement at the spring meeting on unsportsmanlike acts that should be penalized, the committee would meet with representatives of the coaching community and officiating organizations to review their decisions.

In early summer, videotapes and other supporting materials would be sent to all NCAA football-playing institutions for coaches to review and share with their teams in preseason practice. The materials would portray as precisely as possible which types of conduct are deemed illegal under the rules.

Who's No. 1?

Which schools have played in the most games in the NCAA Division I Men's and Women's Basketball Championships?

If you said the University of Kentucky and Louisiana Tech University, you know your basketball.

The Wildcats have played in 93 games in the men's tournament since their first appearance in 1942. That is slightly more than the 91 games played by the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. Kentucky, however, has a sizable lead over the University of California, Los Angeles, for most years in the tournament (35 to 29).

On the women's side, Louisiana Tech advanced to the championship game last year before losing to North Carolina. Louisiana Tech now has appeared in 50 tournament games, compared to 48 for second-place University of Tennessee, Knoxville. Those two long-time powerhouses also have appeared in each of the 13 NCAA Division I women's tournaments.

Player gives history lesson

Raymond Touomou, a freshman basketball player at Rider University, recently visited a nearby junior high school and spoke to a history class about his homeland of Cameroon.

Known on campus as "Iata," Touomou gave students at Fischer Junior High School in Ewing, New Jersey, a lesson that included information on his family, educational systems, climate and overall history of his native country.

"It was fascinating to hear Iata's commentary on the differences in the two cultures," Rider basketball coach Kevin Bannon said. "I enjoyed his presentation as much as the students did."

"I hope more people take him up on it. He is a very proud young man and did an excellent job informing the students. We feel it is a responsibility of all of our players to be involved in the community, and Iata did a great job representing Rider and his native country."

Touomou is from Yaounde, Cameroon and was a member of the Cameroon national basketball team that competed in the African Olympic trials. Had his team not lost to Angola in the 1991 African finals, Touomou would have faced the famed Dream Team that competed for the United States at the 1992 Olympics.

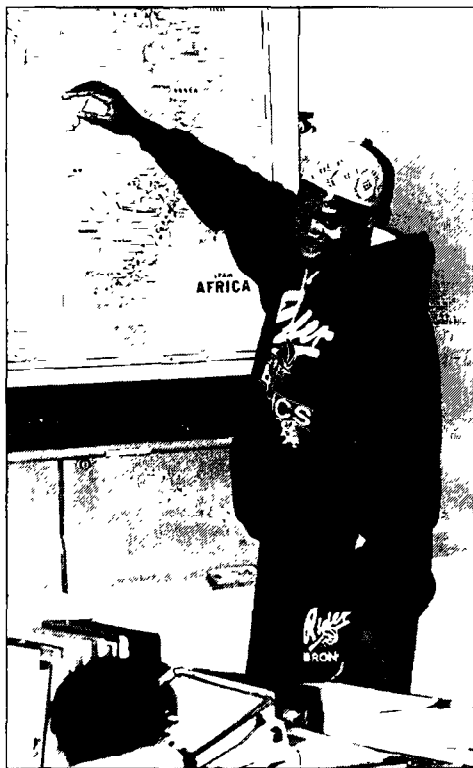

The 23-year-old Touomou came to the United States to live with an uncle and to attend Rider's language academy. His uncle sent a tape of Touomou playing basketball to the coaching staff at Rider. Rider offered Touomou a scholarship.

Touomou appeared in each of the team's first 15 games this season, averaging 5.0 points and 2.3 rebounds per game. More importantly, he is putting up big numbers in the classroom. Last fall, he received an academic-achievement award for compiling a grade-point average of 3.000 (4.000 scale) or better.

Double diversity

The men's and women's basketball teams at New Mexico Highlands University boast a diversity not shared by many other colleges and universities. The teams' rosters each are represented by four ethnic groups.

African-Americans, Hispanic-Americans, American Indians and white players make up both teams. The men's team has six African-American players, three white players, one Hispanic-American player and one American Indian player. The women's team has five white players, four Hispanic-American players, one African-American player and one American Indian player.

Raymond Touomou, a member of Rider University's men's basketball team, recently gave a history lesson on his homeland of Cameroon to junior high school students.

"We've had four (ethnicities) on our team before and we'll continue to have this," women's coach Cindy Roybal said. "We've always recruited in New Mexico and this is indicative of the four (ethnicities) of our state."

It may not be unusual at New Mexico Highlands, but it certainly is a novelty nationally because there are not many Hispanic-American or Native American basketball players in Division II, let alone on the same team. In the 1994 NCAA enrollment and persistence-rate report, there were 5,498 men's and women's basketball players in Division II, and only 25 (0.5 percent) were Native American and 75 (1.4 percent) were Hispanic.

"When I go out recruiting, I try to bring the best student-athlete I can get," men's coach Henry Sanchez said. "I really never stopped to consider the different ethnic backgrounds. This basically represents the philosophy of our university, which prides itself on multicultural diversity."

According to the school's fall 1994 enrollment, Hispanic-Americans account for 65.1 percent of the 2,821-person student body. White enrollment is 27.2 percent, American Indian 3.1 percent and African-American 2.3 percent.

The players find the diversity to be interesting and enlightening.

"I feel we have learned a lot from each other," said Fran Chavez, the American Indian member of the women's team. "They ask me questions about my Navajo culture and they are amazed with our language. I also have learned a little out of all of them."

"I don't think it's as significant now (as) what it will be later on," Ernest Jenkins, an African-American player on the men's team, said of his squad's diversity. "By having so many cultures on this team, it will help us by not making false judgments on anyone. This helps us take everybody for who they are."

Shining Flowers

Aurora University senior basketball player William Flowers has been a true botanical beauty on the court and off during his four-year career. At age 6, Flowers — already fatherless — was orphaned when his mother was killed. An older brother who found himself on the wrong side of law enforcement added further gloom to Flowers' life.

But with the encouragement of his grandmother, Betty Jean Flowers, who ultimately raised him, Flowers became a ray of sunshine for his family and his team, averaging 26 points and nine rebounds per game this season.

"I was the first person in my family to go to college," he said. "My grandmother motivated me a lot. She always told me I could make it. She took care of me."

She also took care of Flowers' younger brother, Terrance, a basketball player at Wichita State University.

Even with that help, Flowers deserves most of the credit for a burning desire to make something positive happen in his life. Education, he surmised, is the key to many of life's doors.

"If I had stayed at home, I'd probably be hanging out with the fellas on the street," he said. "I probably wouldn't have been living right now. There's so much crime. All the violence — it's degrading. It pulls you down. I chose to go to school."

Milestones

Phil Kahler, women's basketball coach at St. John Fisher, became the first women's coach in Division III to reach the 500-victory milestone. He reached that mark January 31 with a 61-51 victory over Elmhurst College.

John Kochan, men's basketball coach at Millersville University of Pennsylvania, earned his 250th coaching victory January 3 with a 91-83 defeat of Columbia Union College.

Adelphi University men's basketball coach Jim O'Connor registered his 100th victory after a 93-75 win over Mercy College. O'Connor is in his seventh season at Adelphi.

Jane Albright-Dieterle, women's basketball coach at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, earned her 200th career win with a 76-73 victory over the University of Minnesota, Twin Cities, January 20.

Bob Sheldon, men's basketball coach at Tufts University, reached victory No. 100 with the Jumbos' 97-70 victory over Suffolk University January 28. He became just the third coach in the program's 84-season history to reach the 100-victory plateau.

Tom Galeazzi, men's basketball coach at Long Island University/C. W. Post Campus, recorded his 600th victory January 4. During his 29-year coaching career, he has compiled 26 consecutive winning seasons and 18 campaigns with 20 or more victories.

Glenn Van Wieren, men's basketball coach at Hope College, became the most-victorious coach in the program's history January 28 with a 95-84 victory over Kalamazoo College. The win gave Van Wieren 324 victories in his 18th season there.

Fact file

The 42 NCAA championship meets and tournaments for men during 1993-94 attracted a paid attendance of 1,745,174. Of that total, 1,470,999 attended Division I championships. The 34 women's championships posted a record paid attendance of 559,386. Division I women's championships attracted 459,871 paying fans.

Committee ponders apparel manufacturers' influence

In hopes of curbing potential abuse of the influence of apparel manufacturers, a special NCAA committee is considering a proposal to regard manufacturers that have contractual relationships with NCAA institutions as representatives of those institutions' athletics interests.

The NCAA Special Committee to Study the Relationship of Apparel Manufacturers to the Intercollegiate Athletics Community — which met February 8 in Clearwater, Florida — is requesting feedback on the concept from three NCAA committees.

The NCAA Recruiting Committee, Professional Sports Liaison Committee, and Committee on Financial Aid and Amateurism will be asked to provide feedback regarding the issue of apparel manufacturers and their relationship with athletics programs at NCAA colleges and universities.

In determining the involvement of apparel manufacturers in college athletics, the special committee became increasingly concerned that the potential existed for manufacturers to steer prospective student-athletes toward universities where those manufacturers have written contracts to provide apparel and/or equipment — either with the school or one of its coaches. In addition, the committee was concerned with manufacturers' involvement with professional agents.

"The special committee believes it's in the membership's best interests to curb what appears to be growing influence by some apparel manufacturers in the recruiting process," said committee chair Patty Vivento, senior associate commissioner of the Missouri Valley Conference and commissioner of the Gateway Collegiate Athletic Conference. "The special committee thinks a possible solution would be to define company representatives who are directly involved with prospects as boosters."

Restrictive practice rules do not add up

By Craig Brown

PENNSYLVANIA STATE UNIVERSITY

Another NCAA Convention has passed and so again we are defined for the next 12 months by the confluence of interpretations of yet another democratically derived datum point. Many good intentions found reality, yet many restrictive practice regulations still persist in the guise of fair play.

The reality is that our student-athletes are put into parenthesis while the rules of fair play are tenuously balanced between the "haves" and the "have nots." Inasmuch as we might presume a positive answer through such an indirect route of legislation, we have actually violated the fundamental rule of transitivity.

Where $A = B$ and $B = C$, then A must = C .

Where:

A = Student-athlete welfare

B = NCAA fair play

C = Maximized academic and athletics potential

In all of our wisdom we have approached fair play without regard for a true value of C . The welfare and performance of our student-athletes has thus been relegated to an external fact rather than a driving influence. When we "pull back" on practice and/or competitive opportunities, we not only compromise all three objective components (A , B and C), but we also quite ignorantly inflate the value of " B ." Such imbalance surely skews the empirical notion that reduced athletics practice and/or competition results in elevated grade-point averages. Cause and effect is then by definition a victim of misrepresentation.

Sad so that may seem, we do have the ability through next year's legislative process to attack restrictive legislation. Swimming and diving coaches should, as a group, vehemently oppose any rules proposal that does not promote increased practice time and/or cultivate year-round competitive situations.

Will this then result in the undesired pooling of athletics talent into just a few "have" institutions? Certainly not! The obvious fact that the rules of sport precisely dictate the number of active participants on each team, as well as the desire of each student-athlete to participate in as many games or minutes as possible, in and of itself drives the talent pool into an ever-widening "pancake" of participatory opportunity. The fact is, no one likes to

Door closing on some male coaches

Since the NCAA limited the number of coaches per staff a few years back, there has been a mad scramble for coaching positions throughout all levels of the NCAA. Not only has the reduction of coaching staffs limited the number of positions overall, but the gender-equity movement also has limited the number of coaching positions available to white male coaches in women's basketball.

I personally have been told that there was no need for me to apply for a position since it was to be filled by a woman because of gender-equity requirements.

I also have telephoned to inquire about several advertised positions. There have been times when I have been told that there was no position available even though the position was advertised in national publications. One woman head coach told me she was not sure if a position was open. Later, I had a woman friend call to inquire about the same job. The woman head coach was more than happy to talk to her about the open position.

I understand some women coaches' resentment of male coaches. I know most men's basketball programs will not hire women coaches, which I believe is wrong. Gentlemen, if someone knows basketball, their gender or the gender they wish to coach should not matter in the least!

Most people become coaches because they love working with youngsters and they also enjoy the competitive aspects of the game. I started coaching girls'/women's basketball back in the early '80s. My entire career has been devoted to the advancement of women's basketball, to helping female players become more skilled and the women's game more accepted. I have coached on the junior high, high-school, NAIA and NCAA Division II levels during my career. I advanced through the coaching ranks because I am an excellent coach who is in this sport for the kids, not for the money.

Now coaches like me are being driven out of women's basketball because of the politics of the NCAA and some women coaches. Most coaches who have been coaching as long as I have remember girls'/women's basketball when it was a "walk-the-ball-up-the-court" game because few of us thought it could be any different. I remember second-rate equipment and out-of-my-own-pocket expenses because there wasn't enough money to totally fund the program. I also remember coaching a few of you who are in coaching now. Ladies, two wrongs don't make a right! Don't push away some of your biggest supporters. Don't shut male coaches out because of what some other male coaches have done to you. Shut us out if we can't do the job, but if we are good coaches, let us coach!

Administrators, don't use women's basketball positions to fulfill gender-equity quotas. When you consider how many positions a football staff usually has and then relate those numbers to overall gender equity, you are giving us male women's basketball coaches the death penalty. Maybe the women's program should have one more sport than the men's program to make up for the discrepancy in overall positions, instead of making up for it with other sports like women's basketball.

Athletics directors, don't tell a male coach he has to hire a female because of some initiative, let him hire the best coach. Then tell us we can't have the position because there was a better candidate and no one noticed what anyone's gender was.

Civility taking a seat on the bench

The Des Moines Register

"There is a strange, mean streak running through too many football fans, the former president of the American Football Coaches Association said recently. Ron Schipper of Central College (Iowa) and other sports officials interviewed for The Register's sports page cited an unusually large number of coaching vacancies, some of them due to resignations by winning coaches who were fed up with the nastiness, and some due to firings of winning coaches.

"Coaches have always been under pressure to win, but the expectations in some cases have reached impossible levels. Some fans are not content with merely winning most of the time, they want to win all of the time. And they don't hesitate to show their displeasure by sending hate mail or becoming angry, anonymous voices on radio talk shows.

"It is just sick," Schipper told The Register. "There are a lot of average fans who just have no understanding of what it is like to be a college coach or even a high-school football coach."

"Yes, it is sick, and it isn't confined to sports. There seems to be a mean streak in much of American life today.

"That's just an impression, of course. It probably can't be objectively proved. But ask store clerks about the rudeness quotient among customers. Ask telephone receptionists about the tenor of many callers these days. Ask political observers about the mean-spirited campaigns.

"It may not necessarily be the case that Americans generally are becoming nastier. Civility is probably still the norm for most people most of the time. Yet the nasty few seem to be less reluctant to spout off, and their voices are amplified more than ever before. Sports and politics have something in common — the anonymous grumblers on talk radio who are always ready to fire the coach or always willing to believe the worst about any politician.

"In politics, the meanness is underlain by an unwillingness to acknowledge the humanity of the opposition. The opposition is not merely wrong, not merely mistaken or misguided, it is evil. Nothing is too mean to be said about somebody who is evil. And so the critics get ever nastier.

"And so the mean streak gets meaner."

Title IX

Bill Campbell, columnist

New Orleans Times-Picayune

"We don't need to create an 'exception' for football, as if it shouldn't count as a men's sport. That defies Title IX's basic element — that males and females have equal access to athletic opportunity.

"And I'm sure all of us would like our daughters to have as many opportunities as our sons. Maybe that's never been achieved before, but it's a decent goal for the next century.

"So maybe what the whole football contingent needs to realize is that 85 scholarships for one sport, no matter what it is, is too many. They'd all have strokes in their 50-yard line luxury boxes if someone proposed 85 scholarships for women's soccer.

"College football is stronger than ever. It would survive with, say, 55 scholarships and still flourish.

"Either that, or we should start women's football.

"I'm sure you could find 85 women who would learn blocking schemes and pass routes for a free education."

Discussing the recent decision of the U.S. Supreme Court not to hear a reverse-discrimination lawsuit brought by the men's swim team at the University of Illinois, Champaign.

"It is understandable why the male swimmers at Illinois filed their lawsuit. They felt that the university had taken from Peter to pay Paula in order to achieve gender equity in sports. With its ruling, the Supreme Court has given the OK to allow different treatments to remedy situations in which women are underrepresented. It is saying that it is all right to cut back men's teams in order to add women's teams.

"The Title IX issue strikes at the heart of the arguments raging today over racial and sexual equality. Can equality be achieved by one group without taking away from the other? The court has said it doesn't matter how, as long as parity is accomplished. When Title IX was enacted, it was believed that more funding would correct the imbalance. With money tight, schools have to make hard choices, and many times a sport must be dropped to further equal participation by women.

"Even with the elimination of the men's swimming team, the University of Illinois' ratio of men to women athletes is still 70-30. Illinois and a lot of other schools still have a long way to go to reach the balance sought by Title IX. Men in non-revenue-producing sports will feel vulnerable and cries of 'reverse discrimination' will be heard. But the court has ruled, and until there are changes in the goals of Title IX, compliance is mandatory.

"Gender equity in athletics is about sharing and opportunity. How we go about achieving this has been argued for almost three decades. Stay tuned for more arguments in the future."

ART IMITATES LIFE

On the mat or on the matte, coach's creativity flourishes

By Stephen R. Hagwell
THE NCAA NEWS STAFF

It is universally accepted that gymnastics is an art form. Does that make gymnasts and coaches artists? Apparently, that's the case with Jim Stephenson.

Stephenson is head women's gymnastics coach at the University of Minnesota, Twin Cities.

Stephenson

As such, he is figuratively an artist — shaping and molding gymnasts' skills.

Avocationally, Stephenson also is an artist — literally. With more than 20 years' experience, Stephenson has produced numerous paintings, sculptures and technical illustrations. Many have been publicly displayed.

"Jim is a multit talented individual," said Greg Marsden, head women's gymnastics coach at the University of Utah. "He's a beautiful singer as well as a tremendous artist. He's also a gifted coach."

Stephenson's artistry as a coach certainly shows at Minnesota — in and outside the gym.

Molded program

As the artistic force behind the Golden Gophers, Stephenson has molded the squad into one of the nation's up-and-coming programs. Since Stephenson's arrival, the Golden Gophers have gone from last in the Big Ten Conference to qualifying for the NCAA regional championships.

"Jim has done a tremendous job (at Minnesota). He is an artist not only in drawing, but as a coach," said Jim Turpin, head women's gymnastics coach at Oregon State University. "You can always tell Jim's gymnasts because they are so artistically clean in their routines."

They also bear Stephenson's artistry on their uniforms.

A few months after arriving at Minnesota, Stephenson felt strongly that the program needed an identity. So, Stephenson provided that identity — he created and designed a team logo.

"We needed something. I felt it was a necessity," said Stephenson. "Honestly, I felt I'd do a better job (of designing the logo) than someone else."

A former collegiate gymnast at Iowa State University and a member of the Cyclones' 1971 and 1973 NCAA championship teams, Stephenson's coaching background includes two stints as assistant men's coach at the University of New Mexico, proprietor of the Pantheon School of Gymnastics in California, and top assistant women's coach at Utah.

Before his arrival at Minnesota, Stephenson served four years on the Utah staff. During that time, he contributed Jim Stephenson, head women's gymnastics coach at the University of Minnesota, Twin Cities, sculpted this life-size statue of former Oregon State University gymnast and three-time NCAA champion Joy Selig. Stephenson coached Selig in developmental gymnastics for more than seven years. The statue is displayed in front of the Gladys Valley Gymnastics Center on the Oregon State campus.

artistry, creativity and technical expertise to help the Utes claim NCAA team championships in 1990 and 1992. He also coached Ute gymnasts to nine all-American awards and was instrumental in helping former NCAA champion Missy Marlowe score the first 10.0 in school history.

'Sees more than others'

"Jim has a way of looking at something and seeing much more than the rest of us see," said Marsden. "He can see it and sit down and draw it in detail. It's the same with gymnastics. Jim has a way of looking at a skill and seeing the technical aspect."

Stephenson's coaching philosophy is directly tied to art. Emphasizing creativity and having fun while training to win, Stephenson believes that simple, yet clearly defined, skills speak volumes. To that end, Stephenson strives to maximize each gymnast's skills, in the same way he strives to maximize each brush stroke.

"The bottom line in gymnastics is how well you perform and how good you look," said Stephenson. "There's a certain amount of creativity, but you want to look your best in every respect. Like anything else that is artistic, the more creative you are, the more fun you have."

In March 1994, Stephenson's artistic creativity reached its zenith when he completed his most impressive work of art: a life-size bronze statue of former Oregon State University gymnast and three-time NCAA champion Joy Selig.

Stephenson, who coached Selig for seven-plus years in developmental gymnastics, sculpted a statue of Selig performing a one-arm handstand on a balance beam. The statue is displayed in front of the Gladys Valley Gymnastics Center on the Oregon State campus.

"I was especially pleased to be awarded the commission, because I had coached Joy. I know her quite well," said Stephenson. "I have a great amount of respect for her and Jim Turpin. It's something I wanted to do for people I care about. It is the most public work I've done and the one I'm most proud of."

"(The statue) is absolutely gorgeous," said Turpin. "It's got a little garden around it. It's mounted on a pedestal that sits five feet in the air. It's a statue that you have to walk around to appreciate how gorgeous it is. Jim did a fantastic job."

Stephenson's current work with the Golden Gophers soon may be earning similar praise.

Improved standing

Under Stephenson's watchful eye, the Golden Gophers have improved their conference and national standing each year. In 1994, Minnesota earned a third-place Big Ten showing and a berth in the NCAA Central regional.

"When I took over, the first thing I wanted to do was actually back off from what the athletes were doing," said Stephenson. "I wanted to reduce their difficulty level and upgrade their consistency in performance and quality of execution. In gymnastics, it's more important to perform well than to perform extremely difficult routines. Once you have a foundation to work with, you can then increase the difficulty level."

"(Coach Stephenson) makes training very efficient," said senior gymnast Michelle Reiger, the Golden Gophers' team captain. "We're better prepared in everything. (He) enhances everyone's style and is very creative. We work very hard, but we have fun."

This year, the Golden Gophers have continued their impressive progress, registering the second-highest team score in school history with 190.65 points February 6 at Utah.

As pleased as he is with the team's success, Stephenson says the project is far from finished. The next goal is to qualify for one of the 12 spots at the National Collegiate Women's Gymnastics Championships.

"Certainly, (the national championships) are the next step," Stephenson said. "I know we have the capability; all we have to do is go out and perform our best."

Until that happens, Stephenson will continue to mold and shape the Golden Gophers into a fine piece of art.

Apparel manufacturers

Committee concerned with potential abuse of such companies' influence

NCAA regulations are in place to prevent student-athletes from being used by manufacturers to endorse equipment and apparel. However, no legislation exists to prevent companies from attempting to influence high-school athletes in choosing schools to attend.

By categorizing the apparel manufacturers as representatives of an institution's athletics interests or "boosters," NCAA legislation would prevent such companies from providing extra benefits to prospective student-athletes. Currently, boosters are not allowed to give financial aid or other benefits to a prospect and, in Division I, are not allowed to recruit a prospect.

Classifying manufacturers as boosters would mean an NCAA school would be responsible for monitoring the company's actions.

The special committee agreed that if the concept is pursued, one exception would be recommended: Apparel manufacturers' practice of providing equipment and apparel to prospects free of charge would be preserved. The committee agreed it is important for young people to be able to receive the best equipment with which to compete.

The special committee will review responses from the three NCAA committees and, if appropriate, recommend legislation to the NCAA Council at its August 1995 meeting.

Other highlights

In other actions at its February 8 meeting in Clearwater, Florida, the Special Committee to Study the Relationship of Apparel Manufacturers to the Intercollegiate Athletics Community:

■ Voted to recommend to the NCAA Council that the scope of Bylaw 12.5.4 — which prohibits the use by student-athletes of equipment and apparel bearing over-sized logos — be expanded to include coaches, trainers and managers. Bylaw 12.5.4 restricts the size of a manufacturer's logo or trademark to 2 1/4 square inches in size on all athletics equipment, uniforms and apparel. The committee surveyed coaches associations, sports committees and NCAA committees on the issue and, after reviewing the feedback, agreed to recommend to the Council in April that the current legislation be broadened. The special committee believes the provisions of Bylaw 12.5.4 should apply to bench and sideline personnel because they are as visible as student-athletes during competition.

Indeed, we must responsibly manage these most productive years of our student-athletes' lives not by exploiting the futile notion of perfect fair play but instead by allowing the student-athletes the latitude to decide the level of exploitation of their own academic and athletics agendas. The breakfast of champions is not in the cereal of fair play we impose, but rather in the palatable pancake of deregulation that they might then consume.

Football Rules Committee calls sportsmanship summit

The NCAA Football Rules Committee has agreed to hold a special meeting late this spring to address sportsmanship issues and help coaches, players and officials reach a clearer understanding of which actions should be penalized for unsportsmanlike conduct.

The committee proposed the "sportsmanship summit" at its annual meeting February 5-7 at Amelia Island, Florida. It is subject to the approval of the NCAA Executive Committee.

The committee also took steps to bolster existing unsportsmanlike-conduct rules. It voted to prohibit players from removing their helmets on the field, an action that has come to be considered a form of showmanship, and to eject players after their second unsportsmanlike-conduct foul in one game (for more information, see information regarding rules in the accompanying story).

"Despite the tremendous strides made last season in reducing fighting among players, the Football Rules Committee firmly believes that unsportsmanlike conduct — particularly continuing problems with taunting and excessive celebration and the inconsistency in defining these acts — is the biggest problem facing college football today," said committee chair Vincent J. Dooley, director of athletics at the University of Georgia. "This type of behavior damages the image of the game, and of intercollegiate athletics as a whole, and it simply cannot be tolerated."

"The committee is not in any way interested in restricting the spontaneous enthusiasm and excitement that have made college football a national treasure," Dooley said. "But the committee believes that some of the antics we are seeing on the field clearly go beyond enthusiastic to mean-spirited and self-promoting, and we hope to use the summit to set more specific guidelines about which activities should and should not be part of the game."

At the meeting, planned for early May at an undetermined site, the committee would spend one day reviewing videotapes solicited

Committee gives endorsement to bowl tiebreaker

The NCAA Football Rules Committee has authorized the use of the NCAA tiebreaker system in postseason bowl games, beginning next season. The change was supported by the NCAA Special Events Committee and by the Football Bowl Association.

The Football Rules Committee made the decision — subject to the approval of the NCAA Executive Committee — at its annual meeting February 5-7 at Amelia Island, Florida.

The NCAA tiebreaking procedure gives both teams a chance to score after regulation time has expired. In an overtime period, each team gets an offensive series beginning on the opponent's 25-yard line. A team's possession ends when it scores, turns the ball over or fails to convert a fourth-down play. This untimed procedure is repeated until the score is no longer tied at the end of an overtime period.

Several conferences below Division I-A use the tiebreaker during the regular season because breaking ties could have a bearing on advancement to the division championship or a postseason game. Currently, the only Division I-A game in which it can be used is the Southeastern Conference title game.

A tiebreaker has been used since 1973, when the Divisions II and III championships began. It was added to the Football Rules and Interpretations in 1982, and the spot of possession was changed from the 15- to the 25-yard line in 1985.

The tiebreaker has been used only once in an NCAA championship final game, the 1990 Division III title game between Allegheny College and Lycoming College, which Allegheny won, 21-14, in one overtime period. It has been used 13 times in earlier rounds of the Division I-AA championship, five times in the Division II championship first round or semifinals and 10 times in Division III early rounds.

Other rules actions

The committee also voted to:

■ Prohibit players from removing their helmets on the field (see accompanying story), except during a called timeout, to treat an injury or if given permission by an official (i.e., equipment repair or adjustment).

■ Eject players after their second unsportsmanlike-conduct foul in one game.

■ Allow teams to wear white jerseys for home games if their opponents agree to it before the season.

■ Require coaches and players with eligibility remaining to serve fight-related suspensions during the first game of the next season for fights that occur in the last game of the season.

■ Require the extra-point try to be conducted after a touchdown on the final play of a game, unless the team that is behind leaves the field.

■ Penalize defensive players five yards for entering the neutral zone before the snap and causing an offensive player to move.

■ Award the ball to the defensive team at the spot where it was recovered after a defensive player recovers a rolling backward pass, fumble, scrimmage kick or free kick between his five-yard line and the goal line and his momentum carries him into the end zone, where the ball is declared dead in his team's possession or goes out of bounds.

■ Eliminate the penalty for running into or roughing the kicker or holder if the contact results from an illegal block by the offense.

■ Prohibit players from spiking the ball to conserve time if the ball touches the ground after the snap.

■ Start the clock on the snap after a delay penalty by a team in punt or field-goal formation.

■ Require all players on a team to wear helmets of the same color.

■ Approve new equipment rules that allow up to two borders around players' numbers, including the popular "shaded" numerals.

■ Move the pylons that mark the intersection of the end lines with the inbounds lines ("hash marks") to three feet beyond the end lines.

from coaches and conference offices of potentially unsportsmanlike acts. After reaching agreement on which acts should be penalized and which should not, the committee would meet the following day with representatives of the coaching community and officiating organizations to review their decisions.

In early summer, videotapes and other supporting materials would be sent to all NCAA football-playing institutions for coaches to review and share with their teams in preseason practice. The materials would portray as precisely as possible which types of conduct are deemed illegal under the rules.

"The input we have received from coaches indicates that they strongly support the current rules against unsportsmanlike behavior but they would like more consistency in the enforcement and interpretation of the rules," Dooley said. "Although it is not possible to eliminate the gray area between enthusiasm and unsporting conduct, the rules committee believes that providing a clearer definition of the rules will eliminate much of the uncertainty that has prevented calls from being made in the past."

Postseason awards, realignment top III volleyball meeting

The NCAA Division III Women's Volleyball Committee discussed additional postseason honors for teams advancing to the quarterfinals of the Division III Women's Volleyball Championship and reviewed a number of regional realignment issues during its annual meeting February 6-9 in Key West, Florida.

The committee will recommend to the NCAA Executive Committee that the eight regional winners that advance to the national quarterfinals receive a team trophy. In addition, the committee wants to create an award to honor the all-tournament team selected after the championship match.

The committee also discussed a proposal from the American Volleyball Coaches Association (AVCA) regarding bracket expansion. The AVCA had proposed that the Division III Women's Volleyball Championship bracket be expanded to 64 teams because sponsorship numbers for Division III women's volleyball were similar to those for Division III women's basketball, which has a 64-team field (although the first round consists of play-in competition).

The committee noted that sponsorship in Division III women's volleyball was still within the percentage category (85-95 percent sponsorship) established by the Executive Committee for a 32-team bracket.

The committee also noted that the NCAA Division III Championships Committee had not discussed extending the play-in concept to other championships, and may not make any major changes in the championships program until concepts regarding restructuring of the Association have been more clearly defined.

Other highlights

In other actions at its February 6-9 meeting in Key West, Florida, the Division III Women's Volleyball Committee:

■ Recommended to the NCAA Executive Committee that only best-three-of-five matches be considered in selection for the Division III championship, beginning in 1996.

■ Reviewed National Association of Girls and Women in Sport rules changes, including a change permitting a serve from anywhere beyond the service line. The committee also reconfirmed that the fifth game in a best-three-of-five match during the regular season should be rally scored, except by mutual consent of the opposing coaches.

Former UCLA standout elected to Basketball Hall of Fame

Former women's stars Miller, Donovan join Abdul-Jabbar; four others also elected

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, the NBA's all-time leading scorer and a member of nine championship teams in college and in the pros, has been voted into the Basketball Hall of Fame.

Joining Abdul-Jabbar, a 1994 NCAA Silver Anniversary Award honoree who played at the University of California, Los Angeles, are women's Olympic and college stars Cheryl Miller and Anne Donovan, former Soviet coach Aleksandr Gomelsky, former National Basketball Association official Earl Strom, and Minneapolis Lakers forward Vern Mikkelsen and coach John Kundla.

From the time Abdul-Jabbar, then known as Lew Alcindor, stepped onto the Power Memorial High School court in New York City in 1961, through his three NCAA championships at UCLA and 20 years in the NBA with Milwaukee and Los Angeles, he dominated the game as few men have.

His high-school teams lost six games. His college teams were defeated only twice. Yet he was ridiculed because of his height.

"He was subjected to things that, had it been me, I would have really flared up," former UCLA coach John Wooden told The Associated Press. "But he didn't."

And in the tall young man's "intelligence, unselfishness and amazing self-control," Wooden said he found some lessons.

"I learned more from Lewis, as I called him then, than from any other one player I ever had," Wooden said. "I am not talking about basketball now, but about man's inhumanity to man."

Donovan, a 6-8 center, led Old Dominion University to the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women national championship in 1980 and helped boost the U.S. women's Olympic team to gold medals in 1984 and 1988. She is now an assistant coach at Old Dominion.

Miller, also a member of the 1984 Olympic team, led the University of Southern California to NCAA championships in 1983 and 1984 and ranks second only to Hall of Fame member Carol Blazejowski in career scoring. She is now head women's coach at the University of Southern California.

Gomelsky, whose 1988 team won the Olympic gold medal, was nominated by the International Committee.

Eligibility clearinghouse receiving registrations earlier than in 1994

The NCAA Initial-Eligibility Clearinghouse has more than three times as many records in its database this year for high-schoolers who will graduate in 1995 as it did at this time a year ago for 1994 graduates, according to a report by the clearinghouse staff.

As of February 1, the clearinghouse had obtained records for more than 88,000 high-schoolers scheduled to graduate this year. A year ago at the same time, the clearinghouse had approximately 27,500 records for members of the class of 1994.

The number of records collected by the clearinghouse this year already nearly equals the total received for 1994, when the clearinghouse collected 90,600 records. The clearinghouse subsequently rendered final certifications for member institutions for approximately 68,000 students.

So far this year, the clearinghouse has rendered preliminary certifications for more than 58,000 students.

Committee received data

Registration data for the class of 1995 were reported to the Special Committee to Oversee Implementation of the NCAA Initial-Eligibility Clearinghouse during its February 5-7 meeting in Clearwater, Florida.

Committee members were pleased by the large number of students that already has registered this year. They expressed some concern, however, over the relatively small number of institutional request lists (IRLs) submitted so far by NCAA institutions to the clearinghouse.

Institutions use IRLs to provide to the clearinghouse names of prospective student-athletes who actively are being recruited.

As of February 1, institutions had submitted IRLs listing approximately 19,000 names of prospects in the class of 1995. However, approximately 57,000 students who have registered so far this year with the clearinghouse have not yet been listed on IRLs submitted by institutions.

As a result, the committee is seeking assistance from conferences in encouraging institutions to submit IRLs to the clearinghouse as early as possible. Each institution also is being asked to remove from its IRL as frequently as possible the names of prospects who no longer are being recruited.

Other highlights

In other actions at its February 5-7 meeting in Clearwater, Florida, the Special Committee to Oversee Implementation of the NCAA Initial-Eligibility Clearinghouse:

■ Requested $3,000 for computer programming that would provide NCAA institutions with access to the clearinghouse's database of 48-H forms obtained from United States high schools. The committee submitted the request to the NCAA Administrative Committee, which would consider the request on behalf of the NCAA Executive Committee. Access to the database could assist institutions in preliminary evaluation of prospects.

In a related action, the committee announced that the clearinghouse will offer institutions the option of receiving weekly status reports by mail or fax as well as by computer modem. Previously, institutions were required to choose either to receive a hard copy or obtain the report via computer. Institutions will receive a mailing in early March offering the opportunity to select both options.

■ Learned that the clearinghouse has hired a consultant to evaluate its telephone system. The committee asked the clearinghouse to consider increasing the number of telephone operators during the period from August 15 to September 15 and also to consider expanding the operators' hours of availability during that period.

■ Learned that the clearinghouse will establish a conference contact program modeled after contact programs based in the NCAA national office. The clearinghouse will mail letters to conference offices in mid-March requesting that each conference designate a staff member to serve as the contact person for the clearinghouse.

■ Learned that the clearinghouse will provide reports to high schools three or four times a year. The reports will include information about the clearinghouse and any changes in procedures, in order to help high schools fulfill their responsibilities in the certification process. The clearinghouse also will provide listings of prospects who have registered with the clearinghouse and reports on certification status to the prospects' high schools.

■ Asked the NCAA Academic Requirements and Recruiting Committees to review legislation requiring the certification of prospects for expense-paid recruiting visits before an early signing period. Specifically, those committees are being asked to consider recommending to the NCAA Council elimination of the requirements for an official visit before the early signing period in a sport that has an early signing date (NCAA Bylaw 13.7.2.4).

■ Asked the NCAA public information staff to monitor and respond to news reports containing incorrect information about the clearinghouse or questioning its purpose. The committee also asked the staff to notify conference offices of the availability of public service announcements about the clearinghouse for possible use during broadcasts of athletics events, and recommended the development of a news release to explain in an easily understandable manner the Association's current initial-eligibility requirements.

■ Advised the national office staff to communicate regularly with the National Federation of State High School Associations regarding NCAA legislation that directly affects high-school students (including initial-eligibility and clearinghouse-registration requirements).

Research Committee looks at gender-equity matters

Gender-equity discussions dominated the NCAA Research Committee's February 3-4 meeting in San Diego.

The committee discussed the development of a survey to determine the athletics-participation interests of collegiate men and women. Requests for research proposals to determine why some women are interested in sports and others are not were forwarded to the NCAA

Committee on Women's Athletics for its review.

The committee also discussed new Federal legislation that requires schools to gather gender-equity information for the Federal government. The committee recommended that any such information compiled for the government also should be provided to the NCAA for analysis.

Other highlights

In other actions at its February 3-4 meeting in San Diego, the Research Committee:

■ Discussed the planned "recentering" of scoring for the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) by the Educational Testing Service and the effect the change will have on NCAA initial-eligibility regulations. The committee forwarded its ideas regarding the matter to the NCAA Academic Requirements Committee.

■ Authorized the continuation of the Study of Revenues and Expenses of Intercollegiate Athletics Programs, but revised the research schedule so that the report will be published every two years, instead of every four.

■ Discussed the resolution adopted by the membership at the 1995 NCAA Convention directing the committee to assist in planning a study of effects of recent reform legislation on student-athletes. The resolution resulted from a recommendation of the NCAA Special Committee to Review Student-Athlete Welfare, Access and Equity. The Research Committee discussed incorporating such research into a study of the National Letter of Intent that currently is underway.

Atlantic 10 Conference adds three schools

The Atlantic 10 Conference increased its membership to 12 schools with the addition February 9 of Virginia Polytechnic Institute, the University of Dayton and La Salle University.

Those schools join previously announced newcomers Fordham University and Xavier University (Ohio) in a league that becomes a solid basketball conference reaching a number of major television markets.

"Our athletics directors identified these three institutions as what we are and where we want to be as we head into the future," Atlantic 10 Commissioner Linda Bruno told The Associated Press. "We are excited and we will get much better."

West Virginia University and Rutgers University, New Brunswick, will leave the current nine-team league after this season to join the Big East Conference. When that move was announced last year, there was speculation that the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, and Temple University would consider leaving.

Instead, the Atlantic 10 added five schools.

"There were always options for us," Bruno said. "The first scenario was 'don't do anything,' and we had said all along we weren't in a rush unless the right schools were available. At no time did we get locked into a set number. We were worried about quality, not quantity. We got the best of both worlds now with a number that's workable and we filled out our conference with quality programs."

Bruno said the league will be split into two divisions and keep its current name, despite the discrepancy in numbers.

The three newcomers all faced being without a conference affiliation after shifts in other leagues, although Virginia Tech and La Salle reportedly had other options.

Virginia Tech and Dayton were both affected by the recent merger of some members of the Metropolitan Collegiate Athletic Conference with some schools from the Great Midwest Conference.

"It came down to what was best for Virginia Tech for all sports, but particularly men's and women's basketball, and this was best for us," athletics director David T. Braine said of choosing the Atlantic 10. "We already have a Northeast identity and with our student breakdown it all lent itself to the Atlantic-10 being a better fit."

La Salle, in its third season as a member of the Midwestern Collegiate Conference, joins a much more geographically compatible league, with Temple and St. Joseph's University (Pennsylvania) also located in Philadelphia.

Men's lacrosse committee to pick 25th anniversary team

The NCAA Men's Lacrosse Committee will select a Silver Anniversary Team in conjunction with festivities surrounding the 25th anniversary of the Division I Men's Lacrosse Championship.

The NCAA will celebrate the championship's silver anniversary this year at the University of Maryland, College Park, May 27-29.

Overall, 69 players (18 attackmen, 22 midfielders, 19 defensemen and 10 goalkeepers) have been nominated for the anniversary team by current and past head coaches. Twenty-one players will compose the team.

Ballots have been forwarded to all current Division I men's lacrosse coaches, those coaches who have participated in past championships, and current and former members of the NCAA Men's Lacrosse Committee. The first ballot has been forwarded to those participating in the selection process; if necessary, a second ballot to break ties will be distributed in March. It is anticipated that each individual elected to the team will be notified in mid-April.

The anniversary team will be announced to the general public during the week of the championship, and will be honored during the Division I championship banquet May 26 and at half time of the championship game May 29.

Another record crowd is expected for the championship in Byrd Stadium. Spectators should note that due to a construction project, the stadium seating capacity has been reduced to 33,000 for the 1995 championship; therefore, early purchase of tickets is urged.

The Division III Men's Lacrosse Championship game also will be played at Byrd Stadium May 28.

Special travel packages, including tickets, are available through NCAA Travel (800/243-1800) for individuals planning to attend the championships.

Ticket information can be obtained from the Maryland ticket office; telephone 800/462-8377.

Numbers

Division I-AAA institutions that had maintained football programs in Division III were faced with a choice of dropping their football programs or moving them to Division I-AA; most chose to move to I-AA, resulting in an increase of 26 I-AA teams and a decrease of 31 Division III teams.

Not only did Division I-AA grow by 26 teams, football programs moving up from Division III became bigger because a typical I-AA team comprises 98.4 players, compared to the Division III average of 77.3. The net result was an increase of 2,811 players in Division I-AA.

However, the number of football players in the other divisions dropped by 1,731, meaning the net gain for football was 1,080.

A total of 189,642 men participated in NCAA sports, the most since 1986-87, when 190,017 took part. Men's participation increased by 2,917 athletes, a 1.6 percent rise from 1992-93. As with the women, it is the fourth consecutive increase for men's participation.

The women's sports with the biggest participant gains were soccer (1,220), crew (641), and softball and outdoor track (598 each). Several women's sports showed large gains in the number of teams, including soccer (59), golf (29), and basketball and softball (28 each).

Basketball remains the women's sport with the most teams (855), followed by volleyball (810), tennis (759) and cross country (727). Outdoor track has the most participants (13,436), followed by basketball (11,710), indoor track (11,459) and softball (10,954).

Football gained the most individual participants in men's sports with 1,080 athletes, followed by baseball (829), basketball (319) and soccer (226). Men's basketball gained the most teams with 23, followed by baseball with 21. Men's soccer and golf each gained 18 teams.

Basketball also topped the list of men's sports for the most teams (854), followed by baseball (751) and cross country (730).

In both men's and women's sports, most participation gains took place at the Division I level. Women gained 3,308 participants in Division I while men gained 3,841, most of the gains coming in I-AA football.

The number of participants also was up in Division II, where there were 2,296 additional male student-athletes and 1,909 more female student-athletes.

Men's participation fell sharply in Division III (minus 3,220), mostly because of football. Women's participation in that division rose by 568.

Pell Grants' use comes under scrutiny by Nunn

The ranking minority member of the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations has questioned whether student-athletes who are receiving athletics grants in-aid should also be entitled to receive Pell Grants.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Georgia, stated his concern in reaction to a U.S. General Accounting Office review of Federal student financial aid grants, commonly known as Pell Grants.

"I see no reason why the Federal taxpayer should be forced to give financial aid to a person who already has his or her tuition, fees, room and board, and books covered by some other types of financial aid," Nunn said. "While the Congress examines the use of Federal funds in other programs, I seriously question the practice of handing additional cash out to students whose expenses are covered by full scholarships — athletic or academic."

The GAO surveyed 52 Division I-A NCAA institutions between 1992 and 1994 and determined that they had saved about $668,000 in the 1991-92 as a result of NCAA legislation that limited the amount of non-Federal aid that could be disbursed to student-athletes who had received a Pell Grant exceeding $1,700. The NCAA subsequently voted to permit student-athletes to keep the full Pell Grant for which the student-athlete qualified, but the GAO said that some of the schools surveyed continued to maintain a $1,700 cap.

Richard C. Steiner, director of the General Accounting Office, said U.S. Department of Education regulations do not prohibit the $1,700 limit.

represented gender in their athletics programs. On most coeducational campuses, the underrepresented gender is female.

The interest level of women has become more important as institutions work toward compliance with any one of the components of the three-part test.

Many institutions fail the proportionality test largely because, for more than two centuries, American society has promoted sport as an admirable and worthwhile pursuit for men. Hence, there have been proportionately more males active in athletics than females.

By comparison, women only recently have begun to find acceptance as athletes. It is only fairly recently — perhaps in the past 25 years or so — that women's athletics has been promoted as something more than just recreation.

And now, 23 years after the passage of Title IX, the question is this: Should institutions that contend they are accommodating the interest of women in athletics be required to achieve proportionality? Some NCAA constituent groups are seeking an answer to that question from Congress.

And that question leads to another: How should the level of interest be measured? In many cases, surveys are the only quantitative evidence an institution can present to defend itself against claims that it is not accommodating the interest of women.

Thirteen inducted into hall

Thirteen men will be inducted into the College Football Hall of Fame this year.

Among the honorees are Paul Robeson, the Rutgers University, New Brunswick, all-American who also became famous as a singer and movie star. Robeson, a four-sport athlete at Rutgers from 1917 through 1918, was selected to the hall posthumously after being passed over for years, possibly because of his political views. He was blacklisted on Broadway after 1945 as a communist sympathizer.

He died in 1976.

Also selected was Jim Brown, who gained 2,091 yards and scored 25 touchdowns at Syracuse University before going on to a brilliant National Football League career with the Cleveland Browns.

Former Arizona State University coach Frank Kush also was selected. Kush posted a career record of 176-54-1, including winning seasons in 21 of 22 years.

Also selected to the hall were Chris Burford of Stanford University; Tommy Casanova of Louisiana State University; Jake Gibbs of the University of Mississippi; Rich Glover of the University of Nebraska, Lincoln; James Grabowski of the University of Illinois, Champaign; Jim Martin of the University of Notre Dame; Dennis Onkotz of Pennsylvania State University; Rick Redman of the University of Washington; Billy Sims of the University of Oklahoma; and Mike Singleary of Baylor University.

All will be inducted at the foundation's dinner in New York December 12.

NCAA Research Committee has developed a survey instrument that is being tested at four institutions representing all divisions: Long Beach State University; North Dakota State University; Washburn University of Topeka; and the University of Wisconsin, La Crosse.

Ursula R. Walsh, NCAA director of research, says the goal of the pilot program is eventually to make available to the membership a survey tool that effectively can determine specific interest levels of the underrepresented gender at a particular institution.

"It distinguishes the different levels of participation," Walsh said. "You can be interested just in intramurals or club sports or varsity athletics. We want to find out what young people would like to do, and es to make sure that our athletes and the game represent what we would like for it to represent," said University of Arizona football coach Dick Tomey. "I think professional football at this time is a poor role model for college football. I think we have to continue to legislate...so that we get the kind of conduct from our players that we want represented."

Even though some aspects of the game warrant immediate correction, coaches also contend that the game is in possibly the best overall condition in its history — particularly because of increased emphasis on student-athlete welfare.

"I do think our game is the cleanest it's ever been and that coaches basically want what's best for the individuals," said Frank Beamer, head coach at Virginia Polytechnic Institute. "We have a job, and it's a very serious job. You've got to win football games to survive. I think there is a legitimate concern for the players, more so than there ever has been."

Pay for play

That concern apparently does not move coaches to advocate paying athletes to play. Some coaches at the forum, however, expressed support for improving financial support already available to student-athletes.

"I think the athletes with extreme needs still find it very difficult to live what is 'a normal college life,'" Tomey said. "I think, at the very least, we need to look at being able to have the athletes who can demonstrate the greatest need to have some way of receiving more aid. That's a tremendously important issue in athletics at this time."

Gene Stallings, head coach at the University of Alabama, Tuscaloosa, said many players lack appreciation for the value of scholarships. He said sufficient measures already are in place to help student-athletes meet the financial challenges of college life.

session at the NCAA Convention in January. It also reviewed the results of a survey on restructuring that was conducted at the Convention.

Regarding governance, the survey showed that 93.6 percent of those responding said the task force should make every effort to retain as much of the current Division III structure and legislative process as possible. Only 3.8 percent believed the task force should consider proposing more representative models of governance in an attempt to streamline the legislative process. Less than three percent had other suggestions.

Ultimately, the committee:

■ Expressed continued support for the concept of greater federation, but not complete federation, in governance of the

College Football Forum notes

■ NCAA Executive Director Cedric W. Dempsey addressed participants in the forum, which was held for the first time in conjunction with the American Football Coaches Association's issues group meeting. Dempsey said it is important that constituent groups such as the American Football Coaches Association (AFCA) continue to work toward developing a consensus in their message.

"I've been extremely excited about the growth of the AFCA," Dempsey said. "The AFCA has been one of the coaches groups that has worked together. In trying to create change, they've got to develop a consensus." Dempsey also discussed NCAA restructuring, sportsmanship, financial aid and gender-equity issues.

■ There also was discussion of a Division I-A football championship. One of the more vocal supporters of a playoff at the forum was Pennsylvania State University football coach Joe Paterno, whose Nittany Lions placed second behind the University of Nebraska, Lincoln, in wire-service polls after an undefeated 1994 season.

"The only thing I have on my mind is a playoff," Paterno joked during a panel discussion. "Why would that be?"

More seriously, Paterno said he supports a four-team playoff after bowl games are completed. He said he is not sure what would be the most effective and objective way of selecting participants in such a playoff. He also believes any talk of a playoff becomes moot if players aren't interested.

"If the student-athlete doesn't want that, it wouldn't make any sense having it," he said.

■ Coaches expressed concern about the maximum number of 85 scholarships currently permitted in Division I-A football. They contend the number is insufficient. The AFCA, however, will not push at this time for legislation addressing the issue.

"Division I-A needs 90 scholarships, but we're not going to recommend that right now," said Grant Teaff, executive director of the AFCA. "Statistics show that 85 is not 85. It's 79. With attrition, statistics show you lose about that many."

■ Calvin Bowers, a football player at Bowling Green State University and a member of the NCAA Student-Athlete Advisory Committee, suggested that consideration should be given to providing student-athletes a vote at NCAA Conventions on legislation that directly affects student-athlete interests.

"Maybe someday, we'll be able to get a vote," he said. "Why not? It all affects the student-athlete. Why shouldn't we have a vote on these issues?"

■ The AFCA will survey its Division I-A membership to determine interest in instituting tiebreaking procedures for regular-season contests.

The AFCA's Teaff said ties can become a hindrance for teams needing a sixth victory to be considered for a postseason bowl-game appearance.

"A tie doesn't count, it's like two losses (one for each team)," Teaff said.

—Ronald D. Mott

"I think scholarships are worth a little something," he said. "I sent five people to college. I know what that's worth. Somewhere along the line, (players) need to appreciate full scholarships."

"The Pell Grant addresses this. The NCAA helps. People really don't realize that. If you've got a player drastically in need of a coat or if there is a death in the family and he's got no money to go (to the funeral), the NCAA addresses those issues and they'll help."

Some coaches contend that student-athletes are not doing their part to maximize financial aid benefits. Fred Goldsmith, head coach at Duke University, said persuading his players to complete Pell Grant applications is a struggle.

"I've found that I've spent more time coaxing and getting people to go apply and to fill out the paperwork (for the Pell Grant)," Goldsmith said. "The very kids who need the financial assistance the most,

I've had the hardest time getting to go fill out the paperwork."

Robert M. Sweazy, vice-provost for research and faculty athletics representative at Texas Tech University, says he favors increasing the value of scholarships to reflect the cost of attendance at an institution. He conceded, however, that many institutions would have difficulty financing such an increase.

"I wouldn't mind seeing the cost of scholarships being brought up to the cost of attendance," Sweazy said. "I've heard (arguments) that nonathletes can get any amount of financial aid, but they don't. Those scholarships don't exceed the cost of attendance."

Student-athlete view

Bowling Green State University junior Calvin Bowers, a member of the NCAA Student-Athlete Advisory Committee and the first student-athlete invited to participate in a College Football Forum, offered another perspective.

Bowers admitted the issue of pay for play is thorny and said his peers realize that "You have to look at the economics of the school, the number of kids you have to pay at a school," Bowers said. "Are you going to pay the revenue sport players more than the nonrevenue sport players? Are you going to pay the quarterback more than the kicker because he has more responsibility? Are you going to pay the senior more than the freshman? It's a complex issue."

But Bowers said it is an issue that warrants further discussion, particularly because legislation at the 1995 NCAA Convention that would have allowed student-athletes to earn up to $1,500 during the academic year through employment was defeated.

"Sunday is my day off (during the football season) and if I could work four or five hours at a local store and make $20, that's $20 more in my pocket," he said. "(The Student-Athlete Advisory Committee) felt we should be afforded the chance to have the availability to work because it would help us financially."

An athletics administrator participating in the forum suggested that the entire pay-for-play debate could be rendered moot with an affirmative answer to this question: Is the athletics program an integral part of the university and its educational mission?

If so, athletics programs should be funded by the university, said McKinley Boston, vice-president for student affairs and athletics at the University of Minnesota, Twin Cities.

"If in fact (athletics) was valued and universities funded it at the level that it was valued, we would now not be getting caught up into whether the student-athlete is being used or prostituted in a way to help fund programs. That's a very fundamental debate that gets back to the issue of values."

Task force to add faculty athletics rep position

The Division III Task Force has agreed to contact the Faculty Athletics Representatives Association to fill a new position designated on the task force for a faculty athletics representative.

Interested faculty representatives may contact FARA or Kevin C. Lennon, NCAA director of compliance services and FARA liaison, at the national office.

The task force hopes to have the new representative appointed by mid-March so that he or she can attend the next meeting, which will be April 12-13 in Dallas.

In a related matter, Milton L. Bradley, faculty athletics representative at Delta State University, has been appointed to serve in a similar capacity on the Division II task force.

Association.

■ Reinforced commitment to the concept of one institution/one vote related to Division III legislation.

■ Continued to express its concern that the continued growth of the membership in Divisions II and III has Association-wide ramifications and should be addressed as part of any restructuring plan.

■ Acknowledged the importance of diversity as part of any new governance structure.

The task force agreed that it does not support a special Convention on restructuring since budget limitations could preclude many Division III institutions from attending. Instead, it recommended addressing restructuring legislation in conjunction with the annual NCAA Convention, perhaps setting a special day aside for that purpose.

On another matter involving timing, the task force noted that although restructuring legislation could be passed at the 1996 Convention, the Association should consider an August 1997 effective date to implement the initial phases of whatever plan is adopted. The extra time would aid in working out the many legislative details that would develop.

The task force's next meeting will be April 12-13 in Dallas. Subcommittees were appointed to examine the following issues for that meeting: membership issues (new members and Division III membership criteria), federation (which issues should be federated and which should remain Association-wide and the effect of that distinction on the governance structure), financial considerations (overall funding considerations and the budget process) and championships issues (format, sports-sponsorship and optimum bracket sizes, selection process, missed class time, and other student-athlete issues).

Administrative Committee minutes

Conference No. 2 February 9, 1995

1. Acting for the NCAA Executive Committee, the Administrative Committee:

a. Took the following actions regarding committees and committee appointments as a result of the expiration of Executive Committee and Council members' terms in January 1995:

(1) Budget Subcommittee: Noted that NCAA President Eugene F. Corrigan automatically replaces Joseph N. Crowley; Secretary-Treasurer Phyllis L. Howlett automatically replaces Prentice Gault as chair; and Division II Vice-President Lynn L. Dorn automatically replaces Charles N. Lindemann.

(2) Division I Championships Committee: Noted that Eugene D. Smith, Iowa State University, automatically replaces Howlett as a member; Patty Viverito, Gateway Football Conference, automatically replaces Charles S. Boone, University of Richmond; and Susan A. Collins, George Mason University, automatically replaces Don J. DiJulia, St. Joseph's University

(Pennsylvania).

(3) Division II Championships Committee: Appointed Robert T. Becker, Saginaw Valley State University, to replace Clint Bryant, Augusta College; appointed Dorn to replace Lindemann; and reappointed Noel W. Olson, North Central Intercollegiate Athletic Conference, for a one-year term as the at-large member.

(4) Division III Championships Committee: Reappointed Sam S. Bedrosian, Aurora University, for a one-year term as the at-large member.

2. Acting for the Council:

a. Took the following actions on committees and committee appointments:

(1) Council Subcommittee on Personnel Limitations: Appointed Sondra Norrell-Thomas, Howard University, to replace Shirley A. Walker, Alcorn State University.

(2) Council Subcommittee on Playing and Practice Seasons: Appointed Robert M. Sweazy, Texas Tech University, to replace Doris R. Soladay, Syracuse University; appointed Constance Hurlbut, Patriot League, to replace Viverito; and appointed Carol M. Dunn, California State University, Los Angeles, to replace Bryant.

(3) Division II Women's Volleyball Committee: Appointed Joan McDermott, codirector of athletics and women's volleyball coach, Morningside College, to replace Dorn, resigned.

(4) Women's Basketball Rules Committee: Appointed Barbara J. Schroeder, associate athletics director, Regis University (Colorado), to replace Dorn, resigned.

(5) Women's Soccer Committee (Division III subcommittee): Appointed Mike Russ, women's soccer coach, Messiah College, to replace Lisa Melendy, Williams College, whose term expires September 1; and appointed Gail Murphy, women's soccer coach, Southwestern University (Texas), to an additional position created by the adoption of Proposal No. 11 at the 1995 NCAA Convention.

b. Noted that the adoption of Proposal Nos. 35 and 35-1 at the 1995 Convention raised questions as to whether a partial qualifier during 1995-96 will remain an individual who meets the current standard (i.e., 2,000 cumulative grade-point average) or become an individual who meets the standard that would have gone into effect this fall with no changes in Proposal No. 16 from the 1992 Convention (i.e., 2,500 cumulative grade-point average); agreed to use its authority under NCAA Constitution

5.4.1.1.1 to amend the legislation to specify that the current definition of a partial qualifier (2,000 cumulative grade-point average) will remain in effect through 1995-96.

c. Approved a recommendation from the Legislative Review Committee to incorporate three interpretations in the 1995-96 NCAA Manual (Bylaw 11.7.5.1, Bylaw 13.1.3.4 and Bylaw 14.3.1.1), noting that they also would be included in the Official Notice for the 1996 Convention, and that if any delegate objected to their incorporation they could be deleted from the 1996-97 Manual; and deferred action on two additional interpretations until the February 27 meeting.

d. Denied a request for a waiver of NCAA legislation per Bylaw 11.7.1.1.2 to permit an institution to replace a countable coach who is taking a leave of absence to participate on the U.S. women's national soccer team; noted that this was consistent with the Administrative Committee's June 25 action to deny a similar request from an institution whose coach chose to coach a U.S. basketball team.

3. Acting for the Executive Committee and Council, the Administrative Committee discussed an apparent misunderstanding among the membership as to the effect of the adoption of Proposal No. 104 at the 1995 Convention (which extended the moratorium on the discontinuation of National Collegiate Championships through 1996-97); noted that the Council and the Executive Committee understood the legislation to apply only to National Collegiate Championships (for which all three divisions are eligible), but that some in the membership thought it also applied to division championships (specifically, the Division II Men's Lacrosse and Men's Ice Hockey Championships); noted Constitution 5.4.1.1.1 permits the Council to amend legislation consistent with the intent of the membership in adopting that legislation; and noted that if sufficient documentation and testimony as to the intent are brought forward, the Council will review that information at its April meeting.

4. Report of actions taken by the executive director per Constitution 4.3.2. Acting for the Executive Committee:

Approved the following regional sites for the 1995 NCAA Division I Men's Tennis Championships: Region I, Princeton University; Region II, Old Dominion University; Region III, Louisiana State University; Region V, University of Kansas.

1995 Column No. 7

1995 NCAA Convention Proposal No. 4 Recruiting — evaluations subsequent to signing

With the adoption of Proposal No. 4 (effective immediately), an institution may evaluate a prospect an unlimited number of times subsequent to the calendar day on which the prospect signs a National Letter of Intent or the calendar day on which the prospect signs the institution's written offer of admission and/or financial aid (for those institutions that do not use the National Letter of Intent). Please note that this regulation does not permit an institution to exceed the limit of two evaluations for prospects who have not signed a National Letter of Intent or who have not signed an institution's written offer of admission and/or financial aid (for those institutions that do not use the National Letter of Intent). The following examples illustrate the application of this legislation.

Situation: Institution A evaluates a prospect on two occasions while the prospect is participating on her high-school basketball team and the prospect subsequently signs a National Letter of Intent with the institution during the early signing period.

Question 1: Is it permissible for Institution A to evaluate the prospect at a third contest involving the prospect's basketball team?

Answer: No. Such activity would cause Institution A to exceed its limit of two evaluations on other prospects at the high school who have not signed a National Letter of Intent with the institution.

Question 2: It is permissible for Institution A to evaluate the prospect at a nonscholastic contest (e.g., AAU event)?

Answer: Yes, provided Institution A has not evaluated any other prospects participating in the nonscholastic contest who have not signed a National Letter of Intent with the institution on more than two occasions during the academic year.

Correction

1995 NCAA Convention Proposal No. 125

NCAA Division I institutions should note that Legislative Assistance Column No. 4 (January 25, 1995, edition of The NCAA News) incorrectly stated that the effective date of Proposal No. 125 is immediate. The correct effective date of Proposal No. 125 is August 1, 1995.

Correction

1995 NCAA Convention Proposal No. 79

NCAA institutions should note that Legislative Assistance Column No. 5 (February 1, 1995, edition of The News) incorrectly stated that as a result of the adoption of Proposal No. 79 (effective immediately), a nonrecruited student-athlete whose admission was granted with regard to athletics ability may receive institutional financial aid without being considered a counter, provided the institution has on file in the office of the athletics director certification by the faculty athletics representative, the admissions office and the director of financial aid that the student's financial aid was granted without regard to his or her athletics ability. The column should read that a nonrecruited student-athlete whose admission was granted with regard to athletics ability may receive institutional financial aid without being considered a counter, provided the institution has on file in the office of the athletics director certification by the faculty athletics representative and the director of financial aid that the student's financial aid was granted without regard to his or her athletics ability. Under such circumstances, it is not necessary for the admissions office to certify that the student's admission was granted without regard to athletics ability.

Revision

Division II football recruiting calendar

Division II football coaches should note that due to the change in the initial signing date for the National Letter of Intent, subparagraphs (f) and (g) of the Division II football recruiting calendar set forth in figure 13-6 of the 1994-95 NCAA Manual have changed and should read as follows:

"(f) December 1, 1994, through March 6, 1995 [Except for (1) below] — Contact Period.

"(1) January 30 (8:00 a.m.) through February 1 (8:00 a.m.) — Dead Period.

"(g) March 7, 1995, through April 30, 1995 [Except for (1) below] — Quiet Period.

"(1) During any high-school all-star game that occurs within the state in which the member institution is located — Evaluation Period."

Convention focus adds importance to National Student-Athlete Day

A national celebration April 6 of the eighth annual National Student-Athlete Day (NSAD) will feature recognition of thousands of high-school and college student-athletes for achieving a balance between academics and athletics.

NSAD is sponsored by the Center for the Study of Sport in Society, the National Consortium for Academics and Sports, and the NCAA.

This year's observance — coming after an NCAA Convention that focused on student-athlete welfare, access and equity — has special significance. Commenting on the NCAA's support of NSAD, Executive Director Cedric W. Dempsey noted that "NSAD helps to remind everyone that we must place the students' needs first."

Hundreds of events across the country will put a spotlight on NSAD — including signature events at the sites of this year's Final Four and Women's Final Four.

In Minneapolis, site of the Women's Final Four, a panel of female coaches and athletes will be assembled to discuss women's sports in the year 2000. Meanwhile, the National Association of Basketball Coaches will host NSAD at its Fan Jam in Seattle, site of the men's Division I championship semifinals and final. During that event, professional and collegiate athletes will talk to 5,000 high-school students about the importance of balancing academics and athletics.

"Over the last three years, with the support of the NCAA membership, the achievements of student-athletes are truly being recognized across the country," said Richard Lapchick, founder and director of the Center for the Study of Sport in Society and the National Consortium for Academics and Sports.

In addition to the day's various activities, NSAD will feature the announcement of this year's Giant Steps Award winners.

The awards are given annually in the following categories: courageous student-athlete, civic leaders, coaches, parents, athletics administrators and schools. The recipients are individuals and organizations that possess and implement the ideal of student-athletes working together both on and off the field.

This year's recipients will be honored in November at an awards dinner in Boston.

Last year's Giant Steps Award winners included former NCAA President Joseph N. Crowley; University of Iowa women's basketball coach Vivian Stringer; and University of Nebraska, Lincoln, football coach Tom Osborne.

Nomination forms for this year's awards were included in packets that have been mailed to NCAA institutions. Nomination forms are due by March 1.

The honorary cochair for NSAD

1995 are Betty Jaynes, executive director of the Women's Basketball Coaches Association; James Haney, executive director of the NABC; Sen. Bill Bradley, D-New Jersey; NCAA Woman of the Year Tanya Hughes of the University of Arizona; Alan Page, associate justice of the Minnesota Supreme Court; Osborne; Rachel Robinson, chair of the Jackie Robinson Foundation; and 1995 NCAA Today's Top Eight honoree Rob Zatechka of Nebraska.

Further information about NSAD and the Giant Steps Awards can be obtained from Pamela Gutlon, national coordinator of the National Consortium for Academics and Sports, telephone 617/373-4025.

maybe this will be useful to (institutions)."

North Dakota State has received substantial benefits from its use of the pilot survey instrument, said Lynn L. Dorn, women's athletics director there and NCAA Division II vice-president. She said the survey — which was conducted as part of corrective action mandated by an OCR compliance review — validated what the institution believed all along: It effectively was accommodating the athletics interests and abilities of its female students.

The results of North Dakota State's extensive survey, in which an impressive 70 percent of more than 1,100 questionnaires distributed were returned, produced positive news for the institution: The OCR accepted the institution's report February 13.

Even so, Dorn urges caution in interpreting exactly what a survey says.

"It did verify that North Dakota State effectively is accommodating the interests of its student-athletes,"

"Assessments of interests traditionally are unreliable. I think energies would be better spent for everyone to get (into compliance) by showing added programs for women. Start showing a continuing history of program expansion."

■ Charlotte West

Associate athletics director, Southern Illinois University at Carbondale and former member of the NCAA Gender-Equity Task Force

she said. "We're not surprised with the results. But you have to be very cautious about how you perceive the results and benefits of a survey."

No enthusiasm for surveys

Others share Dorn's concern about how survey results are interpreted. In fact, at Division I institutions, it's hard to find much enthusiasm for the use of surveys. Some Division I administrators believe they are ineffective at that level.

"I'm personally not interested in doing a survey at the intercollegiate level, especially not at Division I," said Christine H. B. Grant, women's athletics director at the University of Iowa. "I think it's totally unnecessary because the bulk of Division

I athletes are recruited student-athletes."

Charlotte West, associate athletics director at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale and a member of the now-disbanded NCAA Gender-Equity Task Force, said interest surveys can be inaccurate and yield flawed results. In addition, she says institutions could more efficiently utilize their energies by concentrating on another component of the three-part Title IX compliance test — showing a history of program expansion for the underrepresented gender.

"Assessments of interests traditionally are unreliable," West said. "I think energies would be better spent for everyone to get (into compliance) by showing added programs for women. Start showing a continuing history of program expansion. I am so turned off by (the survey) approach. I never have been nor ever will be an advocate of that. I am a strong advocate of creating opportunities and focusing our attention on the second prong of the test."

Valerie M. Bonnette, founder of Good Sports, Inc., and a former OCR senior program analyst who coauthored the 1990 investigator's manual that is still used by the civil rights office, said surveys can offer some benefits, despite the potential for obtaining flawed results.

She said a more effective way of checking interests may be for an institution to survey its club and intramurals programs — and even selected physical education courses — to determine whether sufficient interest and ability exists to warrant funding those programs at the intercollegiate level.

"I think the usefulness of surveys is trying to identify if there is an interest for a sport that is not represented," Bonnette said. "You can do a survey and it can tell you that 90 percent of the males are interested in sports and 10 percent of women are interested. Surveys can be very misleading. I don't think they are particularly useful at institutions that are heavily into recruiting."

The key to compliance, said University of Arizona athletics director Jim Livengood, is that institutions need to make a real commitment to equity.

"Sometimes it's easy to give lip service to equity until push comes to shove," he said. "The No. 1 thing to change is attitude. We need to get to a point where equity is viewed as an ongoing process and not an end result. Equity needs to be an everyday thing."
