Concern mounts over sports agents' influence

BY RONALD D. MOTT
AND STEPHEN R. HAGWELL
STAFF WRITERS

For the elite high-school student-athlete, the recruiting process is an exercise in routine. The months — and in some cases, years — of receiving brochures in the mail, fielding telephone calls and juggling numerous visits to interested colleges may even be anxiety-filled at times. For most student-athletes, however, it's only a once-in-a-lifetime experience.

But for those elite student-athletes who become standouts in the two high-profile sports — men's basketball and football — the recruiting process does not end with high school.

As a student-athlete focuses on playing professionally, another recruiting process takes center stage. The process involves contracts, stocks and bonds, annuities, taxes, and retirement — unfamiliar topics for most 19- and 20-year-olds.

The recruiters in this phase are sports agents — a potpourri of lawyers, entrepreneurs, financial planners, marketing professionals and others — who aim for a slice of the multibillion-dollar pie that is professional sports.

The NCAA and its member institutions have grown more concerned about sports agents in recent years. Their recruitment of collegiate student-athletes has resulted in an increasing number of NCAA rules violations, and the expanding presence of sports agents or their accessories — known as "runners" — threatens the already fragile precept of amateurism.

During the next month, The NCAA News will probe the issue of sports agents and their impact on intercollegiate athletics. After a look this week at the history of the issue, the series will focus on four perspectives:

■ Part 2: Agents will evaluate their profession and the people who work inside it.

■ Part 3: Former college student-athletes will describe their experiences with sports agents, outlining techniques some agents employ to begin the relationship.

■ Part 4: Several NCAA staff members whose work involves direct contact with professional leagues and other amateur athletics associations will discuss plans the Association and other groups have — and the obstacles they each face — for curbing the problem.

■ Part 5: Representatives of NCAA institutions, which may be in the best position to guard against the sometimes unscrupulous practices of sports agents, will discuss measures they are taking to educate student-athletes on how to handle agents. They also will address the question of whether NCAA members are doing an acceptable job of handling responsibilities relating to agents.

A young industry

As industries go, the sports representation business is a relative newborn.

Although it is about 30 years old, the industry has been worthy of being called such only in the past five to 10 years. Its growth is directly related to the boom in professional athletes' salaries that began in the mid-1980s.

Bob Woolf is credited by many as being the grandfather of the sports agent business. In 1966, Woolf moved into an unprecedented role of representing an athlete in contract negotiations. The player was a member of the Boston Red Sox who asked Woolf a year earlier to manage his off-the-field activities. Woolf became one of the preeminent sports agents in the country before he died in November 1993.

As player salaries have soared, the sports agents business has evolved. Salaries of professional athletes long

Athletes keep Olympic dream alive through NCAA facilities

But less-rigid rules would create more opportunities, officials contend

BY MARTIN T. BENSON
STAFF WRITER

Royce Alger wrestled his way to two NCAA titles (1987 and 1988) while competing for the University of Iowa. He hopes to achieve similar success in the Olympics.

For that to be a possibility, he needs work and he needs a place to do that work. Thanks to his position as volunteer assistant to Hawkeye coach Dan Gable, he has both.

"If it hadn't been for this position at Iowa, I wouldn't have had an opportunity to train," he said.

The nation's universities are filled with both volunteer and paid assistants in similar situations in many sports. Alger need only look across the wrestling room to see another, former world freestyle champion Tom Brands, who is a salaried assistant. The two are just part of a tradition in which Olympic hopefuls have split time training and coaching under Gable — himself an Olympic gold medalist.

Since wrestling requires training partners, such situations are commonplace in the sport, but by no means limited to it. For instance, international track stars such as Carl Lewis and Leroy Burrell have been volunteer assistants at the University of Houston, as have other Olympic-caliber competitors in many sports.

The mutual benefits are obvious.

"I've always tried to hire someone who aspires to be an Olympic champion," Gable said. "Most of the kids that any coach of a top-20 team deals with will tell you that one of their long-time goals is becoming an Olympic champion. Most of them obviously never do it, but for them to continue to have that goal, it helps to have someone around to show the dedication it takes."

One who did reach that goal is Bruce Baumgartner, head wrestling coach at Edinboro University of Pennsylvania and former assistant at Oklahoma State University. A two-time

Rayburn appointed to Commission

Wendell G. Rayburn Sr., president of Lincoln University (Missouri), has been appointed to the NCAA Presidents Commission.

He replaces Donald W. Wilson, who recently resigned as president at Pittsburg State University.

Rayburn began his career as a teacher and administrator in the Detroit public schools. In 1968, he joined the University of Detroit, where he eventually became associate dean of academic support programs. From Detroit, he went to the University of Louisville, where he was a dean and professor of liberal studies.

In 1980, he was appointed president of Savannah State College. He was selected as the 16th president of Lincoln in January 1988.

He currently is a member of the board of trustees for Stephens College and is on several other civic boards in the Jefferson City, Missouri, area.

He also chaired the board of directors of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities for a year beginning in November 1992.

Rayburn

Rayburn has published many articles in leading professional journals and has presented papers at professional conventions.

He is senior author of "Compensatory Education: Effective or Ineffective," which was published in the Journal of Counseling Psychology in 1975 and was selected to be included in the prestigious Gray's Research Collection at Hofstra University in 1979.

Rayburn earned a bachelor of arts degree from Eastern Michigan University, a master of arts degree from Michigan State University and a doctorate from Wayne State University (Michigan).

Title IX

OCR expected to issue policy guidelines soon

The Office for Civil Rights of the U.S. Department of Education is expected to provide all colleges and universities with updated Title IX policy guidelines at the beginning of the 1995-96 academic year.

OCR has not said exactly when the guidelines will be released, but the expectation is that they will be available in mid-September.

In a related development, a Title IX lawsuit involving the University of Pennsylvania has been settled. The university will upgrade locker rooms, gyms and equipment used by its women athletes and turn several women's coaching jobs into full-time positions under a settlement announced August 30. Financial terms of the settlement were not released, and Pennsylvania did not admit to any violation of civil rights law.

Meanwhile, a New York Supreme Court judge ruled that the State University of New York at Albany did not violate Federal sex-bias laws when it dropped four sports (three of them men's sports) to bring the institution's athletics program in compliance with Title IX.

Committee develops plan to control bat technology

The NCAA Baseball Rules Committee is using a two-part plan to control the effect of new bat technology on the game.

The first phase involves the development of a test procedure to determine the performance level of different bats. A physics professor and a technical expert hired by the Sporting Goods Manufacturers Association will conduct performance tests and provide data for the committee to analyze by November 1.

The committee intends to select and announce an interim bat performance standard for the 1996 season by November 15. The interim bat performance standard likely will compare to the 1994 regular-season performance level of nonwood bats.

If manufacturers have to modify already manufactured bats to meet the standard, they will do so between November 15, 1995, and February 1, 1996. Those bats, which would require a sticker that states the bat is in compliance with the standard, then would be allowed for competition. Any bats that do not meet the performance standard and that do not have a sticker would not be allowed for Divisions I, II and III competition.

The second phase involves establishment of a performance standard for the 1997 season. For the committee to decide on a performance standard, it will evaluate (1) interim bat-performance standard testing; (2) field testing; (3) data from the 1996 season and how bats compare to previous year's bats; and (4) an expanded version of lab and field tests on numerous bats of varying type, size and weight.

The NCAA Football Rules Committee clarified the football playing rule against unsportsmanlike conduct September 1, one day after Liberty University sought a temporary restraining order to prevent enforcement of the rule.

On August 31, Liberty University filed a lawsuit in Federal court claiming that the rule prohibited players from kneeling in prayer on the field and amounted to religious discrimination in violation of the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

The next day, the Football Rules Committee issued the clarification of the rule, explaining that the rule is intended to prohibit any act that is delayed or prolonged in an attempt to call attention to an individual. Praying is not a violation of the rules, wrote committee chair Vincent J. Dooley, and players may kneel in prayer "momentarily" at the end of the play.

Membership

Number of NCAA members hits all-time high of 1,200

With 60 new provisional members in the last year, NCAA membership has climbed to an all-time high of 1,200.

Because the NCAA Council declared a moratorium on new membership in August, that number is not expected to increase over the next two years. The Council action postponed acceptance of new members until the Association's restructuring efforts are complete.

There were no new active members in the last year, but the number of provisional members increased by 33 in Division II, 26 in Division III and one in Division I-AA.

For more information, see page 20.

Regional seminars

Dates and sites determined for '96 compliance seminars

Three 1996 NCAA regional rules-compliance seminars will be conducted May 8-10, St. Louis (Hyatt Regency Union Station); May 22-24, Boston (Park Plaza Hotel); and May 29-31, Newport Beach, California (Marriott). All dates are Wednesday through Friday.

Registration materials and a tentative agenda will be mailed February 8 to Divisions I and II athletics directors, faculty athletics representatives, senior women administrators and compliance coordinators. Those who attended regional seminars in 1995 also will receive registration materials and a tentative agenda.

■ Briefly in the News

Sight to see; sound to hear

Cheerleaders take pride in their ability to lift vocal support for their team.

For a pair of Lenoir-Rhyne College cheerleaders, however, satisfaction does not come from hearing fans respond to their cheers. For Colleen Carosella and Gabe Wright, there is a much deeper satisfaction.

Both hearing impaired, Carosella and Wright joined the cheerleading squad last year and they've made a mark — particularly with the 24 other hearing-impaired students on the Hickory, North Carolina, campus.

"It was during the football season that I noticed a lot of the deaf students didn't understand the cheers," Carosella said. "I suggested that we begin signing, too, so we could include everyone in our cheers."

Wright can distinguish some sounds but not words. Carosella cannot hear at all; she is unable to receive the vibrations given off by loud speech and music. That is what makes her dance routines, which key off of the beats in the music, a marvel. She stays in coordination with her fellow cheerleaders simply by watching them.

"All of my friends were nervous for me" at a recent performance, she said. "But they really were impressed. Everybody was impressed. Even President Ryan LaHurd was impressed."

Carosella's and Wright's presence on the squad has been plagued by only one mishap. It occurred when a pyramid, a popular cheerleading formation, was changed at the last minute and Wright was not told. He performed the wrong move.

"I have to say that Gabe took it well," cheerleading coach Laurie Brill said. "He was able to laugh it off."

While Carosella and Wright have adjusted to learning how to cheer, the team also has been forced to adjust. "We leave the light on so they can talk" when on the road, Brill said. "I'm trying to think of ways the squad can accommodate the needs of Colleen and Gabe."

For Wright, being able to serve on the squad has been a positive experience.

"It makes others look good, look equal," he said. "It shows that deaf people can do anything."

Gabe Wright and Colleen Carosella, members of the Lenoir-Rhyne College cheerleading squad, are making sure everyone on campus can cheer the school's athletics teams. Wright and Carosella, who both are hearing impaired, sign cheers so that other hearing-impaired students can understand the cheers.

Fans flock to classic

More than 7,300 volleyball fans converged on the University of Nebraska, Lincoln, campus August 24 and 25 for the inaugural State Farm Insurance/National Association of Collegiate Women Athletic Administrators (NACWAA) Volleyball Classic. Some of the top women's volleyball teams were there, too.

Defending NCAA Division I champion Stanford University dealt host Nebraska its first regular-season defeat since 1993 in the classic's championship game. Stanford also beat California State University, Northridge, in the tournament. Nebraska advanced to the final by beating Pennsylvania State University.

"The classic was a great success for all involved," said Jane Betts, NACWAA executive director. "It is fitting that the first classic took place in the centennial year of the founding of the sport of volleyball.

"Women's volleyball has exploded in growth since those early years, and the NACWAA classic showcased the best in the sport."

The American Volleyball Coaches Association also was instrumental in developing the classic and will continue to work with NACWAA on the event.

Screen for the team

A company in Mission, Kansas, has produced a screen saver — a program that moves images across the screen of an unoccupied computer to help prolong the life of the monitor — that tells passers-by who the computer user roots for.

Sports schedules that allow the user to track the record of his or her favorite university team, as well as such graphics as the team's mascot in action and such sounds as the school fight song, all are part of SportsLink Screen Savers' latest product.

"It is funny," Richard Hawkins, senior vice-president of SportsLink, told The Kansas City Star. "As soon as people hear their school song, they snap to attention, put their hand over their hearts and mutter or sing along. They are sold on it at that point."

In the first few weeks of its release, SportsLink's screen-saver sales topped $200,000, more than covering the development costs of nearly $130,000. The programs have a suggested retail price of $16.

The screen savers are available in computer stores, groceries, college bookstores and electronics stores and run on IBM-compatible and Macintosh machines.

Screen savers are available for 23 colleges, including all but one member of the newly formed Big 12 Conference and the 11 teams of the Big Ten Conference.

Steve Curtis, a software buyer for the multimedia department at Nebraska Bookstore in Lincoln, Nebraska, said the screen-saver program featuring the 1994 wire-service football national-champion Cornhuskers is selling well.

"We liked it mainly because it has a lot of action to go with it," he said. "There is a lot of animation and sound effects. We demo it on our machines and it sells quite well. The sound and fight song draw them right to it."

■ Looking back

5 years ago: NCAA officials join with executives of the Sara Lee Corporation September 18, 1990, in Chicago to announce a three-year partnership devoted exclusively to the promotion of women's athletics. Sara Lee commits a minimum of $6 million to the program — the largest financial commitment yet by an NCAA corporate partner. The promotional program will include presentation of an annual award — the NCAA Woman of the Year award — to the Association's outstanding woman student-athlete. (The NCAA News, September 24, 1990)

10 years ago: The NCAA Executive Committee approves a reorganization of the NCAA enforcement department, which is renamed the compliance and enforcement department. In addition, the legislative services staff is given an expanded role in conducting regional rules clinics for member institutions and conferences. The actions are taken to ensure that comparable attention is given to development and interpretation of NCAA legislation, services to assist institutions in determining the best way of achieving compliance with Association rules, and enhancement of enforcement efforts in response to the June 1985 special Convention's mandate for more severe treatment of major and repeated rules violations. (The NCAA News, September 16, 1985)

20 years ago: The NCAA enforcement staff nearly doubles in size with the addition of four new investigators. The new staff members are Brent Clark, who earned undergraduate and law degrees at the University of Oklahoma; Hale McMenamin, a 26-year veteran of the Federal Bureau of Investigation; Bob Minnix, a former University of Notre Dame running back and University of Washington law school graduate; and Ron Stratten, head football coach at Portland State University. (NCAA News, September 1, 1975)

25 years ago: Sixty-six of the nation's 118 "major college" football programs take advantage of new legislation by scheduling an 11th football game in fall 1970. Ten teams — including all Ivy Group members — will play only a nine-game schedule and 42 teams will play 10 games in 1970. (NCAA News, September 1970)

NCAA News resumes weekly publishing schedule

With this issue, The NCAA News returns to its weekly publishing schedule after publishing every other week during the summer.

The News' weekly schedule will continue through next June, except during the week between Christmas Day and New Year's Day, when no issue will be published.

This issue of the News also features some changes in design. The most noticeable changes include a new look on pages 1 and 2 and in headlines, photos and regular features throughout the paper.

The News also has discontinued its practice of printing on Mondays during the fall months. Now, the paper will be printed year-round at midweek, for reasons reported in the August 2 issue of the News.

The News continues to publish football and women's volleyball statistics. Those statistics also can be obtained in a timely fashion from the Association's new fax-on-demand system. A directory of information available via fax-on-demand was published in the August 30 issue of the News.

Even though the News will be printed at midweek, readers may notice that issues of the paper display a Monday publication date.

The date appearing on each issue will be the Monday after the actual printing of an issue. That date more accurately will reflect the day by which most readers receive each week's issue of the News. Until now, the date on each issue has reflected the day on which an issue was printed.

Although deadlines for classified advertising remain unchanged in practice, the new method of dating the News changes the way in which deadlines are described to advertisers. Advertisers can use a chart appearing weekly in The Market section of the News to determine future advertising deadlines.

■ Committee notices

Member institutions are invited to submit nominations to fill interim vacancies on NCAA committees. Written nominations to fill the following vacancies must be received by Fannie B. Vaughan, executive assistant, in the NCAA office by October 4, 1995 (fax number 913/339-0035).

Student-Athlete Advisory Committee: Replacement for Lisa Gay, formerly at California State University, Chico, no longer at a Division II institution. Appointee must be a student-athlete at a Division II institution in Region 4. Region 4 consists of Division II institutions in the states of Alaska, Arizona, California, Colorado, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, Washington, Wisconsin and Wyoming.

Replacement for Lynne M. Kraskouskas, Bryn Mawr College, whose term expires September 1, 1996. Appointee must be a student-athlete from Division III, Region 2. Region 2 consists of Division III member institutions in the states of New York and Pennsylvania, plus institutions transferred from Division III, District 1, because of conference affiliation [Drew University; Fairleigh Dickinson University, Madison; Johns Hopkins University; Washington College (Maryland); and Western Maryland College] and one institution transferred from Division III, District 3, because of conference affiliation [Bethany College (West Virginia)].

Division I Women's Volleyball Committee: Replacement for Suzanne J. Tyler, formerly at the University of Maryland, College Park, now at the University of Maine. Appointee must be from the District 3 region of Division I women's volleyball. District 3 region consists of members of the Atlantic Coast, Mid-Eastern Athletic, Big South and Colonial Athletic Conferences.

□ Student-athlete view

Committee sets agenda for 1995-96

BY TANYA HUGHES
NCAA STUDENT-ATHLETE ADVISORY COMMITTEE

The NCAA Student-Athlete Advisory Committee approaches this year with three primary goals:

They are:

■ Improving the network that has been developed to address student-athlete issues throughout the NCAA.

■ Working to achieve a desirable outcomes on legislation that pertains to student-athletes.

■ Working with other committees of the Association to improve student-athlete benefits.

The ultimate goal, of course, is the creation of a climate in which student-athletes can achieve their complete academic and athletic potentials. The membership has taken positive actions in recent years in both areas, but the Student-Athlete Advisory Committee believes that much more progress is possible.

That progress begins, we believe, with enhancing the network that has been developed to address student-athlete issues. The 1995 Convention filled in large pieces of that puzzle when it voted to mandate student-athlete committees on every NCAA campus and establish student-athlete representation on several key NCAA committees. Conferences have assisted by creating their own student-athlete committees.

All of those actions are important. But unless a cohesive, functioning network is developed, we still could end up with an inefficient operation that, for all of its good intentions, is stymied by oversight and duplication. At the moment, the parts are in place for an effective student-athlete network; the national Student-Athlete Advisory Committee and the leadership of the Association must work together to make the network as effective as possible.

Our legislative agenda is described in a story that appears on page 5 of this issue. Two of the proposals that we support — permitting Division I student-athletes to generate income through out-of-season employment and allowing a fourth year of athletics

Two-year college proposals misguided

The NCAA Council's plan to sponsor legislation aimed at preventing abuses of rules for two-year college students who transfer to NCAA institutions is labeling all two-year colleges as less-than-honorable academic institutions.

Would it be fair for those of us in two-year institutions to label all NCAA institutions as cheaters and corrupt based on what we read and hear daily?

Prop 48 students have been stigmatized as not being capable of doing college work. The NCAA intends to further stigmatize junior colleges as being academically and professionally incapable by the proposed legislation.

Two-year colleges have provided many opportunities for students, and labeling them because of a few is wrong.

Just play the game

I am writing in regard to the NCAA rule regarding celebration and taunting.

To me, there is a distinct difference between enthusiasm and celebration. It seems the players and media get it confused. Players were celebrating plays they were supposed to make.

What the media fail to realize is that when you are a coach or player on the team that is receiving the taunting or celebration, it doesn't sit well with you.

What you read between the lines is that you are "no good," or "a loser," or "incapable." In the truest sense of sportsmanship, taunting shows no respect for your opponent.

A message to the players: Just play the game. The scoreboard and your effort speak louder than any celebration.

□ Opinions

How about more respect for children?

Ed Fowler, columnist
Houston Chronicle

"When I was a kid, we were told often enough to show respect for age. Now that I'm not, I'm not sure the same lesson is preached often enough to us grown-ups.

"We treat the very old well enough for the most part, but we often seem disrespectful of the age of the very young.

"In Pennsylvania recently, a group of Little Leaguers from these parts (Texas) did themselves proud, winning the championship of the U.S. and showing glorious grit in a losing bid for dominance of the entire planet. The team from Spring lived a 12-year-old's dream, and, back home, we were privileged to follow them on television.

"That's cool, as they might say, and better, cleaner fun we couldn't imagine — until word reached us that people were asking prepubescent stars from around the globe for autographs.

"Autographs. What an empty life an adult must lead to ask a 12-year-old for his signature, and I don't care how many grand slams the kid tagged. Someone needs to grab these nitwits by the throat and scream, 'They are c-h-i-l-d-r-e-n.'

"But the message probably wouldn't penetrate. Some can't seem to grasp the premise that kids aren't supposed to be treated as adults. I'm reminded of the argument a psychologist made against certain TV programming she found unsuitable for youngsters. Why couldn't their parents police what they watch?

"Parents," she explained, "are so easily intimidated."

"The brain-dead ones are. Only now are we beginning to wake up to the crimes perpetrated against girls in the interest of athletics glory — for someone. A recently released book by Joan Ryan, 'Little Girls in Pretty Boxes,' focuses on the abuse, emotional and physical, visited on girls by coaches and parents in pursuit of Olympic medals and other prizes.

"Some of these children haven't been trained like adults; they've been prodded like pack animals....

"We owe these kids some respect for their age, from refusing to tolerate using them to refusing to tolerate them using us.

"Certain acts of humiliation and adulation, whether they be on the giving end or the receiving, might be acceptable for their elders but inappropriate for them, simple as that.

"These are things we parents should keep in mind as we try not to be so easily intimidated."

Agents

Hayden Fry, football coach
University of Iowa

Chicago Tribune

"You've got agents telling a kid in the defensive secondary, 'Now, don't you be coming up tackling that 230-pound fullback. You'll get hurt, and if you're hurt your contract won't be nearly as large.'"

Chris Darkins, football player
University of Minnesota, Twin Cities

Chicago Tribune

"I think it's kind of annoying, just the things they (agents) say. They said, 'We just want to talk to you, become your friend, build a relationship with you, because our clients are more than just clients.'"

"It's a bunch of bull. There's no way it can be anything else, because the root of the relationship is money."

"I'm a real advocate for people going to school. I think you should go to college. There's a lot of incentive to play the college game. For me, school comes first...."

About dismissing agents:

"The minute I said I was going back to school, the agents would look at me and say, 'Later.'"

Extra games

John Kunda, columnist
The Allentown Morning Call

"College football, with the NCAA's blessing, of course, recently gave us two 'classics' to get the season underway.

"I'd rather call these games the 'Backward Bowls.'"

"Don't get me wrong, the college game has always been a favorite of mine.

"What bugs me, however, is that the NCAA keeps turning thumbs down on a playoff game to determine a legitimate national champion (it lets the polls do that) because it's not fond of 'extra games.'"

"These 'classics' are 'extra games,' but, apparently, they get the blessing of the NCAA in August, but thumbs down in January after the bowl games are played.

"That's doing things backward, don't you think?"

Initial-eligibility standards

Phil Gramm, United States senator
The Associated Press

Discussing establishing standards for Federal student loans:

"If you can't make a 700 on the SAT test, you can't go to the University of Georgia to play football because the NCAA says you are not a real student. Yet you can make a 700 on the SAT test and borrow $10,000 to go to college. It makes absolutely no sense."

David Warren, president
National Association of Independent
Colleges and Universities
The Associated Press

"It would be a mistake to use one and only one variable, board scores, to determine eligibility (for Federal student loans). There are substantial numbers of persons who score rather poorly on their boards, but their grades in high school turn out to be a better predictor of performance."

Ned Sparks, executive secretary
Maryland Public Secondary Schools Athletic Association
The Baltimore Sun

"There's nothing worse than sending a kid to a place where he's in over his head. Big-time athletics has become a monster, in some cases with athletics departments lying to kids (about concerns for their academic success), using up their athletics eligibility before they graduate and then discarding them."

Dwayne Green, high-school football player
The Baltimore Sun

"Some people are good test-takers; some aren't, regardless of what color they are. To be honest, I didn't think I did well at first, because I didn't answer some questions, but that didn't count against me like if I had answered them incorrectly. The vocabulary that was in the test I learned in ninth and 10th grade, so I guess it depends on what you've been taught."

Student-athletes push earnings proposal again

The NCAA Student-Athlete Advisory Committee is throwing its support — again — behind a proposal that would allow Division I student-athletes who receive a full grant-in-aid to earn additional money to supplement institutional aid.

The proposal, sponsored by the Big Ten Conference for Division I consideration at the 1996 NCAA Convention, is similar to a proposal defeated at last year's Convention that would have permitted a student-athlete to earn up to $1,500 in excess of a full grant-in-aid. The proposal was defeated by the Division I membership, 118-99-8.

The Student-Athlete Advisory Committee met August 27-29 in Kansas City, Missouri.

"The committee felt like it was a proposal that made sense," said Jason C. Wilkie, a member of the committee and coordinator of academics and compliance at Arkansas State University. "I think the reason it failed (at last year's Convention) was because of the $1,500 cap."

"Without the cap, it's a better proposal. It benefits both the student-athlete and the administrator."

The proposal is an attempt to address the unmet financial needs of student-athletes by allowing them to retain employment earnings. Only income earned during the nontradi-

Student-Athlete Advisory Committee August 27-29/Kansas City, Missouri

■ Continued discussions regarding the development of a student-athlete network that would help connect campus student-athlete advisory committees to conference committees, as well as to the national committee. The committee recommended that The NCAA News be mailed to all campus student-athlete advisory committees and that minutes of the national committee's meetings be supplied to campus groups.

"The committee is very focused on networking with all campus committees," said Janet Justus, NCAA director of education resources and staff liaison to the committee. "They want conferences to start developing committees and to start getting the word out."

■ Met with a representative of the News and expressed the committee's desire to continue writing editorials for the News regarding student-athlete issues. The committee agreed that it would submit its first article in September (see page 4).

tional or off-season portion of a student-athlete's sport could be exempted. The proposed elimination of a cap in earnings also addresses the problem of athletics departments needing to monitor amounts earned.

The NCAA Council, at its August 7-9 meeting, did not take a position for or against the proposal, although it decided to oppose a proposal sponsored by the Big West Conference that would allow outside employment with the $1,500 cap.

"The committee is glad to see that the membership proposed the legislation again," said Janet M. Justus, NCAA director of education resources and staff liaison to the committee. "And it notes that this legislation asks that the earnings not be capped at $1,500.

"That's a compliance person's nightmare. Plus, there's only so much you can earn during that off-season segment, anyway."

The committee also reviewed other proposed legislation, including:

■ A proposal that would permit, in Divisions I and II basketball, one telephone call to a prospect before July 1 following the completion of the prospect's junior year in high school. The committee opposed the proposal.

"The committee has spoken to this issue before," Justus said. "They don't want any more phone calls. They're saying, 'Stop it.'"

■ A proposal that would permit a student-athlete who is enrolled in a graduate or professional school of an institution other than the school he or she attended as an undergraduate to use the one-time transfer exception. The committee supported the proposal, noting that a student-athlete should not be penalized for finishing a degree on time or earlier. The committee also believes a student-athlete should be able to attend the graduate school of his or her choice and still be able to complete his or her eligibility.

■ A proposal for Division I that would permit a partial qualifier to earn a fourth season of competition, but that would eliminate the opportunity for a partial qualifier to practice during the first year in residence. The committee believes that being able to earn a fourth season of competition is more important than being able to practice during the initial year of enrollment.

In an unrelated matter, the committee encouraged a subcommittee of the NCAA Executive Committee to continue to explore possible ways to increase benefits for student-athletes.

"It's not about pay-for-play issues," Justus said. "The committee is looking for ways for all student-athletes to benefit and is encouraging the Executive Committee to continue looking at the opportunities."

The committee also voiced concern that the proposed restructuring model does not provide for adequate involvement of student-athletes. The committee voted to send a memo to the Oversight Committee on the NCAA Membership Structure and the Divisions I, II and III Steering Committees regarding its concerns about maintaining a voice within the Association.

"Student-athletes want a voice in the new structure," Justus said. "The committee wants to emphasize that one more time to the oversight committee."

eligibility for partial qualifiers—were voted down at the 1995 Convention. Although that outcome was regrettable, we are enthusiastic that similar legislation has been sponsored again this year. Both proposals require responsibility on the part of student-athletes (work and academic performance), but both reward achievers in tangible ways (income and additional eligibility). Both represent a more human approach to student-athlete welfare, and both illustrate the cooperative attitude that propels our idea of reform.

Our final goal involves the enhancement of student-athlete benefits. I want to stress that the committee does not support pay-for-play. It does support, however, a less exploitative environment for many of our student-athletes. A subcommittee of the NCAA Executive Committee is examining this issue now, and we are enthusiastic about that effort. We ask that solutions be as broad-based as possible, but that attention also be given to student-athletes who have extreme unmet financial needs, possibly through a significant enlargement of the special-assistance fund.

We look forward to addressing all of these challenges in 1995-96 and ask that administrators and coaches throughout the NCAA join us in our efforts to elevate the student-athlete experience.

Committee aims to control bat technology's effect

The NCAA Baseball Rules Committee has set in motion a two-phase plan to control the effect of new bat technology on the game.

The first phase, which already has begun, involves the development of a test procedure to determine the performance level of different bats.

Richard A. Brandt, a physics professor at New York University and a technical expert hired by the Sporting Goods Manufacturers Association (SGMA), will conduct performance tests and provide data for the committee to analyze by November 1, 1995. Other independent research organizations may conduct performance tests. The committee has expressed an interest in evaluating all data provided by researchers in order to make informed decisions.

By November 15, 1995, the committee intends to select and announce an interim bat performance standard for the 1996 season. The interim bat performance standard likely will compare to the 1994 regular-season performance level of nonwood bats.

If manufacturers have to modify already manufactured bats to meet the standard, they will do so between November 15, 1995, and February 1, 1996. Those bats, which would require a sticker that states the bat complies with the standard, then would be allowed for competition. Any bats that do not meet the performance standard and that do not have a sticker would not be allowed for Divisions I, II and III competition.

The second phase of the plan involves the establishment of a performance standard for the 1997 season. The committee will evaluate (1) interim bat performance standard testing; (2) field testing; (3) data from the 1996 season and how bats compare to previous year's bats; and (4) an expanded version of lab and field tests on numerous bats of varying type, size and weight.

The committee has asked Brandt and perhaps other testers to provide the expanded report of bat performance data no later than July 1, 1996. The rules committee then will select the bat performance standard it wants for the 1997 season, with the understanding that the committee may select a different standard from the interim standard used in 1996 and might alter it as conditions in the game change.

"The technology of bat manufacturing has evolved to where it has passed the game," said Bill Rowe Jr., athletics director at Southwest Missouri State University and chair of the rules committee. "This effort will help reestablish the competitive balance between offense and defense and will ensure that future advancements in bat performance will not threaten the integrity of the game."

"The committee also feels that the effect of this action will preserve the sound tradition of the sport and may make the game safer."

Rowe added that one of the key points for the bat performance standard under consideration is that it would allow manufacturers to use the materials of their choice when manufacturing a bat, as long as the bat does not exceed the performance standard selected by the committee.

Since meeting with bat manufacturers at its July 11-14 meeting in South Lake Tahoe, California, the committee has developed a core list of items that should be tested by any interested research group:

■ That the bat performance test measure a bat's performance at 3 inches, 6 inches and 9 inches from the barrel end of the bat.

■ That in addition to the nonwood bats manufactured for the 1994 regular season and a professional wood bat, the test measure performance of the Baum Pro Model composite wood bat and the bats that Easton and Louisville Slugger provided to NCAA member institutions that participated in the 1995 NCAA Division I Baseball Championship. The committee is interested in comparing the percentage difference in the performance of wood, nonwood and composite wood bats.

■ That a test measure the ball speed off the bat and the time it takes the ball to travel to the pitcher (measured at 54 feet from the front edge of home plate) and to the first and third basemen (measured at 90 feet).

■ That a bat compression test be performed to determine the elasticity of each bat measured at the "sweet spot."

The committee will allow Brandt to conduct random and periodic testing

See Bat, page 13 ►

OTHER HIGHLIGHTS

Baseball Rules Committee July 11-14/South Lake Tahoe, California

■ Revised Rule 1-11 to require that all bats have a leather, rubber or tape grip attached securely to the bat handle.

■ Revised the Approved Ruling after Rule 8-2-d so that if a batter is intentionally hit by a pitch, the umpire shall call a strike or ball. For example, if the pitch is outside the strike zone when it hits the batter, the pitch shall be called a ball if the batter obviously was attempting to get hit by the pitch.

■ Added language to Rule 9-1-a-(6) to read: " 'Directly' is interpreted to mean within a 45-degree angle measuring from the pivot foot toward the base the pitcher is throwing or feinting a throw."

■ Revised Rule 9-1-b-(3) so that when the pitcher is in the set position and his free foot or any part of the stride leg breaks the plane of the back edge of the pitcher's rubber, he is committed to throw or feint a throw to second base or pitch to home plate.

■ Denied a request by the Iowa Conference to implement a 10-run rule after five innings and a reentry rule, and denied a request by the Middle Atlantic States Collegiate Athletic Conference to allow a player to reenter the game after he is forced to leave because of the blood rule.

Football committee: 'Momentary' praying on field allowed

Intent of rule to prohibit any prolonged attempts at attracting attention

The NCAA Football Rules Committee clarified the football playing rule against unsportsmanlike conduct September 1, one day after a Division I-AA institution sought a temporary restraining order to prevent enforcement of the rule.

On August 31, Liberty University filed a lawsuit in Federal court claiming that the rule prohibited players from kneeling in prayer on the field and amounted to religious discrimination in violation of the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

The next day, the Football Rules Committee issued the clarification of the rule in a memo (see accompanying box) from Vincent J. Dooley, chair of the committee and director of athletics at the University of Georgia. In it, Dooley explained that the rule is intended to prohibit any act that is delayed or prolonged in an attempt to call attention to an individual. Praying is not a violation of the rules, Dooley wrote, and players may kneel in prayer "momentarily" at the end of the play.

The memo was faxed to all NCAA member conferences and mailed to conference officiating supervisors and athletics directors and head coaches at football-playing institutions.

Upon receipt of the memo, U.S. District Judge James C. Turk found Liberty's request to be moot.

Since then, however, reports in the national news media have characterized the memo as a reinterpretation or correction, rather than a clarification of intent.

Was the memo really a "clarification?" Or was it an "about face?"

Liberty officials believe it was the latter.

"What they did...is a total redirection from where they were headed," said the Rev. Jerry

Clarification memo

A memo from NCAA Football Rules Committee chair Vincent J. Dooley clarifying the committee's interpretation of football playing rules against unsportsmanlike conduct was mailed September 1 to directors of athletics at all NCAA member football-playing institutions. Similar memos were faxed to all conference offices and mailed to head football coaches and conference supervisors of officials.

Following is the text of Dooley's memo to athletics directors:

Background

The Football Rules Committee recently distributed a videotape to football-playing member schools and conferences in an effort to assure consistency in the understanding and application of the rule prohibiting unsportsmanlike acts, which include "any delayed, excessive or prolonged act by which a player attempts to focus attention upon himself." The videotape included a play in which a player kneels in the end zone after scoring a touchdown. It is noted in the video that this is a delayed and prolonged act designed to draw attention to the individual and thus a violation of the rule.

The committee is concerned about reports it has "banned prayer" from football. It is not the intent of the Football Rules Committee to prohibit prayer, on or off the playing field. The committee is emphasizing an existing rule against acts that by their timing or duration draw attention to an individual and ignore the contributions of the entire team.

Clarification

Praying has always been and remains permissible under the rules. However, overt acts which may be associated with prayer, such as kneeling, may not be done in a way that is delayed, excessive or prolonged in an attempt to draw attention to oneself. Players may pray or cross themselves without drawing attention to themselves. It is also permissible for them to kneel momentarily at the conclusion of a play, if in the judgment of the official the act is spontaneous and not in the nature of a pose. So, too, several members of a team could engage in a brief act of prayer at the conclusion of a play. They may also engage in prolonged acts of prayer after returning to the bench area.

In considering this issue, the committee determined that it would be impracticable to construct an exclusion from the rule for prayer-related activities. Such an exclusion would open a window for a variety of attention-drawing displays under the guise of prayer. Thus, the committee has taken a position against any action — regardless of intent — that detracts from the team spirit of football.

As a final note, let me say that the individual committee members appreciate the value and importance of the religious beliefs of student-athletes. However, when acting as a rules committee of the NCAA, we can neither oppose nor endorse prayer.

I hope this clarifies this issue. Please feel free to contact me or other members of the committee if you have any questions about the rule.

Best of luck in the upcoming season.

Falwell, an evangelical minister who founded the school in 1971. "It is disappointing that the NCAA is attempting to leave the impression that Liberty misunderstood the rules.... They should just 'fess up and say, 'We screwed up and we're sorry.'"

Liberty head football coach Sam Rutigliano, who joined four players as plaintiffs in the suit, said, "While it may not have been the intent of the NCAA to throw the flag at prayer, their own explanation of the rules made it clear that it would be penalized."

The explanation was delivered to all football-playing schools in the form of a videotape produced this summer by the rules committee to more clearly define unsportsmanlike conduct. The 21-minute tape contains the committee's rulings on footage of potentially unsportsmanlike taunting or celebration. The rulings make it clear that the committee wants to crack down on prolonged, individualistic acts that focus on the player rather than the team.

In one play, a player crosses the goal line and kneels down with his head bowed. As the frame freezes for several seconds, the narrator says that this type of kneeling "is a foul because it focuses attention on one person at the expense of the rest of the team."

John Adams, the committee's secretary-rules editor, acknowledged that the segment did not adequately depict the committee's interpretation of the rule as it relates to prayer.

"In retrospect, the committee probably should have handled this issue differently in the tape," he said. "We could have either explained that it was the prolonged length of the kneeling that was at issue, or we could have tried to find a clip of a very brief kneel and indicated that this was within the rules."

"This was one of more than 40 plays that we were dissecting to try to cover a wide range of common actions that players are doing. That's

Bethune-Cookman receives four years of probation

The NCAA Committee on Infractions has placed the athletics program at Bethune-Cookman College on probation for four years for NCAA rules violations involving a lack of institutional control, impermissible financial aid, and use of ineligible student-athletes in its football, men's and women's basketball, baseball, women's track and field, and men's tennis programs.

Bethune-Cookman faces a one-year ban on postseason competition in football, a one-year ban on televised contests in football and men's basketball, reductions in football and men's basketball scholarships for two years, and reductions in expense-paid recruiting visits in football and men's basketball.

The violations primarily involved providing impermissible financial aid to 40 student-athletes who were nonqualifiers and partial qualifiers. In addition, the committee found a lack of institutional control resulting from the university's lack of knowledge regarding NCAA rules and inadequate communication and coordination between the athletics department, financial aid office and the registrar.

The Committee on Infractions found NCAA rules violations, including the following:

- During the 1991-92 and 1992-93 academic years, the institution provided a total of $161,604 of general scholarship funds to 28 football and five men's basketball student-athletes who failed to meet NCAA academic standards to qualify for athletics aid. These partial qualifiers and nonqualifiers received the scholarships based on the recommendation of the football or basketball coaches and approval from the institution's president.

- During the three academic years 1990-1993, three football and two men's basketball student-athletes received a total of $27,011 in institutional athletics aid, even though they did not meet the academic qualifications to be eligible for such aid. At least two other football student-athletes received a total of $15,629 in improper aid in 1992-93 to cover expenses from the 1991-92 academic year, a year in which these student-athletes were not eligible for aid.

- During the 1991-92 and 1992-93 academic years, a men's basketball student-athlete participated in a total of 32 contests even though he had not completed the required 24 hours of academic credit during the previous academic year.

- During the 1991-92 and 1993-94 academic years, four baseball, one track and one tennis student-athlete practiced, competed and, at least twice, received expenses even though they did not meet NCAA eligibility requirements.

- The institution did not follow its own regularly published entrance requirements when it admitted numerous student-athletes based on unofficial transcripts and without standardized test scores, completed admissions forms or required recommendation forms.

- During the 1991-92 academic year, the institution provided more than the maximum 15 athletics scholarships in men's basketball.

- The institution lacked appropriate institutional control. Though not intentional, the violations demonstrated a lack of knowledge regarding NCAA rules and inadequate coordination between the athletics department, financial aid office and registrar.

The case was handled under the summary-disposition procedure, which the institution and the NCAA enforcement staff can agree to follow in major infractions cases. The process may be used if the member institution, involved individuals and NCAA enforcement staff agree on the facts and that those facts constitute major violations of NCAA legislation. The institution proposes suggested penalties, which the Committee on Infractions can accept, reject or change. In this case, the committee accepted the proposed penalties but decided to impose a few additional penalties.

The committee adopted penalties that were self-imposed by Bethune-Cookman, including:

- No postseason competition in football for the 1995 season.

- No televised contests in football or men's basketball in the 1996-97 academic year.

- Reduction by two in the total number of men's basketball scholarships, from the 13 allowed to 11, for the 1996-97 academic year, and a reduction by one, from the 13 allowed to 12, for the 1997-98 academic year.

- For the 1995-96 and 1996-97 academic years, a reduction by 10 from the maximum allowed 50 expense-paid visits in football, leaving a total of 40.

- For the 1995-96 academic year, a reduction by five from the maximum allowed 12 expense-paid visits in men's basketball.

- Elimination of all off-campus recruiting activities in football during the May 1995 evaluation period.

- Forfeiture of Heritage Bowl revenue distribution for one year, effective 1995.

- Forfeiture of all regular-season contests in which an ineligible men's basketball student-athlete competed.

- Public reprimand and censure of the college's athletics program.

The Committee on Infractions acknowledged the following penalties imposed by the Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference:

- Forfeiture of 1993 football victories in two games.

- Probation for the institution's football program during the 1994 season.

- Forfeiture of all conference awards or honors received by an ineligible football student-athlete during the 1993-94 football season.

Bethune-Cookman took many corrective actions, which were considered by the committee in imposing its penalties, including:

- Terminating the employment of the head coaches in baseball, track and field, and tennis.

- Holding rules and educational workshops for the institution's staff and alumni.

- Allowing institutional personnel to attend professional development seminars, and conference and NCAA regional compliance seminars.

- Procuring and implementing the NCAA compliance software package.

- Developing and implementing an athletics department manual of policies and procedures.

- Hiring an experienced compliance officer to assist the director of athletics.

The Committee on Infractions decided to impose additional penalties, which were accepted by the college, including:

- Probation for four years beginning June 2, 1995, the date the committee considered the summary-disposition report.

- Reduction by eight in the total number of football scholarships, from the maximum 63 allowed to 55, for each of the 1996-97, 1997-98 and 1998-99 academic years.

- Reduction by five in the total number of student-athletes who can receive athletics financial aid in football, from the 85 allowed to 80, for each of the 1996-97, 1997-98 and 1998-99 academic years. (Division I-AA institutions may award partial scholarships in football.)

- Development of a comprehensive educational program on NCAA rules.

As required by NCAA legislation for any institution in a major infractions case, Bethune-Cookman is subject to the NCAA's repeat-violator provisions for a five-year period beginning June 2, 1995.

Bethune-Cookman admitted the violations of NCAA rules under the summary-disposition procedure. Because it agreed to participate in this process, accepted the findings of violations in the infractions report and accepted the penalties proposed by the Committee on Infractions, the university has waived the right to appeal the decisions made in this case.

The members of the Committee on Infractions who heard this case are Richard J. Dunn, divisional dean of humanities, University of Washington; Jack H. Friedenthal, dean of the school of law, George Washington University; Frederick B. Lacey, attorney, LeBoeuf, Lamb, Greene and MacRae, and a retired judge; James L. Richmond, retired judge and attorney; Yvonne (Bonnie) L. Slatton, chair of the department of physical education and sports studies, University of Iowa; and committee chair David Swank, professor of law, University of Oklahoma.

The complete report of the Committee on Infractions will be published in the October 2 issue of The NCAA Register.

Administrative Committee minutes

Conference No. 15 August 30, 1995

1. Acting for the NCAA Council:

a. Reviewed information regarding the number of institutions that were considering applying for NCAA membership but had not actually submitted applications at the time the Council, at its August 7-9 meeting, placed a moratorium on membership applications; agreed to waive the moratorium to permit Belmont University to apply for provisional membership, based on the institution's documentation of its intent to do so; and declined to waive the moratorium to permit Nova Southeastern University to apply for membership, based on the absence of such documentation.

b. Amended NCAA Bylaw 30.10.5 to specify that the recruiting periods surrounding the initial date for two-year college football prospects who sign the National Letter of Intent are identical to the periods previously approved for high-school football prospects (i.e., the Sunday before the dead period surrounding the initial signing date is a quiet period; the Monday through Thursday of the week that includes the initial signing date is a dead period; and the Friday after the initial signing date is a quiet period).

c. Amended Bylaws 15.5.3.3.1-b and 15.4.6.2-a, per Constitution 5.4.1.1.1 (intent-based legislation), to specify that in the administration of academic honor awards in Divisions II and III, respectively, a score of 1050 on the nonrecentered SAT (administered before April 1, 1995) is equivalent to a score of 1140 on the recentered version of the SAT (administered April 1, 1995, and thereafter).

d. Approved revisions of Bylaw 33.6.6 in legislative form (previously approved in concept by the Administrative Committee on its June 28 conference call and by the Council at its August 7-9 meeting).

e. Reviewed proposed legislation for the 1996 NCAA

Convention that the Council had agreed in principle to sponsor but had not previously reviewed in legislation form, and approved the legislation with appropriate adjustments.

f. Agreed to sponsor noncontroversial legislation for the 1996 Convention to adjust the starting date for the pre-season contests set forth in Bylaws 17.3.3.1-(c) and (d) to permit them to be played after November 8, 1996 (as opposed to after November 15, 1996), and, in subsequent years, to base the date on a certain number of days before the Final Four.

g. Received as information a list of institutions that had been reclassified effective September 1, 1995.

h. Appointed Cindy Ho, golf coach, Longwood College, to the Men's and Women's Golf Committee, replacing Iris Schneider, formerly at Rollins College but no longer at a Division II institution.

i. Appointed David O'Toole, Bellarmine College, to the Council Subcommittee on Initial-Eligibility Waivers, replacing Richard A. Johanningmeier, resigned; and appointed Robert Baugh, Eastern Kentucky University, as chair.

j. Appointed Julie Jones, compliance officer and assistant softball coach, Cleveland State University, to the Men's and Women's Fencing Committee, replacing Joseph Fazekas, resigned from Cleveland State.

k. Appointed Edward Newman, men's and women's tennis coach, Trinity University (Texas), to the Men's and Women's Tennis Committee, replacing Sue Fischer, formerly at the University of Wisconsin, La Crosse, but no longer at an NCAA member institution.

2. Acting for the Executive Committee:

a. Appointed the following to the Special Committee on Marketing and Licensing, per Executive Committee action at its August 2-3 meeting: Bill Byrne, director of athletics, University of Nebraska, Lincoln; Joan C. Cronan, director of women's athletics, University of Tennessee, Knoxville; John J. Crouthamel, director of athletics, Syracuse University; James E. Delany, commissioner, Big Ten Conference; James J. Duderstadt, president, University of Michigan; Adam Herbert, president, University of North Florida; C. M. Newton, director of athletics, University of Kentucky; Liz Kennedy, director of marketing, University of Southern California; Robert Lawless, president, Texas Tech University (chair); John B. Slaughter, president, Occidental College; John D. Swofford, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill; and Frank Windegger, director of athletics, Texas Christian University; and directed the special committee to examine all current efforts and issues related to the marketing, licensing and promoting of the NCAA, its championships and marks. The committee will make recommendations to the Executive Committee as to the future direction of these activities, the appropriate level of NCAA involvement in them and how they can best be managed in the future.

b. Appointed Jo Spearman, director of athletics, Mississippi University for Women, and Connie Foster, director of women's athletics, University of Wisconsin, River Falls, to the Memorial Resolutions Committee, replacing Gary Nelson, formerly at Montana State University-Bozeman but no longer at an NCAA member institution, and Carla Lowry, Southwestern University (Texas), who declined an earlier appointment; and appointed Barbara Hick, assistant director of athletics, St. Bonaventure University, as chair, replacing Judy Rose, University of North Carolina, Charlotte.

3. Report of actions taken by the executive director per Constitution 4.3.2.

Acting for the Executive Committee:

a. Approved recommendations by the Division I men's tennis subcommittee that the University of California, Los Angeles, serve as host institution for the 1997 Division I Men's Tennis Championships, to be May 17-25; and that the University of Georgia serve as host institution for the 1998 Division I Men's Tennis Championships, to be May 23-31.

a major undertaking, and it's unfortunate that we didn't give a more comprehensive treatment to an area that was so controversial."

Dooley said that the memo is consistent with the committee's intent all along, which is to prevent delayed and prolonged individual actions of any kind without restricting brief, spontaneous displays of emotion or personal conviction.

"We have said all along that this rule allows for religious expression," he said. "Once people understand what the rule is about, they realize it is about drawing attention to yourself to the exclusion of your teammates. Kneeling momentarily in the end zone does not do that any more than a quick pump of the fist or high five from a teammate."

It remains to be seen whether officials' interpretation of "momentarily" will be consistent with the committee's, but Dooley is not concerned. He believes that officials will use good judgment and that the committee's renewed emphasis on sportsmanship will, on balance, be positive for the game.

"I am confident that we will be able to proceed with enforcing a rule that will return good sportsmanship to college football," he said.

KNOWING NO BOUNDARIES

An endless desire for personal excellence prompts
III cross country champ to give modern pentathlon a try

BY STEPHEN R. HAGWELL
STAFF WRITER

The desire to test one's physical and mental limits is inbred, but the frequency of that desire varies individually.

For Jeremie Perry, the desire is constant.

A senior cross country and track and field athlete at Williams College, Perry always is testing his limits — whether on the cross country course or in the classroom.

To date, Perry has aced such tests.

In only two years at Williams, Perry has registered two top-10 Division III cross country championships finishes. Last year, he won the individual title and earned Division III runner-of-the-year honors. He also earned runner-up honors in the 5,000-meter run at the 1994 outdoor track and field championships.

Academically, Perry has been equally successful. A psychology major with a 3.750 grade-point average (4.000 scale), Perry was a 1994 National Cross Country Coaches Association all-academic selection and 1995 GTE/CoSIDA at-large Academic All-American.

"Obviously, Jeremie likes to compete; he likes to do well," said Peter Farwell, men's cross country and track and field coach at Williams. "He's always going to things. Whether he's training or studying, he's always pushing himself."

These days, Perry is testing his physical and mental capabilities in a unique arena: the sport of modern pentathlon.

'Ultimate test'

Referred to by those in the sport's circles as the "ultimate test of the world's greatest all-around athlete," modern pentathlon comprises five events: cross country, swimming, equestrian, pistol shooting and fencing.

Conducted in one day, the sport requires that competitors run 4,000 meters, swim 300 meters, jump 12 to 15 obstacles on horseback, compete in 30 fencing matches of one-touch epee and fire 20 air-pistol shots at a target 10 meters away.

"Modern pentathlon requires finesse, strength and brains — it's a thinking man's sport," said Dean Billick, executive director of the U.S. Modern Pentathlon Association. "It's a real mixture of an athlete's talent. To be successful, you have to be good in such a high number of sports. By requiring such unique and different skills, it takes an athlete with a great intellect as well as physical ability."

Based on results thus far, Perry has the makings to be such an athlete.

Since inquiring about the sport before his freshman year, Perry — who is limited to training during the summer months — has attained a moderate amount of national success.

He earned a second-place finish at the 1995 Olympic Festival and a spot at the 1995 junior world championships in Taiwan. If not for what Perry called a "rough shoot" at modern pentathlon's world junior championships, he easily would have earned a top-25 finish there. Instead, he settled for a finish in the middle of 80 competitors.

"Jeremie is an outstanding prospect," Billick said. "Jeremie, right now, is the best runner in the world in modern pentathlon, and there are some outstanding athletes out there. The reason Jeremie is such a great prospect is that he combines two elements: raw athletic talent with intellect."

A prospect

Right now, Perry is a prospect. Having devoted less than one full year of training to the sport, he is far from being a top-flight competitor. While acknowledging that his skills need honing — especially in fencing and pistol shooting — Perry's interest in the sport and desire to succeed have grown each time he competes.

"It's very challenging physically and it really beats me up, but I enjoy it," said Perry, who became interested in the sport after reading about it in a newspaper. "I like it because it requires you to discipline your body and mind at the same time. Plus, I never really get bored at it. It's very interesting because you're doing such varied things. I may fence a lot, but when I get tired of fencing, I can go and run or swim."

The diversity of the sport may be what keeps Perry's interest, but it clearly is his physical skills that make him such an attractive prospect.

According to Billick, Perry possesses the two ingredients every modern pentathlete must have: a strong running and swimming background. In fact, Billick says a run/swim combination is the first thing his association looks for when recruiting athletes.

"If someone can swim and run, then we'll take them with those basic skills and train them in the other events," he said. "Fencing, equestrian and pistol shooting require a great deal of thought. We can train athletes in those sports. Running and swimming are very physically demanding. They also require a mental toughness, but those are skills that can't be taught, at least at this level."

Perry's running and swimming prowess are directly attributable to his training regimen at Williams.

Turned to swimming

Plagued by stress fractures he incurred as a high-school senior, Perry has implemented a training regimen that limits his weekly mileage training to approximately 40 to 45 miles. By contrast, most cross country athletes average approximately 70 miles.

To offset the reduced mileage, Perry added swimming to his regimen. The result: He is healthier and more aerobically fit.

"Jeremie is what myself and our ski coach (Robert Fisher) call an aerobic machine," Farwell said. "He has a great aerobic capability and he trains that capability. He knows pace very well and he can just be at that red line and hold it, which is what a distance runner has to be able to do."

Douglas Benedict/NCAA Photos

Jeremie Perry of Williams College, the 1994 men's Division III cross country champion, excels on the course and in the classroom. And now he's setting his sights on the sport of modern pentathlon.

Of greatest benefit to Perry's modern pentathlon endeavors, however, is his mental approach.

"Jeremie really likes to prepare mentally. He likes to visualize and think about the races ahead of time," Farwell said. "He's managed to work a lot on imagery and relaxation techniques — things that we often do in terms of preparing an athlete (for a race)."

That, says Billick, is a necessity.

"Several sports require such great thinking and planning," he said. "Equestrian is very challenging because the athletes don't know what horses they've drawn until 30 minutes before the event. You have to be very sound intellectually."

The right combination

Thus far, Perry has exhibited the right combination of those ingredients and attained a modicum of success. However, he is well aware that any future advancement or success hinges not on his physical or mental capacities, but on time.

"Obviously, the thing I need the most work on is fencing," said Perry. "I think I can pick up horseback riding and pistol shooting rather quickly. The main thing about pistol shooting is whether you can keep a level head under pressure. That's something you have or you don't. If I can devote some time to my training, I think I can improve in all those areas."

For now, Perry will prepare for his senior campaign at Williams and for medical school the following year.

As for modern pentathlon, Perry some day hopes to shed the prospect label and put himself in a position to ace the "ultimate test."

NCAA Photos service available free to membership

For the first time, photographs of all NCAA championships are just a phone call away.

The same is true for many historical photos of NCAA teams and players, as well as the photos that adorn the walls of the NCAA Hall of Champions.

Rich Clarkson and Associates — a Denver-based photography and publishing firm founded by well-known photographer Rich Clarkson — has created NCAA Photos, an archive of NCAA championships shots that are available to member institutions, coaches, student-athletes and various media outlets (newspapers, books and magazines).

Clarkson and Associates' collection includes championships photos from the past five years, any photos that have been or currently are displayed in the Hall of Champions, historical shots of several NCAA sports and Clarkson's personal collection of Final Four photographs dating back to 1952. Clarkson's diverse work has appeared in numerous publications, including National Geographic and Sports Illustrated.

Rich Clarkson and Associates has enjoyed a long relationship with the NCAA. It has shot and/or assembled photographs for the Hall of Champions since the facility opened in 1990. Last year, the firm also began supplying championships photographs to The NCAA News.

The photos are useful particularly to member schools' sports

"People can get the photos in through on-line images, or on disc or CD."

information, marketing and communications departments, which may be looking for shots for such things as media guides and game programs, as well as for other publications needing photos of NCAA sports.

"People can get the photos in prints or color transparencies, through on-line images, or on disc or CD," Clarkson said. "The idea is to take all our material and continue to update it each year with great pictures."

Best of all, the service itself is free to member institutions, student-athletes and parents of student-athletes; only the cost of actual materials is charged. Commercial publications must pay rights fees to use the photos.

"This is a service for the membership," Clarkson said.

Searching for a particular photo subject is easy for member institutions and others with a computer and modem. Those schools or individuals can obtain access to Clarkson and Associates' "bulletin board" to view championships photos, which are organized by year, season, sport and division.

Users can view approximately 12 photos from each championship. Clarkson and Associates' staff members also can obtain additional photos if the user does not find the subject he or she is searching for on the bulletin board.

"If among those on-line pictures we don't have the picture of the person you need, we'll go look for it," Clarkson and Associates' Emmitt Jordan said. "We're here and happy to do it."

Those without modem capabilities can call the Clarkson and Associates office to initiate a photo search of a particular individual or team. Any photo published in the News or on display in the Hall of Champions also is available.

"People will be intrigued seeing how they'll be able to call up shots and look at the images from the various championships," Clarkson said. "This is good for college sports, for the NCAA and for the membership."

More information on how to arrange access to NCAA championships photos can be obtained from Clarkson and Associates at 303/744-2538.

Compliance seminars scheduled

Dates and sites have been determined for three 1996 NCAA regional rules-compliance seminars.

The dates and sites are May 8-10, St. Louis (Hyatt Regency Union Station); May 22-24, Boston (Park Plaza Hotel); and May 29-31, Newport Beach, California (Marriott). All dates are Wednesday through Friday.

Registration materials and a tentative agenda will be mailed February 8 to Divisions I and II athletics directors, faculty athletics representatives, senior women administrators and compliance coordinators. Those who attended regional seminars in 1995 also will receive registration materials and a tentative agenda. Others who desire registration material may contact Chris Gates at the national office.

Individuals who develop new compliance-related documents or forms are asked to forward copies to Gates so effective examples can be shared at the regional seminars.

Training sessions for Compliance Assistant software will be conducted at the Boston seminar only. In previous years, Compliance Assistant training has been available at all regional-seminar sites.

This year, however, members of the compliance services and data processing staffs will focus on development and testing of the post-Convention version of Compliance Assistant, which will allow for an earlier release of the software next summer.

■ Interpretations Committee minutes

Conference No. 10
August 24, 1995

Acting for the NCAA Council, the Interpretations Committee issued the following interpretations:

Amateurism/Entertainment/Parents

1. Entertainment of Student-Athlete's Parents By Sponsors of Intercollegiate Competition. A nonprofessional organization sponsoring a competition may provide entertainment free of charge to the parents or legal guardians of all participants in the competition, provided the institution is not involved in the sponsorship arrangements for the competition. The committee referred to the NCAA Staff Task Force to Review Student-Athlete Financial Aid and Benefits and the NCAA Executive Committee Subcommittee on Student-Athlete Benefits the issue of whether it wishes to consider recommending that legislation be sponsored to permit institutions to provide entertainment free of charge to the parents or legal guardians of student-athletes in other situations (e.g., institutional athletics banquets, competition-day functions). [References: NCAA Bylaws 12.1.2-(g) (forms of pay) and 16.6.2 (expenses for student-athlete's friends and relatives — nonpermissible)]

Vacation/Meals

2. Cash Allowance to Cover Meals During Vacation Period. An institution may provide a cash allowance (in lieu of an actual meal) to cover the cost of meals during the institution's vacation period during the regular academic year when student-athletes are required to remain on the institution's campus for organized practice sessions or competition. Under such circumstances, the allowance may not exceed the flat-fee meal rate for walk-ins (i.e., individuals who visit the campus and wish to purchase a meal) or the amount determined by the institution's office of financial aid as being commensurate with the average cost a student at that institution normally would incur eating in off-campus facilities. [References: 15.2.2.1.1 (determination of room and board rate) and 16.5.1-(e) (vacation-period expenses)]

Foreign Tour/Professionalism

3. Participation in Foreign Tour Subsequent to Exhausting Eligibility. A student-athlete who no longer is eligible to represent his or her institution in intercollegiate competition due to a violation of NCAA amateurism regulations (e.g., signed with a professional organization, secured the services of an agent, asked to be placed on the draft list of a professional league) may not participate in an institution's foreign tour. [References: 12.1.1 (amateur status); 12.1.2 (forms of pay); 12.1.3 (professionalism); 12.2.4.2 (draft list); 12.3.1 (use of agents); 30.7.2-(a) (eligibility of student-athletes); and Administrative Committee 4/9/81, Item "t")]

Hearing Opportunity

4. Notice of Hearing Opportunity (Divisions I, II and III). When NCAA regulations require an institution to provide notice of a hearing opportunity to a student-athlete, such notice must be provided in writing to the student-athlete. The committee recommended that the NCAA Legislative Review Committee incorporate this interpretation into applicable sections of the NCAA Manual. [References: 13.1.1.3.1 (hearing opportunity); 14.5.5.3.11-(d) (one-time transfer exception); 15.3.4.1.3 (hearing opportunity required); 15.3.5.1.1 (hearing opportunity required); and IC 5/8/95, Item No. 2]

Skill-Related Instruction/Out-of-Season/Practice/Weekly/Hourly Limitation

5. Setting Up Offensive or Defensive Alignments During Individual Skill-Related Instruction (Division I). In sports where individual skill-related instruction is permitted outside the playing season during the academic year (i.e., all sports other than football), it is permissible for coaching staff members and student-athletes to engage in any of the activities set forth in 17.02.12.1-(a) through 17.02.12.1-(g) (e.g., setting up offensive or defensive alignments). [References: 17.02.12.1 (activities considered as practice); 17.1.5.2.1 (skill-instruction — Division I) and 17.1.5.2.2 (conditioning activities)]

UNSPORTSMANLIKE CONDUCT

Exploiting College Athletes

Walter Byers
With Charles Hammer

Former NCAA executive director Walter Byers tells the story of the development and financial growth of intercollegiate athletics with its excessive commercialization. He makes bold recommendations for the restoration of basic freedoms to players and equitable treatment for competing teams. This book is must reading for anyone interested in college sports—athletes, coaches, fans, faculty, and administrators.

"Walter Byers has done more to shape intercollegiate athletics than any single person in history. He brought a combination of leadership, insight, and integrity to intercollegiate athletics that we will never again see equaled."
—Bob Knight, Indiana University

"The NCAA under Walter's direction was very sensitive about the needs of its members. Byers's ideas benefited all of us."

Florida, Tennessee, Michigan spend the most on athletics

The University of Florida; University of Tennessee, Knoxville; and University of Michigan spend the most among the nation's universities on athletics programs, according to data reported September 10 by the Birmingham News.

Florida spent $27.2 million in 1993, the most recent year for which comprehensive statistics are available. Tennessee spent $25.4 million and Michigan $25.1 million.

Six other Southeastern Conference members are among the top 25 sports spenders, according to a computer analysis of information filed with the U.S. Department of Education.

Officials say their successful sports programs have had positive academic effects — some that can be measured and some that cannot. But a critic said it hasn't been enough.

"Certainly schools like Alabama and Auburn could make a lot of money and give it to the academic side of the universities," said Murray Sperber, an associate professor at Indiana University, Bloomington, and author of College Sports Inc.: The Athletic Department vs. the University.

But Sperber said such giving is just for the sake of public relations, and athletics departments at large universities are basically self-serving.

"No one oversees them," Sperber said. "They waste huge amounts of money. They live in the style of corporate America at its most lavish."

Officials at Auburn University, which ranked 10th on the list, countered that they are doing the best they can to see that proceeds from their schools' success on the playing field enhance life in the classroom.

Auburn athletics director David E. Housel said "in an ideal world" the football team could be assured of success every year — complete with a steady flow of television, championship and bowl game revenue — and an annual contribution to the university's academic budget could be arranged.

"You can't budget 10 victories a year," he said. "I don't think you can measure an athletics program's contribution to a university in just dollars and cents."

At Auburn, football's $19.7 million accounts for more than 80 percent of this year's $24 million in anticipated revenue in the athletics budget. Close to $22 million in expenditures has been budgeted.

About $8 million in revenue is expected to come from football ticket sales. Another $7 million is anticipated from ticket priority programs and other gifts. Auburn is expecting about $4 million in broadcast and bowl receipts this year.

It costs more than $300,000 to run the men's track program, a sport that only brings in about $500. Women's basketball costs close to $700,000 and brings in $33,000. Almost $250,000 is budgeted for women's soccer, and only $1,000 in revenue is expected.

to ensure compliance with bat and ball performance levels for the 1996 season. The committee has recommended to the SGMA that once performance criteria are established, the SGMA monitor the performance of the most popular models of bats and balls.

Manufacturers have agreed that titanium bats will not be provided to NCAA member institutions for use in intercollegiate baseball competition until the bat performance standard has been established for 1997. They also will take back all bats that were given to institutions at the 1995 NCAA Division I Baseball Championship.

"The expressed goal of the committee is to develop a bat performance standard to ensure that players' skills will determine the outcome of games — not technology," Rowe said.

Facilities

Rules that affect former NCAA athletes with Olympic hopes could be liberalized at the 1996 Convention

Olympic gold medalist, Baumgartner recently won his third world freestyle championship. According to the 286-pound veteran, almost everybody on the national wrestling team coaches and works out at a school.

"If you're not a coach, there are only two true facilities (Foxcatcher and Sunkist) in the country that aren't affiliated with a university," he said. "It's really the only game in town."

Not every Olympic hopeful is cut out to coach or has time to do it. Athletes who do not coach still have access to NCAA facilities and may practice with their former team occasionally, but there are limits.

The rules

An individual who is not enrolled in school full time may practice with a team on an ongoing basis only if (1) the institution designates the individual as a coach; (2) the individual performs legitimate coaching duties; and (3) the institution counts the individual toward coaching limitations for the sport.

If an individual does not meet all three of those criteria, that does not mean he or she never can train with the team or use an institution's facilities. For instance, Olympic hopefuls may use NCAA facilities under the same guidelines as any other member of the general public.

One who fits that category is Brands' twin brother, Terry, who recently won his second world title. He does not coach, but he trains at Iowa.

Another example is Jennifer O'Neal, a key member of the University of Alaska Fairbanks' 1994 NCAA champion rifle team. She will use the Nanooks' range as she completes requirements for a double major this semester.

"I've always preferred to practice

Olympic athletes' use of institutional facilities — do's and don'ts

Applicable NCAA bylaw:

In order to participate in an organized practice session at an NCAA institution, a student-athlete must be enrolled in a minimum full-time program of studies at that institution.

Q&A:

Q. Is it permissible for an Olympian to use the institution's facilities for training purposes?

A. Yes, provided the use of the facilities is within the guidelines set by the institution for any individual who wishes to use the facilities (e.g., fees for usage and equipment checkout/return).

Q. Under what circumstances may an Olympian (who is not enrolled full time) engage in practice with an institution's team?

A. The Olympian may practice on an ongoing basis with the team during its season if (1) the institution designates the individual as a coach, (2) the Olympian performs legitimate coaching duties and (3) the institution counts the individual toward the coaching limitations for the sport.

Q. Are there any instances in which an Olympian can practice with the institution's team and not count as a coach?

A. Yes. If the Olympian is an alumnus of the institution, he or she is permitted to participate in an occasional practice session with the institution's team.

Q. If the Olympian is counted in the coaching limits for a specific institution, would it be permissible for the individual to practice with or against current student-athletes out of season?

A. No. This would constitute out-of-season practice, which is not permissible.

Q. If the Olympian is the spouse of the coach of the institution's team, can the Olympian help his or her spouse in coaching the team?

A. No. An Olympian may not engage in coaching activities with current student-athletes unless that person is considered in the coaching limits.

on my own and this semester I will be in class during practice, so even if I wanted to shoot with the team, I wouldn't be able to," she said. "The range is open to the public for a few hours each night. I just park myself at the far end of the range and no one bothers me."

University of California, Los Angeles, graduate and veteran track Olympian Jackie Joyner-Kersey — whose husband, Bob Kersey, is a volunteer assistant track coach at UCLA — has trained on the UCLA campus.

Her spouse's status gives her knowledge of the team's practice schedule, but that helps only in that she knows when to avoid being at the track. Under NCAA rules, she is not permitted to regularly work out with the team, nor is she allowed to help her husband coach. The gold medalist can participate in an occasional practice with her former team.

One more rule applies even when an Olympic hopeful is counted as a coach — he or she may not work out or practice with a student-athlete out of season.

Possible changes

Liberalization of these rules could be coming with the 1996 NCAA Convention.

This summer, the United States Olympic Committee (USOC) formed a seven-member panel to study such issues as use of existing collegiate facilities for Olympic training. NCAA Executive Director Cedric W. Dempsey and George Steinbrenner, a USOC vice-president, serve as co-chairs.

The panel's goal is to smooth what occasionally has been a rocky relationship between the nation's two most prominent amateur athletics organizations.

Dempsey said that one of Steinbrenner's opinions is that the USOC should not be interested in "bricks and mortar." In other words, since the United States has many fine athletics facilities on college campuses, the USOC should not spend its money in duplicating what already exists. Dempsey agrees, with qualification.

"We are interested in finding ways to provide for greater usage of our facilities by individual Olympic athletes," Dempsey said. "We have discussed how that might be done and how those athletes might be able to train with collegiate athletes."

"The major concern is that the Olympic athlete could very easily turn into a volunteer coach and give that team an unfair advantage by having too many coaches."

The NCAA Olympic Sports Liaison Committee, chaired by UCLA senior associate athletics director Judith R. Holland, has proposed NCAA legislation to relax some restrictions. The NCAA Council will sponsor the legislation at the 1996 Convention.

"One of the things (institutions) can offer after graduation is facilities," she said. "That's often the time when athletes are coming into their own, as far as Olympic life is concerned. They usually have their own coaches, but they still need a place to train."

She said the committee also hopes to allow such athletes to work out with their former teams, under restrictions designed to answer the "unfair advantage" concern.

"In many sports, swimming being one, it's very difficult to train alone," she said. "When there is an open lane at practice, we'd like to be able to have an Olympic swimmer using it."

That proposal would allow athletes in individual sports (including synchronized swimming and crew, in which there currently are no NCAA championships) to train with the team at the institution they attended as an undergraduate, upon the recommendation of a sport's national governing body. Individuals training under this plan would not be able to coach unless counted in the school's coaching limits.

In the case of a student-athlete with eligibility remaining, participation would be permitted only during the academic year immediately preceding the Olympics.

If adopted, the proposed rule changes would begin to answer a question that concerns both the NCAA and the USOC: What is the best way to train the premier athletes of this country?

Agents

have been higher than those of the average working-class individual, but the gulf between the two never has been as wide as it is today, and that gap continues to grow.

In the early 1980s, the Philadelphia 76ers lured Moses Malone away from the Houston Rockets with a contract totaling more than $13 million. Soon after, Steve Young, a former Brigham Young University quarterback and now an all-Pro player for the San Francisco 49ers, made headlines when he accepted a 40-year, $40 million contract from the Los Angeles Express of the upstart United States Football League.

Recently, former Purdue University basketball player Glenn Robinson broke new ground when he sought a $100 million contract upon turning professional in 1994. Recently, Deion Sanders signed with the Dallas Cowboys for a $35 million deal that included a $13 million signing bonus.

Since agents normally claim between three and five percent of a client's salary, representation of professional athletes clearly has a high profit potential in the 1990s.

Trouble and turmoil

As earnings of professional athletes continue to rise, so, too, do problems involving sports agents. In an industry replete with sharp-edged business practices, the pursuit of clients is intense and extremely competitive.

The saga of Norby Walters and Lloyd Bloom is well-documented. They were partners in the sports-representation industry and ran into a mountain of legal troubles after being charged with crimes by Federal authorities. Walters, who was sentenced to five years in prison but served no time after a victory at the appeals-court level, was forced out of the sports agent business. Bloom, whose conviction on racketeering charges was overturned, was found shot to death in his home in August 1993.

More recently, Joel Segal received a sentence of probation and a $3,500 fine in Florida for violating its law regulating sports agents. The case is part of an ongoing investigation into an incident involving Florida State University football players.

To compete in the marketplace, ambitious agents are spending thousands of dollars to influence collegiate student-athletes to sign with them, all in hopes of developing a relationship with a promising student-athlete.

"I think a lot of agents put out money," said former runner Jesse Martinez. "I would say 80 percent do."

Sports agents also have attempted to influence teammates of student-athletes in whom they are interested. They have targeted parents and siblings as well. Perhaps most discouraging of all, however, is agents' use of money and other enticements to gain the goodwill of coaches and athletics department staff members.

"I will tell you what I would do if I were an athletics director," said Jim Grossman, a financial consultant at First Financial Strategies in Phoenix who coordinates investment opportunities for a number of professional athletes. "The only thing that is going to clean this up is I have to make sure my staff is clean. There are coaches who are on the take. I know of individual cases where ADs have been on the take from agents. So I have to make sure my staff is clean, first of all."

"That means no assistant coach is acting as a feeder. What assistant coach isn't going to be enticed by maybe being able to make an extra $60,000 by getting a lottery pick in the NBA, for example, to move over (to a specific agent)? Anyone who wants to make some extra money is going to be enticed by these people who, from a business standpoint, don't think they are doing anything wrong. It's corrupting the athletics department from top to bottom."

Fixes are few

A number of states have adopted laws to address the problems sports agents can pose, and those states most often require some form of registration. But those laws have not been a panacea.

State efforts have made an impact, however, says Galen E. Newsom, chief investigator in the North Carolina secretary of state's office.

Newsom said while some sports agents likely are side-stepping North Carolina's legislation, he does not believe they are a majority.

Meanwhile, he said players have accepted more responsibility.

"Players now have learned (so) that they'll now go to coaches and say, 'Agent Allens called me and I told him to leave me alone and not to talk to me,'" he said. "We leave them with that one thought: Ask him if he's registered with the secretary of state's office."

While simply registering sports agents may not appear to be an aggressive reaction to the growing problem, it is an appropriate place to start, some say.

"It may be futile at best but at least it's an effort," said Bill Morgan, assistant athletics director for compliance at the University of Arizona, which has developed policies and procedures of its own to address the sports agent issue. "At least I'm going to have a nice list of the guys who are willing to do things right to give to my student-athletes, which to me should be a plus."

What influence does the NCAA possess?

Not much, in the opinion of several sports agents. NCAA legislation, they say, cannot address the issue of agents, so it must concentrate on eligibility issues for the student-athlete.

"When you get into this business, you have to decide whether or not you're going to play by the rules on the street," Grossman said. "As a matter of fact, and this happens quite often, I can use the NCAA rules to really shackle a player to me. All I have to do is get them to take money, and then I'll threaten them."

Grossman offered an example of how some sports agents strong-arm student-athletes into silence and a commitment to sign: "OK, here's the deal. You remember that 100 bucks I gave you? Well, if you want to play anymore, you better keep your mouth shut and you better stay put because if I tell, you're going to be ineligible."

"The problems spin on economics. It's supply and demand. The NCAA rules only address the demand side of the equation. That means they can only punish the player. They can only threaten the demand. The supply side is the agent problem, and that's where there has not been enough. It's a difficult thing because the NCAA cannot register agents. It's not their domain."

Next week: Sports agents discuss their industry from a variety of angles, from how they acquire clients to suggestions for addressing problems.

Sugar Bowl Committee diversifies

Three women, four Blacks added to organizing group

Three women and four black males were added to the committee that coordinates the Sugar Bowl game and related activities, bowl officials said September 8.

A Sugar Bowl spokesman told The Associated Press that the move was not prompted by a discrimination lawsuit filed a few days earlier. One of the principals behind the lawsuit labeled the action tokenism and said there were no plans to withdraw the suit.

The Sugar Bowl Committee has been criticized for a lack of diversity. In June, a majority of the 69-member committee voted to expand membership with 14 new members — 13 white males and one black male.

Those 14 were approved September 7 in the second phase of a two-part election process, said Troy Mathieu, the bowl's executive director.

However, the committee also voted to add 10 more nominees who were among the top 24 vote-getters in June. "In that number, there were three females and four African-American males...," Mathieu said.

"We've crossed the barrier and finally taken in the first women in the organization's history and we're elated about that. We look forward to their contributions."

Mathieu said there now are three women and 12 black men on the committee. The new members are called associates and cannot vote. They become full members after two years, Mathieu said.

Carl Galmon, who spearheaded an effort in the 1970s to get the committee to include blacks, called the committee's action "tokenism at its best."

"We're talking about a city with a 65 percent black population and a population that's majority women," Galmon said. "Three (women) is a slap in the face, especially when another bowl, the Fiesta Bowl, has 60 women and a female president."

Galmon filed suit in Federal court against the Nokia Sugar Bowl Committee.

The suit's stated purpose was to end what it termed the association's "long and shameful history of discriminating against members of the African-American race and/or female gender."

It seeks a finding that the defendants are in violation of Federal and state laws, an injunction prohibiting discriminatory practices and payment of attorneys fees.

CLARIFICATION

An item in the NCAA Record section of the August 16 issue of The NCAA News regarding the formation of the East Atlantic Gymnastics Conference listed among its members a school that has not officially committed to membership in the league. Officials at Maryland said the university's athletics administration is studying a proposal from the league, but the university has not approved the women's gymnastics team's membership. Maryland's inclusion in the league was announced by the new conference in a July 31 news release.

DIRECTORY CHANGES

Conference—Mile High Softball League: dissolved; Mile High Intercollegiate Baseball League: dissolved.

Deaths

Howard Shannon, head men's basketball coach at Virginia Tech from 1963 to 1971, died August 16 in Plano, Texas. He was 73. Shannon, who had a 104-68 record at Virginia Tech, led the Hokies to a National Invitation Tournament appearance in 1966 and the NCAA tournament in 1967. He remained at the university as a teacher until retiring in 1988. Shannon played at Kansas State and was the NBA's rookie of the year with Providence in 1948-49. He ended his professional career the following season with Boston.

Jamal Jackson, a 22-year-old Cleveland State basketball player, was fatally stabbed in Boston's South End August 18. Jackson, a 6-foot-6 forward, led the Vikings last season with 16.1 points per game and 8.1 rebounds.

Terry Elston, a former Houston quarterback, died August 23 from injuries sustained when he was struck by a car the previous weekend. He was 37. Elston was selected as most valuable player of the 1980 Cotton Bowl after his six-yard touchdown pass with 12 seconds left gave the Cougars a 17-14 victory over Nebraska.

Charles Maurice D'Antignac Tyus, a South Carolina-Spartanburg basketball player, died August 28 at age 20. Tyus, who had a history of allergic reactions to insect stings, died shortly after a bee stung him during a pickup game at the school's gym. Tyus played center and forward last season.

Eugene McDowell, a basketball forward at Florida in the early 1980s, died shortly after collapsing August 24. He was 31. The four-year starter and three-time all-Southeastern Conference selection scored 1,565 points — seventh on Florida's all-time list — from 1981 to 1985, and he ranks second in school history with a 59.7 field-goal percentage. He holds the O'Connell Center single-game scoring record with a 40-point performance against Biscayne in 1982. McDowell was a third-round draft pick of the NBA's Milwaukee Bucks but played professionally in Europe and Turkey. He quit playing basketball less than two years ago.

Labron Harris Sr., former golf coach at Oklahoma State, died August 14 in Sun City, Arizona. He was 86.

Emily Town, sophomore volleyball player at Gordon, died August 6 while rock climbing in Idaho. Town was a freshman starter on Gordon's 1994 Eastern College Athletic Conference qualifying team. She was an honors student as a music performance major and studied piano.

James M. Van Valkenburg, retired NCAA director of statistics, died September 11 in Overland Park, Kansas. He was 66. (A full report will appear in the September 25 issue of The NCAA News.)

■ Legislative assistance

1995 Column No. 32

NCAA Bylaw 30.10.5

(Football recruiting calendar — midyear, two-year college transfers) — Division I

NCAA Division I institutions should note that during its June 28 meeting, the NCAA Administrative Committee, acting for the NCAA Council, reviewed and approved changes effective immediately in the Division I football recruiting calendar as recommended by the NCAA Recruiting Committee. Those changes were set forth in a recent Legislative Assistance column (Column No. 28; July 19, 1995, edition of The NCAA News). During its August 31, 1995, telephone conference, the Administrative Committee, acting for the Council, reviewed the amended recruiting calendar to address the effect those changes have on midyear, two-year college transfers. Accordingly, the Administrative Committee agreed that, effective immediately, the following recruiting periods (in addition to the recruiting period for high-school prospects) are applicable to two-year college prospects:

1. The Sunday prior to the dead period surrounding the initial signing date for the National Letter of Intent: Quiet Period
2. Monday through Thursday of the week that includes the initial date for signing the National Letter of Intent: Dead Period
3. Friday following the initial date for signing the National Letter of Intent: Quiet Period

Thus, the Division I football recruiting calendar, as it applies to two-year college prospects, includes the following recruiting periods (in addition to the recruiting periods for high-school prospects) for the 1995-96 academic year: December 17, 1995 — Quiet Period; December 18-21, 1995 — Dead Period; and December 22, 1995 — Quiet Period.

Please note that it remains permissible for institutions to make contacts with high-school prospects during the week of December 17-23, subject to applicable recruiting regulations.

NCAA Bylaw 17.3.2.1

Preseason basketball practice

Divisions I and II institutions should note that a Division I or Division II institution shall not commence on-court preseason basketball practice sessions prior to October 15. Please note that although October 15 falls on a Sunday this year, it is not permissible to begin practice on either Friday, October 13, or Saturday, October 14. In Division III, on-court preseason basketball practice for the 1995-96 season may not begin prior to October 23, the fourth Monday preceding the first permissible contest date (November 17).

NCAA membership hits all-time mark of 1,200

As the result of another dramatic increase in the number of provisional members — 60 in the last 12 months — NCAA membership has climbed to an all-time high of 1,200.

Because the NCAA Council declared a moratorium on new membership in August, that number is not expected to increase over the next two years. The Council action postponed acceptance of new members until the Association's restructuring efforts are complete.

There were no new active members in the last year, but the number of provisional members increased by 33 in Division II, 26 in Division III and one in Division I-AA.

Legislation adopted at the 1994 NCAA Convention established a three-year application process for provisional members, with the first year considered an educational or orientation year in which the member receives all NCAA forms, publications, mailings and general information from the national office regarding the activities of the Association.

Provisional members are expected to be in full compliance with the Association's legislation during the second and third years. They also are required to administer their athletics programs under the rules and regulations of their preferred divisions.

Also during the second and third years, the members may be counted for the purpose of meeting scheduling requirements as an NCAA opponent in the divisions in which they are seeking active membership. However, no waiver opportunities are available other than those related to circumstances beyond the school's control.

The 60 first-year provisional members bring to 96 the total of members in that category. Thirty-six provisional members that were new last year are starting their second year in the category.

The only other membership categories in which there were new members in the last year are conference and affiliated members. The Upstate Collegiate Athletic Association (Division III) is the new conference member, and the United States Women's Lacrosse Association is the new affiliated member.

The new provisional member seeking Division I-AA membership is the University of Arkansas, Pine Bluff.

Provisional members seeking Division II membership are Anderson College, Brigham Young University (Hawaii), Central Washington University, Christian Brothers University, Concordia University at Austin, East

Central University, East Texas Baptist University, Georgia Southwestern College, Hawaii Pacific University, Houston Baptist University, Incarnate Word College, Lambuth University, Langston University, Lewis-Clark State College, University of Mary Hardin-Baylor, Northeastern State University, Northwestern Oklahoma State University, Oklahoma Panhandle State University, University of Puerto Rico (Bayamon), University of Puerto Rico (Mayaguez), Rockhurst College, Saint Edwards University, Saint Martin's College, Saint Mary's University, Schreiner College, University of Science and Arts of Oklahoma, Southeastern Oklahoma State University, Southwestern Oklahoma State University, Texas Lutheran College, Texas Wesleyan University, Tusculum College, University of the Virgin Islands and Western Washington University.

New provisional members seeking Division III membership are Brooklyn College, Cazenovia College, Eastern Oregon State College, Evergreen State College, George Fox College, Hilbert College, Holy Family College, Lasell College, Lesley College, Lewis & Clark College, Linfield College, University of Maine (Farmington), Massachusetts College of Pharmacy and Allied Health Sciences, College of Mount Saint Joseph, University of the Ozarks, Pacific Lutheran University, Pacific University (Oregon), University of Pittsburgh at Bradford, University of Puget Sound, Southern Oregon State College, Trinity College (Washington, D.C.), Western Oregon State College, Wheelock College, Whitman College, Whitworth College and Willamette University.

Anti-tobacco poster — The most recent poster in the NCAA's campaign against chewing tobacco was mailed to the membership in early September. Athletics trainers at every NCAA member institution received three copies of the poster, which was developed by the NCAA Committee on Competitive Safeguards and Medical Aspects of Sports.

The use of tobacco products by student athletes, coaches, officials and game personnel during practice and competition is PROHIBITED.
