Schools struggle to combat agent issues

The roof that protects intercollegiate athletics has a leak.

Institutions — unable to completely shield the tenets of amateurism from the sports-representation industry — are beginning to ask how they can protect themselves as more and more sports agents violate NCAA legislation by signing student-athletes and providing them with money and gifts.

Administrators and coaches say that institutions cannot solve the problem, and they don't believe they should be expected to do so alone. Some express the belief that the escalating presence of sports agents and their runners tops the list of challenges facing college athletics.

The Norby Walters-Lloyd Bloom case of the 1980s received much publicity and raised awareness nationally of a potential danger to student-athletes, but it may have struck only a temporary chord in the consciousness of the intercollegiate athletics community.

Today, however, awareness is at its highest level ever. Brainstorming has begun among administrators and coaches on how to attack agent issues.

"My view of it really is rather simple," said Jim Livengood, athletics director at the University of Arizona. "When we look back five, 10, 15 years from now in intercollegiate athletics, if we really are struggling, one of the reasons will be our inability to get around this agents-runners issue.

"I would put stars and arrows and everything around it. Nothing we are involved with has a greater chance of being the ruination of college athletics than this issue. And yet, the tragedy of all of this is most places don't seem to take it seriously."

John Calipari, head men's basketball coach at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, said his awareness developed only recently because of agent activity surrounding one of his former star players.

"I would have said four or five years ago that it's not a problem," Calipari said. "What are you talking about? I didn't have any players anyone wanted."

But Calipari's outlook has changed dramatically. He says efforts to create a "level playing field" in intercollegiate athletics are insignificant in comparison to the agent problem.

"I think it's the problem of the '90s, the year 2000 and beyond," he said. "In the past, we have talked about things of no consequence — such as basketball camps where guys got an advantage and things like that. Are you kidding me? Compared to this, we have been wasting our time. This is the problem. If we don't get it in check now, by the year 2000, it will be awful."

What course of action?

But what are institutions to do? Many agents bypass the checkpoints institutions have constructed. Administrators and coaches contend

ON A MAJOR ROLL

Educator rollerblades across country and helps raise funds, awareness for NYSP

BY MARTIN T. BENSON
STAFF WRITER

It is reasonable to think that children in the National Youth Sports Program will understand the goal-setting lessons they receive if the teacher can use a first-person example.

Jim Presbrey, a drug- and alcohol-education counselor at the University of Maine, has set himself up as that example in response to a question that he was asked two summers ago by NYSP participants: "Coach Presbrey, what is your goal?"

At the time, Presbrey was recovering from major reconstructive knee surgery, but that did not stop him from blurting out the same thing he previously had said to his doctor.

"I'm going to rollerblade across the country," he said.

Since Presbrey was sporting a full ankle-to-hip brace at the time, the children chuckled, but the former Ithaca College football and lacrosse player used that goal to motivate himself during rehabilitation of the injury. Eventually, his dedication to that goal also benefited NYSP.

"When my knee went, I wanted to prove I could still be active, and maybe I'm still hanging on to my athletic identity," he said.

Seems that he has a pretty good grasp. Early this month, he was in Kentucky — already one-third of the way on a rollerblading journey from Kittery, Maine, to San Diego, where his sister lives.

He is using the journey not only to achieve his goal, but to raise funds and awareness for NYSP.

He and traveling companion Andy before or the day after Thanksgiving.

"The knee feels great," he said as he waited out the approach of Hurricane Opal in Kentucky. "Through the mountains of West Virginia my hips began to hurt, but the knee has been incredibly strong. I've had no problems with it. Blisters have been a problem but my feet are starting to toughen up."

Linking the trip with NYSP seemed a natural from the start. Presbrey said he "fell in love" with the program after attending an NYSP training session a few years ago, before Maine actually sponsored the program.

Presbrey, who is on a 10-month contract at Maine, did not work in Maine's NYSP this past summer. Instead, he helped his mother build a house in Canada. During break time, he trained for his expedition.

He is on leave from Maine to make the cross-country trip, but before he departed, the staff at Maine called Presbrey in Canada to ask if he would come back to work with NYSP next summer — after the trip is over.

Wheels began to turn....

"I thought, hey, maybe this is a way I can still be involved (with NYSP this year)," he said. Presbrey decided to make the trip a fund-raiser.

Title IX

Response to OCR draft due by October 20

Those who received a draft document of a Title IX clarification statement from the Office for Civil Rights of the Department of Education have until October 20 to submit comments on the document.

The document was released September 20.

In a related development, the Senate Commerce Committee will go forward October 18 with a hearing on the Amateur Sports Act. The NCAA will be invited to testify. The committee is planning three panels, one of which will focus on Title IX.

The primary focus is whether the Amateur Sports Act is being carried out effectively, but a secondary focus is what effect, if any, compliance with Title IX has had on the ability of the United States Olympic Committee to field teams in certain sports.

Staff contacts: Doris L. Dixon and Janet M. Justus.

Right-to-know act

Public comments on draft are due by October 25

Public comments are due October 25 on a Notification of Proposed Rulemaking on the Student Right-to-Know Act.

Final regulations will be published by December 1. The Student Right-to-Know Act pertains to the distribution of graduation-rate information.

The draft includes a waiver provision of the Student Right-to-Know Act, stating that "the Secretary is authorized to waive the requirements of this section if the institution belongs to an athletic association or conference that publishes substantially comparable (graduation-rate) information, and the institution, or conference or association applying on its behalf, satisfies the Secretary that this information is accurate and substantially comparable to the information this statute requires institutions to produce."

The first reporting period will begin July 1, 1997.

USOC effort to target endangered college sports

The United States Olympic Committee has announced that it supports "in concept" a cooperative effort with the NCAA to bolster Olympic sports threatened with elimination at universities and colleges.

The USOC, however, announced no specific plans or timetable for enacting the program.

The cooperative effort is a proposal of a special task force formed early this year by the USOC and NCAA to strengthen the relationship between the two organizations.

Briefly in the News

Help coming to the Prairie?

Prairie View A&M University's losing streak of 51 consecutive football games is an NCAA record. The Panthers' head coach, Hensley Sapenter, is counting on alumni to help the program snap out of the 'L' column after Grambling State University handed it the record-setting loss in a 64-0 rout.

Sapenter is looking to alumni to provide donations that would serve as the foundation of a football scholarship fund. The institution stopped granting athletics grants-in-aid after a financial scandal placed the institution in debt more than five years ago. Track and field was the only sport that survived the cuts the school made in 1990. Football returned in 1991 but without scholarships.

A graduate of Prairie View A&M, Sapenter recently asked 60 Dallas-area alumni to donate $10 each month. If successful in getting all 30,000 active alumni to match that figure, $3.6 million could be raised in one year. According to The Associated Press, the entire Prairie View A&M athletics budget is just $849,000.

"The alumni we met with said they feel $10 is not too much to ask," said Harlan Robinson, sports information director at Prairie View A&M. "They're all for it. They want to make sure the money goes to bringing the program back."

Prairie View A&M last won a football game October 28, 1989.

Ball for a ball

Kicking field goals and extra points into the east end of Pomona-Pitzer Colleges' Merritt Football Field occasionally proves disruptive for another sport on campus.

The back of the grandstand of Haldeman Pool, where the colleges' water polo team competes, is just beyond the east end of the football field. Every now and then, a field goal or extra-point kick sails over the grandstand wall and into the pool.

Recently, a football game and a water polo match were being played at the same time. In the second quarter of the football game, visiting Occidental College kicked an extra point after a touchdown. The ball split the uprights, sailed over a net and the grandstand wall, and landed in the middle of Pomona-Pitzer's water polo match against Claremont McKenna-Harvey Mudd-Scripps Colleges.

Soon after, a brightly colored yellow water polo ball sailed back over the grandstand wall, hit the football field and rolled to rest at the 30-yard line. Laughter was heard from both grandstands.

"I've been waiting a long time to do that," Pomona-Pitzer water polo coach Gary Troyer said.

Honor America

NCAA institutions have been invited by the American Historic and Cultural Society to participate in its "Honor America" program.

Participation is simple. Institutions are asked to announce "...and now to honor America..." before the playing of the national anthem at campus events where the anthem normally is played.

"All too many fans stand automatically when our national anthem is played," said Jack Fleischer, sports coordinator of the program. "They just don't stop to think that they rise to pay tribute to our country."

"Some fans actually complain because the anthem is played. The use of the brief phrase...serves as a reminder why the anthem is played and why we rise."

David E. Cawood, NCAA assistant executive director for marketing and broadcast services, said NCAA championships beginning with the 1995-96 academic year will include the "...and now to honor America..." statement before the playing or singing of the national anthem.

Institutions that plan to include the phrase are asked to contact Fleischer, who is compiling a list of participating institutions. He can be reached at Honor America Program, 330 South Ocean Boulevard, Palm Beach, Florida 33480-4264.

Sabbath over sport

Eli Herring had an interesting decision to make this past summer: Accept an offer to earn millions of dollars playing professional football or remain true to his religious convictions. He chose the latter.

Herring, a 6-foot-7, 340-pound offensive tackle at Brigham Young University, was considered a strong pro prospect by a number of franchises. The Oakland Raiders drafted Herring, who subscribes to the Mormon faith, but he turned down a life as a professional football player. Why? Games primarily are played on Sundays, a day that Herring holds in special regard as the Sabbath.

What was his response when the Raiders called?

"Nope," Herring told Ted Roberts, a nationally syndicated humorist, in a Wall Street Journal article. "I'd just as soon teach math and honor the Sabbath."

Facilities

Eastern Connecticut State University recently held groundbreaking ceremonies for a proposed $3.6 million baseball facility to be located just north of the Willimantic campus in the town of Mansfield. The stadium was designed by DuBose Associates, Inc., of Hartford. It is expected to be completed in time for the 1997 season. Last spring, Eastern Connecticut State played its final regularly scheduled home game at Alumni Field, the only on-campus field it has had since 1952. The team will play home games at several sites next season until the new stadium is completed.

The Cotton Bowl in Dallas would become the largest domed stadium in the United States if a private group's plans come to fruition. The group already includes engineers, architects and accountants and is expected to include area business and civic leaders. The project, which would be financed by 25-year options for premium seats, could be completed in time for the 1998 college football season, according to The Associated Press. A group spokesperson said a hard-roof structure on the Cotton Bowl would aid its efforts to attract top sporting events, including the NCAA Final Four, and other entertainment events to the Cotton Bowl. A spokesperson for the architectural firm designing the dome said the renovations would include a sports-related restaurant, a hall of fame and possibly a sports learning center for children. Also, the construction of 40 luxury suites are included in the project's plans.

Central Missouri State University dedicated its new $5.5 million stadium in honor of Audrey J. Walton, the primary donor for the project. The facility is called Audrey J. Walton Stadium at Vernon Kennedy Field. Walton, a resident of Versailles, Missouri, learned of the condition of the university's old stadium — built in 1928 — while watching a television show about the athletics department. Construction began last November and while not yet completed, football and soccer games already are being played there. With seating for approximately 5,800 people, the new structure has nearly 30 percent more seating capacity than the old stadium. There is a viewing area for physically impaired fans, a three-level tower that will be used as a major-donors and media area, new lights and a new sound system, and new restrooms and concession stands beneath the grandstands.

USOC pledges support of Olympic sports on campuses

Although no details are set, cooperative effort with NCAA could provide financial help

The United States Olympic Committee (USOC) has announced that it supports "in concept" a cooperative effort with the NCAA to bolster Olympic sports threatened with elimination at universities and colleges, as well as emerging sports.

The USOC, however, announced no specific plans or timetable for enacting the program — which eventually could provide financial support for some collegiate sports — following USOC meetings October 4-8 in Atlanta.

The cooperative effort is a proposal of a special task force formed early this year by the USOC and NCAA to strengthen the relationship between the two organizations. The task force is cochaired by NCAA Executive Director Cedric W. Dempsey and USOC Vice-President George Steinbrenner and includes members from NCAA institutions.

Dempsey and USOC President LeRoy Walker indicated during a news conference October 7 in Atlanta that the program would concentrate on three areas:

- Preserving endangered sports such as men's gymnastics and wrestling, which are threatened by budget cuts at institutions.

- Encouraging emerging Olympic sports such as women's rowing and team handball.

- Improving the visibility of existing sports such as track and swimming.

The USOC, however, did not specifically allocate funds for those purposes.

The organization's board of directors did take other budgetary actions during an October 8 meeting in Atlanta. It voted to discontinue the annual U.S. Olympic Festival and funding for United States teams participating in the World University Games, and placed a cap on expenditures for Olympic training centers.

Overall, the board trimmed $64 million from existing budgets that will expire after the 1996 Summer Olympics in Atlanta, according to The Associated Press. USOC officials said the cuts are necessary because of an anticipated reduction in sponsorship moneys after the Atlanta Games.

The USOC, however, increased funding for grants to athletes and for various programs to develop Olympic athletes and coaches.

Make sportsmanship top priority this year

BY CLEM HASKINS AND KAY YOW
NCAA MEN'S AND WOMEN'S BASKETBALL RULES COMMITTEES

As basketball coaches and teachers, we have one month before the regular season for instruction — lessons about offense and defense, game strategy and play situations.

As members of the NCAA Men's and Women's Basketball Rules Committees, we believe head coaches in Divisions I, II and III also should use this preseason practice period to teach student-athletes another lesson — good sportsmanship.

The committees urge you to discuss sportsmanship with your student-athletes, referring specifically to page 15 of the 1996 NCAA Basketball Rules and Interpretations. We hope that you will stress to your student-athletes, team personnel and fans that there is no place in our game for poor sportsmanship.

For all the good that media exposure has provided the game of basketball, it also has magnified the negative aspects of student-athlete and coach decorum. Unsportsmanlike behavior is a serious source of concern for athletics administrators and should be a serious concern for the coaches and athletes directly involved in the game.

The NCAA Men's and Women's Basketball Rules Committees are dedicated to protecting the positive educational experiences of basketball. We believe the erosion of personal discipline demands a new approach from a positive perspective. The good of the game and its educational values must be our collective objective.

The basketball rules committees reviewed the issue of sportsmanship in depth at their April 1995 meetings. Due to the subject's importance, the committees determined that sporting behavior would be their only point of emphasis to student-athletes, coaches, officials and fans this season.

George Raveling and Janice Shelton, both chairing their final meeting for the committees, said "it was the committees' opinion that sportsmanship was of enough importance

A helpful tool, if used correctly

Interest survey can aid with development of women's programs

BY BRIDGET BELGIOVINE
UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN, LA CROSSE

Last year, the NCAA research staff — in response to a request from the Division II Steering Committee — organized two focus groups consisting of prominent male and female leaders in sport to discuss issues related to women's interest in sports participation.

The focus group approach was intended to elicit a broad range of views on the issue of women's interest and provide information that would be used to assist in the formulation of approaches to enhance efforts to increase participation opportunities for women within the NCAA.

As a member of the focus group and subsequent advisory group, I was fortunate to participate in the process to determine, design and pilot-test an interest-survey instrument for use by the NCAA membership. The advisory group discussed and debated several issues regarding the measurement of "interest." The group, along with researchers from the University of Virginia, discussed the following issues:

- The operational definition of interest.
- The legal perspective on interest measurement.
- The NCAA's directive and institutional responsibility in regard to data.
- Which individuals to survey (members of the underrepresented sex only or all males and females?).
- Which groups to survey (currently enrolled student-athletes, high-school students in the institution's geographical area or high-school students nationally?).
- Responsibility for data collection and assessment.

In the early stages of discussion, the advisory group determined that any survey instrument must be used as a planning tool for increasing opportunities for women and not for legal defense. Efforts were made to ensure that the instrument contained questions that could provide responses to assist institutions in the development of additional opportunities for the underrepresented sex.

Member institutions have the responsibility to develop gender-equity plans that include clearly defined goals and objectives before using any survey instrument and assessing subsequent results. Institutions must recognize the limitations of any survey instrument, especially one that is restricted to currently enrolled students. The assessment of interest for those institutions that recruit nationally, regionally or locally must be considered through other means, in conjunction with the campus survey.

A properly developed, pilot-tested instrument, such as the one available from the NCAA, coupled with a formulated campus plan could produce results that allow institutions to progress toward increased opportunities for women. The instrument also can serve as a guide in the process of annual evaluation of an established gender-equity plan to determine whether the plan continues to be "on the right track."

The University of Wisconsin, La Crosse, was one of three pilot institutions. Our decision to assist was based on the fact that our Wisconsin Women's Intercollegiate Athletic Conference had mandated progress toward gender equity annually beginning in 1989; also, Wisconsin-La Crosse had a campus gender-equity plan in place that included annual committee involvement and assessments.

The student development office was responsible for the dissemination and collection of the survey. Of the 1,500 students surveyed, we yielded 900 usable questionnaires for an overall response rate of 62 percent.

The major findings of the survey, although limited in scope due to the fact that only currently enrolled students were surveyed, provided valuable information regarding our current array of offerings for our intercollegiate, club and recreational programs.

Almost one in 10 women at Wisconsin-La Crosse is involved in some type of intercollegiate program, while for males the statistic is one in seven. One in four women expressed interest in participating in existing or potential programs, with volleyball being cited most frequently, followed by basketball and fast-pitch softball.

Reasons for lack of involvement in intercollegiate or club programs were of most interest to our campus. The top reasons cited by females were lack of time, interference with studies, lack of athletics ability and lack of familiarity with programs. For males, they were interference with studies, lack of time, participation in intramurals and financial considerations.

The survey data were presented in a clear, concise format with a variety of charts outlining interest and participation in intercollegiate athletics, club and intramural sports, and recreational activities. Statistics were broken down by gender, sport interest, activity interest, and reasons for participation and lack of participation. We shared data with several campus entities.

Knowledge of survey limitations, coupled with efforts to include periodic review and annual evaluation, will assist with a campus-wide approach in creating greater opportunities for women in sport.

Bridget Belgiovine is director of athletics at the University of Wisconsin, La Crosse. Jane Meyer, associate athletics director at Wisconsin-La Crosse, assisted with the article. The survey package is available upon request from Ursula R. Walsh, NCAA director of research, at the national office.

Times changing for sports information directors

Jim Daves, sports information director
University of Washington
Public Relations Quarterly

"The lack of communication between sports information directors and the media is a problem. We rely on the computer and fax too often to do our jobs. There's a lot of competition for that column inch, and I think SIDs do the best job of selling their story to the media. They need to do more direct personal communication."

David Plati, sports information director
University of Colorado, Boulder
Public Relations Quarterly

"The new ADs have minimal sports but strong business backgrounds. They listen carefully to the 'marketing types' and have given them direct input into the decision-making process today. SIDs used to be the heart of athletic decision-making, but many ADs don't see our value. This isn't the case at Boulder, but other SIDs have shared with me this management problem."

Phil Haddy, sports information director
University of Iowa
Public Relations Quarterly

"Many new athletic directors want SIDs involved in marketing ventures. No longer do you see the close contact between SIDs and the beat reporters the way it was long ago. Maybe that's bad, maybe not. But there was a time when the SID was considered a vital cog in the wheel of college sports. I think the importance of the position is losing ground to a new age of athletic directors that seem more concerned with filling the press box with contributors."

Bowl coalition

Jack French, executive director
The Rose Bowl
The New Orleans Times-Picayune

On what would happen if the Rose Bowl joined the bowl alliance:
"I have two predictions. First, if we have the national championship one year, we'd fill the stadium. But if we have the fourth and sixth picks the next year, and they're Syracuse and Clemson, for instance, their alumni bases are not on the West Coast. We'd be losing the support we get from the Pac-10/Big Ten base that's well-established in Southern California."

"My other prediction is that the Sugar and Orange will someday start thinking that's not a bad idea, either. When they're not getting 1-vs.-2, they'll want some regional support."

Newspapers

John Costa, executive editor
The Idaho Statesman

"Among its many obligations, a newspaper has the responsibility to present the unvarnished, and often unpleasant, truth to a community."

"If we don't, no one will."

"Ask yourself: Would you rather get a wake-up call from the newspaper now, or let the situation fester and explain it to the NCAA inspectors?"

"As editor, I vote for the former, because I believe a newspaper 'honors' a community best when it tells it the truth."

"As a great friend used to counsel: 'The ugliest truth is far more attractive than the prettiest little deceit.'"

Smaller field renews debate

Distribution of tournament slots discussed by water polo community

BY STEPHEN R. HAGWELL
STAFF WRITER

Championship selection has always been a topic of debate among men's water polo coaches. For years, coaches have debated the pros and cons of a championship based upon regional representation vs. one based on performance.

Over the last several years, the debate has been tempered by concerns about the possible discontinuation of the championship due to declining sponsorship numbers. But now, after the adoption of legislation at the 1995 NCAA Convention that has secured the championship through the 1996-97 academic year, the debate has regained attention.

"We're at a point right now where we have to decide how we want to promote the sport," said Dante Detamanti, men's water polo coach at Stanford University, which will serve as host institution for the 1995 championship. "Do we promote the sport by taking the top teams (to the championship) or do we take teams from different regions and different conferences?"

In the past, coaches managed to compromise. With eight championship slots available, coaches were able to allot automatic berths to each of the three conferences sponsoring the sport and also provide berths to the nation's top-ranked teams.

Such a compromise is no longer possible.

Four-team championship

After 26 years of eight-team championships, men's water polo will conduct a four-team championship this season.

The reduction is the result of a 1993 NCAA Executive Committee decision to base the NCAA championships structure primarily on the number of institutions sponsoring each of the NCAA's 21 championships sports. With only 47 institutions — 5.4 percent of all member institutions — sponsoring the sport, the Executive Committee reduced the championship to four teams, effective this year.

"We certainly weren't blindsided by (the Executive Committee decision)," said Mike Schofield, men's water polo coach at the U.S. Naval Academy. "We got together probably a year before and tried to start a dialogue as to how we could continue to keep regional geographical representation and still have a high-quality tournament."

The four-team format has as many advocates as opponents.

The 1995 championship format awards one automatic berth to each of the three conferences sponsoring the sport — the Eastern Water Polo Association (EWPA), Western Water Polo Association (WWPA) and Mountain Pacific Sports Federation (MPSF).

Regional representation vs. performance-based qualifying — that's what the water-polo community again is debating now that its national championship has been reduced from eight to four teams.

The fourth championship berth will be selected at large.

Previously, four automatic berths were allotted — one each to the conference tournament champions in the MPSF and WWPA and two to the top finishers in the FWPA tournament. The remaining four berths were selected at large.

'Tough bind'

"We're caught in a tough bind," said Mike Sutton, men's water polo coach at Claremont McKenna-Harvey Mudd-Scripps Colleges. "If we want our national championship to have the best four teams in the nation, we have to have a way to play into those four spots."

"In our situation, because of the way we run the championship by having automatic qualifiers (from each conference), we will not have the Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 ranked teams in the nation at the championship. Consequently, our championship will serve the purpose of allowing all levels and interests to be met. Of course, in every compromise not everyone is happy."

Few, if any, coaches disagree with the need to retain and increase current sponsorship numbers. What they do not agree on is how the championship can be used to serve that purpose.

Advocates state that the current format not only is the most viable but the fairest option.

They state the current geographical breakdown (19 teams are from the East region and 22 from the West region) mandates access for all teams.

They contend that since head-to-head regular-season competition is not possible for all teams due to geographical restrictions, access to the championship promotes the sport's growth. They also believe that rescinding automatic berths would eliminate championship access for a large number of programs and, thus, risk a reduction in sponsorship numbers.

Further, advocates point to current conference sponsorship numbers as evidence supporting the one-conference, one-berth format. Of 41 institutions sponsoring the sport, 19 are in the EWPA, 13 in the WWPA and nine in the MPSF.

"A national championship means national representation," said Page

Gavitt honored with Steitz award

Dave Gavitt, president of the NCAA Foundation, was awarded the Edward S. Steitz Award October 2 by USA Basketball for his contributions to international basketball.

Gavitt, who served as a prominent collegiate basketball coach, conference commissioner and professional basketball executive before assuming the Foundation presidency in June, was president of USA Basketball from 1988 to 1992. During that tenure, the Federation of International Basketball (FIBA) changed its rules to permit participation in international competition by professional players. Under Gavitt's guidance, USA Basketball admitted the National Basketball Association as an active member and cleared the way for formation of the U.S. "Dream Team" that won the gold medal at the 1992 Summer Olympics.

Gavitt was honored during USA Basketball's annual board of directors' dinner in Colorado Springs, Colorado. The award is named in memory of international basketball rules authority Steitz, a founder and past president of organizations that preceded USA Basketball — the Basketball Federation of the USA and Amateur Basketball Association of the United States of America.

Gavitt coached basketball and served as director of athletics at Providence College, served as first commissioner of the Big East Conference, and was vice-chairman of the board of the Boston Celtics before moving to the NCAA Foundation.

During his long involvement with USA Basketball, Gavitt also has served as vice-president for men, treasurer, board of directors member and chair of the Men's Games Committee.

During Gavitt's presidency, USA Basketball hosted the 1992 Men's Olympic Qualifying Tournament of the Americas in Portland, Oregon.

Gavitt also was the primary originator and driving force behind the creation of the nationally televised Basketball Hall of Fame Hoop Summit game earlier this year. The event, which will be repeated annually for at least the next two years, gives top U.S. high-school and Amateur Athletic Union athletes an opportunity to compete against a team featuring some of the best players in that age group from the rest of the world.

Gavitt also played a major role in organizing a 1991 basketball rules symposium involving representatives of FIBA, the NBA, the NCAA and the National Federation of State High School Associations. The meeting, the first involving all four organizations, focused on possible ways of achieving uniform, world-wide rules in basketball.

As a coach, Gavitt was selected to lead the 1980 U.S. Olympic men's basketball team. The team, however, did not compete in the Olympics because of a U.S. boycott of the Games in Moscow.

Agents

Institutions searching for ways to attack the growing problems associated with sports agents and their runners

their ability to solve the problem is limited, but they agree that they must bear some responsibility in proposing solutions.

Vivian L. Fuller, athletics director at Northeastern Illinois University and a member of the NCAA Council, says institutions can take a number of initiatives in dealing with sports agents. Foremost among those, she says, is education.

"I don't think an institution can isolate itself from this problem because it's so widespread," Fuller said. "I think what we can do is increase rules education for our coaches and student-athletes. At the conference level, we can keep talking about agents and how nothing is free and everything adds up. We can tell student-athletes that it makes no difference how big their signing bonus is because they may not get that first check if they use an agent. So I think we can do more education-type activities."

Fuller says that identifying runners may be the best starting point. She says institutional personnel need to be on the lookout for people who are not formally connected with the athletics program but are around it more frequently than might appear necessary. Fuller also said institutions should consider the possibility that employees may be acting as runners.

"Is there a name that students constantly talk about?" she said. "If we've got runners in our programs, we've got to be able to identify those people...They're key because they can relate so much better with the student-athlete."

"I think we've got to let our student-athletes know that there is no free meal. I think in the end student-athletes are the ones being penalized and we've got to teach them that they have to be responsible for their actions."

Can't stop educating

That is what's being done at Arizona, Massachusetts and many other campuses. At Arizona, Bill Morgan is a central figure in the university's handling of the sports-agent issue. The assistant athletics director for compliance says student-athletes are growing tired of his admonitions, but he says Arizona student-athletes will continue to hear them.

"I'd like to bury my head in the sand and say we've got these policies and that it's all going to be wonderful, but that isn't going to work,"

Morgan said. "We feel it's a very dangerous situation for our student-athletes as far as affecting their eligibility. We are taking it very seriously, and we're trying to make sure our student-athletes understand how serious it is. They're getting tired of hearing us talk about agents, but we're going to keep talking about it until they hear us."

Calipari invited a number of other influential figures to talk to his team about agents at the start of last season. Former NCAA and current United States Olympic Committee Executive Director Richard D. Schultz and a couple of NBA assistant coaches spoke to Calipari's players.

That effort, Calipari says, leaves him wondering what more institutions can do to target the problem.

"You must start at home with your own campus," Calipari said. "What we're doing is continually changing our kids' phone numbers. We have to tell them to tell agents and their runners that 'if you call me, you're out,' which is hard because they tell these kids what they want to hear: 'You're the greatest. You're going to make all of this money. I can make you more money. I can help you get the first-round pick. I can do this. I can do that.'"

"What else can you do?" Calipari asked. "We do everything we can do. The agents overcome all that you try to do sometimes."

At the University of Florida, a professional sports counseling panel is in place to educate student-athletes and their parents about sports agents. Dennis Calfee, a law professor at Florida, is a member of that pro sports panel, which screens interested agents for Gator student-athletes.

"We educate student-athletes and provide whatever information we can to help them make cognitive choices as they move from the ranks of being a college player to the ranks of being a professional," Calfee said. "We also provide information to parents about agents and put together packets of information about salary structure and whatever we can find out. We also have tried to inform coaches because the kids listen to them."

Calfee believes education is key to curbing the problems posed by agents. He said the panel is not a policing body and that it allows the Florida athletics compliance staff to do its work. Even so, educating everyone about the ever-changing tactics of agents is critical.

"Nothing we are involved with has a greater chance of being the ruination of college athletics than this issue. And yet, the tragedy of all of this is most places don't seem to take it seriously."

JIM LIVENGOOD

Athletics director, University of Arizona

"I believe the only way to work on it is through education," Calfee said. "We've gone through the cycle where, originally, agents were offering insurance and various types of incentives," Calfee said. "Of course, the NCAA countered with its insurance program. Then the agents had the crystal ball and could tell (student-athletes) where they were going to get drafted. Some of the nonmonetary inducements that agents are using, you combat with education. Of course, they have the lure of money."

Educating the educators

While administrators and coaches contend there is only so much they can do, they concede that one of the challenges facing them is convincing others about the severity of the problem.

"We can come back from less-than-successful seasons in our sports in terms of wins and losses," Livengood said. "We can come back from having down gate receipts now and then. We can come back from different kinds of things. We cannot come back from this. This tears at the very fiber. It tears at the integrity."

Arizona's Morgan says many institutions, particularly Division I members, will run into the problem at some point. He reminds his colleagues in the college athletics community that it is not only top student-athletes who are targeted by agents, but those who are long shots for making a professional roster.

"I got up at the Pac-10 compliance meeting last spring and went over this stuff, and they were all shaking their heads as if to say, 'We really don't have a problem.' I promise you they do. They just don't know about it. I didn't think we had much of a problem because we don't have the caliber of athletes that Southern Cal, UCLA and Stanford have. Nobody realizes the problem they have. What they don't realize is that it's not just the premier players who the agents are getting to. It's anybody who may have a chance."

Calipari says it will be a challenge convincing the entire membership that the problem is potentially dangerous for everyone.

"The problem comes down to this: How many of us truly are affected by this?" Calipari said. "Do you think the guy at Central Connecticut State thinks it is the issue? I don't mean that in a negative way, but if he doesn't have anybody anyone wants to represent, he's saying, 'Why are we wasting time and money and trying to get legislation in states and at the Federal level? What is this?' That's our problem."

Ronald J. Maestri, athletics director at the University of New Orleans and chair of the NCAA Professional Sports Liaison Committee, says the sports-agent problem affects all schools — from the largest Division I institution to the tiniest Division III campus.

"A lot of smaller institutions where there is a kid who has any remote possibility (of playing professionally), what we have found is that agents are just blanket recruiting," Maestri said. "It is a numbers game. They know some are going to make it and some are not. It's not just the major programs that have the high-profile athlete (that have a problem)...We all had better be aware of it because there are people in all of our communities who could bring us down."

Fighting back

Upon discovering that a student-athlete has signed with an agent or accepted money or other gifts, institutions routinely have responded by declaring the student-athlete ineligible.

But an attorney whose practice includes filing lawsuits against sports agents on behalf of athletes says institutions need to fight back against agents. He says nothing will make more of an impact on the problem than institutions taking sports agents to court for damages resulting from the ineligibility of scholarship student-athletes.

"The way to solve the problem is for the schools to sue the agents," said San Francisco attorney Edward King.

It may be unethical or even unlawful for sports agents — most of whom are lawyers — to entice student-athletes to become their clients, says Calipari. But he believes that unless agents are sentenced to prison, they are not likely to retreat from their current practices.

"It's got to be against the law to do that," Calipari said. "(Agents) are trying to get their business by paying them. In the law profession, you are disbarred. Forever. You can't do that. Basically, it's a bribe. So you have to address it that way."

He said that unless states and the Federal government tell agents, "You're going to go to jail," it's not going to change.

Livengood calls some of the tactics agents use — such as establishing relationships with a student-athlete's teammates, family and friends — "sick in its approach." He identifies three primary solutions to the problem.

Livengood says states need to add more bite to their sports-agent legislation. He says the professional sports leagues must get involved with the NCAA and its members to find answers. And he says institutions and student-athletes should not bear all of the responsibility when problems occur.

But first, Livengood says the issue must be discussed at length within the NCAA membership.

"We need to talk about this issue," he said. "I think it's that serious. This is really far-reaching."

Some agents agree that more effective safeguards against unscrupulous figures in the sports-representation industry would be positive for everyone. One is Lynn Lashbrook, a former athletics director at Southern Illinois University, Edwardsville, and the University of Alaska Fairbanks who now is senior vice-president of Sports Management Group, a St. Louis-based sports-representation firm.

"I wish there was a way that when agents are caught doing something wrong that they are punished," Lashbrook said. "Until we get that straightened out, we always are going to have a problem."

Water polo

Reducing championship field from eight to four teams ignites previous debate regarding how teams are selected

Remillard, men's water polo coach at Washington and Lee University. "If you're going to develop the sport, you've got to show the institutions that are playing the sport that on September 1 they have a chance to get in (the championship field). I agree exactly with the way (the format) has been determined. The three automatic qualifiers are representative of the different types of institutions that are playing the sport, and on September 1, everyone has an avenue to the national championship."

Dilutes quality

Opponents acknowledge that point, but they contend the current format restricts access by predetermining three of the four berths — regardless of performance.

They contend that such a format diminishes regular-season accomplishments and the incentive for teams to attain a top-10 ranking. They also say that restricting a conference to a maximum of two berths regardless of performance will have a detrimental impact on some of the more established programs.

The Mountain Pacific Sports Federation is cited as an example. Each of the semifinalists at all 26 previous championships currently compete in the MPSF.

"(Under the current format) your record doesn't matter," said Dettamanti. "It doesn't matter if you're the No. 3 or No. 4 teams in the nation; chances are you're not going to go (to the national championship). On the other hand, there are going to be some teams at the national championships that will be ranked 10th or 12th. I just think that dilutes the quality of the tournament."

Sutton acknowledges that some top-ranked teams will be shut out from the championship; however, he says current circumstances such as declining sponsorship numbers leave few options.

"I think it was a good move to sustain those (automatic) berths, at least for now," said Sutton. "It's a 60-40 situation in a lot of ways. There really was no clear-cut way to do it unless you're going to develop a playoff system to bring in the best four teams in the nation and give everyone a chance at (qualifying)."

"Obviously, it's hard if you're the No. 3 or No. 4 ranked team in the nation because you're not guaranteed a spot. But then, I guess everybody knows that going into the season, so you try to put yourself in position to be in that spot."

Schofield concedes that the method of championship selection will not please everyone, particularly those near the top of the rankings. However, he says adoption of the current format was a matter of priorities.

"Right now, we feel our priorities are to keep every incentive possible for schools to pick up or retain varsity water polo," Schofield said. "Because of some geographical imbalances, that puts us in a bind. What you see here is a very imperfect judgment call on the part of coaches to try to keep the sport viable. It's unfortunate, but it's the situation we're in."

Big Ten gunning to be tops against I-A foes

BY GARY K. JOHNSON
NCAA STATISTICS COORDINATOR

The Big Ten Conference is making a bid to break the reign of the South-eastern Conference as the nation's best when playing Division I-A foot-ball opponents in nonconference play.

In the last 11 years, the SEC has had the nation's best nonconference win-ning percentage nine times. This year, however, both the Big Ten and the Big Eight Conferences have won-lost re-cords that are better than the SEC's 15-6 record.

The Big Ten has a 26-7-1 record for a .779 winning percentage, while the Big Eight is at 23-7 (.767). The SEC's nonconference winning percentage is .714.

Of the 11 teams in the Big Ten, four have perfect records against noncon-ference opponents. They are Michi-gan and Ohio State with four wins apiece, Penn State with three, and Iowa with two. Six other teams in the conference have a 2-1 record against outside squads. Two opponents each have played three games against Big Ten teams: Boston College lost all of its encounters, while Notre Dame de-feated Purdue but fell to Northwestern and Ohio State.

The Big Eight's last year of compe-tition is turning out to be a strong one in football, as five of its members are undefeated in nonleague play. Colo-rado, Kansas, Kansas State and Nebraska all are 4-0, while Oklahoma is 3-0. Next season, four teams from the Southwest Conference will merge with the Big Eight to form the Big 12.

With 12 teams in the SEC, member schools do not have as much oppor-tunity to play outside competition as do smaller conferences. Half of the SEC teams are undefeated in non-conference play: Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina and Tennessee all are 2-0, while Florida and Mississippi each have beaten their only non-SEC, Di- vision I-A opponent. Auburn has not played any I-A opponents from out-side the SEC, although the Tigers did defeat Division I-AA foe Tennessee- Chattanooga.

The Southwest Conference is the only conference that has played I-A teams exclusively in nonconference competition. The SWC has an 11-14-1 record outside the conference.

Out of 10 I-A conferences, half have a .500 winning percentage or bet-ter in nonconference competition against I-A teams. After the top three conferences come the Pacific-10 (.596) and Atlantic Coast (.500) Conferences.

The SEC once had a five-year streak as the best against nonconference competition, but that ended in 1988 when the Pac-10 compiled a remark-able .794 (27-7) winning percentage — highest in the 1980s. The SEC was on top again in 1989, but the ACC broke through in 1990 to take the hon-ors. The past four seasons again have seen the SEC as the leader.

Last season, the SEC took the title with a .742 (24-8-1) winning percent-age; the Big Ten was runner-up at .691 (23-10-1). The Big Eight finished third with a .661 winning percentage (20-10-1).

Other conferences besides those three that had winning records a year ago were the Big East (.625), Atlantic Coast (.614), Western Athletic (.603), Pacific-10 (.567) and Southwest (.531). Division I-A independent teams were 20-51-2 for a .288 winning percentage; this season, they have improved to 21-32-1 (.398).

Some conferences have many nonconference games left, while oth-ers are almost finished with out-side games. Here are the standings through October 7.

*Games against Division I-AA and nonmajor opponents are deleted.

Although some upsets of I-A teams by I-AA teams do happen and usual-ly are publicized widely, the I-A teams this season are dominating their I-AA counterparts. The I-A teams have a record of 25-3 for a winning percent-age of .893 against I-AA opponents. This high winning percentage and the wide variation in the number of such games among conferences are the reasons these games are deleted when comparing the I-A conferences.

Three in a row?

The Big Sky Conference is looking to take its third consecutive title as the nonconference champion in Division I-AA. The Big Sky has a 12-1 mark for a remarkable .923 winning percentage against I-AA football opponents out-side its own conference. Last season, the Big Sky led the division with an 875 mark (14-2).

The Yankee Conference is second with a 14-2 record and an .875 win-ning percentage, a mark that usually is good enough to win the noncon-ference title during most seasons. Next comes the Ivy Group, which has com-piled a 11-4-1 mark for a .719 winning percentage.

Other I-AA conferences playing .500 ball or better are the Southern (.556), Gateway (.545), Southland (.524) and Pioneer (.500).

The independents, a group of 21 teams, have played 51 games against I-AA teams this season and have won 27 for a winning percentage of .529.

While the SEC has been dominat-ing the I-A nonconference title over the years, several conferences traded places at the top in I-AA nonconference competition before the Big Sky's recent domination. Four years ago, the Gateway won by a landslide with an .842 winning percentage (15-2-2), while in 1992 the Yankee (.700) just edged the Southern Conference (.688).

Games against Division I-A oppo-nents are deleted because some I-AA conferences play several such games, some play few and still others none. Games against teams in Divisions II and III or the NAIA also are deleted for the same reasons.

Here are the standings through October 7:

1995 I-AA Conference Records vs. Div. I-AA Nonconference Foes:

Besides the Big Sky, the other con-ferences a year ago with winning records were the Ivy (.848), Southland (.674), Southern (.545), Mid-Eastern Athletic (.524) and Yankee (.521). All I-AA independents last year were 45-28-3 for a .612 winning percentage.

Soccer rule is revised

Change affects yellow cards

The NCAA Men's and Women's Soccer Rules Committee conducted a telephone conference October 5 and issued a revised interpretation concern-ing the accumulation of yellow cards.

Specifically, Rule 6-16, A.R. 73, has been changed. A player who receives a caution and an ejection in the same game, regardless of the nature of the second offense, now will be charged with just one card with reference to the five- or three-caution accumulation sys-tem.

Previously, if the player's second card in a game was for a cautionable offense, A.R. 73 instructed that player to be charged with two cards toward his or her accumulation of yellow cards.

With this new interpretation, there is no "second yellow" for any player in a given game. No player may accumu-late more than one yellow card per game.

A memorandum verifying this change was mailed to all coaches October 9.

Coaches are instructed to revise any players' current accumulation totals accordingly. For example, if a player has accumulated four yellow cards, but two were accumulated in the same game, he or she now has a total of three yellow cards.

However, any player who already has served a one-game suspension cannot have that accumulation modi-fied. In addition, any player who has received five yellow cards before October 9 still must serve a one-game suspension.

Taitt selected NCAA director of enforcement

Five others are new to Association staff

Dirk Taitt, a member of the NCAA staff since 1987, has been named director of enforcement in the NCAA's membership services area.

Taitt replaces Bob Minnix, who resigned to become associate director of athletics at Florida State University.

Taitt, who previously worked as an en-forcement representative, holds a bachelor's degree from Southwest Missouri State University.

Carolyn Claude has joined the mem-ber-ship services area as a compliance repre-sentative.

Alcohol Awareness Week to kick off October 16

National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week is being observed October 16-21 on campuses throughout the country.

More than 3,000 schools now participate in the event, which began in 1983. It is sponsored by the Inter-Association Task Force on Alcohol and Other Substance Abuse Issues, a coalition of higher education professionals representing major asso-ciations (including the NCAA) serving student development and related fields.

NCAA is designed to provide widespread cam-pus participation to create support for alcohol-abuse prevention programs and other health-relat-ed efforts. The week-long event has proved to inspire students from all spectrums of campus life to review their lifestyles and to challenge their peers to make healthier decisions where alcohol abuse is concerned.

Individuals at participating campuses have been provided with a manual that will help them develop an effective program. The manual, "A Sym-phony of Awareness," is a 34-page booklet that describes how to develop meaningful messages, how to market NCAAAW, how to fund a program and how to establish year-round programs.

A resource list of associations that can provide assistance also is included.

NCAA is chaired by Edward Hammond, pres-ident of Fort Hays State University.

1995 Column No. 36

NCAA Bylaws 13.12.1.3 and 13.16.1.4 Competition in conjunction with a high school, preparatory school or two-year college

NCAA Divisions II and III institutions should note that in accordance with Bylaw 13.12.1.3, it is permissible in all sports to host high-school, preparatory school or two-year college contests in conjunction with intercollegiate contests. Thus, a Division II or Division III institution may schedule an intercollegiate contest on the same day as a high-school, preparatory school or two-year college contest under a single admission and conducted during a continuous session. In all Division III sports and in the Division II sports of basketball, football, gymnastics and volleyball, all participating high schools, preparatory schools or two-year colleges must be located within a 50-mile radius of the institution's main campus and all such competition must occur on the host institution's campus. Further, in the Division II sports of basketball, football, gymnastics and volleyball, a high school, preparatory school or two-year college may not compete in more than one of these contests (per sport) on the institution's campus during an academic year. During its March 2, 1995, telephone conference, the NCAA Interpretations Committee determined that an institution hosting a high-school, preparatory school or two-year college contest in conjunction with its own intercollegiate contest is limited to incurring the normal operating and maintenance costs associated with the use of its facilities for such contests. It is not permissible for an institution to provide a high school, preparatory school or two-year college with any financial compensation, including transportation expenses or a guarantee or a percentage of the income realized from such a contest.

NCAA Bylaw 13.16.1.3

Fund-raising for high-school athletics programs

NCAA institutions should note that in accordance with Bylaw 13.16.1.2, an institution may not provide funding, directly or through paid advertisements, to benefit a high-school athletics program. During its August 3, 1995, telephone conference, the Interpretations Committee determined that an institution's athletics department staff member (e.g., coaching staff member) may not provide any financial contributions to a high-school athletics program through participation in a fund-raising event (e.g., paying greens fees to participate in a golf outing when a portion of the greens fees will benefit the high-school athletics program). The committee noted that athletics department staff members are not precluded from individually purchasing admission to attend events (e.g., athletics banquets or meetings or athletic competitions) where the funds from the admission fee ultimately will benefit prospects, provided the primary purpose of the event is not to raise funds for prospects.

To finance the journey, Presbrey said he sold most of his belongings. He and Davis raised a combined total of $3,000, which they plan to spend at a rate of $200 per week.

He also contacted an old college buddy who worked for Pepsi-Cola to tell him about what he was doing. The result was a donation of $3,000 from Mountain Dew, a toll-free beeper number and a supply of Pepsi products for the trip.

They carry their cargo in Davis' truck; Davis drives ahead to a point on the route each day, then bikes back to join Presbrey. They sleep in the truck at campgrounds.

Counting the donation from Pepsi, the pair has raised $4,000 thus far.

"We would love to hand over $10,000 or $15,000 at the end of the trip, but I'm not sure those are realistic goals," he said. "As I teach the kids, you don't want to set your goals too high and set yourself up for failure."

Though not quite on pace to collect that amount, Presbrey said that he is encouraged by a conversation he had this past summer with a man

"When my knee went, I wanted to prove I could still be active, and maybe I'm still hanging on to my athletic identity....I thought, hey, maybe this is a way I can still be involved (with NYSP this year)."

Victory No. 400 moves Robinson into collegiate football spotlight

But Grambling coach eager to put focus on team now

Grambling State University and the surrounding community continued to celebrate for days after Grambling football coach Eddie Robinson made sports history October 7 by capturing his 400th collegiate coaching victory.

Robinson became the first collegiate football coach to reach that milestone with Grambling's 42-6 victory over Mississippi Valley State University.

After the game, T-shirts bearing messages about his latest triumph became the attire of choice on campus and in the small Louisiana community of Grambling. Young men wore the number "400" cut into their hairdos. Entrepreneurs also peddled everything from crystal glasses to key chains commemorating the event.

The milestone victory also brought congratulatory telephone calls from President Clinton and Louisiana Gov. Edwin Edwards.

Victory No. 400 came in Robinson's 53rd season at the school. The man who has sent more than 200 players to the National Football League and coached the Tigers to nine national black college football championships ended the day with a career record of 400-145-15.

He also expressed hope that attention now would shift away from him and back to his team, which moved into a tie for the Southwestern Athletic Conference lead with the victory.

"All this attention was taking too much time away from my work," he told The Associated Press. "I was putting too much work on my assistants."

"I was away from the practice field a lot, spending a lot of time with (the media)."

But he also used the event to further the themes his players know him for — hard work and education.

"You have a chance to be part of the Grambling legacy," Robinson told his team in his pregame speech. "I want every young man playing in the game today to graduate. Now, let's go play."

He still had to tend to a few matters after the victory, including a trip to Disney World October 8 to film a commercial and then his induction October 10 into the Blue-Gray Hall of Fame in Birmingham, Alabama.
